

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

INTRODUCTION.

It has been the labor of the compiler of this digest to collect the decisions of the Supreme Court of California, giving such references thereto as would enable the profession to review all that has been judicially decided in this State.

It was considered to be the purpose of the digest to guide to the very page on which the point of law was found, rather than to the case in which it was enunciated, and therefore the page of the point decided is given. This obviates the necessity of searching through a lengthy opinion for a particular authority; yet, when that is reached, the surrounding circumstances and attendant reasoning can be immediately used.

All cases overruled are printed in italic, and under those decisions which have been abrogated by change of the statutory law, what change exists has been noted.

A correct list of cases affirmed, reversed, qualified, commented on, or abrogated by statute is furnished; also a list of cases digested, and the Judges and Reporters of the Supreme Court.

Such decisions as were rendered since the commencement of the January Term, 1861, are not incorporated in this digest.

HENRY J. LABATT.

SAN FRANCISCO, May, 1861.

DIGEST.

ABANDONMENT.

I. What Act constitutes an Abandonment.

II. The Effect of an Abandonment.

1. Upon the Person Abandoning.

2. Upon the Rights of the Wife in a Homestead.

I. WHAT ACT CONSTITUTES AN ABANDONMENT.

1. Laying off the premises into town lots, selling the same, and exercising other acts of ownership over them, does not operate as an abandonment, but taken in connection with previous acts of ownership, would rather seem to strengthen the plaintiff's possession. Plume v. Seward, 4 Cal. 97.

2. The inference of abandonment may arise from a single act as well as from a series of acts continued through a long space of time. It is a fact to be determined from the particular circumstances of the case. Davis v. Butler, 6 Cal. 511.

3. In an action to enforce a specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands, we think, after a lapse of four years from the maturity of the note given in payment of the purchase, the action is barred by limitation, and shows an abandonment of the purchase by plaintiff. Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 572; Pearis v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 621; Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 322; Farley v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 237.

4. Where water from an artificial ditch is turned into a natural water-course, and mingled with natural waters of that stream to conduct it to another point to be used, it is not thereby abandoned, but may be taken out and used by the party thus conducting it, so that he do not in so doing diminish the quantity of the natural stream, to the injury of rights previously acquired therein. Hoffman v. Stone, 7 Cal. 49; Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 325; Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 151.

5. The law will not presume an abandonment of an interest in property in dispute from the lapse of time, unless the statute of limitation has run against it. Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 144; Leigh Co. v. Independent Ditch Co., 8 Cal. 323; Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. 5; Partridge v. McKinney, 10 Cal. 183.

6. The fact that a first mortgage was canceled of record is no evidence of any intention to abandon the lien when a new note and mortgage to plaintiff, executed the same day, constituted a part of the same transaction, and must be taken and construed together with the acknowledgment of satisfaction of record. Birrell v. Schie, 9 Cal. 107; Swift v. Kraemer, 13 Cal. 530.

7. To suffer the tailings of a mining claim to flow where they list, without obstructions to confine them within the proper limits, is conclusive evidence of abandonment, unless there is some peculiarity in the locality constituting an exception to the rule. Jones v. Jackson, 9 Cal. 244.

8. The removal of an enclosure of land for the purpose of replacing it with a better one, so far from being evidence of an intention to abandon the premises, is direct evidence of the contrary. Sweetland v. Hill, 9 Cal. 557.

9. Where the regulations of a mining locality require that every claim shall be worked two days in every ten: held, that the efforts of the owners of a claim to procure machinery for working the claim are, by fair intendment, to be considered as work done on the claim, and there is no abandonment. Packer v. Heaton, 9 Cal. 570.

10. The doctrine of abandonment of real estate only applies where there has been a mere naked possession without title. The right of the occupant originating in mere possession, may, as a matter of course, be lost by abandonment. Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 631.

11. The mere fact that one tenant in common or partner goes away and remains absent from the premises of the joint business or property, leaving his associates in possession, creates no presumption of abandonment, nor does his refusal to pay, or his delay in paying the expenses of the business, or the assessments, create of itself a forfeiture; there must be clear or unequivocal proof of abandonment. Waring v. Crow, 11 Cal. 371.

12. The question of abandonment of a mining claim should be left to the jury upon the facts adduced in evidence. Ib.

13. The prosecution of the purpose to appropriate water for mining uses is a necessary element of title; and the negation of this, the abandonment of the purpose, is not so much matter of avoidance in title as it is matter showing that no title was ever obtained. Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 50; Mc Garrity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 431.

14. The mere fact that a party chose to apply water which he had a right to use in mining, in whole or in part, if he so chose, in sawing timber and grinding wheat, is no abandonment of his title to it. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn W. & M. Co., 13 Cal. 237.

15. The lapse of reasonable time without availing themselves of the privilege of condemnation of land, is an abandonment of all claim to it. Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Co., 13 Cal. 317.

16. Where claimants had, prior to the issuance of a patent, published a notice that they had become owners of the grant, specifying its boundaries, and warning off trespassers, it is not reasonable to suppose that they intended to abandon all rights to any other land, provided the official survey did not conform to the boundaries they indicated. Moore v. Wilkinson, 13 Cal. 489; Moore v. Roff, 13 Cal. 489.

17. Claiming or taking one title is no abandonment of the other, and the possession, if not referred to the good title, would not be referred exclusively to the bad. Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 499.

18. Action against the sheriff for seizing plaintiff's wheat as the property of A. The wheat was grown on plaintiff's land, and in his possession; that A was on the land only to raise and harvest the crop; that the grain was cut and stacked on the premises; that plaintiff was entitled to one-third by the contract between him and A, and A sold to plaintiff and delivered possession and then abandoned the premises, plaintiff residing thereon. A took no further control of the premises or crops, and plaintiff assumed entire dominion over both: held, that plaintiff was not bound to abandon his premises or carry the grain beyond them to protect his title against creditors of A. Pacheco v. Hunsacker, 14 Cal. 124; Chaffin v. Doub, 14 Cal. 386.

19. The failure to prosecute a motion for a new trial, is an abandonment of the motion. Mahoney v. Wilson, 15 Cal. 43; Frank v. Doane, 15 Cal. 303; Greene v. Doane, 15 Cal. 304.

20. Parol evidence is admissible to establish a new and distinct agreement, upon a new consideration, which is to be a substitute for the old written agreement; but it must appear that the old agreement is abandoned, and is not competent to show, by parol, the incorporation of new terms and conditions, and the new agreement must be valid in itself, and such as may be the basis of an action. Adler v. Friedman, 16 Cal. 140.

The Effect of an Abandonment.

II. THE EFFECT OF AN ABANDONMENT.

1. Upon the Person Abandoning.

21. When the contract was entire and the covenants dependent, and the plaintiff had declared his inability to keep it, and afterwards actually abandoned it: held, that these facts constituted a defense to his claim under the contract. Green v. Wells, 2 Cal. 585.

22. Where there is no abandonment or dedication of the land, the use for a limited time by the public cannot fairly raise the presumption of a dedication. City of San Francisco v. Scott, 4 Cal. 116.

23. Where a party can show nothing but a prior possession, that reliance may fail, if it be proven that he voluntarily abandoned his possession without the purpose of returning. Bequette v. Caulfield, 4 Cal. 279; Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. 5.

24. Land in California must either belong to the United States or to claimants under a grant, the question as to the rights of the State not being raised; and where the highest federal tribunal having full authority to decide the matter voluntarily abandoned the claim of title of the government, the courts of this State should not question it. Gunn v. Bates, 6 Cal. 271.

25. Where insurance is effected for only a part of the value of the article insured, the abandonment of the article cannot transfer the interest of the assured any further than that interest is covered by the policy. White v. Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 471.

26. The abandonment determines the right of the party from the day of the act, and the property is to him as though he had never owned or occupied it. Davis v. Butler, 6 Cal. 512.

27. A party having abandoned his mining claim, will not be permitted to come in within the time allowed by the statute for commencing civil actions, and reassert or resume his former interest to the prejudice of those who may afterwards appropriate it. Ib.

28. Partners not contributing anything as partners, or claiming to be such, and apparently both by words and acts abandoning the concern and all participation therein, cannot claim to be partners in the profits of an adventure when they could not have been held responsible to defendants for losses. Cayton v. Walker, 10 Cal. 456.

29. There can be no such thing as abandonment in favor of a particular individual or for a consideration; such an act would be a gift or sale. An abandonment is the relinquishment of a right, the giving up of something to which we are entitled. Stephens v. Mansfield, 11 Cal. 365.

30. The silent lien of a vendor is extinguished whenever he manifests an intention to abandon or not to look to it, and this intention is manifested by taking other and independent security upon the same land, or a portion of it, or on other land. Hunt v. Waterman, 12 Cal. 305.

31. A right coming entirely from possession may be lost by an abandonment of that possession, and the law determines what shall be or prove an abandonment. Dutch Flat Water Co. v. Mooney, 12 Cal. 535.

32. The lease was terminated long before the removal of the fixtures, and after an abandonment of the premises subsequent to an entry and a right of entry by the landlord who held the legal title, the right to remove was gone, and the title from these latter facts alone vested in the owner of the estate. Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 73.

33. The fact that the husband abandons his wife, or suffers her to act as a femme sole, and take care of herself, does not give her a right to mortgage either his or her separate property—whatever may be the effect of such acts of the husband in rendering her personally liable for her contracts. Harrison v. Brown, 16 Cal. 291.

2. Upon the Rights of the Wife in a Homestead.*

34. It is the duty of the wife to live with the husband, and her removal with him from the homestead is no abandonment, as will prevent a recovery thereof. Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 273; Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. 71; Holden v. Pinney, 6 Cal. 236; Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 171; Moss v. Warner 10 Cal. 297; overruled in Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 478; Guiod v. Guiod, 14 Cal. 507; Harper v. Forbes, 15 Cal. 204.

* The Homestead Act was passed in 1851, statutes, p. 296. In 1854, the opinion in Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 273, held that there could be no abandonment of the homestead except by the joint act of husband and wife. This decision was repeatedly affirmed until 1859, when the court, in Ge v. Moore, 14 Cal. 478, reversed all previous cases, and held that there could be an abandonment without the concurrence of the wife, which latter decision has been adhered to in several later cases. In 1860, statutes, p. 311, the act has been amended so as to require a registry of the homestead, and an abandonment must be by deed acknowledged and recorded after execution by husband and wife.

35. The fact that both husband and wife were anxious and willing to sell the homestead for the reasons stated, and repeated efforts were made by the husband to accomplish this purpose, does not show an intention to abandon, but to sell their homestead. Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 171.

36. Abandonment and adultery on the part of the wife will not divest the homestead of its character as such, nor will it defeat or impair her right to it as a homestead. Lies v. DeDiablar, 12 Cal. 330.

37. The appropriation of premises as a homestead gives the wife a right to insist that their character as a homestead shall continue until she consents to their alienation, or another homestead is provided, or they are otherwise abandoned. Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 478.

38. If the premises in controversy were in fact abandoned, with no intention on the part of the head of the family to reoccupy them as a homestead at the date of the conveyance, the entire estate passed to the grantee absolutely; but if not thus abandoned—if the removal were temporary in its nature, made for a specific purpose, for the repair or reconstruction of the building, which had fallen—the premises remained subject to his right to claim their enjoyment, and use as such homestead. Guiod v. Guiod, 14 Cal. 507; Bowman v. Norton, 16 Cal. 218.

39. As by the husband's act the premises were originally impressed with the character of a homestead, so by his act they may be abandoned as such. The wife, from the nature of her dependent relation to her husband—a relation not only essential to the peace and happiness of the family itself but to the well being of society—must abide the consequences of such abandonment. Guiod v. Guiod, 14 Cal. 507; Harper v. Forbes, 15 Cal. 204. Broadus v. Nelson, 16 Cal. 81.

40. A complaint by husband and wife to recover the homestead conveyed away by deed of the husband alone, must aver either that the premises were occupied as a homestead at the date of the conveyance, or that they had not been abandoned previously. Harper v. Forbes, 15 Cal. 203.

41. To rebut the presumption of abandonment in such case, it must be shown that the removal was temporary, made for the specific purpose, with the intention of reoccupying the premises. Ib. 204.

ABATEMENT.

I. Abatement of Nuisances.

II. Of Pleas in Abatement.

1. Other Proceedings pending for the same Cause.
2. Misjoinder or Nonjoinder.
3. Error in Venue.
4. Want of Capacity to Sue.

III. Of the Pleadings.

I. ABATEMENT OF NUISANCES.

1. Every person in the community in which a common nuisance works an injury is supposed to be aggrieved by it, and has a right to abate it, without regard to the question whether it is an immediate obstruction or injury to him. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 466.

2. A private nuisance is one which only injures a particular individual or class of individuals, and can be abated only by him who suffers from it. Ib.

3. The statute of this State defining what are nuisances, and prescribing a remedy by action, does not take away any common law remedy in the abatement of nuisances which the statute does not embrace. Stiles v. Laird, 5 Cal. 122.

4. Actions for the diversion of the waters of a ditch are in the nature of actions for the abatement of nuisances, and may be maintained by tenants in common in a joint action. Parke v. Killam, 8 Cal. 79.

See NUISANCE.

II. OF PLEAS IN ABATEMENT.

1. Other Proceedings pending for the same Cause.

5. Where the owner of a vessel lost by neglect of the steam tug, and partially insured, sued for damages, and an objection was raised that the action was not brought in the name of the real party in interest: held, that it was properly brought in his name, and a recovery by the owner in such an action would abate another action for the same cause against defendant by the insurance company. White v. Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 471.

6. A defendant must not be harassed with several suits for the same matter at the same time; in such a case the pendency of one suit may be plead in abatement of the other. Seligman v. Kalkman, 8 Cal. 216.

7. A plea in abatement of a former suit pending is no bar to an action where the complaint in that case is so defective that a judgment rendered thereon would be a nullity. Reynolds v. Harris, 9 Cal. 341.

8. If it does not appear that any summons had ever issued upon the complaint, or that there had ever been any voluntary appearance on the part of the defendants in the first action, there was then no suit pending upon which defendants could in a second action plead abatement that another action was pending between the same parties for the same cause of action. Weaver v. Conger, 10 Cal. 238; Primm v. Gray, 10 Cal. 522.

9. Where on plea of abatement to the entire action, that another suit for the same cause of action was pending at the time of suit brought, the proof shows that the first suit is only for part of the same matter sued for in the second suit, the plea fails. Thompson v. Lyon, 14 Cal. 42.

See ACTIONS, BAR, PLEA IN.

2. Misjoinder and Nonjoinder.

10. An answer will not be treated as a plea in abatement for a misjoinder of parties defendant, after the testimony has disclosed a proper cause of action against them. Warner v. Wilson, 4 Cal. 313; Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 170.

11. Where a part owner brings an action in form ex delicto, and the objection is not made by plea in abatement, the other part owner may afterwards sue alone. Whitney v. Stark, 8 Cal. 516.

See JOINDER, MISJOINDER, NONJOINDER, PARTIES.

3. Error in Venue.

12. The right to try particular cases in particular counties is a mere privilege which may be waived. It is not matter in abatement of the writ. The privilege must be claimed by motion to change the venue, at the proper time and place. Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 324.

See VENUE.

4. Want of Capacity to Sue.

13. The want of capacity in the plaintiff to sue should have been specially set up in the answer. The general issue is not sufficient. California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 590; White v. Moses, 11 Cal. 70.

III. OF THE PLEADINGS.

14. Matter of abatement, or which was such at common law, must be set up in the answer, and with such particularity as to exclude every conclusion to the contrary. Tooms v. Randall, 3 Cal. 440; Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 643.

15. As to what shall constitute matter of abatement, or the form and precise words of the legislature, the legislature are wisely left to determine. People v. Kelly, 6 Cal. 214.

16. The nonpresentation of a claim to an administrator for his allowance is a matter of avoidance in an action on the claim, only to be taken advantage of by plea, and it is still in its nature and effect nothing more than a matter of abatement. Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 363; Falkner v. Folsom's Ex'rs, 6 Cal. 412; McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 124; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 560.

17. A party committed for refusing to answer questions propounded to him as a witness, under an order that he stand committed till he answer the questions, will be discharged on habeas corpus where it appears that the suit has abated, there being no longer parties or subject matter before the court; there is no longer a case in which the question can be asked. Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 176.

Remedy against Absent Debtors.—Presumption of Death.—Effect of Judgment.

18. Where the matter in abatement, if true, would only defeat the present right to recover, the defendant, though not compelled to demur or answer, should be obliged to make the objection by motion or otherwise before the court of original jurisdiction during the term at which the judgment was obtained. Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 561.

19. Pleas in abatement are not favored, and the party pleading must prove his plea as put. Thompson v. Lyon, 14 Cal. 42.

ABSENT AND ABSCONDING DEBTORS.

- I. Remedy against Absent Debtors.
- II. Presumption of Death of Absent Debtor.
- III. Effect of a Judgment against an Absent Debtor.
 - 1. By Publication.
 - 2. By Appointment of an Attorney.

I. REMEDY AGAINST ABSENT DEBTORS.

1. To entitle the plaintiff to subject the assets of an absent debtor to the payment of his claim in equity, he must show that he is without a remedy at law. Lupton v. Lupton, 3 Cal. 121.

2. If a plaintiff is about to leave the State, the defendant has his remedy for a cross demand by writ of arrest, and cannot require plaintiff to give security to answer a contingent liability, unless he proffer to secure the plaintiff likewise in an action for contribution. Bell v. Walsh, 7 Cal. 87.

II. PRESUMPTION OF DEATH OF ABSENT DEBTOR.

3. In case of absence of a person from whom no tidings are received, the presumption of life ceases at the end of seven years, and to shorten this time there must be evidence of some specific peril to the life of the individual. Ashbury v. Sanders, 8 Cal. 64. See DEATH.

III. EFFECT OF A JUDGMENT AGAINST AN ABSENT DEBTOR.

1. By Publication.

4. A judgment obtained by publication of summons against a defendant out of the State in which the judgment is rendered, though it may be enforced against his property in that State, has no binding force in personam, and is a mere nullity when attempted to be enforced in another State. Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 455.

5. Under the code, after the expiration of six months, if the absent defendant fails to deny the allegations of the complaint he is held to admit them as true, and cannot afterwards show their falsity. Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 111.

6. An affidavit which avers a cause of action against the defendant; that defendant cannot after due diligence be found in the State; that he was beyond the limits of the State; that summons has been issued, but the sheriff cannot find him; that defendant's residence is in the county where the summons was issued, and that defendant still has a family residing in said county; is insufficient to authorize the publication of the summons for only thirty days; it must be for three months. Jordan v. Giblin, 12 Cal. 102.

7. An affidavit for an order of publication of the summons upon the ground of the absence of the defendant from the State is insufficient, if it does not show that the defendant had left the State, or that any diligence had been used to ascertain his whereabouts beyond inquiring of a single individual; where there is no pretense that he concealed himself to avoid service. Swain v. Chase, 12 Cal. 285.

See PUBLICATION, SUMMONS.

2. By Appointment of an Attorney.

8. The provision of the code authorizing a judgment personal and final against an absent defendant for whom the court has appointed an attorney with privilege to the defendant to come in and deny in six months is not in violation of the Constitution of the United States. Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 111.

Effect of an Acceptance.—Acceptance of a Bill of Exchange.

9. The affidavit to authorize the appointment of an attorney for an absent or absconding debtor must show that summons had been issued and placed in the hands of the proper officer, and an effort had been made to serve the defendant personally. Jordan v. Giblin, 12 Cal. 102.

See ATTORNEY, SUMMONS.

ACCEPTANCE.

I. Effect of an Acceptance.

II. Acceptance of a Bill of Exchange.

1. What constitutes an Acceptance.
2. A Verbal Acceptance is insufficient.
3. An Endorser may be a Witness against an Acceptor.

I. EFFECT OF AN ACCEPTANCE.

1. An acceptance of goods bearing a name different from the one used in the sale note, by a sub-vendee of part of goods sold, does not conclude the vendee as to the whole contract. Flint v. Lyon, 4 Cal. 21; Moore v. McKinlay, 5 Cal. 474.

2. A tenant in common of land is not bound by the acts of a cotenant in accepting a balance of the purchase money and promising a deed, after the right thereto had become forfeited. Pearis v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 621.

3. The acceptance by a collector of taxes of a warrant is not a liquidation of the debt, but the receipt of it by the State treasurer from the collector would be a liquidation for which the treasurer is responsible. Scofield v. White, 7 Cal. 401.

4. The acceptance of a note of a third party by the creditor is considered as accompanied with the condition that the note shall be paid at maturity. Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 322.

5. We are not aware of any rule requiring a delivery, as of formal deeds, necessary in an assignment. The making of the trust and its acceptance are sufficient, especially if accompanied or followed by the possession of the party. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 287.

6. The acceptance of a deed does not, in favor of a stranger—that is, one neither party nor privy to the deed—estop the grantee in fee from showing that the grantor had no title at the date of the deed. Schuhman v. Garratt, 16 Cal. 102.

7. In case of services rendered a municipal corporation, the acceptance of the services must be evidenced by ordinance to that effect. Their acceptance by the city, and the consequent obligation to pay for them, cannot be asserted in any other way. If not originally authorized, no liability can attach upon any ground of implied contract. Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 283.

II. ACCEPTANCE OF A BILL OF EXCHANGE.

1. What constitutes an Acceptance.

8. Where an order is drawn on a firm for an unspecified sum which is not negotiable, and an endorsement of the exact sum due is made by one of the firm, thus rendering it negotiable, it operates as a release to the firm, and as an individual acceptance by the partner endorsing. Garwood v. Simpson, 8 Cal. 106.

9. Where a draft is accepted conditionally, to be paid upon the happening of a contingency; whether the contingency has happened, is a question for the jury. Nagle v. Homer, 8 Cal. 358.

10. A draft payable in terms out of an appropriation for public work done for the acceptor becomes due on the payment for the work by the government. Ib.

11. A drew an order on B in favor of C for a sum of money, part of which was paid, and the amount was receipted on the back of the order in the hand-writing of B, and signed by C: held, not to be an acceptance of the order for the whole amount, but only for the amount paid. Bassett v. Haines, 9 Cal. 261.

12. A letter of credit, promising unconditionally to accept bills drawn upon its faith, is deemed under our statute an actual acceptance in favor of a person who, upon its faith, receives a bill so drawn, for a valuable consideration. Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 454.

An Accessory may be charged with the Principal in the same Indictment.

2. A Verbal Acceptance is insufficient.

13. The written acceptance of the drawee is necessary to charge him as acceptor under the statute; a verbal acceptance is insufficient, but the want of acceptance will not prevent the equitable assignment of the bill to hold the fund against which it is drawn. Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 97; Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 408.

3. An Endorser may be a Witness against an Acceptor.

14. In an action against the maker of a note, or the acceptor of a bill, the endorser is a competent witness for either party. Bryant v. Watriss, 13 Cal. 86.

See BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

ACCESSORY.

- I. An Accessory may be charged with the Principal in the same Indictment.
 II. The Record of the Conviction of the Principal is not Evidence against an Accessory.

I. AN ACCESSORY MAY BE CHARGED WITH THE PRINCIPAL IN THE SAME INDICTMENT.

1. An indictment in charging D. and K. with an assault with intent to commit murder, and afterwards charges K. with being an accessory, charges but one offense. The criminal code treats an accessory as a principal, and it is not error to charge the accessory and principal in the same indictment. People v. Davidson, 5 Cal. 134.

2. An indictment charging a felony and setting forth that the defendant was an accessory before the fact, is good under our statute, by which no distinction exists between a principal and an accessory before the fact. People v. Cryder, 6 Cal. 23; People v. Bearss, 10 Cal. 69.

See INDICTMENT.

II. THE RECORD OF THE CONVICTION OF THE PRINCIPAL IS NOT EVIDENCE AGAINST AN ACCESSORY.

3. At common law, an accessory before the fact could not be tried or convicted without the previous trial and conviction of the principal. The acquittal of the principal discharged the accessory, and he could not be afterwards tried, no matter how conclusive the subsequently discovered proof might be of the principal's guilt, and the record of conviction of the principal was necessary; but our statute has altered this and the record is not necessary but improper evidence at the trial of an accessory. People v. Bearss, 10 Cal. 70.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

ACCOMPLICE.

1. An accomplice or codefendant in a criminal action under our code who elects to be tried separately is a competent witness for the other defendants charged with the same offense, the credibility of his testimony being left to the jury. People v. Labra, 5 Cal. 185.

2. To convict the defendant of larceny upon the testimony of an accomplice together with corroborating evidence, the corroborating evidence must connect the defendant with the offense charged. It is not sufficient that it corroborate the accomplice as to the fact that a larceny was committed. People v. Eckert, 16 Cal. 112.

3. McB., the accomplice, swore to the larceny by defendant. The court instructed the jury "that though the witness McB. was impeached, if his testimony was corroborated by the testimony of witnesses unimpeached, they were bound to believe his testimony;" held, that this instruction was wrong, as taking from the jury their right to judge of the credibility of all the statements of the witness. Ib.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

1. A general denial has the same influence as the general issue at common law, and under that accord and satisfaction may well be shown. Gavin v. Annan, 2 Cal. 497; Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 30.

2. The principle that a liability cannot be discharged by a less sum than the amount due applies to payments of money, and has never been extended to a case where merchandise or property in goods was accepted. Gavin v. Annan, 2 Cal. 497.

3. A sued B and C for forcible entry and detainer and obtained judgment against them with damages, and afterwards took a deed from B for the premises and procured D to indemnify B against the judgment, and verbally promised not to prosecute B on the judgment: held, the facts show accord and satisfaction of the judgment. Ransom v. Farish, 4 Cal. 387.

ACCOUNT.

I. Action on Account.

1. Of the Pleadings.
2. Of the Evidence.
3. Assignment of an Account.

II. Bill for an Account.

1. Of the Pleadings.
2. Reference.

III. Account Stated.

I. ACTION ON ACCOUNT.

1. Of the Pleadings.

1. A complaint is insufficient which alleges indebtedness and sets forth an account but does not allege the sale or delivery of the articles to the defendant, nor show in what place or in what manner the indebtedness has accrued. Mershon v. Randall, 4 Cal. 326.

2. An action of assumpsit is the proper remedy on an account against a county, which has been rejected by the supervisors. Price v. Sacramento County, 6 Cal. 256.

2. Of the Evidence.

3. Under the mechanics, lien act it is not necessary that the account to be filed in the recorder's office should remain in the office after it is recorded. Mars v. McKay, 14 Cal. 128.

4. In a suit on an account for services rendered and materials furnished in the course of his trade, and for articles furnished from his farm, by plaintiff, who was a blacksmith and farmer, he is a competent witness to prove to the court his book of original entries, as preliminary to the introduction of the book in evidence. Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 575.

5. In suit on an account against B. & S. as a firm, a receipt to B. alone, signed by plaintiffs "in full for accounts and demands due us to date," was offered in evidence by B., S. having made default, together with parol proof that the receipt was intended to embrace the account sued on: held, that the parol proof was admissible; that the term "all accounts" may be shown to cover firm as well as personal indebtedness. Hawley v. Bader, 15 Cal. 46.

3. Assignment of an Account.

6. Where an account is verbally assigned to a creditor as a security to pay a debt from the proceeds and return the surplus, the assignment is void and the assignee cannot sue thereupon in his own name. Ritter v. Stevenson, 7 Cal. 389; 11 Cal. 27.

7. The mere signing an assignment of an account, without delivery, is insufficient to pass a title. Ib.

See ASSIGNMENT.

II. BILL FOR AN ACCOUNT.

1. Of the Pleadings.

8. One copartner cannot sue another, unless by bill for a dissolution and praying for an account. Russell v. Ford, 2 Cal. 87; Buckley v. Carlisle, 2 Cal. 420; Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 292; Nugent v.

Bill for an Account.

Locke, 4 Cal. 320; Barnstead v. Empire Mining Co. 5 Cal. 299.

9. A bill for an account is the proper remedy for the settlement of the proceeds of a joint adventure, where, in consideration of outfit and advances made by plaintiff, the defendant agreed to account for and pay over a proportion of the proceeds of his labor and speculations of every kind, for a certain period of time, although the parties may not have been technically partners. Garr v. Redman, 5 Cal. 576.

10. Nor is it misjoinder of causes of action to demand, in the same action, that defendants account for and refund a proportion of the outfit and advances made by plaintiff, as agreed in the same contract. Ib.

11. In an action against an agent for not accounting, a request to account and pay over must be alleged in the complaint and proven at the trial. Bushnell v. McCauley, 7 Cal. 422.

12. Unless an account is asked for in a bill in equity, there is no error in refusing to order it; and if the prayer is for an account, the evidence must then warrant it. Dominguez v. Dominguez, 7 Cal. 427.

13. Where two shareholders in a joint stock company sold to the company goods to a large amount and afterwards, during the existence of the company, sold their stock to A, and assigned their account for such goods to B, who sued such company on said account by attachment: held, that such action could not be maintained, there having been no final settlement of the partnership accounts, no balance struck, and no express promise on the part of the individual members to pay their ascertained portion. Bullard v. Kinney, 10 Cal. 63.

14. M. & B., the plaintiffs, were partners in a ranch and hotel. The ranch was public land, taken up under the State law in the name of M. M. sells one-half to B., taking a mortgage back; B. agreeing to pay certain firm debts. The sale and agreement were afterward canceled, and B. sold M. one-half of the ranch. Defendant, Myers, agrees to buy of B. his half of the ranch; goes into possession, but afterwards refuses to buy, and buys the half from O., who bought the whole of M. At the time of this last purchase, O. and M. knew of B.'s title; held, that a bill in equity by B. against M., O. and Myers, for an account of the partnership between M. & B., and for a decree establishing plaintiff's right to the half of the ranch, does not lie; that his remedy at law for his half of the ranch, against M. or any one claiming under him with notice of his title, is clear, and that M. would be estopped from disputing the title, and as M. makes no defense to the bill, it is good against him, for an account. Brush v. Maydwell, 4 Cal. 209.

15. Equity will not set off the claim of an individual creditor of one joint owner of a judgment against the judgment. And if the judgment be partnership assets, the individual creditor has no claim to any part of it until adjustment of the firm accounts. Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 230.

16. In suit by a stockholder against a corporation and its officers, praying for their removal, and for an account and settlement of the affairs of the corporation, the decree, after a full hearing on the merits, was in accordance with the prayer, and also appointed a receiver to take charge of the property of the corporation until the further order of the court; collect money due or to become due on it; sell certain stock and pay the proceeds in accordance with the decree, etc.: held, that this provision in the decree does not destroy its effect as a final decree, and that an appeal lies therefrom. Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 148.

17. In a suit by a stockholder in a private corporation against the corporation and four of the trustees, who owned stock sufficient to enable them to control the business of the company, for an account and settlement of its affairs, alleging fraud and mismanagement on the part of the trustees, the court below, by its decree, deprived one of said trustees of his salary as superintendent of the business of the corporation: held, that this was error; that, although such superintendent was also trustee and treasurer of the corporation, contrary to a positive provision of the by-laws; and although, in the management of the business of these offices, no attention had been paid to the by-laws and regulations of the corporation, yet, as no fraud was shown, and as the superintendent had faithfully performed his duties as such, he was entitled to his salary. Ib. 149.

18. Where four of the trustees of a private corporation, owning sufficient stock to control its business, conduct the business in a grossly negligent manner, systematically disregarding the by-laws, keeping no account of receipts and expenditures, failing to pay their own assessments, without any excuse: held, that a stockholder may sue in equity for an account, making the corporation and said trustees alone parties—no objection being taken that all of the stockholders were not parties—and the trustees will be compelled to make good any loss occasioned by their negligence or improper conduct. Ib. 151.

2. Reference.

19. An order setting aside the report of the referee appointed to take an account is merely interlocutory and not appealable before final judgment. Johnston v. Dopkins, 6 Cal. 84; Baker v. Baker, 10 Cal. 528.

20. Where a reference is had to take an account, it is within the discretion of the referees to open the case, after it has been once closed, for the purpose of receiving additional testimony. The exercise of such discretion, except in case of gross abuse, will not be reviewed on appeal. Marziou v. Pioche, 10 Cal. 546.

21. Where a party gets into possession of property, as a water-ditch, under a sheriff's suit on foreclosure of a mortgage, and the judgment on which such sale was made is afterwards reversed by the supreme court, and restitution of the property ordered, the court below may, on motion, order such party in possession to account before a referee for the rents and profits received by him—that is, for the sales of water, etc. It would be impracticable for a jury to settle the account, at least, without great delay and embarrassment. Rawn v. Reynolds, 15 Cal. 470.

III. ACCOUNTS STATED.

22. Where accounts bear upon their face the words "audited and approved" and "certified to be correct:" held, that this is sufficient language to create them instruments in writing within the meaning of the statute, and not accounts. Sannickson v. Brown, 5 Cal. 57.

23. An account audited against the city of San Francisco, but not paid at the time the consolidation act went into effect, need not again be audited to entitle it to payment. Knox v. Woods, 8 Cal. 546.

24. An account in writing, examined and signed by the parties, will be deemed a stated account, notwithstanding it contains the ordinary preliminary clause that errors are excepted. Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 360.

25. Accounts stated may be opened and the whole account taken de novo for gross mistake in some cases, but this can only be done when the gross error affects all the items of the transaction. When the clear mistake affects only a portion of the items of the stated account it will be permitted to stand, except in so far as it can be impugned by the party alleging the error. Ib. 361.

26. Where D. had a running account with L. from 1838 to 1849, at which time L. died intestate, and no administration was had on his estate until 1857, and D., within one year after the granting of letters of administration, commenced his suit on said account against the estate: held, that the suit was commenced in time. Danglada v. De la Guerra, 10 Cal. 386.

27. The notice of mechanics' lien, filed in the recorder's office, need not set out the items of the account; a general statement of the demand, showing its nature and character, and the amount due or owing thereon, is sufficient. Heston v. Martin, 11 Cal. 42; Brennan v. Swazey, 16 Cal. 142.

28. A complaint stating that defendant was justly indebted to plaintiff in several sums, found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff on an account then stated between them, which defendant then promised to pay, and the sum is due and unpaid, sufficiently states a cause of action. Dewitt v. Porter, 13 Cal. 172.

29. Where, in suit on an account stated, the only evidence was that of a witness who said defendant, on presentation of the account, admitted it to be correct and promised to pay it, and the court charged the jury that, if they believed the testimony of the witness, they must find for plaintiff the amount claimed; and they so found: held, that the instruction did not prejudice defendant, as but one verdict could have been rendered under the evidence. Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 429.

What is a sufficient Acknowledgment.

30. To sustain an action on an account stated, it must be shown there was a demand in favor of plaintiff acceded to by defendant. And if defendant does not object to the accounts as presented within a reasonable time, his silence will be an admission of its correctness. Ib.

31. Evidence that the items of the account are overcharged is not admissible, the complaint being verified and the answer not averring fraud or mistake in the accounting. Ib. 430.

ACCOUNT BOOKS.

1. A private account book of the plaintiff, kept by himself and containing only an account of money paid, is not evidence to charge the defendant. Collin v. Card, 2 Cal. 422.

2. Where the plaintiff to a set-off of defendant, involved the question whether or not profits had been made by plaintiff's steamboat such account book is not evidence to sustain plaintiff's hypothesis. Ib.

3. Our statute authorizes the court to make an order directing a party to produce books and papers in court. Barnstead v. Empire Mining Co., 5 Cal. 300.

4. The books of account kept in the office of an alcalde are admissible in evidence as a register of the acts of that officer belonging to the office, kept by his directions and handed over by each alcalde to his successor. Kyburg v. Perkins, 6 Cal. 675.

5. To entitle a book to the character of an official register it is not necessary that it be required by an express statute to be kept, nor that the nature of the office should render the book indispensable; it is sufficient that it be directed by the proper authority to be kept. Ib. 676.

6. The account book of a tradesman is not admissible to establish a charge for money loaned, but it may be to show that articles were procured for the defendant, which plaintiff paid for and charged as so much money loaned. Le Franc v. Hewitt, 7 Cal. 186.

7. An account book is not admissible to prove a single item only, yet where the evidence shows that defendant bought goods at various times, for which only one charge was entered after the order was filled, it seems that the account book is admissible. Ib.

8. In suit on an account for services rendered and materials furnished in the course of his trade, and for articles furnished from his farm by plaintiff, who was a blacksmith and farmer, he is a competent witness to prove to the court his book of original entries, as preliminary to the introduction of the book in evidence. And having testified that the book was kept by himself; that it was his book of original entries in which he kept his accounts; that the entries were made by him at the time they purport to have been made; that he kept no other books; and had no clerk—the book was sufficiently proved to be admitted in evidence. Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 574.

9. And being admitted, its entries, accompanied with proof of the party's reputation in the neighborhood of keeping correct accounts, by persons who had dealt with him, were sufficient prima facie evidence of the specific services rendered and of their value, and of the specific materials furnished and their price; it not appearing that any higher evidence was attainable. Ib. 575.

10. The fact that the charges are first made on a slate and then transferred to the book does not affect the character of the book as one of original entries—the charges on the slate being mere memoranda, not intended to be permanent. Ib.

11. But the transfer must not be long delayed, otherwise the book will be rejected, unless the delay be satisfactorily explained. A delay of three days is not unreasonable. Ib. 576.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.*

I. What is sufficient.

1. The purpose of an Acknowledgment.
2. Who may take an Acknowledgment.

II. Defective Acknowledgments.

1. Seal.
2. Damages.
3. Amendment.

III. Acknowledgment of a Married Woman.

* The statute of 1860, p. 179, authorizes a defective acknowledgment to be corrected by proceedings before the county judge; and the statute of 1860, p. 357, makes defective acknowledgments notice hereafter, the same as if the defect did not exist, so far as not to impair the obligations of contracts.

What is a sufficient Acknowledgment.—Who may take an Acknowledgment.

I. WHAT IS SUFFICIENT.

1. Where the officer certifies that the parties "were known" to him, the word "personally" is not necessary. Hopkins v. Delaney, 8 Cal. 87; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 187, 512; Henderson v. Grewell, 8 Cal. 584.

2. The officer must state in his certificate the fact of acknowledgment. Although a man may not execute the instrument freely, in point of fact, yet if he make the acknowledgment properly he is afterwards estopped to deny it, as against subsequent innocent parties.—Bryan v. Ramires, 8 Cal. 466; Henderson v. Grewell, 8 Cal. 584.

3. An acknowledgment that a party executed the instrument "freely and voluntarily" is not essential, but the voluntary execution of the instrument must be presumed from the fact that he acknowledged that he "executed the same." Henderson v. Grewell, 8 Cal. 584.

4. The words "described in and who executed," are not essential in the acknowledgment. Ib.

5. Where to a certificate of proof by a subscribing witness, acknowledging the execution of an instrument, the witness adds his signature, and the officer adds the usual jurat to the affidavit, such additions do not vitiate the certificate if without them it shows a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute. The signature of the witness and the jurat may be rejected as surplusage. Whitney v. Arnold, 10 Cal. 533.

6. A certificate of acknowledgment by a subscribing witness which shows the identity of the witness produced with the person whose name is subscribed as a witness to the conveyance, such identity resting in the personal knowledge of the officer, and sets forth the proof of the execution, and "that the witness, whose name is subscribed to such conveyance as a party thereto," executed the same—which is equivalent to the words, "is the person who executed the same"—in the presence of the witness, who thereupon became a subscribing witness, is amply sufficient. Ib.

7. In acknowledgments to deeds, substantial conformity with the statute is sufficient. Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 83.

8. Where a deed has attached to it certificates of acknowledgment made at the Hawaiian Islands, the one by a person who describes himself, in the body of the certificate, as "the principal notary public" of the Islands, and affixes to his signature a similar designation of his official character, with his notarial seal; and the other by a person who describes himself, in the body of his certificate, as "the vice consul of the United States of America, at Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands," and affixes to his signature the designation of his official character as "U. S. Vice Consul," and the consular seal: held, that the execution of the deed was prima facie sufficiently proved to be admitted in evidence; that the persons before whom the acknowledgments purported to have been made were shown to be the officers they represent themselves to be, and were authorized to take the acknowledgments. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 552.

9. The general designation in the fourth section of the Act of April 16th, 1850, as to conveyances of any notary public or any consul of the United States, embraces notaries and consuls of every grade—whether principal or inferior notary, or consul general or vice consul. Ib.

10. The certificates of a notary public or United States consul, of acknowledgment of a deed, are prima facie evidence of the official character of the person by whom they are given. Ib.

11. In the United States, certificates of the proof and acknowledgment of deeds, executed in foreign jurisdiction, are generally received as prima facie evidence of both the character of the officers and the genuineness of their signatures. Ib.

1. The purpose of an Acknowledgment.

12. The purpose of a certificate of acknowledgment is to entitle the instrument to be recorded and to be admitted in evidence without further proof. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 245.

2. Who may take an Acknowledgment.

13. The city recorder of San Francisco was authorized by law to take an acknowledgment of a conveyance by express authority of the statute. Hopkins v. Delaney, 8 Cal. 87.

Defective Acknowledgments. — Seal. — Damages.

14. The certificate of acknowledgment of a notary public to a deed is not an act in pais, which he may exercise by virtue of his office at any time while in office. Bours v. Zachariah, 11 Cal. 292.

II. DEFECTIVE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

15. A power of attorney acknowledged before a notary public in New York city, who is not authorized by our statute to take such acknowledgments is insufficient. Lord v. Sherman, 2 Cal. 501.

17. A certificate of acknowledgment of a deed, in the words "Before me personally appeared A B, to be the individual, &c." is bad, and the record of the conveyance on such a certificate imparts no notice to third parties. The omission might as well be supplied by the words "claiming" or "representing," as by "known" or "proved." There is no averment that the party making the acknowledgment is the person who executed it upon the personal knowledge of the officer. Wolf v. Fogarty, 6 Cal. 225; Kelsey v. Dunlap, 7 Cal. 162; Henderson v. Grewell, 8 Cal. 584; Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 244.

18. Where a notary public, in taking and certifying an acknowledgment to a mortgage, neglected to state in his certificate that the party acknowledging the same was known to him, or was identified by the testimony of a witness examined by him for that purpose: held, that such notary was guilty of gross and culpable negligence, and is responsible to the party injured for the damages resulting from such negligence. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 246.

1. Seal.

19. Although an acknowledgment may be defective in not having the seal of the officer taking it, so as to deprive it of registration, yet this does not make the deed void; it merely affects its notice to third parties. Hastings v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 319.

20. An objection that a county clerk has no power to make an acknowledgment because he has no seal of office, is too narrow a construction of the statute. The court of which he is clerk is entitled to a seal, and that is sufficient. His power does not depend upon the fact of his having procured a seal, or the care with which he preserved it. Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 580.

21. A certificate of acknowledgment to a deed, with the private seal of the notary, dated September 23d, 1852, is good under the statute then in force. Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 372.

22. A certified copy of a deed from the county recorder's office, contained in the margin of the acknowledgment taken before a notary, and in the place where his seal is usually found, the words "no seal" thus: [No Seal]—the conclusion of the acknowledgment being "In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, the day and year," etc. The court below ruled out the copy of the deed as evidence, on the ground that the acknowledgment did not have the notary's seal: held, that the court erred; that the words "no seal," instead of implying that there was no seal affixed, were a mere note by the recorder of the place of the notarial seal, which he probably had no means of copying. Jones v. Martin, 16 Cal. 166.

23. A recorder, in certifying to copies of deeds from his office, need not transcribe the notarial seal to the acknowledgment—the certificate of acknowledgment in this case stating that the notary did affix his seal. Ib.

2. Damages.

24. If a notary does not faithfully perform his duty, but is guilty of gross and culpable negligence, in taking an acknowledgment, he is responsible to the party injured for the damages resulting from his negligence. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 245.

Amendment.—Acknowledgment of a Married Woman.

25. A neglect to complete the certificate of acknowledgment is not excused by the fact that the certificate had been partially filled by the attorney for the grantee. The certificate upon its face is unfinished; the date and the name of the grantor had been inserted, leaving it for the notary to insert his knowledge or the evidence received of the identity of the party making the acknowledgment. Ib.

26. If the notary read the certificate before signing it, this omission must have been known to him; if he did not, he is equally guilty of negligence, for an officer who affixes his official signature and seal to a document, thereby giving to it the character of evidence, without examining it to find whether the facts certified are true, can scarcely be said faithfully to perform his duty according to law. Ib.

3. Amendment.

27. A notary derives his power from the statute. The special duty and authority of taking and certifying acknowledgments is given him. But he acts as an officer with a special authority for each particular case. He is to take an acknowledgment, and certify it, as parts of the same transaction. After taking the acknowledgment and making and delivering the return, his functions cease, and he is discharged from all further authority. He has no power to amend his return afterwards. Bours v. Zachariah, 11 Cal. 292.

III. ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF A MARRIED WOMAN.

28. The acknowledgment is a necessary part of a conveyance of real estate by a married woman; up to the last moment she may retract the execution of the deed. Selover v. American Russian Comm. Co., 7 Cal. 275.

29. It is not in the power of a court of equity to compel a married woman to correct an insufficient acknowledgment. Barrett v. Tewksbury, 9 Cal. 15.

30. In the acknowledgment of a married woman to a deed, there must be a privy examination. Kendall v. Miller, 9 Cal. 592.

31. A justice of the peace cannot take and certify the acknowledgment of a married woman. It must be done by a justice of the supreme court, judge of a district court, county judge, or notary public. Kendall v. Miller, 9 Cal. 592; see Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 84, post.

32. The certificate of an acknowledgment of a married woman to a deed must state that the contents of the deed were explained to her; otherwise it is defective, and will not pass her interest in the estate. Pease v. Barbiers, 10 Cal. 440.

33. Under our law, no presumption of knowledge of the contents of an instrument, on the part of a married woman, arises from the fact of executing and acknowledging it; the contents must be made known to her. Ib.

34. The words "undue influence" being omitted in the acknowledgment of a wife does not render it invalid. Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 84.

35. A justice of the peace can take the acknowledgment of a wife to a deed as well as a notary, and there is no good reason why he should not. Ib.

36. When an acknowledgment is defective in any substantial particular, the femme's title did not pass. Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 498.

37. Where the jury and court are satisfied that the wife understood English, at the time of executing and acknowledging a note and mortgage upon the homestead, there was no necessity for an interpreter to explain the contents of the mortgage. Pfeiffer v. Riehn, 13 Cal. 647.

38. To the efficacy of a conveyance of her real estate by a married woman, it is essential that she should join with her husband in its execution, and state, on a private examination at the time, separate and apart from him, and without his hearing, that she executed the same freely, without fear of him, or compulsion, or undue influence from him, and that she does not wish to retract its execution. This private examination—this determination of the will as to the retraction of the execution—are not matters which can be delegated to another. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 556.

ACQUITTAL.

1. The defendant was convicted of manslaughter upon an indictment charging murder, which verdict was set aside: held, that on a second trial the defendant can plead the former conviction of manslaughter as an acquittal of the crime of murder, and can only be retried for manslaughter. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 376; People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 278.

2. Accessories may, by the act of this State, be indicted and tried with the principal, or separately, and either may be convicted or acquitted without reference to the previous conviction or acquittal of the other. People v. Bearss, 10 Cal. 69.

ACTIONS.

I. When an Action will Lie.

II. Form of Actions.

1. Under the Code.
2. A Party is bound by his Action.
3. Consolidation of Actions.
4. By or against whom Actions will Lie.
 - (a.) By whom.
 - (b.) Against whom.
5. When Assignable.
6. Process.

I. WHEN AN ACTION WILL LIE.

1. An action cannot be maintained against A to recover damages for a trespass to real estate committed by B. Lick v. Stevenson, 1 Cal. 129.

2. Where a contract is made to convey land by a quit claim deed at a future time, an action cannot be maintained by the vendee against the vendor, on the ground that a third person has intruded upon a portion of the land and the vendee cannot obtain possession, there being no stipulation in the contract that the vendee shall be put in possession. Tewksbury v. Laffan, 1 Cal. 130.

3. An action founded upon a statute to recover a penalty, where no penalty is imposed by the statute, cannot be sustained.

Board of Health v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 1 Cal. 198.

4. A possessory action cannot be maintained under Mexican law by a person who has acquired his titles subsequent to the intrusion complained of. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 259.

5. The statute authorizing the granting of a license to keep a gambling house could not be construed as conferring a right of action to sue for a gaming debt, but protection solely against a criminal prosecution. Bryant v. Mead, 1 Cal. 444.

6. An action for debt will not lie against a keeper of a gaming table without license, to recover the amount of license; the only redress is by indictment. People v. Craycroft, 2 Cal. 244.

7. When new parties in interest are known to the plaintiff, it adds strength to his right of a new action after judgment had. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 283.

8. After the purchase of property by plaintiff at sheriff's sale, he has a right to sue for possession. And the discovery of a fraud after suit brought, would entitle him so to shape his action as to include it, for the consideration of the court. Ib. 284.

9. The district attorney may at any time after the adjournment of the term of the court maintain an action on a recognizance declared forfeited, and proceed against the bail. People v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 403.

10. A judgment obtained by publication of summons against a defendant then out of the State in which the judgment is rendered, though it may be enforced against his property in that State, has no binding force in personam, and is a mere nullity when attempted to be enforced in another State. Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 455.

11. There is nothing in our statute which divests the right to maintain an action on a judgment at law. Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 19; Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 375.

12. An action can be maintained at law upon a decree in equity for a specific sum of money, whenever a sum liquidated and made definite by contract or judgment is recoverable. Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 20.

13. Where the owner of a lot neglects for three days after notice from the superintendent of public streets of said city to repair the street in front of his lot, as required by statute, the superintendent has the right to make a contract for that purpose; and an action will lie in the name of the party performing the work against the owner of the lot adjacent for the amount. Hart v. Gavin, 12 Cal. 478.

14. Relief from a judgment against an insolvent may be by motion to discharge it, unless there be suspicion of fraud in the release of the insolvent. No formal action is necessary. Inlay v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 177.

II. FORM OF ACTIONS.

1. Under the Code.

15. The code provides that there shall be but one form of civil action, but it does not intend to abolish all distinctions between law and equity as to actions. The innovation extends only to the form of action and the pleadings, while the technicalities of pleading have been dispensed with. Dewitt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 468; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 243.

16. The distinction in the form of actions ex delicto and ex contractu was abolished by statute, but the general principles which govern such actions are retained. Lubert v. Chauviteau, 3 Cal. 463.

17. When personal property is tortuously taken, the party aggrieved may waive the action in tort, and sue in assumpsit for the value of the property. Fratt v. Clark, 12 Cal. 90.

18. An action to recover a judgment against an administrator, for money embezzled by his intestate, pending which a bill in equity was filed to recover the property bought with the money, and prosecuted to a decree after judgment was taken at law for the amount, evidences no such distinct and deliberate choice to take the general claim on the estate for money, in lieu of the claim on this property, as to bar plaintiff from prosecuting his equitable claim. Wells v. Robinson, 12 Cal. 142.

19. Where one having a claim to collect agreed with another to take his claim against the common debtor and treat it as his own in any suit brought for the debt, costs, and expenses to be shared pro rata, and afterwards prosecuted both claims to judgment in his own name, and in his own name bought the property of the defendant on execution sale, and left it with an agent for sale, he is not liable for money had and received, or in indebitatus assumpsit. Herrick v. Hodges, 13 Cal. 433.

20. A suit to enforce a particular lien, under the act, is a proceeding to enforce all the liens against the property. And an intervention in a suit already pending, if filed within six months, is as much a compliance with the act as an original suit. Mars v. McKay, 14 Cal. 129.

21. Proceedings for the settlement of an estate and matters connected therewith are not civil actions within the meaning of sections 18 to 20 of the civil code. Estate of Scott, 15 Cal. 221.

See COMPLAINT, PLEADINGS.

2. A Party is bound by his Action.

22. If an action be improperly commenced, the party bringing it having obtained the benefit, cannot avoid the responsibility he may have thus incurred by pleading his own misfeasance. Turner v. Billagram, 2 Cal. 522.

3. Consolidation of Actions.

23. The law will not tolerate a division of a joint right of action into several actions. Nightingale v. Scannell, 6 Cal. 509.

24. A defendant shall not be harassed with several suits for the same matter at the same time; the pendency of one suit may be pleaded in abatement of the other. Seligman v. Kalkman, 8 Cal. 216.

25. It often happens that a party has his election to pursue one of two or more remedies, but he should not pursue several at one and the same time. Ib. 217.

26. A creditor has not the right to assign a debt in parcels, and thus by splitting up the cause of action, subject the debtor to the costs and expenses of more suits than the parties originally contemplated. Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 536.

4. By or against whom Actions will lie.

27. One copartner cannot sue another unless by bill for a dissolution, praying for an account. Russell v. Ford, 2 Cal. 87; Buckley v. Carlisle, 2 Cal. 420; Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 292; Nugent v. Locke, 4 Cal. 320; Barnstead v. Empire Mining Co., 5 Cal. 299.

28. An action may be brought by one person against another for the purpose of determining an adverse claim which the latter makes against the former for money or property, upon an alleged obligation; but the defendant has his rights to any provisional remedy in law. King v. Hall, 5 Cal. 84.

29. The right of a member of an incorporated company to sue a corporation is undoubted. Barnstead v. Empire Mining Co., 5 Cal. 299.

30. Actions for the diversion of the waters of ditches are in the nature of actions for the abatement of nuisances, and may be maintained by tenants in common in a joint action. Park v. Killam, 8 Cal. 79.

31. Where two persons are employed by the claimants of a tract of land under Mexican title, as agents to procure the confirmation of the grant, and services are rendered and expenses incurred by the agents: held, that such services and expenses are individual in their character and not joint, and that separate actions may be maintained by such agents for their expenses thus incurred. Conner v. Hutchinson, 12 Cal. 127.

32. An action brought by an agent in his own name for a trespass in taking and converting coin from the possession of the agent, in which action the jury found that the coin belonged to the principal, and gave only nominal damages, is no bar to an action by the principal for such coin. Pico v. Webster, 12 Cal. 141.

33. An alien friend may sue an American in the consular courts of China, established there under the treaty of 1844. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 283.

34. An action upon a duty due by an auctioneer to the State, under a special statute, not being a prosecution, but a civil action for the recovery of money due the State, is properly brought in the name of the State. State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 532.

35. Executors have the right to institute actions under the general authority conferred upon them by the statute. No special authorization from the probate court is necessary in such cases. Hallock v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 579.

36. A county government* is a portion of the State government, and as there is no remedy against the State, there can be none against the county. Hunsacker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 290.

37. A party cannot be imprisoned under a judgment in a civil action for assault and battery. Ex parte Prader, 6 Cal. 240.

38. Counties are quasi corporations, *and can sue and be sued, according to the act of May 11th, 1854. Price v. Sacramento County, 6 Cal. 255; Tuolumne County v. Stanislaus County, 6 Cal. 442; Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 6 Cal. 677; 8 Cal. 57; Placer County v. Astin, 8 Cal. 305.

39. In the absence of any statute to that effect, the State cannot be sued, and the judgment against her is erroneous. People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 258.

5. When Assignable.

40. A cause of action arising out of a tort is not assignable. Oliver v. Walsh, 6 Cal. 456.

6. Process.

41. Mere cognizance of the existence of an action is not notice in a legal sense. The notice must apprise the party whose rights are to be affected of what is required of him, and the consequences which may follow if he neglect to defend the action. Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 226.

42. To support a plea in abatement founded on the pendency of a prior action, it is necessary that process issue in such former action, or that there be an appearance such as would waive the issuance of process. Conger v. Weaver, 10 Cal. 238; Primm v. Gray, 10 Cal. 522.

43. Where a complaint was filed on the thirtieth day of October, 1856, and no summons was issued thereon, and an amended complaint was filed on the twenty-sixth of January, 1857, and summons issued thereon: held, that the action was not commenced until the issuing of the summons. Green v. Jackson W. Co., 10 Cal. 375.

ACTIONS, JOINDER OF.

1. If several causes of action are improperly united in the same action, the objection must be taken by demurrer or it will be deemed to be waived, and the action will be sustained. Macondray v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 395; Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 125; Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224; Clark v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 638.

2. A contract contained a covenant for stipulated damages, and by the same contract the parties were constituted partners: it was held, that in an action on said contract the legal demand for damages could be joined with the equitable demand for a dissolution. Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 294.

3. In a complaint for trespass, the plaintiff in one count claimed five hundred dollars, the alleged value of the property destroyed, and five hundred dollars damages: it was held, that these causes of action were properly joined. Tendesen v. Marshall, 3 Cal. 440.

4. A claim for damages for a personal tort cannot properly be united in an action with a demand cognizable in equity. Mayo v. Madden, 4 Cal. 28.*

5. A claim for possession of real property, with damages for its detention, cannot be joined with a claim for consequential damages arising from a change of a road, by which a tavern keeper may have been injured in his business. Idaho v. Sacramento Turnpike Co., 5 Cal. 225.

6. It is not misjoinder of causes of action to demand in the same action that defendant account for and refund a proportion of the outfit and advances made by plaintiff, as agreed in the same contract. Garr v. Redman, 6 Cal. 576.

7. A party may declare in tort, under our pleadings, and at the same time ask for the equitable interposition of the court to protect the subject matter in litigation until the cause is heard. Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 125; Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224; Weaver v. Conger, 10 Cal. 237.

8. A complaint which joins an action of "trespass quare clausum fregit," ejectment, and prayer for relief in chancery will be held bad on demurrer. To sustain such complaint would be subversive of all the rules of pleading. Bigelow v. Gove, 7 Cal. 135.

9. It is not necessary, in an action against a sheriff to recover damages (in addition to the $200 imposed by law as a penalty) for a failure to execute and return process, that two suits should be brought. Damages and the penalty may be recovered in one suit. Pearkes v. Freer, 1 Cal. 642.

10. An action at law which prays judgment against the party who gave the note sued upon may be joined with an equitable demand to foreclose a mortgage given by that party and his wife to secure the payment of the note. Forbes, 10 Cal. 300; Rowe v. Tain Water Co., 10 Cal. 444; Lieby, 14 Cal. 157.

11. In an action for injury to property, a claim for damages may be joined with a claim for the defendant's dam, and the continuing injury may properly be joined with a claim for damages in the prevention of the defendant from working his claim. Forbes v. Tain Water Co., 12 Cal. 557.

12. The union in one complaint, of an allegation that the defendant have wrongfully built a dam across Mormon Creek, and that the water of said creek be "dammed up," etc., and that with an allegation that "defendants have constructed gates, etc., in their said dams and flumes, which they hoist for the purpose of cleaning out said dams and flumes of slum, stone and gravel," the accumulation of which renders the water useless to plaintiff, does not make the complaint demurrable on the ground that it unites several distinct causes of action in one count. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 27.

* In the opinion of Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 125, the court stated that the case of Mayo v. Madden, 4 Cal. 28, was not analogous.

Adjournment.

13. Common counts cannot all be united in one count, as one cause of action, without any specification of the sums due upon each several cause. Buckingham v. Waters, 14 Cal. 147.

14. In a complaint in ejectment, parties may seek, in addition to a recovery of the premises, an injunction restraining the commission of trespass in the nature of waste pending the action; but the grounds of equity interposition should be stated subsequently to and distinct from those upon which the judgment at law is sought. Natoma Water and Mining Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 548.

15. Though the prayer, or one of the prayers, may indicate a distinct cause of action against one defendant, yet it is immaterial if the allegations of the complaint, taking them all together, make no homogeneous case as against all the defendants. De Leon v. Higuera, 15 Cal. 495.

16. Complaint avers in substance that defendant made his note, etc., setting out a copy; that plaintiff is holder by transfer from the payee, etc., and that defendant is indebted to plaintiff thereon in the sum, etc. The complaint then avers: "Plaintiff further shows that after said note was executed, etc. * * * defendant, by virtue of * * * proceedings in insolvency, etc. * * * claims to have been discharged from the payment of the note and debt hereinbefore mentioned; and plaintiff further shows that after said discharge as aforesaid, on or about * * * defendant promised" the payee and other persons that he would pay said note to said payee on demand, etc.; and that defendant thereby revived said obligation, etc.: held, that the complaint does not set up two causes of action; that the gravamen of the action was designed to be the promise, the previous indebtedness being averred as matter of inducement. Smith v. Richmond, 15 Cal. 502.

17. An objection that one of two counts in a complaint is an equitable cause of action, and should not be tried by jury, must be taken at the time, and cannot be urged on appeal if not so taken. Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 177.

ADJOURNMENT.

1. A judgment rendered by a district court after the time appointed for the adjournment of the term is invalid, and will be set aside as void. Smith v. Chichester, 1 Cal. 409; Coffinberry v. Horrill, 5 Cal. 493; Peabody v. Phelps, 7 Cal. 53; Wicks v. Ludwig, 9 Cal. 175.

2. After the adjournment of the term no power remains in the court to set aside the judgment, or grant a new trial, except as provided by statute, unless the right is saved by proper motion. Baldwin v. Kramer, 2 Cal. 583; Morrison v. Dapman, 4 Cal. 257; Suydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 281; Carpentier v. Hart, 5 Cal. 407; Robb v. Robb, 6 Cal. 22; Shaw v. McGregor, 8 Cal. 521.

3. The fact that the court was adjourned, though not for the term, at the time set for the hearing of objections of creditors to an insolvent's discharge, and that the hearing took place before the judge at chambers, is no valid objection to the discharge. Clarke v. Ray, 6 Cal. 604.

4. A judgment rendered by a district court after the time appointed for the adjournment of the term may be set aside, if there has been no service of summons upon the defendants. Carpentier v. Hart, 5 Cal. 407; Pico v. Carillo, 7 Cal. 32; Shaw v. McGregor, 8 Cal. 521.

5. A district attorney may at any time after the adjournment of the term of the court at which the recognizance is declared forfeited, proceed against the bail. People v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 403.

6. While the term lasts, the court has power to amend the record. After the term had passed, the record cannot be amended, unless there is something in the record to amend by. Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 173.

XI. Final Account of an Administrator.

I. JURISDICTION OF ADMINISTRATION.

1. Two jurisdictional facts must exist to support administration in every case; first, the death of the party; second, his residence within the county at the time of his death. They must be alleged in the petition and be true in point of fact. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 233; Haynes v. Weeks, 10 Cal. 118.

2. To vest the incoming administrator with title to an estate, there must be a grant of letters of administration to him; the mere handing over of the papers by the old administrator to the new is insufficient. Rogers v. Hoberlein, 11 Cal. 129.

1. Resignation or Removal of an Administrator.

3. Where the administrator resigns, leaving the administration incomplete, there is no final rule of compensation. The probate court should apportion it in reference to the compensation fixed by law for the whole, according to sound discretion. Ord v. Little, 3 Cal. 389.

4. The compensation allowed by law to executors upon the whole value of the estate, both real and personal, only applies when the administration is complete and the estate is finally settled. Ib.

5. An administrator resigned and appeared in court to have a final settlement of his accounts. The judge found him indebted to the estate in a large sum, and ordered him to pay it into court. Upon his refusal, he was prosecuted on his bond: held, the action does not lie, as the order was illegal, and he was not bound to pay the money into court. Wilson v. Hernandez, 5 Cal. 443.

6. The probate judge, as the general supervisor and guardian of the estates of deceased persons, has power by law to suspend or remove an administrator whenever he has reason to believe, either from his own knowledge or from credible information, that such administrator has fraudulently wasted or mismanaged the estate, or is about to do so, or has become incompetent to manage it. An appellate court should not interfere with the order, except in case of gross abuse of discretion. Deck's Estate v. Gherke, 6 Cal. 669.

7. The fair inference to be drawn from the act regulating estates of deceased persons is, that the permission given an executor or administrator to resign in the one case specified is a negative of such right in all others. Haynes v. Meeks, 10 Cal. 116.

8. Where an administrator filed in the probate court his resignation, and on the same day the court made an order reciting that the administrator had filed his resignation and required him to turn over the effects of the estate to and settle with the public administrator, and when such settlement should be fully made the administrator and his sureties be released, and where no final settlement was made: held, that such act was an acceptance, on the part of the court, of such resignation. Ib. 118.

2. Who may Administer.

9. The statute provides that any other of the next of kin who would be entitled to share in the distribution of the estate shall be entitled to administer, it must be construed to mean the next of kin capable of inheriting, or who would be entitled to distribution if there be no nearer kindred. Anderson v. Potter, 5 Cal. 64.

10. The brother of deceased being entitled to letters of administration on the estate, gave D., a stranger, a writing, requesting the court to appoint him administrator. D. applied for letters, annexing to his petition said writing. At the hearing, the brother asked leave to withdraw the writing, opposed the appointment of D., and prayed letters to himself: held, that the brother waived his right, and that, having encouraged D. to go to the expense and trouble of applying for letters of administration, he is estopped from withdrawing his assent and waiver, or renunciation. Estate of Kirtlan, 16 Cal. 165.

11. The mere fact that one is not of kin to the deceased does not incapacitate him to hold the office of administrator. A stranger is legally competent, though the other parties named in the fifty-second section of the act concerning the estates of deceased persons are entitled to priority. Ib.

12. The sixty-sixth section of that act does not restrict the power of appointment given in the fifty-second section. The object of this section—the sixty-sixth—authorizing the appointment of some competent person at the request of the person entitled, to be joined with such person, was to allow those entitled to letters the aid of others more competent. Ib.

13. The proviso in the fifty-second section of the act to regulate the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, as amended by the act of April 23d, 1855, extends to all the classes of persons designated in the section, and is not limited to persons embraced within the tenth class; and a surviving partner, though a brother, where the partnership existed at the time of the death of the intestate, cannot be administrator. Cornell v. Gallaher, 16 Cal. 367.

II. FEES OF AN ADMINISTRATOR.

14. Where the administrator resigns, leaving the administration incomplete, there is no fixed value of compensation. The probate court should apportion it in reference to the compensation fixed by law for the whole, according to sound discretion. Ord v. Little, 3 Cal. 389.

15. The compensation allowed by law to executors upon the whole value of the estate, both real and personal, only applies when the administration is complete, and the estate is finally settled. Ib.

16. An administrator being compelled by law to hold, protect and guard funds coming into his hands, which he has reason to believe to be assets of the estate, until the right to the funds can be determined, is entitled to his commissions thereon. Wells v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 143.

III. ACTIONS BY OR AGAINST ADMINISTRATORS.

1. By an Administrator.

17. The common council of Sacramento by resolution made an appropriation to the mayor of the city of $10,000, reciting meritorious services (but such as were within his official duty) as the consideration, which was exclusive of his salary, which was regularly paid. The mayor died the day the appropriation was passed, and did not accept it formally: held, that the appropriation could not be recovered in action at law by the administrator.—Heslep v. City of Sacramento, 2 Cal. 581.

18. There is no authority for prosecuting the cause in the name of a deceased person; all proceedings ought to be stayed until, by suggestion, his executor or administrator was made a party. Sanchez v. Roach, 5 Cal. 248.

19. An administrator, by our statute, being entitled to possession of the real estate of the deceased, may maintain ejectment; and where the complaint avers title in the administrator, a default admits it. Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 119.

20. In suit by an administrator against defendant, for conversion of the property of the estate under the one hundred and sixteenth section of the statute to regulate the settlement of estates, the proof as to the right title or possession of plaintiff, and the taking or interference by defendant being conflicting, it is error to instruct the jury that a mere demand on the defendant, and refusal by him to surrender the property, charge him with a conversion. Beckman v. Geddes, 14 Cal. 252.

When the Administrator is a Necessary Party.

2. When the Administrator is a necessary Party Plaintiff.

21. In this State all property of the deceased, real and personal, remains in the possession of the administrator until administration of the estate is had, or a decree of distribution is made by the probate court. The administrator until then is the proper party plaintiff in a suit to quiet title to the estate. Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 264.

3. Against an Administrator.

22. The general right to sue an administrator was taken away by the statute, except in case of presentation and rejection of the account, and the declaration should have set out the exception. Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 393; Falkner v. Folsom, 6 Cal. 412; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 558.

23. Executors who have entered into and possessed a leasehold estate, of which their testator was assignee, are liable for the rents accruing during the possession, as assignees de bonis propriis. (Obiter.) Smiley v. Van Winkle, 6 Cal. 606.

24. Where an administrator is sued in equity by the people, to compel him to pay over to the county treasurer money collected by the intestate as tax collector: held, that he occupied the position of one who takes possession, without authority, of property belonging to another, and that he may be treated as a trustee de son tort. People v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 352; Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 658.

25. Where the adverse possession of the defendant was wrongful in the beginning, its character is not changed by the act of plaintiff, consenting to the appointment of defendant as administrator of the estate upon which he is trespassing. Taylor v. Woodward, 10 Cal. 92.

26. M., a married woman, had a sum of money left her by bequest during coverture; she and her husband joined in a power of attorney to O., authorizing him to demand and receipt for the money, which he did, and the husband then died. M. brought suit for the money: held, that it was the separate property of M., and when O. received it, he did so as trustee of M., and it could not be charged with money advanced to the husband, and a settlement thereof with the administrator of her husband could not have any effect on M.'s rights, although these defenses were set up. Dickinson v. Owen, 11 Cal. 75.

27. A was indebted upon a note and mortgage to B in the sum of $40,000. B assigned the note and mortgage to C, and received from him his notes in lieu thereof. Afterwards A mortgaged to C, together with other property, the property previously mortgaged to B, subject to the first mortgage, for which C was to advance to A, from time to time, sums of money not to exceed $12,000, to enable A to pay his debts. By this mortgage C was authorized to receive the rents of the mortgaged premises, and apply them to the payment of the $12,000 and interest, and in case the rents should not be sufficient for that purpose, and A should not pay within two months after request, then C was to sell, and out of the proceeds pay the amount and interest so advanced. C at various times advanced to A nearly $12,000, and collected rents to the amount of $28,000. Subsequently C died, and his executor collected the rents: held, in an action by A against C's administrator, that C acted in the purchase of the note and mortgage of B, as an agent of A, and that A was entitled to the trust fund. Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 658.

4. When an Administrator is a necessary Party Defendant.

28. In cases of joint and several contracts, an administrator cannot be joined with the survivor; for one is charged de bonis testatoris and the other de bonis propriis. Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 176; May v. Hanson, 6 Cal. 643.

29. Where the plaintiff, in an action to foreclose a mortgage against a party who has died since the service of the summons and before judgment, asks for a decree of sale of the mortgaged premises, and if the same is not sufficient to discharge the debt, then for a judgment over against the estate, the administrator is a necessary party to the action. Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal.

125; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 559; (limited in Cowell v. Buckelew, 14 Cal. 642).

30. All the property, both real and personal, belonging to the estate of a deceased person, goes into the possession of the administrator, who is therefore a necessary party to all suits affecting it. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215; Harwood v. Marye, 8 Cal. 580; Haynes v. Meeks, 10 Cal. 120.

31. A demand that a mortgagee be subrogated to rights under a prior mortgage, for the satisfaction of which a part of his mortgage was taken, is not a claim in the sense of the statute against the estate of the deceased person. The administrator is a proper party for the purpose of liquidating the amount of the indebtedness. Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 385.

5. Of the Pleadings.

32. Where, in an action against an administrator, the complaint is founded on an instrument alleged to have been executed by the intestate, it is not necessary under the statute that the administrator should deny the signature of the intestate on oath. It must be proven. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 411.

33. In an action against an administrator the court should, if asked, charge the jury as to the statute time within which the action could be brought, when the claim is rejected. Benedict v. Hoggin, 2 Cal. 386.

34. A person who was not a party to a settlement by an administrator in the probate court, may disregard the settlement, and file his bill in chancery to compel him to account. Clarke v. Perry, 5 Cal. 60; Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 129; Deck's Estate v. Gherke, 12 Cal. 438.

35. The failure of a party to aver in his complaint that he has presented his claim for allowance to the administrator, is a matter of avoidance in an action on the claim, only to be taken advantage of by plea, and it is still in its nature and effect nothing more than a matter of abatement. Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 363; Falkner v. Folsom, 6 Cal. 412; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 560.

36. Though the defendant is described in the caption of the complaint as administrator, but the facts stated in the body of the complaint show that he is not sought to be charged as administrator: held, that it is not an action against him in his representative capacity. People v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 350.

37. Where plaintiff in a justice's suit avers he is the administrator in fact of the intestate, and this is not denied in the answer, no further proof of plaintiff's right to sue is requisite. Liening v. Gould, 13 Cal. 599.

38. Bill filed by a judgment creditor of J., upon order of court permitting it, against defendants as executors. Bill avers that the will of deceased "directed by written or oral instructions" the executors to sell certain cattle and retain the proceeds for the use and benefit of J., after first discharging his then debts. That it also declared that he, the testator, had made a secret assignment for J., which the executors would carry into effect according to his instructions, when convenient. Bill charges that defendants have not sold the cattle, but have converted them to their own use: held, that a demurrer was properly sustained; that a pleading must be taken most strongly against a pleader, and that there is no law giving effect to an oral instruction of a testator as a will, or a part of a will, and that the creditor of J. can have no more rights than J. himself. Sparks v. De La Guerra, 14 Cal. 111.

39. At most, J. is only a legatee, and the executors of the trustees of the legacy. And the bill, not stating that the estate is settled, nor that the property or the money is not necessary to pay off debts or expenses of administration, nor that J. would be entitled before final settlement to his legacy without tendering a refunding bond, cannot be maintained. Sparks v. De La Guerra, 14 Cal. 112.

40. A complaint in replevin, alleging that F. was seized and possessed of certain premises at the time of his death; that the plaintiffs were appointed the executors of his last will and testament, and ever since their appointment have been in the possession of the premises; that certain persons, whose names are not designated, entered upon the same without authority, and cut down timber growing thereon to the amount of about three hundred cords; that the defendant afterwards also entered upon the premises, without authority, and removed the wood thus cut, and still detains it from the plaintiffs; that they have demanded the possession of the same from him, and that he refused to deliver it to them, to their damage of $1,100—the alleged value of the wood—sufficiently shows plaintiff's ownership of the wood. Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 577.

41. The complaint here, averring that the plaintiffs were duly appointed executors of the last will and testament of the deceased, and have ever since been such executors, and as such have been ever since in the possession of the premises, is not demurrable on the specific ground that it does not show that plaintiffs are the executors of F., or have any authority to maintain the action—though it is subject to other objections. The complaint should state the death of F.; his leaving a last will and testament; the appointment therein of the plaintiffs as executors; the probate of the will; the issuance of letters testamentary thereon to the plaintiffs; and their qualification and entry upon the discharge of their duties as executors. Ib. 579.

42. The executors had the right to institute the action under the general authority conferred upon them by the statute. No special authorization from the probate court is requisite in such cases. Ib. 580.

6. Costs against an Administrator.

43. Executors and administrators are individually responsible for costs recovered against them in every case; but they shall be allowed them in their administration accounts, except when it appears that the action has been prosecuted or resisted without just cause. Hicox v. Graham, 6 Cal. 169.

7. Of the Judgment against an Administrator.

44. The only effect of a judgment against an administrator, upon any claim for money, shall be to establish the claim in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the administrator and the probate court. Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 127.

45. A judgment by default may be taken against an administrator as well as any other party. Chase v. Swain, 9 Cal. 137; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 562.

46. Under our system, a judgment against an administrator is little—if any—better than an allowance by him, and approval by the probate judge. Wells v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 143.

47. A decree of the probate court, ordering a claim to be paid, rendered on petition of the administrator, and without objection to him, is final and conclusive; and cannot be assailed collaterally nor directly on the ground that it was rendered on insufficient evidence. Estate of Cook, 14 Cal. 130.

IV. AN EXECUTOR MAY BE A WITNESS TO THE EXECUTION OF A WILL.

48. An executor named in a will may be a witness to the execution of the will, when he is neither heir nor legatee. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 505.

V. POWERS OF AN ADMINISTRATOR.

49. When two executors are named in a will, both must ordinarily join in the execution of the powers conferred therein, but the testator may confer upon each of his executors all the power necessary, and he who first enters upon the administration shall proceed to its conclusion. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 511.

1. May Assign a Judgment.

50. An administrator of an estate in New York has the right to assign, for a valuable consideration, a judgment obtained there by the intestate in his lifetime, and against a person who has since removed to this State. Low v. Burrows, 12 Cal. 188.

Bill for an Account.

Locke, 4 Cal. 320; Barnstead v. Empire Mining Co. 5 Cal. 299.

9. A bill for an account is the proper remedy for the settlement of the proceeds of a joint adventure, where, in consideration of outfit and advances made by plaintiff, the defendant agreed to account for and pay over a proportion of the proceeds of his labor and speculations of every kind, for a certain period of time, although the parties may not have been technically partners. Garr v. Redman, 5 Cal. 576.

10. Nor is it misjoinder of causes of action to demand, in the same action, that defendants account for and refund a proportion of the outfit and advances made by plaintiff, as agreed in the same contract. Ib.

11. In an action against an agent for not accounting, a request to account and pay over must be alleged in the complaint and proven at the trial. Bushnell v. McCauley, 7 Cal. 422.

12. Unless an account is asked for in a bill in equity, there is no error in refusing to order it; and if the prayer is for an account, the evidence must then warrant it. Dominguez v. Dominguez, 7 Cal. 427.

13. Where two shareholders in a joint stock company sold to the company goods to a large amount and afterwards, during the existence of the company, sold their stock to A, and assigned their account for such goods to B, who sued such company on said account by attachment: held, that such action could not be maintained, there having been no final settlement of the partnership accounts, no balance struck, and no express promise on the part of the individual members to pay their ascertained portion. Bullard v. Kinney, 10 Cal. 63.

14. M. & B., the plaintiffs, were partners in a ranch and hotel. The ranch was public land, taken up under the State law in the name of M. M. sells one-half to B., taking a mortgage back; B. agreeing to pay certain firm debts. The sale and agreement were afterward canceled, and B. sold M. one-half of the ranch. Defendant, Myers, agrees to buy of B. his half of the ranch; goes into possession, but afterwards refuses to buy, and buys the half from O., who bought the whole of M. At the time of this last purchase, O. and M. knew of B.'s title; held, that a bill in equity by B. against M., O. and Myers, for an account of the partnership between M. & B., and for a decree establishing plaintiff's right to the half of the ranch, does not lie; that his remedy at law for his half of the ranch, against M. or any one claiming under him with notice of his title, is clear, and that M. would be estopped from disputing the title, and as M. makes no defense to the bill, it is good against him, for an account. Brush v. Maydwell, 4 Cal. 209.

15. Equity will not set off the claim of an individual creditor of one joint owner of a judgment against the judgment. And if the judgment be partnership assets, the individual creditor has no claim to any part of it until adjustment of the firm accounts. Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 230.

16. In suit by a stockholder against a corporation and its officers, praying for their removal, and for an account and settlement of the affairs of the corporation, the decree, after a full hearing on the merits, was in accordance with the prayer, and also appointed a receiver to take charge of the property of the corporation until the further order of the court; collect money due or to become due on it; sell certain stock and pay the proceeds in accordance with the decree, etc.: held, that this provision in the decree does not destroy its effect as a final decree, and that an appeal lies therefrom. Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 148.

17. In a suit by a stockholder in a private corporation against the corporation and four of the trustees, who owned stock sufficient to enable them to control the business of the company, for an account and settlement of its affairs, alleging fraud and mismanagement on the part of the trustees, the court below, by its decree, deprived one of said trustees of his salary as superintendent of the business of the corporation: held, that this was error; that, although such superintendent was also trustee and treasurer of the corporation, contrary to a positive provision of the by-laws; and although, in the management of the business of these offices, no attention had been paid to the by-laws and regulations of the corporation, yet, as no fraud was shown, and as the superintendent had faithfully performed his duties as such, he was entitled to his salary. Ib. 149.

18. Where four of the trustees of a private corporation, owning sufficient stock to control its business, conduct the business in a grossly negligent manner, systematically disregarding the by-laws, keeping no account of receipts and expenditures, failing to pay their own assessments, without any excuse: held, that a stockholder may sue in equity for an account, making the corporation and said trustees alone parties—no objection being taken that all of the stockholders were not parties—and the trustees will be compelled to make good any loss occasioned by their negligence or improper conduct. Ib. 151.

2. Reference.

19. An order setting aside the report of the referee appointed to take an account is merely interlocutory and not appealable before final judgment. Johnston v. Dopkins, 6 Cal. 84; Baker v. Baker, 10 Cal. 528.

20. Where a reference is had to take an account, it is within the discretion of the referees to open the case, after it has been once closed, for the purpose of receiving additional testimony. The exercise of such discretion, except in case of gross abuse, will not be reviewed on appeal. Marziou v. Pioche, 10 Cal. 546.

21. Where a party gets into possession of property, as a water-ditch, under a sheriff's suit on foreclosure of a mortgage, and the judgment on which such sale was made is afterwards reversed by the supreme court, and restitution of the property ordered, the court below may, on motion, order such party in possession to account before a referee for the rents and profits received by him—that is, for the sales of water, etc. It would be impracticable for a jury to settle the account, at least, without great delay and embarrassment. Raun v. Reynolds, 15 Cal. 470.

III. ACCOUNTS STATED.

22. Where accounts bear upon their face the words "audited and approved" and "certified to be correct:" held, that this is sufficient language to create them instruments in writing within the meaning of the statute, and not accounts. Sannickson v. Brown, 5 Cal. 57.

23. An account audited against the city of San Francisco, but not paid at the time the consolidation act went into effect, need not again be audited to entitle it to payment. Knox v. Woods, 8 Cal. 546.

24. An account in writing, examined and signed by the parties, will be deemed a stated account, notwithstanding it contains the ordinary preliminary clause that errors are excepted. Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 360.

25. Accounts stated may be opened and the whole account taken de novo for gross mistake in some cases, but this can only be done when the gross error affects all the items of the transaction. When the clear mistake affects only a portion of the items of the stated account it will be permitted to stand, except in so far as it can be impugned by the party alleging the error. Ib. 361.

26. Where D. had a running account with L. from 1838 to 1849, at which time L. died intestate, and no administration was had on his estate until 1857, and D., within one year after the granting of letters of administration, commenced his suit on said account against the estate: held, that the suit was commenced in time. Danglada v. De la Guerra, 10 Cal. 386.

27. The notice of mechanics' lien, filed in the recorder's office, need not set out the items of the account; a general statement of the demand, showing its nature and character, and the amount due or owing thereon, is sufficient. Heston v. Martin, 11 Cal. 42; Brennan v. Swazey, 16 Cal. 142.

28. A complaint stating that defendant was justly indebted to plaintiff in several sums, found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff on an account then stated between them, which defendant then promised to pay, and the sum is due and unpaid, sufficiently states a cause of action. Dewitt v. Porter, 13 Cal. 172.

29. Where, in suit on an account stated, the only evidence was that of a witness who said defendant, on presentation of the account, admitted it to be correct and promised to pay it, and the court charged the jury that, if they believed the testimony of the witness, they must find for plaintiff the amount claimed; and they so found: held, that the instruction did not prejudice defendant, as but one verdict could have been rendered under the evidence. Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 429.

What is a sufficient Acknowledgment.

30. To sustain an action on an account stated, it must be shown there was a demand in favor of plaintiff acceded to by defendant. And if defendant does not object to the accounts as presented within a reasonable time, his silence will be an admission of its correctness. Ib.

31. Evidence that the items of the account are overcharged is not admissible, the complaint being verified and the answer not averring fraud or mistake in the accounting. Ib. 430.

ACCOUNT BOOKS.

1. A private account book of the plaintiff, kept by himself and containing only an account of money paid, is not evidence to charge the defendant. Collin v. Card, 2 Cal. 422.

2. Where the plaintiff to a set-off of defendant, involved the question whether or not profits had been made by plaintiff's steamboat such account book is not evidence to sustain plaintiff's hypothesis. Ib.

3. Our statute authorizes the court to make an order directing a party to produce books and papers in court. Barnstead v. Empire Mining Co., 5 Cal. 300.

4. The books of account kept in the office of an alcalde are admissible^e in evidence as a register of the acts of that officer belonging to the office, kept by his directions and handed over by each alcalde to his successor. Kyburg v. Perkins, 6 Cal. 675.

5. To entitle a book to the character of an official register it is not necessary that it be required by an express statute to be kept, nor that the nature of the office should render the book indispensable; it is sufficient that it be directed by the proper authority to be kept. Ib. 676.

6. The account book of a tradesman is not admissible to establish a charge for money loaned, but it may be to show that articles were procured for the defendant, which plaintiff paid for and charged as so much money loaned. Le Franc v. Hewitt, 7 Cal. 186.

7. An account book is not admissible to prove a single item only, yet where the evidence shows that defendant bought goods at various times, for which only one charge was entered after the order was filled, it seems that the account book is admissible. Ib.

8. In suit on an account for services rendered and materials furnished in the course of his trade, and for articles furnished from his farm by plaintiff, who was a blacksmith and farmer, he is a competent witness to prove to the court his book of original entries, as preliminary to the introduction of the book in evidence. And having testified that the book was kept by himself; that it was his book of original entries in which he kept his accounts; that the entries were made by him at the time they purport to have been made; that he kept no other books; and had no clerk—the book was sufficiently proved to be admitted in evidence. Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 574.

9. And being admitted, its entries, accompanied with proof of the party's reputation in the neighborhood of keeping correct accounts, by persons who had dealt with him, were sufficient prima facie evidence of the specific services rendered and of their value, and of the specific materials furnished and their price; it not appearing that any higher evidence was attainable. Ib. 575.

10. The fact that the charges are first made on a slate and then transferred to the book does not affect the character of the book as one of original entries—the charges on the slate being mere memoranda, not intended to be permanent. Ib.

11. But the transfer must not be long delayed, otherwise the book will be rejected, unless the delay be satisfactorily explained. A delay of three days is not unreasonable. Ib. 576.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.*

I. What is sufficient.

1. The purpose of an Acknowledgment.
2. Who may take an Acknowledgment.

II. Defective Acknowledgments.

1. Seal.
2. Damages.
3. Amendment.

III. Acknowledgment of a Married Woman.

* The statute of 1860, p. 179, authorizes a defective acknowledgment to be corrected by proceedings before the county judge; and the statute of 1860, p. 357, makes defective acknowledgments notice hereafter, the same as if the defect did not exist, so far as not to impair the obligations of contracts.

What is a sufficient Acknowledgment.—Who may take an Acknowledgment.

I. WHAT IS SUFFICIENT.

1. Where the officer certifies that the parties "were known" to him, the word "personally" is not necessary. Hopkins v. Delaney, 8 Cal. 87; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 187, 512; Henderson v. Grewell, 8 Cal. 584.

2. The officer must state in his certificate the fact of acknowledgment. Although a man may not execute the instrument freely, in point of fact, yet if he make the acknowledgment properly he is afterwards estopped to deny it, as against subsequent innocent parties.—Bryan v. Ramires, 8 Cal. 466; Henderson v. Grewell, 8 Cal. 584.

3. An acknowledgment that a party executed the instrument "freely and voluntarily" is not essential, but the voluntary execution of the instrument must be presumed from the fact that he acknowledged that he "executed the same." Henderson v. Grewell, 8 Cal. 584.

4. The words "described in and who executed," are not essential in the acknowledgment. Ib.

5. Where to a certificate of proof by a subscribing witness, acknowledging the execution of an instrument, the witness adds his signature, and the officer adds the usual jurat to the affidavit, such additions do not vitiate the certificate if without them it shows a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute. The signature of the witness and the jurat may be rejected as surplusage. Whitney v. Arnold, 10 Cal. 533.

6. A certificate of acknowledgment by a subscribing witness which shows the identity of the witness produced with the person whose name is subscribed as a witness to the conveyance, such identity resting in the personal knowledge of the officer, and sets forth the proof of the execution, and "that the witness, whose name is subscribed to such conveyance as a party thereto," executed the same—which is equivalent to the words, "is the person who executed the same"—in the presence of the witness, who thereupon became a subscribing witness, is amply sufficient. Ib.

7. In acknowledgments to deeds, substantial conformity with the statute is sufficient. Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 83.

8. Where a deed has attached to it certificates of acknowledgment made at the Hawaiian Islands, the one by a person who describes himself, in the body of the certificate, as "the principal notary public" of the Islands, and affixes to his signature a similar designation of his official character, with his notarial seal; and the other by a person who describes himself, in the body of his certificate, as "the vice consul of the United States of America, at Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands," and affixes to his signature the designation of his official character as "U. S. Vice Consul," and the consular seal: held, that the execution of the deed was prima facie sufficiently proved to be admitted in evidence; that the persons before whom the acknowledgments purported to have been made were shown to be the officers they represent themselves to be, and were authorized to take the acknowledgments. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 552.

9. The general designation in the fourth section of the Act of April 16th, 1850, as to conveyances of any notary public or any consul of the United States, embraces notaries and consuls of every grade—whether principal or inferior notary, or consul general or vice consul. Ib.

10. The certificates of a notary public or United States consul, of acknowledgment of a deed, are prima facie evidence of the official character of the person by whom they are given. Ib.

11. In the United States, certificates of the proof and acknowledgment of deeds, executed in foreign jurisdiction, are generally received as prima facie evidence of both the character of the officers and the genuineness of their signatures. Ib.

1. The purpose of an Acknowledgment.

12. The purpose of a certificate of acknowledgment is to entitle the instrument to be recorded and to be admitted in evidence without further proof. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 245.

2. Who may take an Acknowledgment.

13. The city recorder of San Francisco was authorized by law to take an acknowledgment of a conveyance by express authority of the statute. Hopkins v. Delaney, 8 Cal. 87.

14. The certificate of acknowledgment of a notary public to a deed is not an act in pais, which he may exercise by virtue of his office at any time while in office. Bours v. Zachariah, 11 Cal. 292.

II. DEFECTIVE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

15. A power of attorney acknowledged before a notary public in New York city, who is not authorized by our statute to take such acknowledgments is insufficient. Lord v. Sherman, 2 Cal. 501.

17. A certificate of acknowledgment of a deed, in the words "Before me personally appeared A B, to be the individual, &c." is bad, and the record of the conveyance on such a certificate imparts no notice to third parties. The omission might as well be supplied by the words "claiming" or "representing," as by "known" or "proved." There is no averment that the party making the acknowledgment is the person who executed it upon the personal knowledge of the officer. Wolf v. Fogarty, 6 Cal. 225; Kelsey v. Dunlap, 7 Cal. 162; Henderson v. Grewell, 8 Cal. 584; Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 244.

18. Where a notary public, in taking and certifying an acknowledgment to a mortgage, neglected to state in his certificate that the party acknowledging the same was known to him, or was identified by the testimony of a witness examined by him for that purpose: held, that such notary was guilty of gross and culpable negligence, and is responsible to the party injured for the damages resulting from such negligence. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 246.

1. Seal.

19. Although an acknowledgment may be defective in not having the seal of the officer taking it, so as to deprive it of registration, yet this does not make the deed void; it merely affects its notice to third parties. Hastings v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 319.

20. An objection that a county clerk has no power to make an acknowledgment because he has no seal of office, is too narrow a construction of the statute. The court of which he is clerk is entitled to a seal, and that is sufficient. His power does not depend upon the fact of his having procured a seal, or the care with which he preserved it. Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 580.

21. A certificate of acknowledgment to a deed, with the private seal of the notary, dated September 23d, 1852, is good under the statute then in force. Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 372.

22. A certified copy of a deed from the county recorder's office, contained in the margin of the acknowledgment taken before a notary, and in the place where his seal is usually found, the words "no seal" thus: [No Seal]—the conclusion of the acknowledgment being "In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, the day and year," etc. The court below ruled out the copy of the deed as evidence, on the ground that the acknowledgment did not have the notary's seal: held, that the court erred; that the words "no seal," instead of implying that there was no seal affixed, were a mere note by the recorder of the place of the notarial seal, which he probably had no means of copying. Jones v. Martin, 16 Cal. 166.

23. A recorder, in certifying to copies of deeds from his office, need not transcribe the notarial seal to the acknowledgment—the certificate of acknowledgment in this case stating that the notary did affix his seal. Ib.

2. Damages.

24. If a notary does not faithfully perform his duty, but is guilty of gross and culpable negligence, in taking an acknowledgment, he is responsible to the party injured for the damages resulting from his negligence. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 245.

Amendment.—Acknowledgment of a Married Woman.

25. A neglect to complete the certificate of acknowledgment is not excused by the fact that the certificate had been partially filled by the attorney for the grantee. The certificate upon its face is unfinished; the date and the name of the grantor had been inserted, leaving it for the notary to insert his knowledge or the evidence received of the identity of the party making the acknowledgment. Ib.

26. If the notary read the certificate before signing it, this omission must have been known to him; if he did not, he is equally guilty of negligence, for an officer who affixes his official signature and seal to a document, thereby giving to it the character of evidence, without examining it to find whether the facts certified are true, can scarcely be said faithfully to perform his duty according to law. Ib.

3. Amendment.

27. A notary derives his power from the statute. The special duty and authority of taking and certifying acknowledgments is given him. But he acts as an officer with a special authority for each particular case. He is to take an acknowledgment, and certify it, as parts of the same transaction. After taking the acknowledgment and making and delivering the return, his functions cease, and he is discharged from all further authority. He has no power to amend his return afterwards. Bours v. Zachariah, 11 Cal. 292.

III. ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF A MARRIED WOMAN.

28. The acknowledgment is a necessary part of a conveyance of real estate by a married woman; up to the last moment she may retract the execution of the deed. Selover v. American Russian Comm. Co., 7 Cal. 275.

29. It is not in the power of a court of equity to compel a married woman to correct an insufficient acknowledgment. Barrett v. Tewksbury, 9 Cal. 15.

30. In the acknowledgment of a married woman to a deed, there must be a privy examination. Kendall v. Miller, 9 Cal. 592.

31. A justice of the peace cannot take and certify the acknowledgment of a married woman. It must be done by a justice of the supreme court, judge of a district court, county judge, or notary public. Kendall v. Miller, 9 Cal. 592; see Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 84, post.

32. The certificate of an acknowledgment of a married woman to a deed must state that the contents of the deed were explained to her; otherwise it is defective, and will not pass her interest in the estate. Pease v. Barbiers, 10 Cal. 440.

33. Under our law, no presumption of knowledge of the contents of an instrument, on the part of a married woman, arises from the fact of executing and acknowledging it; the contents must be made known to her. Ib.

34. The words "undue influence" being omitted in the acknowledgment of a wife does not render it invalid. Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 84.

35. A justice of the peace can take the acknowledgment of a wife to a deed as well as a notary, and there is no good reason why he should not. Ib.

36. When an acknowledgment is defective in any substantial particular, the femme's title did not pass. Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 498.

37. Where the jury and court are satisfied that the wife understood English, at the time of executing and acknowledging a note and mortgage upon the homestead, there was no necessity for an interpreter to explain the contents of the mortgage. Pfeiffer v. Riehn, 13 Cal. 647.

38. To the efficacy of a conveyance of her real estate by a married woman, it is essential that she should join with her husband in its execution, and state, on a private examination at the time, separate and apart from him, and without his hearing, that she executed the same freely, without fear of him, or compulsion, or undue influence from him, and that she does not wish to retract its execution. This private examination—this determination of the will as to the retraction of the execution—are not matters which can be delegated to another. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 556.

ACQUITTAL.

1. The defendant was convicted of manslaughter upon an indictment charging murder, which verdict was set aside: held, that on a second trial the defendant can plead the former conviction of manslaughter as an acquittal of the crime of murder, and can only be retried for manslaughter. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 376; People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 278.

2. Accessories may, by the act of this State, be indicted and tried with the principal, or separately, and either may be convicted or acquitted without reference to the previous conviction or acquittal of the other. People v. Bearss, 10 Cal. 69.

I. WHEN AN ACTION WILL LIE.

1. An action cannot be maintained against A to recover damages for a trespass to real estate committed by B. Lick v. Stevenson, 1 Cal. 129.

2. Where a contract is made to convey land by a quit claim deed at a future time, an action cannot be maintained by the vendee against the vendor, on the ground that a third person has intruded upon a portion of the land and the vendee cannot obtain possession, there being no stipulation in the contract that the vendee shall be put in possession. Tewksbury v. Laffan, 1 Cal. 130.

3. An action founded upon a statute to recover a penalty, where no penalty is imposed by the statute, cannot be sustained.

Board of Health v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 1 Cal. 198.

4. A possessory action cannot be maintained under Mexican law by a person who has acquired his titles subsequent to the intrusion complained of. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 259.

5. The statute authorizing the granting of a license to keep a gambling house could not be construed as conferring a right of action to sue for a gaming debt, but protection solely against a criminal prosecution. Bryant v. Mead, 1 Cal. 444.

6. An action for debt will not lie against a keeper of a gaming table without license, to recover the amount of license; the only redress is by indictment. People v. Craycroft, 2 Cal. 244.

7. When new parties in interest are known to the plaintiff, it adds strength to his right of a new action after judgment had. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 283.

8. After the purchase of property by plaintiff at sheriff's sale, he has a right to sue for possession. And the discovery of a fraud after suit brought, would entitle him so to shape his action as to include it, for the consideration of the court. Ib. 284.

9. The district attorney may at any time after the adjournment of the term of the court maintain an action on a recognizance declared forfeited, and proceed against the bail. People v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 403.

10. A judgment obtained by publication of summons against a defendant then out of the State in which the judgment is rendered, though it may be enforced against his property in that State, has no binding force in personam, and is a mere nullity when attempted to be enforced in another State. Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 455.

11. There is nothing in our statute which divests the right to maintain an action on a judgment at law. Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 19; Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 375.

12. An action can be maintained at law upon a decree in equity for a specific sum of money, whenever a sum liquidated and made definite by contract or judgment is recoverable. Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 20.

13. Where the owner of a lot neglects for three days after notice from the superintendent of public streets of said city to repair the street in front of his lot, as required by statute, the superintendent has the right to make a contract for that purpose; and an action will lie in the name of the party performing the work against the owner of the lot adjacent for the amount. Hart v. Gavin, 12 Cal. 478.

14. Relief from a judgment against an insolvent may be by motion to discharge it, unless there be suspicion of fraud in the release of the insolvent. No formal action is necessary. Imlay v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 177.

II. FORM OF ACTIONS.

1. Under the Code.

15. The code provides that there shall be but one form of civil action, but it does not intend to abolish all distinctions between law and equity as to actions. The innovation extends only to the form of action and the pleadings, while the technicalities of pleading have been dispensed with. Dewitt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 468; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 243.

16. The distinction in the form of actions ex delicto and ex contractu was abolished by statute, but the general principles which govern such actions are retained. Lubert v. Chauviteau, 3 Cal. 463.

17. When personal property is tortuously taken, the party aggrieved may waive the action in tort, and sue in assumpsit for the value of the property. Fratt v. Clark, 12 Cal. 90.

18. An action to recover a judgment against an administrator, for money embezzled by his intestate, pending which a bill in equity was filed to recover the property bought with the money, and prosecuted to a decree after judgment was taken at law for the amount, evidences no such distinct and deliberate choice to take the general claim on the estate for money, in lieu of the claim on this property, as to bar plaintiff from prosecuting his equitable claim. Wells v. Robinson, 12 Cal. 142.

19. Where one having a claim to collect agreed with another to take his claim against the common debtor and treat it as his own in any suit brought for the debt, costs, and expenses to be shared pro rata, and afterwards prosecuted both claims to judgment in his own name, and in his own name bought the property of the defendant on execution sale, and left it with an agent for sale, he is not liable for money had and received, or in indebitatus assumpsit. Herrick v. Hodges, 13 Cal. 433.

20. A suit to enforce a particular lien, under the act, is a proceeding to enforce all the liens against the property. And an intervention in a suit already pending, if filed within six months, is as much a compliance with the act as an original suit. Mars v. McKay, 14 Cal. 129.

21. Proceedings for the settlement of an estate and matters connected therewith are not civil actions within the meaning of sections 18 to 20 of the civil code. Estate of Scott, 15 Cal. 221.

See COMPLAINT, PLEADINGS.

2. A Party is bound by his Action.

22. If an action be improperly commenced, the party bringing it having obtained the benefit, cannot avoid the responsibility he may have thus incurred by pleading his own misfeasance. Turner v. Billagram, 2 Cal. 522.

3. Consolidation of Actions.

23. The law will not tolerate a division of a joint right of action into several actions. Nightingale v. Scannell, 6 Cal. 509.

24. A defendant shall not be harassed with several suits for the same matter at the same time; the pendency of one suit may be pleaded in abatement of the other. Seligman v. Kalkman, 8 Cal. 216.

25. It often happens that a party has his election to pursue one of two or more remedies, but he should not pursue several at one and the same time. Ib. 217.

26. A creditor has not the right to assign a debt in parcels, and thus by splitting up the cause of action, subject the debtor to the costs and expenses of more suits than the parties originally contemplated. Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 536.

4. By or against whom Actions will lie.

27. One copartner cannot sue another unless by bill for a dissolution, praying for an account. Russell v. Ford, 2 Cal. 87; Buckley v. Carlisle, 2 Cal. 420; Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 292; Nugent v. Locke, 4 Cal. 320; Barnstead v. Empire Mining Co., 5 Cal. 299.

28. An action may be brought by one person against another for the purpose of determining an adverse claim which the latter makes against the former for money or property, upon an alleged obligation; but the defendant has his rights to any provisional remedy in law. King v. Hall, 5 Cal. 84.

29. The right of a member of an incorporated company to sue a corporation is undoubted. Barnstead v. Empire Mining Co., 5 Cal. 299.

30. Actions for the diversion of the waters of ditches are in the nature of actions for the abatement of nuisances, and may be maintained by tenants in common in a joint action. Park v. Killam, 8 Cal. 79.

31. Where two persons are employed by the claimants of a tract of land under Mexican title, as agents to procure the confirmation of the grant, and services are rendered and expenses incurred by the agents: held, that such services and expenses are individual in their character and not joint, and that separate actions may be maintained by such agents for their expenses thus incurred. Conner v. Hutchinson, 12 Cal. 127.

32. An action brought by an agent in his own name for a trespass in taking and converting coin from the possession of the agent, in which action the jury found that the coin belonged to the principal, and gave only nominal damages, is no bar to an action by the principal for such coin. Pico v. Webster, 12 Cal. 141.

33. An alien friend may sue an American in the consular courts of China, established there under the treaty of 1844. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 283.

34. An action upon a duty due by an auctioneer to the State, under a special statute, not being a prosecution, but a civil action for the recovery of money due the State, is properly brought in the name of the State. State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 532.

35. Executors have the right to institute actions under the general authority conferred upon them by the statute. No special authorization from the probate court is necessary in such cases. Hallock v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 579.

36. A county government* is a portion of the State government, and as there is no remedy against the State, there can be none against the county. Hunsacker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 290.

37. A party cannot be imprisoned under a judgment in a civil action for assault and battery. Ex parte Prader, 6 Cal. 240.

38. Counties are quasi corporations, *and can sue and be sued, according to the act of May 11th, 1854. Price v. Sacramento County, 6 Cal. 255; Tuolumne County v. Stanislaus County, 6 Cal. 442; Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 6 Cal. 677; 8 Cal. 57; Placer County v. Astin, 8 Cal. 305.

39. In the absence of any statute to that effect, the State cannot be sued, and the judgment against her is erroneous. People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 258.

See DEFENDANT, PARTIES, PLAINTIFF.

5. When Assignable.

40. A cause of action arising out of a tort is not assignable. Oliver v. Walsh, 6 Cal. 456.

6. Process.

41. Mere cognizance of the existence of an action is not notice in a legal sense. The notice must apprise the party whose rights are to be affected of what is required of him, and the consequences which may follow if he neglect to defend the action. Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 226.

42. To support a plea in abatement founded on the pendency of a prior action, it is necessary that process issue in such former action, or that there be an appearance such as would waive the issuance of process. Conger v. Weaver, 10 Cal. 238; Primm v. Gray, 10 Cal. 522.

43. Where a complaint was filed on the thirtieth day of October, 1856, and no summons was issued thereon, and an amended complaint was filed on the twenty-sixth of January, 1857, and summons issued thereon: held, that the action was not commenced until the issuing of the summons. Green v. Jackson W. Co., 10 Cal. 375.

See SUMMONS.

ACTIONS, JOINDER OF.

1. If several causes of action are improperly united in the same action, the objection must be taken by demurrer or it will be deemed to be waived, and the action will be sustained. Macondray v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 395; Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 125; Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224; Clark v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 638.

2. A contract contained a covenant for stipulated damages, and by the same contract the parties were constituted partners: it was held, that in an action on said contract the legal demand for damages could be joined with the equitable demand for a dissolution. Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 294.

3. In a complaint for trespass, the plaintiff in one count claimed five hundred dollars, the alleged value of the property destroyed, and five hundred dollars damages: it was held, that these causes of action were properly joined. Tendesen v. Marshall, 3 Cal. 440.

4. A claim for damages for a personal tort cannot properly be united in an action with a demand cognizable in equity. Mayo v. Madden, 4 Cal. 28.*

5. A claim for possession of real property, with damages for its detention, cannot be joined with a claim for consequential damages arising from a change of a road, by which a tavern keeper may have been injured in his business. Bowles v. Sacramento Turnpike Co., 5 Cal. 225.

6. It is not misjoinder of causes of action to demand in the same action that defendant account for and refund a proportion of the outfit and advances made by plaintiff, as agreed in the same contract. Garr v. Redman, 6 Cal. 576.

7. A party may declare in tort, under our pleadings, and at the same time ask for the equitable interposition of the court to protect the subject matter in litigation until the cause is heard. Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 125; Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224; Weaver v. Conger, 10 Cal. 237.

8. A complaint which joins an action of "trespass quare clausum fregit," ejectment and prayer for relief in chancery will be held bad on demurrer. To sustain such complaint would be subversive of all the rules of pleading. Bigelow v. Gove, 7 Cal. 135.

9. It is not necessary, in an action against a sheriff to recover damages (in addition to the $200 imposed by law as a penalty) for a failure to execute and return process, that two suits should be brought. Damages and the penalty may be recovered in one suit. Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 642.

10. An action at law which prays for a judgment against the party who executed the note sued upon may be joined with an equitable demand to foreclose a mortgage given by that party and his wife to secure the payment of the note. Rollins v. Forbes, 10 Cal. 300; Rowe v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 444; Rowland v. Lieby, 14 Cal. 157.

11. In an action for injuries to a mining claim, a claim for damages to the plaintiff by reason of the breaking away of the defendant's dam, and the consequent washing away of the pay-dirt of the plaintiff, may properly be joined with a claim for damages in the preventing plaintiff from working his claim. Fraler v. Sears Union Water Co., 12 Cal. 557.

12. The union in one count of a complaint, of an allegation that defendants have wrongfully built dams and flumes across Mormon Creek, so as to turn the water of said creek out of its natural channel," etc., and thus divert it from plaintiff, with an allegation that "defendants have constructed gates, etc., in their said dams and flumes, which they hoist for the purpose of cleaning out said dams and flumes of slum, stone and gravel," the accumulation of which renders the water useless to plaintiff, does not make the complaint demurrable on the ground that it unites several distinct causes of action in one count. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 27.

* In the opinion of Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 126, the court stated that the case of Mayo v. Madden, 4 Cal. 28, was not analogous.

Adjournment.

13. Common counts cannot all be united in one count, as one cause of action, without any specification of the sums due upon each several cause. Buckingham v. Waters, 14 Cal. 147.

14. In a complaint in ejectment, parties may seek, in addition to a recovery of the premises, an injunction restraining the commission of trespass in the nature of waste pending the action; but the grounds of equity interposition should be stated subsequently to and distinct from those upon which the judgment at law is sought. Natoma Water and Mining Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 548.

15. Though the prayer, or one of the prayers, may indicate a distinct cause of action against one defendant, yet it is immaterial if the allegations of the complaint, taking them all together, make no homogeneous case as against all the defendants. De Leon v. Higuera, 15 Cal. 495.

16. Complaint avers in substance that defendant made his note, etc., setting out a copy; that plaintiff is holder by transfer from the payee, etc., and that defendant is indebted to plaintiff thereon in the sum, etc. The complaint then avers: "Plaintiff further shows that after said note was executed, etc. * * * defendant, by virtue of * * * proceedings in insolvency, etc. * * * claims to have been discharged from the payment of the note and debt hereinbefore mentioned; and plaintiff further shows that after said discharge as aforesaid, on or about * * * defendant promised" the payee and other persons that he would pay said note to said payee on demand, etc.; and that defendant thereby revived said obligation, etc.: held, that the complaint does not set up two causes of action; that the gravamen of the action was designed to be the promise, the previous indebtedness being averred as matter of inducement. Smith v. Richmond, 15 Cal. 502.

17. An objection that one of two counts in a complaint is an equitable cause of action, and should not be tried by jury, must be taken at the time, and cannot be urged on appeal if not so taken. Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 177.

ADJOURNMENT.

1. A judgment rendered by a district court after the time appointed for the adjournment of the term is invalid, and will be set aside as void. Smith v. Chichester, 1 Cal. 409; Coffinberry v. Horrill, 5 Cal. 493; Peabody v. Phelps, 7 Cal. 53; Wicks v. Ludwig, 9 Cal. 175.

2. After the adjournment of the term no power remains in the court to set aside the judgment, or grant a new trial, except as provided by statute, unless the right is saved by proper motion. Baldwin v. Kramer, 2 Cal. 583; Morrison v. Dapman, 4 Cal. 257; Suydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 281; Carpentier v. Hart, 5 Cal. 407; Robb v. Robb, 6 Cal. 22; Shaw v. McGregor, 8 Cal. 521.

3. The fact that the court was adjourned, though not for the term, at the time set for the hearing of objections of creditors to an insolvent's discharge, and that the hearing took place before the judge at chambers, is no valid objection to the discharge. Clarke v. Ray, 6 Cal. 604.

4. A judgment rendered by a district court after the time appointed for the adjournment of the term may be set aside, if there has been no service of summons upon the defendants. Carpentier v. Hart, 5 Cal. 407; Pico v. Carillo, 7 Cal. 32; Shaw v. McGregor, 8 Cal. 521.

5. A district attorney may at any time after the adjournment of the term of the court at which the recognizance is declared forfeited, proceed against the bail. People v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 403.

6. While the term lasts, the court has power to amend the record. After the term had passed, the record cannot be amended, unless there is something in the record to amend by. Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 173.

I. JURISDICTION OF ADMINISTRATION.

1. Two jurisdictional facts must exist to support administration in every case; first, the death of the party; second, his residence within the county at the time of his death. They must be alleged in the petition and be true in point of fact. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 233; Haynes v. Weeks, 10 Cal. 118.

2. To vest the incoming administrator with title to an estate, there must be a grant of letters of administration to him; the mere handing over of the papers by the old administrator to the new is insufficient. Rogers v. Hoberlein, 11 Cal. 129.

1. Resignation or Removal of an Administrator.

3. Where the administrator resigns, leaving the administration incomplete, there is no final rule of compensation. The probate court should apportion it in reference to the compensation fixed by law for the whole, according to sound discretion. Ord v. Little, 3 Cal. 389.

4. The compensation allowed by law to executors upon the whole value of the estate, both real and personal, only applies when the administration is complete and the estate is finally settled. Ib.

5. An administrator resigned and appeared in court to have a final settlement of his accounts. The judge found him indebted to the estate in a large sum, and ordered him to pay it into court. Upon his refusal, he was prosecuted on his bond: held, the action does not lie, as the order was illegal, and he was not bound to pay the money into court. Wilson v. Hernandez, 5 Cal. 443.

6. The probate judge, as the general supervisor and guardian of the estates of deceased persons, has power by law to suspend or remove an administrator whenever he has reason to believe, either from his own knowledge or from credible information, that such administrator has fraudulently wasted or mismanaged the estate, or is about to do so, or has become incompetent to manage it. An appellate court should not interfere with the order, except in case of gross abuse of discretion. Deck's Estate v. Gherke, 6 Cal. 669.

7. The fair inference to be drawn from the act regulating estates of deceased persons is, that the permission given an executor or administrator to resign in the one case specified is a negative of such right in all others. Haynes v. Weeks, 10 Cal. 116.

8. Where an administrator filed in the probate court his resignation, and on the same day the court made an order reciting that the administrator had filed his resignation and required him to turn over the effects of the estate to and settle with the public administrator, and when such settlement should be fully made the administrator and his sureties be released, and where no final settlement was made: held, that such act was an acceptance, on the part of the court, of such resignation. Ib. 118.

2. Who may Administer.

9. The statute provides that any other of the next of kin who would be entitled to share in the distribution of the estate shall be entitled to administer, it must be construed to mean the next of kin capable of inheriting, or who would be entitled to distribution if there be no nearer kindred. Anderson v. Potter, 5 Cal. 64.

10. The brother of deceased being entitled to letters of administration on the estate, gave D., a stranger, a writing, requesting the court to appoint him administrator. D. applied for letters, annexing to his petition said writing. At the hearing, the brother asked leave to withdraw the writing, opposed the appointment of D., and prayed letters to himself: held, that the brother waived his right, and that, having encouraged D. to go to the expense and trouble of applying for letters of administration, he is estopped from withdrawing his assent and waiver, or renunciation. Estate of Kirtlan, 16 Cal. 165.

11. The mere fact that one is not of kin to the deceased does not incapacitate him to hold the office of administrator. A stranger is legally competent, though the other parties named in the fifty-second section of the act concerning the estates of deceased persons are entitled to priority. Ib.

12. The sixty-sixth section of that act does not restrict the power of appointment given in the fifty-second section. The object of this section—the sixty-sixth—authorizing the appointment of some competent person at the request of the person entitled, to be joined with such person, was to allow those entitled to letters the aid of others more competent. Ib.

13. The proviso in the fifty-second section of the act to regulate the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, as amended by the act of April 23d, 1855, extends to all the classes of persons designated in the section, and is not limited to persons embraced within the tenth class; and a surviving partner, though a brother, where the partnership existed at the time of the death of the intestate, cannot be administrator. Cornell v. Gallaher, 16 Cal. 367.

II. FEES OF AN ADMINISTRATOR.

14. Where the administrator resigns, leaving the administration incomplete, there is no fixed value of compensation. The probate court should apportion it in reference to the compensation fixed by law for the whole, according to sound discretion. Ord v. Little, 3 Cal. 389.

15. The compensation allowed by law to executors upon the whole value of the estate, both real and personal, only applies when the administration is complete, and the estate is finally settled. Ib.

16. An administrator being compelled by law to hold, protect and guard funds coming into his hands, which he has reason to believe to be assets of the estate, until the right to the funds can be determined, is entitled to his commissions thereon. Wells v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 143.

III. ACTIONS BY OR AGAINST ADMINISTRATORS.

1. By an Administrator.

17. The common council of Sacramento by resolution made an appropriation to the mayor of the city of $10,000, reciting meritorious services (but such as were within his official duty) as the consideration, which was exclusive of his salary, which was regularly paid. The mayor died the day the appropriation was passed, and did not accept it formally: held, that the appropriation could not be recovered in action at law by the administrator.—Heslep v. City of Sacramento, 2 Cal. 581.

18. There is no authority for prosecuting the cause in the name of a deceased person; all proceedings ought to be stayed until, by suggestion, his executor or administrator was made a party. Sanchez v. Roach, 5 Cal. 248.

19. An administrator, by our statute, being entitled to possession of the real estate of the deceased, may maintain ejectment; and where the complaint avers title in the administrator, a default admits it. Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 119.

20. In suit by an administrator against defendant, for conversion of the property of the estate under the one hundred and sixteenth section of the statute to regulate the settlement of estates, the proof as to the right title or possession of plaintiff, and the taking or interference by defendant being conflicting, it is error to instruct the jury that a mere demand on the defendant, and refusal by him to surrender the property, charge him with a conversion. Beckman v. Geddes, 14 Cal. 252.

When the Administrator is a Necessary Party.

2. When the Administrator is a necessary Party Plaintiff.

21. In this State all property of the deceased, real and personal, remains in the possession of the administrator until administration of the estate is had, or a decree of distribution is made by the probate court. The administrator until then is the proper party plaintiff in a suit to quiet title to the estate. Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 264.

3. Against an Administrator.

22. The general right to sue an administrator was taken away by the statute, except in case of presentation and rejection of the account, and the declaration should have set out the exception. Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 393; Falkner v. Folsom, 6 Cal. 412; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 558.

23. Executors who have entered into and possessed a leasehold estate, of which their testator was assignee, are liable for the rents accruing during the possession, as assignees de bonis propriis. (Obiter.) Smiley v. Van Winkle, 6 Cal. 606.

24. Where an administrator is sued in equity by the people, to compel him to pay over to the county treasurer money collected by the intestate as tax collector: held, that he occupied the position of one who takes possession, without authority, of property belonging to another, and that he may be treated as a trustee de son tort. People v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 352; Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 658.

25. Where the adverse possession of the defendant was wrongful in the beginning, its character is not changed by the act of plaintiff, consenting to the appointment of defendant as administrator of the estate upon which he is trespassing. Taylor v. Woodward, 10 Cal. 92.

26. M., a married woman, had a sum of money left her by bequest during coverture; she and her husband joined in a power of attorney to O., authorizing him to demand and receipt for the money, which he did, and the husband then died. M. brought suit for the money: held, that it was the separate property of M., and when O. received it, he did so as trustee of M., and it could not be charged with money advanced to the husband, and a settlement thereof with the administrator of her husband could not have any effect on M.'s rights, although these defenses were set up. Dickinson v. Owen, 11 Cal. 75.

27. A was indebted upon a note and mortgage to B in the sum of $40,000. B assigned the note and mortgage to C, and received from him his notes in lieu thereof. Afterwards A mortgaged to C, together with other property, the property previously mortgaged to B, subject to the first mortgage, for which C was to advance to A, from time to time, sums of money not to exceed $12,000, to enable A to pay his debts. By this mortgage C was authorized to receive the rents of the mortgaged premises, and apply them to the payment of the $12,000 and interest, and in case the rents should not be sufficient for that purpose, and A should not pay within two months after request, then C was to sell, and out of the proceeds pay the amount and interest so advanced. C at various times advanced to A nearly $12,000, and collected rents to the amount of $28,000. Subsequently C died, and his executor collected the rents: held, in an action by A against C's administrator, that C acted in the purchase of the note and mortgage of B, as an agent of A, and that A was entitled to the trust fund. Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 658.

4. When an Administrator is a necessary Party Defendant.

28. In cases of joint and several contracts, an administrator cannot be joined with the survivor; for one is charged de bonis testatoris and the other de bonis propriis. Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 176; May v. Hanson, 6 Cal. 643.

29. Where the plaintiff, in an action to foreclose a mortgage against a party who has died since the service of the summons and before judgment, asks for a decree of sale of the mortgaged premises, and if the same is not sufficient to discharge the debt, then for a judgment over against the estate, the administrator is a necessary party to the action. Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal.

Of the Pleadings.

125; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 559; (limited in Cowell v. Buckelew, 14 Cal. 642).

30. All the property, both real and personal, belonging to the estate of a deceased person, goes into the possession of the administrator, who is therefore a necessary party to all suits affecting it. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215; Harwood v. Marye, 8 Cal. 580; Haynes v. Meeks, 10 Cal. 120.

31. A demand that a mortgagee be subrogated to rights under a prior mortgage, for the satisfaction of which a part of his mortgage was taken, is not a claim in the sense of the statute against the estate of the deceased person. The administrator is a proper party for the purpose of liquidating the amount of the indebtedness. Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 385.

5. Of the Pleadings.

32. Where, in an action against an administrator, the complaint is founded on an instrument alleged to have been executed by the intestate, it is not necessary under the statute that the administrator should deny the signature of the intestate on oath. It must be proven. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 411.

33. In an action against an administrator the court should, if asked, charge the jury as to the statute time within which the action could be brought, when the claim is rejected. Benedict v. Hoggin, 2 Cal. 386.

34. A person who was not a party to a settlement by an administrator in the probate court, may disregard the settlement, and file his bill in chancery to compel him to account. Clarke v. Perry, 5 Cal. 60; Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 129; Deck's Estate v. Gherke, 12 Cal. 438.

35. The failure of a party to aver in his complaint that he has presented his claim for allowance to the administrator, is a matter of avoidance in an action on the claim, only to be taken advantage of by plea, and it is still in its nature and effect nothing more than a matter of abatement. Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 363; Falkner v. Folsom, 6 Cal. 412; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 560.

36. Though the defendant is described in the caption of the complaint as administrator, but the facts stated in the body of the complaint show that he is not sought to be charged as administrator: held, that it is not an action against him in his representative capacity. People v. Houghaling, 7 Cal. 350.

37. Where plaintiff in a justice's suit avers he is the administrator in fact of the intestate, and this is not denied in the answer, no further proof of plaintiff's right to sue is requisite. Liening v. Gould, 13 Cal. 599.

38. Bill filed by a judgment creditor of J., upon order of court permitting it, against defendants as executors. Bill avers that the will of deceased "directed by written or oral instructions" the executors to sell certain cattle and retain the proceeds for the use and benefit of J., after first discharging his then debts. That it also declared that he, the testator, had made a secret assignment for J., which the executors would carry into effect according to his instructions, when convenient. Bill charges that defendants have not sold the cattle, but have converted them to their own use: held, that a demurrer was properly sustained; that a pleading must be taken most strongly against a pleader, and that there is no law giving effect to an oral instruction of a testator as a will, or a part of a will, and that the creditor of J. can have no more rights than J. himself. Sparks v. De La Guerra, 14 Cal. 111.

40. A complaint in replevin, alleging that F. was seized and possessed of certain premises at the time of his death; that the plaintiffs were appointed the executors of his last will and testament, and ever since their appointment have been in the possession of the premises; that certain persons, whose names are not designated, entered upon the same without authority, and cut down timber growing thereon to the amount of about three hundred cords; that the defendant afterwards also entered upon the premises, without authority, and removed the wood thus cut, and still detains it from the plaintiffs; that they have demanded the possession of the same from him, and that he refused to deliver it to them, to their damage of $1,100—the alleged value of the wood—sufficiently shows plaintiff's ownership of the wood. Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 577.

41. The complaint here, averring that the plaintiffs were duly appointed executors of the last will and testament of the deceased, and have ever since been such executors, and as such have been ever since in the possession of the premises, is not demurrable on the specific ground that it does not show that plaintiffs are the executors of F., or have any authority to maintain the action—though it is subject to other objections. The complaint should state the death of F.; his leaving a last will and testament; the appointment therein of the plaintiffs as executors; the probate of the will; the issuance of letters testamentary thereon to the plaintiffs; and their qualification and entry upon the discharge of their duties as executors. Ib. 579.

42. The executors had the right to institute the action under the general authority conferred upon them by the statute. No special authorization from the probate court is requisite in such cases. Ib. 580.

6. Costs against an Administrator.

43. Executors and administrators are individually responsible for costs recovered against them in every case; but they shall be allowed them in their administration accounts, except when it appears that the action has been prosecuted or resisted without just cause. Hicox v. Graham, 6 Cal. 169.

7. Of the Judgment against an Administrator.

44. The only effect of a judgment against an administrator, upon any claim for money, shall be to establish the claim in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the administrator and the probate court. Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 127.

45. A judgment by default may be taken against an administrator as well as any other party. Chase v. Swain, 9 Cal. 137; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 562.

46. Under our system, a judgment against an administrator is little—if any—better than an allowance by him, and approval by the probate judge. Wells v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 143.

47. A decree of the probate court, ordering a claim to be paid, rendered on petition of the administrator, and without objection to him, is final and conclusive; and cannot be assailed collaterally nor directly on the ground that it was rendered on insufficient evidence. Estate of Cook, 14 Cal. 130.

IV. AN EXECUTOR MAY BE A WITNESS TO THE EXECUTION OF A WILL.

48. An executor named in a will may be a witness to the execution of the will, when he is neither heir nor legatee. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 505.

V. POWERS OF AN ADMINISTRATOR.

49. When two executors are named in a will, both must ordinarily join in the execution of the powers conferred therein, but the testator may confer upon each of his executors all the power necessary, and he who first enters upon the administration shall proceed to its conclusion. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 511.

1. May Assign a Judgment.

50. An administrator of an estate in New York has the right to assign, for a valuable consideration, a judgment obtained there by the intestate in his lifetime, and against a person who has since removed to this State. Low v. Burrows, 12 Cal. 188.

2. Liabilities of an Administrator.

51. If the administrator undertakes to go beyond the strict line of his duty as the law defines it, he acts upon his own responsibility, and while he can receive no profit from a successful issue of his investment, he must bear the loss of a failure. Estate of Knight, 12 Cal. 207.

52. An administrator cannot pay out the money of the estate to remove an incumbrance from the property of the estate, which debt the estate is in no way responsible for, upon the notion that the property may increase in value, and thereby speculate for the estate. Ib.

53. The administrator, in the absence of special authority, must administer the estate as he finds it, paying taxes and other necessary expenses, and doing such other acts as are necessary to preserve it as left; but he cannot advance money to remove incumbrances unless his intestate was bound to pay the money. Ib. 208.

VI. INVENTORY OF AN ESTATE.

54. Where a full inventory of all the effects of the deceased is embodied in a will, it seems to be unnecessary for the administrators to make out a new inventory; at all events, their neglect or omission to do so will not invalidate the will. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 510.

VII. CLAIMS AGAINST AN ESTATE.

55. In an action against an administrator the court should, if asked, charge the jury as to the statute time within which the action could be brought when the claim is rejected. Benedict v. Hoggin, 2 Cal. 386.

56. Where a foreclosure of a mortgage executed by the deceased is filed against the executor, and fails to aver the presentation and rejection of the account in the complaint, it is demurrable. Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 393; Falkner v. Folsom, 6 Cal. 412; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 558.

57. Claims against an estate which have been allowed by the administrator and the probate judge, have the force and effect of judgments; but this applies only to such claims as were debts against the estate, and not to the expenses incurred or disbursements made by the administrator in his management of the estate, which latter claims are conclusive, only having been allowed by the probate court upon settlement of the account after notice to the parties interested. Deck's Estate v. Gherke, 6 Cal. 669; Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 228.

58. Where the executor or administrator has property which belongs to another, the owner is not required to present his account as if he were a creditor. Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 658.

59. The only difference between the claims of an executor or administrator and those of other creditors, as to their presentation after publication of notice, is that the latter must be presented to both the executor or administrator and the probate judge, and the former only to the judge. The time within which the presentation is made is the same in both cases. Estate of Taylor, 10 Cal. 482; 16 Cal. 434.

60. An objection that a claim was never presented to the administrator cannot be made after a decree allowing it. Estate of Cook, 14 Cal. 130.

61. Where an account presented to an administrator for allowance contains no item for interest, and the face of the paper does not show that interest results necessarily from the facts stated as constituting the claim, interest is not recoverable. Aguirre v. Packard, 14 Cal. 172.

62. An executor or administrator, holding a debt against the estate of deceased, cannot pay himself and claim a credit when he has never presented his claim for allowance before the probate judge. The statute requires claims against the estate to be presented in accordance with its directions, whether the claims be held by executors and administrators or by other creditors of the deceased; and if not so presented within ten months from publication of notice for presentation, they are barred. Estate of Taylor, 10 Cal. 434.

VIII. LIENS AGAINST PROPERTY IN THE HANDS OF THE ADMINISTRATOR.

63. A vendor of real estate has an equitable lien on the same for the unpaid purchase-money in the hands of the administrator of the purchaser. Cahoon v. Robinson, 6 Cal. 226.

64. Mortgages and liens of record form no exception to the rule prescribed by sec. 136 of the act to regulate estates of deceased persons; and the claims secured by them must have been presented to the executor or administrator, and rejected by him, before an action can be maintained on them. Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 393; Falkner v. Folsom, 6 Cal. 412; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 559.

65. If the sale by the administrator be void, or voidable, the lien of the administrator continues; and it would seem equitable that the purchaser who has paid the debt of the estate should have a lien upon the estate for his purchase-money. Haynes v. Weeks, 10 Cal. 120.

66. An agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee that the land and its proceeds were to be held, not only as security for the debt due the latter, but for debts due third persons—laborers on the land, for instance—operates as an equitable assignment, which does not pass to the administrator of the mortgagee as general assets for the benefit of creditors at large, but is subject in his hands to the same trust which attached to it before the decease of the intestate. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 121.

67. A decree of foreclosure binds the specific property mortgaged, and the property passes into the hands of the executrix of the husband's estate, subject to its lien. She took only what remained after the lien was satisfied. Cowell v. Bucklew, 14 Cal. 641.

IX. PROPERTY IN THE HANDS OF AN ADMINISTRATOR.

68. The right of enjoyment of possession to public lands may descend among the personal effects of a deceased person to the executor or administrator, and the right of the deceased be conveyed by a regular sale to another. Grover v. Hawley, 5 Cal. 486.

69. In this State, all property of the deceased, real and personal, remains in the hands of the administrator until administration of the estate is had, or a decree of distribution is made by the probate court. Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 264.

X. SALES BY AN ADMINISTRATOR.

70. Upon an application to sell the real estate of a deceased person to pay debts, the heir may dispute the validity of the claims on which the petition is based, although they have been allowed by the public administrator and probate judge. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 228.

71. The administrator or executor is under the control of the probate court. In the sale of property he is the moving party in behalf of creditors, but acts subject to the orders of the court, and the sale is a judicial act. Halleck v. Guy, 9 Cal. 195.

72. A substitution of one bidder for another at executor's sale, who fails to comply with the terms of sale, cannot affect the validity of the sale. The order directing the sale, and the order confirming it, give validity to the purchase. Ib. 197.

73. The effect of an administrator's deed is to convey to the purchaser the title of the deceased. Such a deed can contain no warranty of title. The purchaser must know the law. In these sales caveat emptor is the rule. Ib.

74. The petition by the executor for the sale of real estate must set forth the amount of the personal estate that has come to his hands. This petition, with this averment, are jurisdictional facts, without which the order of sale is void. Gregory v. McPherson, 13 Cal. 577.

75. If an executor, claiming power under a will to sell, and in possession under judgment against C. as above, execute a deed to defendant, who takes possession thereunder, then defendant can set up outstanding title in the executor or his testator as against C., even though he could not, from defects in his deed or want of power in the executor, assert title against the estate of the deceased. Gregory v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 595.

76. W. died, leaving a widow and three minor children. The widow administered, and, as administratrix, presented a petition to the Probate Court, stating that she had agreed to sell the real estate of the intestate to the plaintiff for $3,000, and to procure an order of court for the sale, asking the court to confirm this agreement; and asking further, that, if the court should refuse so to confirm, then for a general order of sale upon the petition, which sets up other facts, usual in such cases. The court made an order to show cause, etc., and at the same time appointed a guardian for minor and absent heirs, who, on the same day, consented to a decree of sale. No service of the order to show cause was made on the heirs. This decree confirms the agreement with plaintiff, directs a deed to be made to him, and afterwards proceeds to order a rule upon the heirs to show cause why a sale at public auction should not be made. Afterwards a second decree of sale was made, in the usual form: held, that this agreement for a private sale did not render the decree of the court for a public sale void; that, although this agreement could not bind the estate, yet it was not against public policy and void. Stuart v. Allen, 16 Cal. 498.

77. Held, further, that to make such agreement void as against public policy, the necessary effect of it must be to contravene some positive right or duty; that the duty of the administratrix is not necessarily inconsistent with an agreement to ask an order of sale upon consideration that a purchaser will give an agreed sum at the sale; that so far as her own interest was concerned, there was no objection to such an arrangement, and if the sale was to be public, probably no good reason exists for holding that the administratrix should not provide or assure herself in this way that, if sold, the property would bring a reasonable price, before proceeding to take steps to have the sale ordered—the propriety of ordering the sale, and confirming it afterwards, being still left to the court, uninfluenced by any such agreement. Ib.

78. Held, further, that the decree is not void because of the defect in the petition, which prays not simply for a decree of sale—the proper course—but seeks, as its main object, the confirmation of the agreement for a private sale to plaintiff; that, though the petition was demurrable for this cause—asking, as it did, what the court could not grant—yet, as the petition presented all the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction of the matter of sale, it was sufficient to support the decree when attacked collaterally. Ib. 499.

79. Held, further, that the decree and proceedings are not void, on the ground of inconsistency, in this: that the first order confirms the agreement of plaintiff, and then requires the parties to show cause why the land should not be sold; and the second decree orders the property to be sold, as usual in such cases; that this course was an irregular and improper exercise of jurisdiction, but that these irregularities and defects must be corrected on appeal, and cannot be indirectly attacked. Ib.

80. The power of the probate court to order a sale of the real estate of the deceased results from the fact that the personal estate in the hands of the administrator is insufficient to pay debts, etc. Ib. 500.

81. Where the petition for the sale of real estate, after setting out the debts, proceeds, “that the personal property of said estate, which will appear by reference to the inventory now on file, is not more than is sufficient for the use and support of the family of said deponent, and is wholly insufficient to pay said indebtedness, and that it is necessary to sell real estate to pay the same;” and after giving some further matter, concludes: “Petitioner further alleges, that the inventory heretofore filed gives a description of all the real estate of which the said intestate died seized, and the condition and value thereof, which said inventory is made a part of this petition:” held, that the petition contains a sufficient averment as to the “amount of personal estate that has come to his hands, and how much thereof, if any, remains undisposed of,” within the statute; that the reference to the inventory makes, for all purposes of the reference, the inventory a part of the petition, and the amount of the personal estate is shown by the inventory, as is also the value. Ib. 501.

82. Where, upon petition by the administrator to sell real estate of the deceased, to pay debts, the usual order for minor and absent heirs to show cause, etc., was entered, and, on the same day, a guardian ad litem was appointed for such heirs, who, on the same day, appeared, and consented to an order of sale, which was accordingly then made: held, that this order of sale is not void, on the ground that the order to show cause, etc., was not served on the minor heirs, and that the guardian was appointed, and the order to show cause made on the same day. Ib. 507.

Final Account of an Administrator.

XI. FINAL ACCOUNT OF AN ADMINISTRATOR.

82. When an administrator resigns, leaving the administration incomplete, there is no fixed rule of compensation. The probate court should apportion it in reference to the compensation fixed by law for the whole, according to sound discretion. Ord v. Little, 3 Cal. 289.

83. An administrator resigned and appeared in court to have a final settlement of his accounts. The judge found him indebted to the estate in a large sum, and ordered him to pay it into court; upon his refusal, he was prosecuted on his bond: held, the action does not lie, as the order was illegal, and he was not bound to pay the money into court. Wilson v. Hernandez, 5 Cal. 443.

84. Where an administrator filed his final accounts, and an issue of fact was made thereon, which was certified to the district court for trial, and trial was had, the jury finding on each issue, and the judge rendering his decision on such findings, and this was certified back to the probate court, which court refused to give effect to the decision and judgment of the district court, it was held no error for the probate court to give judgment on such findings as it construed them. Pond v. Pond, 10 Cal. 502.

See ADMINISTRATOR, PUBLIC, ESTATES, PROBATE COURT, WILLS.

ADMINISTRATOR, PUBLIC.

1. A public administrator is personally liable upon contracts made in relation to estates upon which he administers, unless the idea of such personal liability be excluded by the contract. Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 392.

2. The public administrator is authorized to take charge of certain estates, without any prior appointment of the probate court, but still subject to its direction and control, and other estates he may be required to take charge of in the same way. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 231.

3. From the frame work of our various acts concerning estates and public administrators, it must not be deduced that the commission of the public administrator as a public officer stands in the place of letters of administration; consequently it is necessary to issue them in each case, in order to give him control over the property of the estate.* Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 232; Rogers v. Hoberlein, 11 Cal. 128.

4. A public administrator, having administration of an estate, continues such administration after the expiration of his term of office, and until his authority is directly set aside or indirectly revoked by another appointment. Rogers v. Hoberlein, 11 Cal. 127.

control, regulate, and improve the navigable waters within its jurisdiction as an attribute of sovereignty. Geary v. Gunter, 1 Cal. 467.

2. The code confers admiralty jurisdiction pro tanto upon the district courts, and the proceedings in such actions must be governed by the principles and forms of admiralty courts, except when otherwise controlled or directed by the act. Averill v. Steamer Hartford, 2 Cal. 309.

3. Jurisdiction in rem may exist in several courts at the same time, on the same subject. Ib.

4. The judicial power of the national courts in admiralty is not exclusive, and the States have the power to confer that jurisdiction to its fullest extent upon their own courts. Taylor v. Steamer Columbia, 5 Cal. 274; Warner v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 9 Cal. 710; Ord v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 13 Cal. 372.

II. ACTIONS AGAINST VESSELS.

1. On Statute Penalties.

5. Where a statute required the owners or consignees of every vessel entering a harbor, to give a several bond to the State in a penalty of two hundred dollars for every passenger and member of the crew on board of such vessel, but no penalty was given by the statute for a neglect to give the bond, and an action was brought to recover two hundred dollars for each passenger as a penalty for neglecting to give such a bond: held, that the action could not be sustained. Board of Health v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 1 Cal. 198.

6. If, in such case, any action at all can be brought, it must be to recover such damages as the plaintiffs can show they have actually sustained by reason of the refusal to give the bond. Ib.

2. By Foreign Seamen.

7. A British seaman, on board a British vessel, of which a British subject is master, may, when discharged by the master in a port of the United States, without any fault on the part of the seaman, sue for and recover his wages in a State court. Pugh v. Gillam, 1 Cal. 485.

3. Attachment against Vessels.

8. An act of the legislature authorizing the issuing of attachments against boats and vessels "used in navigating the waters of the State," does not apply to vessels belonging to a foreign port, and which visit one of the harbors of this State for a few days only.* Souter v. Sea Witch, 1 Cal. 163; Ray v. Bark Henry Harbeck, 1 Cal. 451.

9. Where a bond is given for a release of a vessel attached by virtue of a statute which does not apply to vessels of that peculiar class: held, that the principal and sureties were not liable on the bond. McQueen v. Ship Russell, 1 Cal. 165.

10. When the bond is given the vessel shall be released, leaving the action to proceed in the same manner against the vessel as if the vessel is not liable; the giving the bond cannot vest a jurisdiction over the subject matter. Ib. 166.

11. The rule that requires seizure of the thing to give jurisdiction in actions in rem, is altered by our statute. Service on a person standing in particular relation to the thing, confers jurisdiction on the court from which process issues. Averill v. Steamer Hartford, 2 Cal. 309; Meiggs v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 408; Fisher v. White, 8 Cal. 422.

12. As soon as a vessel is seized by a court of admiralty, a lien attaches in favor of the party at whose instance the seizure is made. Meiggs v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 408.

13. If it was the intention of the legislature to provide that a lien should only be acquired by attachment, this would virtually be denying a right to creditors for small sums. It would be almost impossible for a mechanic or merchant of small capital or credit, who had a claim of a few hundred dollars against one of our large steamers or some seagoing vessel, to give the necessary bonds to detain her until his suit could be determined, and in the meantime she might be run off and sold free of all such debts or incumbrances. Ib.

See ATTACHMENT.

III. OWNERSHIP OF VESSELS.

14. Under proceedings in admiralty in rem, the interest of one part owner cannot be sold to satisfy a demand due from the vessel itself. Loring v. Illsley, 1 Cal. 29.

15. The voluntary transfer of a minority interest in a ship does not confer upon the purchaser any more extensive control than the vendor himself enjoyed; nor can a forced sale under execution have a greater effect. Ib. 31.

16. The register of a vessel is admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving who are the owners of a vessel. Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 482.

17. The owner of a ship chartered by and in the name of his agent, may, although he is not mentioned in the charter party, be shown by extrinsic evidence to be the principal in the contract, and will be allowed to avail himself of its provisions. Ib.

18. Where the master of a vessel was in possession, and the record did not disclose any other owner, the admissions of the master were admissible in evidence, with the same effect as if the suit had been against the master himself. Bailey v. Steamer New World, 2 Cal. 273.

19. The rule of law, that possession of personal property is prima facie evidence of ownership, is uniform in its application. The question of the ownership of a vessel forms no exception to the rule. Ib.

20. The complaint showed that the vessel was in 1855 the property of the plaintiffs; that they appeared and defended the action against the vessel as owners, and there is nothing in the record to raise a presumption that they are not now the owners of it, and a judgment against them will be satisfied out of the vessel. Russell v. Conway, 11 Cal. 101.

1. Registry.

21. The rules of action prescribed in the shipping acts of congress are very strict, and everything necessary to constitute a "vessel of the United States," is required to appear affirmatively, and for this purpose it requires the oath of the interested party. Davidson v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 346.

2. Lien.

22. A part owner of a vessel has no lien on the shares of the other part owners, for his advances and disbursements. Sterling v. Harrison, 1 Cal. 480.

3. Mortgage.

23. In order to maintain that a mortgage on a vessel is void as to creditors, because not properly registered, it is absolutely necessary to show that the vessel in controversy was a "vessel of the United States," within the meaning of the registration acts of congress, at the time of her seizure; and to do this it is necessary to show affirmatively every incident which entitles her to that privilege, or to show as much as would under those acts entitle her to a new register. Davidson v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 347.

24. Where a new owner under such sale mortgaged the vessel still at sea, neither the bill of sale nor the mortgage being registered at the port of departure where the vessel was registered: held, that the mortgage was good against attaching creditors of the new owner, who levied immediately on her arrival, neither party taking the requisite steps to obtain a new registry; as the vessel had lost her national character, and was not therefore subject to the provisions of the law requiring the registry of sales and mortgages. Ib. 348.

25. To make a mortgage valid on a sea-going vessel, the act of congress requires it to be recorded, while our statute requires actual possession to be taken of the property itself. The entire right of the party to the same description of property depends in the contemplation of each act, solely and exclusively upon that which it alone prescribes. Mitchell v. Steelman, 8 Cal. 370.

26. Where A, the owner of a sea-going vessel, executes to B a mortgage thereon, which is recorded in the custom house of the home port; B commences suit to foreclose the mortgage, and makes C a party defendant thereto, on the ground that he has purchased the vessel subject to the lien of plaintiff's mortgage; C in his defense avers that the mortgage was void under our statute of frauds, and that he now held the vessel discharged from the same: held, that the mortgage was a valid lien, and that the record of the mortgage was sufficient notice thereof to C. Ib.

27. To require a mortgagee in all cases to take possession of the vessel, is a harsh provision, and must operate greatly in restraint of commerce. How the master of a vessel who is a part owner could execute a mortgage, and still remain on board, under the stringent provisions of our statute, it is difficult to see. Ib. 374.

See MORTGAGE.

4. Sale.

28. A sale of a vessel of the United States at sea, to a foreigner, forfeits her national character, unless the new owner pursues all the requisites of the law to obtain a new registry within five days after her arrival at a port of the United States. Davidson v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 347.

29. To authorize the captain of a vessel to pledge or sell the property of his owners for necessities, certain facts must be established. The vessel must be in a foreign port, the voyage must be unfinished, the pledge or sale must be indispensable to enable the ship to complete her voyage. Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 534.

30. Where a sale of a vessel is made part cash and the balance of the purchase money to be paid upon delivery by the vendor to the vendee of a good title and register of the vessel, to recover the balance the vendor must show an offer on his part to comply with the agreement. Fowler v. Fisk, 12 Cal. 112.

IV. SALE OF MERCHANDISE AT SEA TO ARRIVE.

31. An agreement to sell merchandise, and that the contract shall be considered as binding until the vessel arrived, was held to be an executory contract, and depended on the contingency of the ship's arrival, and the arrival of the ship must be shown as a condition precedent. Middleton v. Ballingall, 1 Cal. 446.

V. Lay days in delivering Cargo.

32. In the absence of any custom to the contrary, Sundays are computed in the calculation of lay days at the port of discharge; but when the contract specifies working lay days, Sundays and holidays are excluded in the computation. Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 483.

VI. DELIVERY OF A VESSEL.

33. Where a contract stipulates for the delivery of a vessel, but designates no particular place for such delivery: held, that a notice of a readiness to deliver must be treated under the contract as an actual delivery. Albretson v. Hooker, 5 Cal. 178.

VII. DELIVERY OF A CARGO.

34. Where the contract is for goods on a vessel, which are not yet discharged and cannot be delivered, there cannot be a defense of a delivery, which takes the case out of the statute, and a good legal excuse for non-delivery. Stevens v. Stedart, 3 Cal. 143.

---

VIII. TOWING.

35. Towing a vessel out to sea by a steamer is the transportation of property, so as to bring the case within the law of common carriers. White v. Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 470.

36. The fact that a vessel lost while being towed out to sea is insured, does not divest the owner of a right of action for damages for her loss, especially in the case of a mere partial insurance; for in such case, the abandonment by the owner only transfers his interest so far as that interest is covered by the policy. Ib. 471.

37. Whether a steam tug is a common carrier or not, she holds herself out to the world for engagement in a business for hire, requiring prudence, skill, and the use of adequate means to perform the contracts which she undertakes, and this constitutes a stipulation of their existence, which, by clear construction, enters into the contract, and forms a part of it. Ib.

 Monopoly of Navigating the Waters of the State.—Constructions of Admission in Evidence.

---

 IX. MONOPOLY OF NAVIGATING THE WATERS OF THE STATE.

38. A contract not to navigate certain waters under a penalty is not against public policy, as creating a monopoly; it only licenses the plaintiff in the exclusive enjoyment of his business as against a single individual, while all the world besides are left at full liberty to enter upon the same enterprise. California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 262.

39. Where the defendant, being the owner, in whole or in part, of certain steamers, in consideration of a sum of money paid to him, covenanted that he would not run or suffer to be run or employed those steamers on certain waters of the State: held, that he was not released from his covenant by a sale of the steamers, or of his interest therein. California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 590.

 X. HARBOR DUES.

40. Vessels plying between San Francisco and Sacramento, and San Francisco and Stockton, are liable to the payment of harbor dues to the city and county of San Francisco. City of San Francisco v. Cal. Steam Nav. Co., 10 Cal. 507.

I. ADMISSION OF AN AGENT AS PART OF THE RES GESTÆ.

1. The admissions of an agent or servant are evidence against the principal only when they form a part of the res gestæ, and the declarations of an agent when not made in any way in the discharge of his duty, are not admissible in an action against the principal. Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 223; Innis v. Steamer Senator, 1 Cal. 461; Gerke v. California Steam Nav. Co., 9 Cal. 256; Garfield v. Knight's Ferry Water Co., 14 Cal. 37.

2. Where the master of a vessel was in possession, and the record did not disclose any other owner, the admissions of the master are admissible in evidence, with the same effect as if the suit had been against the master himself. Bailey v. Steamer New World, 2 Cal. 373.

3. An incorporated company is not bound by the acts or admissions of its members, unless acting by its express authority. Shay v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 6 Cal. 74.

4. The declarations of a tenant in possession of land, being made at the time of possession, may sometimes be given in evidence, as a part of the res gestæ, to qualify the possession; that possession being the transactions which the declarations illustrate. But in order, and prior to the introduction of these declarations, it must be proved that the tenant was in possession at the time the proposed declarations were made. Ellis v. Jones, 10 Cal. 458.

5. Where a paper, purporting to be an admission by an agent, is attached to the complaint as an exhibit, and the answer denies the agency, the paper is not evidence until the agency is proven. Garfield v. Knight's Ferry Water Co., 14 Cal. 37.

 II. CONSTRUCTIONS OF ADMISSIONS IN EVIDENCE.

6. Parties may sometimes, in ignorance of the law, make confessions of record prejudicial to their rights. But courts should put at least a favorable construction upon such admissions, and not force them to a greater admission than is clearly intended. Sublette v. Melhado, 1 Cal. 306.

7. The words of an acknowledgment of paternity of an illegitimate child, for the purpose of making it an heir, must be clear and exclude all but one interpretation. Estate of Sandford, 4 Cal. 12.

8. An express notice of waiver of non-payment of a bill or note is equivalent to an admission that it has been presented, or need not be presented. Matthey v. Galley, 4 Cal. 63.

9. Where the entire performance of a special contract has been prevented by one of the parties, or where its terms have been afterwards varied by the agreement of both parties, the action for the amount due for work and labor should be in the form of indebitatus assumpsit, and not upon the contract, but the contract may be introduced in evidence by either party, as an admission of the standard of value, or as proof of any other fact necessary to the recovery, and should be allowed to go to the jury whenever it can aid them in attaining a sound conclusion. Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 111.

10. Where evidence is introduced showing a collusion between vendor and purchaser to defraud the creditors of the former, the admissions of the vendor are admissible, and a fortiori, his sworn statement. Howe v. Scannell, 8 Cal. 327.

11. The statute does not require an admission of service to designate the place where the service was made. The object of such designation, when required, is to determine the period within which the answer must be filed, or when default must be taken. Alderson v. Bell, 9 Cal. 321.

12. Where the declarations of a party in a conversation are given in evidence, the whole conversation must be taken together, but the jury are not bound to give the same weight to all parts of it; they are at liberty to consider how much, under the circumstances, is entitled to credit. Thrall v. Smiley, 9 Cal. 537.

13. In an action in which a homestead right is asserted, in which an issue of fact is made as to the marriage of the parties claiming the homestead, the admissions of the alleged wife to the effect that she is not married are admissible in evidence. Poole v. Gerrard, 9 Cal. 595.

14. Where property has been dedicated as a homestead, the husband and wife become joint owners thereof, with the right of survivorship, and their declarations of intention to sell and remove from the premises will not constitute an abandonment. Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 171.

15. Our statute of divorce has not altered any of the ordinary rules of pleading, except that nothing can be taken by admission or default. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 254.

16. Declarations of the grantor of land are admissible, not only as against himself, but against parties claiming under him. It matters not whether they relate to the limits of the party's own premises or the extent of his neighbor's, or to the boundary line between them, or to the nature of the title he asserts. If their purport is to restrict his own premises, or lessen his own title, they are admissible. Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 162.

17. The failure to deny a material averment is an admission of the facts contained in such averment, and such admission is conclusive against the pleader. Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co., 12 Cal. 409.

18. The declarations of a vendor of personal property after the sale are not good to impeach the title of the vendee. Landecker v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 392; Visher v. Webster, 13 Cal. 61; Cohn v. Mulford, 15 Cal. 52.

19. The marriage of parties is regarded as an admission by the husband that the child born to the wife is his; but, as in all cases of acknowledgment, to be effective, there must be knowledge at the time of the fact admitted. Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 99.

20. In support of an action upon an account stated, it is necessary to show that there was a demand in favor of the plaintiff, which was acceded to by the defendant. But the admission of the correctness of the demand need not be express or in terms. Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 429.

21. An affidavit by defendant admitting the debt sued for is admissible in evidence for plaintiff, though made in a former suit between the parties. Whitney v. Buckman, 13 Cal. 539.

22. In an action for mesne profits plaintiff offered in evidence the record of an action by defendant against a third person, for the use and occupation of the same premises for a time prior to the time sued for in this action, in which defendant, under oath, fixed the value at a certain sum, together with evidence that the value of the use and occupation was as great in the one case as the other: held, that the evidence was admissible as a solemn admission by a party to the record, in relation to a particular fact; that such admissions are not irrelevant, whether made directly or incidentally. Shafter v. Richards, 14 Cal. 126.

23. Every voluntary admission of a material fact by a party to the record is competent evidence against such party of the existence of such fact. Ib.

III. CONSTRUCTIONS OF ADMISSIONS IN PLEADING.

24. When the complaint alleges the making and endorsing of a promissory note, and the answer denies neither signature, the answer should be stricken out and the plaintiff be entitled to judgment. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 196; Whitwell v. Thomas, 9 Cal. 199; Kenney v. Osborne, 14 Cal. 13.

25. Courts will protect the rights of the actual possessor, and if the complaint avers possession by the plaintiff, and is not denied by the answer, it will be assumed by the court as a fact admitted. Folsom v. Root, 1 Cal. 376.

26. A fact set forth in the complaint, admitted by the defendant's answer, needs no proof. Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 483.

27. A demurrer admits the facts as alleged in a complaint to be true. Selkirk v. Sacramento County, 3 Cal. 326; Tolumne Water Co. v. Chapman, 8 Cal. 397; Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 578.

28. Under our practice, and that of the common law, a specific denial of one or more allegations is held to be an admission of all others well pleaded. De Ro v. Cordes, 4 Cal. 120.

29. An appearance by attorney at common law, and by the express letter of our statute, amounts to an admission or waiver of service. Suydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 281; Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 201.

30. The admission of an attorney of record of the correctness of the amount due for which judgment is taken, when not done in fraud of the rights of his client, must destroy the effect of the denial in the answer. Taylor v. Randall, 5 Cal. 80.

31. A default admits the facts as alleged in a complaint to be true. Harlan v. Smith, 6 Cal. 174; Rowe v. Table Moun- tain Water Co., 10 Cal. 444; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 558; McGregor v. Shaw, 11 Cal. 48; Hunt v. City of San Francisco, 11 Cal. 259; Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 119; Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

32. A cognovit is good as an admission in pais after answer is filed. Hirshfield v. Franklin, 6 Cal. 609.

33. Where parties admit the real facts of the transaction in their pleadings, those admissions are to be taken as a modification of the instrument. Lee v. Evans, 8 Cal. 435.

34. There is no necessity of a finding as to a fact admitted by the pleadings. A finding is only required when the allegation of a material fact in the complaint is controverted by the answer so as to raise an issue. Swift v. Muygridge, 8 Cal. 445.

35. The statute does not require an admission of service to designate the place where a service is made, it is only to determine the period within which an answer must be filed. Alderson v. Bell, 9 Cal. 321.

36. Where the proof of service of process consists in the written admission of defendant, such admissions, to be available in the action, should be accompanied with some evidence of the genuineness of the signatures of the party. Ib.

37. A wife, to appear and defend an action separately from her husband, must possess, as defendant, all the rights of a femme sole, and be able to make binding admissions in writing in the action, as other parties. Ib.

38. And admission of service of summons is only sufficient when reduced to writing and subscribed by the party. A verbal acknowledgment is not sufficient. Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 314.

39. Where the complaint called the defendant, not only to answer the character of the possession, but the fact of possession by it, a failure to deny this averment is an admission of it. Burke v. Table Mountain W. Co., 12 Cal. 407.

40. Though a pleading is not strictly proof for the party making it, still a complaint may be read to the jury to show what allegations are not denied, and hence admitted. Garfield v. Knight's Ferry and Table Mountain W. Co., 14 Cal. 36.

41. Where it appears from the whole conduct of a cause that a particular fact is admitted between the parties, the jury have a right to draw the same conclusion as to that fact as if it had been proved in evidence, and to draw such conclusions as to all the issues on the record. Powell v. Oullahan, 14 Cal. 116.

42. Where a complaint for the possession of land avers defendants to be in possession, and the answer does not deny, but affirmatively shows it, then, even if the allegation of possession be not material, and therefore not requiring a denial, the fact of possession becomes a matter of admission or agreement between the parties as an independent fact, not in issue by the pleadings, but affecting the whole case. Ib.

43. If an averment is immaterial and does not require an answer, could it be made to appear with more conclusive effect that the existence of this fact was to be regarded not as the subject of controversy at the trial, but as a matter of admission and agreement between the parties. Ib. 117.

44. Where a complaint avers title in an administrator, a default is an admission of that title. Curtis v. Smith, 14 Cal. 119.

45. It matters not what the pleadings are, the complaint covering the amount, the defendant was fixed by his admission, or even by evidence to which he did not except, to the damages shown by such admission or evidence. Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 201.

46. The rules of pleading, both under the old equity system and under our own system, are intended to prevent evasion, and to require a denial of every specific averment in a sworn bill in substance and in spirit, and not merely by a denial of its literal truth; and whenever the defendant fails to make such denial he admits the averment. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 644.

47. An answer, under our statute, is not proof for defendant, but an admission in the answer of a fact stated in the complaint is conclusive evidence against him. Ib. 645.

IV. ADMISSIONS, WHEN AN ESTOPPEL.

48. Where one of the issues was the condition of the goods in question when they left New York, and defendant had admitted on the trial that "if merchantable when they left New York he made no claim:" held, that he was concluded by this admission. Burritt v. Gibson, 3 Cal. 399.

49. The Mexican government having by a solemn decree declared that the original title to land was in an ancestor, is estopped from denying such admission or regranting the premises to another. Nieto v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 533.

50. Where an express declaration to a third party about the ownership of goods is not confidential but general, and this is afterwards acted on by others, the party making the declaration is estopped. Mitchell v. Reed, 9 Cal. 205; McGee v. Stone, 9 Cal. 606.

51. In this State the wife can appear in and defend an action separately from her husband. To enable her to do so, she must possess as defendant all the rights of femme sole, and be able to make as binding admissions, in writing, in the action as other parties. Alderson v. Bell, 9 Cal. 321.

52. A party will, in many instances, be concluded by his declarations or conduct, which has influenced the conduct of another to his injury; but it must appear first, that the party making the admission, by his declarations or conduct, was apprised of the true state of his own title; second, that he made the admission with the express intention to deceive, or with such carelessness and culpable negligence as to amount to constructive fraud; third, that the other party was not only destitute of all knowledge of the true state of the title, but of the means of acquiring such knowledge; and fourth, that he relied directly on such, and will be injured by allowing its truth to be disproved. Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 367.

ADULTERY.

1. The charge of adultery in the complaint should be stated with reasonable certainty as to the time and place, so as to enable the defendant to prepare to meet it on the trial. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 254.

2. Abandonment and adultery on the part of the wife will not divest the homestead of its character as such, nor will it defeat or impair her right to it as a homestead. Lies v. De Diablar, 13 Cal. 330.

ADVANCES.

See MORTGAGE, PLEDGE.

ADVERSE CLAIMS.

1. An action may be brought by one person against another for the purpose of determining an adverse claim which the latter makes against the former, for money or property, upon an alleged obligation. King v. Hall, 5 Cal. 84; Merced Min. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 319; Smith v. Bran- nan, 13 Cal. 113; Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 263.

2. A party in possession of a mining claim can sustain an action to determine an adverse outstanding claim, and can obtain an injunction to protect the property pending the litigation. Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 320.

3. Under the current of decisions of our court, conflicting claims to the use of water, as well as to the possession of mining claims, may be settled by action. Ib. 326.

4. The claim of defendant must be affirmatively set forth by him in his answer. The plaintiff is not supposed to know the particulars of the defendant's adverse claim. Mitchell v. Steelman, 8 Cal. 369.

5. A debtor has a right to purchase cross demands against a partnership which has filed a bill in chancery for a dissolution, and to set them up as a defense to the debt due by him to the partnership. Naglee v. Minturn, 8 Cal. 544.

6. Where a tenant finds that there are adverse claims to the rent, he should file a bill of interpleader, making all adverse claimants parties thereto, and offer to pay the rents into court to abide the ultimate decision of the cause. McDevitt v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 597.

ADVICE OF COUNSEL.

1 Neither the governor nor the attorney general has any power to bind the State by a contract to procure the advice of counsel as to the rights of the State in certain property. People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 258.

2. The defense that the defendant acted by advice of counsel must show that such advice was given upon a full and fair statement of the facts. Bliss v. Wyman, 7 Cal. 257.

3. Whether the defendant acted bona fide under the advice of his counsel, is a question of intention to be determined by the jury in all cases where there is any legitimate evidence to show a want of good faith in following professional advice. Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 226.

4. A mistaken advice of counsel to his client not to prepare for trial, is no ground for a continuance. Musgrove v. Perkins, 9 Cal. 212.

5. When trustees act with good faith in the management of the trust property, and without selfish motives, they are entitled to be treated by a court of equity with liberality and indulgence, and especially when they act under the advice of counsel. Ellig v. Naglee, 9 Cal. 695.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. The affidavit to the schedules of an insolvent was made in the language of the statutes, but was attested by the clerk instead of the judge: held, that after the judgment of discharge, the parties could not raise the objection collaterally. Kohlman v. Wright, 6 Cal. 231.

2. An affidavit to authorize the appointment of an attorney for an absent and absconding debtor, must show that summons had been issued and placed in the hands of the proper officer, and an effort made to serve the defendant personally. Jordan v. Giblin, 12 Cal. 102.

3. The fact that a record is erroneous in stating that the parties waived a jury, cannot be shown by an affidavit of the judge who tried the cause. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 115.

4. In a criminal case, if the court below impose upon counsel against their consent, a limitation of time for argument before the jury, it is done at the risk of a new trial, if it be shown by the uncontradicted affidavits of the counsel that the prisoner was deprived by the limitation of the opportunity of a full defense. People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 584.

5. A refusal by the county court on appeal from a justice, to permit an amendment of the complaint, is matter of discretion, and there being no affidavit of materiality, nor any showing of the importance of the amendment, the appellate court will not interfere. Canfield v. Bates, 13 Cal. 608.

6. A jurat to an answer is, in form and substance, an affidavit, and may be taken before a county recorder. Pfeiffer v. Riehn, 12 Cal. 648.

7. The affidavit to a claim against an estate must be made by the claimant in person, and not by his attorney in fact. Macoleta v. Packard, 14 Cal. 180.

8. An affidavit need not be signed by the party making it. Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 57.

9. Courts take judicial notice of the official character of justices of the peace in their own States, and an affidavit in which the official character of the justice before whom it is taken does not appear, is good. Ib.

10. Where plaintiffs were permitted to prove and recover on a title other than the one set up, it was an error in the court below to refuse a new trial, the motion for which was based on affidavit of defendant that he was taken by surprise arising out of the frame of the pleadings, and that he could have rebutted plaintiffs' case but for this surprise. Egan v. Delany, 16 Cal. 87.

12. An affidavit by defendant that he was under the impression, when he retained counsel in a cause, that the time to answer had not expired; that he did not recollect the precise day upon which the summons and complaint were served; that he was quite ill at the time, and did not as carefully note the time as he otherwise would, is insufficient to open a judgment by default. Elliott v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 377.

II. OF MERITS.

13. Where an affidavit set forth that defendant has a good and substantial defense, he should set forth specifically wherein that defense consists. Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 433.

III. ON REMEDIAL PROCESS.

1. On Arrest.

14. The defendant can only avail himself of any defect in the affidavit previous to his examination and final order of commitment. People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 11.

15. The preliminary evidence upon an application for a warrant of arrest may be either by the affidavit of some person cognizant of the facts, or by his examination under oath, taken by the officer to satisfy the person to whom the application is made that there is reason to believe that a felony or other crime has been actually committed, as also to prove the probability of suspecting the party against whom the warrant is prayed. Ib.

16. An affidavit may set forth in positive terms as within the knowledge of the deponent, the commission of the offense charged therein, and proceed upon information as to the names only of the persons who were guilty of the perpetration of them. Ib.

17. An affidavit in pursuance of which a warrant is issued is defective, which contains allegations upon information merely, and if it states no fact within the knowledge of the affiant, it can be of little weight in any legal proceeding. Ib.

18. In an action to recover money received by a person as agent, he cannot be arrested without the affidavit showing some fraudulent conduct on his part, or a demand on him for the money, and a refusal to pay. Ex parte Holdforth, 1 Cal. 440.

19. The affidavit, to sustain an arrest, must show the facts relied upon by positive averment, and it is not sufficient to refer to the complaint, or to any other paper, to show what the affidavit ought itself to disclose. McGilvery v. Morehead, 2 Cal. 609.

20. An affidavit for a requisition for a fugitive from justice is sufficient if it does charge the commission of a distinct offense, although it does not set forth the crime with all the legal exactness necessary to be observed in an indictment. Ex parte Manchester, 5 Cal. 238.

21. Though the affidavit does not charge in sufficiently distinct words that the prisoner is "a fugitive from justice," yet it is sufficient if it allege that he committed a crime and then fled. Ib.

22. Courts cannot go behind this affidavit to inquire whether it is a forgery or not, because the governor of the State, who issues the requisition, is the only proper judge of the authenticity of the paper. Ib.

23. An affidavit for a requisition is certified to be authentic or original when the requisition recites that the affidavit is duly authenticated according to the laws of the State from which it issues. Ib. 239.

24. Insufficiency of the affidavit on arrest cannot be taken advantage of by the bail in an action after judgment against the defendant. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 59.

25. An affidavit for arrest which avers, on information and belief, that the defendant has been guilty of a fraud in the contracting of the debt, or in endeavoring to prevent its collection in the terms required by statute, and followed by an averment of the facts on which the belief is founded, also stated on information and belief, is sufficient. Ib.

26. Side issues upon affidavits are not issues upon which juries pass. The arrest upon affidavit is only intended to secure the presence of the defendant until final judgment; and in order to detain and imprison his person afterwards, the fraud must be alleged in the complaint, be passed upon by the jury, and be stated in the judgment. Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 412.

2. On Attachment.

27. If the affiant had not good reason to believe the matters set forth on his affidavit on attachment, the defendant, whose name and credit has been impaired by the wrongful issuing out of the writ, has no recourse on the bond, if his property has not been attached, but must resort to a criminal action or to a private action for the tort. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 412.

28. An affidavit for an attachment is not sufficient, which avers that the defendant is indebted in the alternative upon an express or implied contract. Hawley v. Delmas, 4 Cal. 195.

Of Jurors to Impeach their Verdict.—To change the Venue.

3. On Injunction.

29. It is not sufficient that the affidavit for an injunction should allege that the injury will be irreparable; it must be shown to the court how and why it would be so, otherwise the injunction will not be allowed. Waldron v. Marsh, 5 Cal. 120.

30. On application for injunction to restrain waste, or mischief analogous to waste, plaintiff may read affidavits contradicting the answer upon all the matters in controversy, including questions of title. Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 117.

IV. OF JURORS TO IMPEACH THEIR VERDICT.

31. A new trial should not be granted on the affidavit of a juror made after the verdict, and for the purpose of moving for a new trial, that he had formed and expressed an opinion before the trial. People v. Baker, 1 Cal. 405.

32. The affidavit of jurors will not be admitted to contradict their verdict. Castro v. Gill, 5 Cal. 42; People v. Wyman, 15 Cal. 75.

33. The affidavit of jurors will not be admitted to impeach their verdict, but will be allowed in order to substantiate it. Wilson v. Berryman, 5 Cal. 46.

34. Where the affidavit of a juror is sworn to be correct by the sheriff, it may properly be treated as his original affidavit. Wilson v. Berryman, 5 Cal. 46.

35. The affidavit of a juror, purging his conduct from the imputation of corruption or impropriety, will not be admitted, for he would not hesitate to conceal the same by perjury. People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 276.

1. As to the Incompetency of Jurors.

36. An affidavit of one of the attorneys in a cause, showing the objections made to the selection of a jury, although copied into the transcript, is no part of the record, and therefore cannot be noticed. Magee v. Mokelumne Hill C. and M. Co., 5 Cal. 259.

37. If affidavits offered to show the incompetency of a juror are not embodied in a bill of exceptions, so as to show that the court below passed upon them, the appellate court is precluded from examining them. People v. Stonecifer, 6 Cal. 411; People v. Honshell, 10 Cal. 86.

V. TO CHANGE THE VENUE.

38. Affidavits on a motion to change the place of trial of a criminal action must state the facts and circumstances from which the conclusion is deduced that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county in which the indictment was found. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 383.

39. Upon an application in a criminal case to change the place of trial, on the ground that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the prisoner was indicted, it is insufficient to state in the affidavit that a jury cannot be selected, from a certain portion of the county, who would give the prisoner a fair and impartial trial. People v. Baker, 1 Cal. 404.

40. The affidavit to change the venue should state the facts in such a manner as to enable the court to draw its own inference whether an impartial trial could be had in the particular case, admitting that a prejudice did exist in the community against the defendant. Sloan v. Smith, 3 Cal. 413.

VI. OF NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

41. A party ought not to rely on his own single and unsupported statement on a motion for a new trial of the newly discovered evidence, but should, if possible, procure the affidavits of the persons whose testimony he deems material, so that the court may be satisfied as to what facts they will testify. Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 432.

42. Motions for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence regarded with distrust and disfavor, and the strictest showing of diligence and all other facts necessary is required. This is especially true when the new testimony is to impeach a witness on the trial, or is merely cumulative. The party must show by his own affidavit that he did not know of this evidence, and could not by due diligence have obtained it; the affidavit of a witness is not sufficient. (In this case the party himself was present.) Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 180.

VII. ON CONTINUANCE FOR ABSENT WITNESSES.

43. Affidavits upon which a motion is founded to continue a criminal cause should show due diligence in endeavoring to procure the attendance of witnesses and in preparing for trial. People v. Baker, 1 Cal. 404.

44. On a motion for new trial on the ground of surprise at the trial by the non-attendance of witnesses, the affidavits, in endeavoring to procure the attendance of the witnesses, should set forth that reasonable diligence has been used in endeavoring to procure the attendance of the witnesses, and should set forth particularly and distinctly the facts which the party expects to prove by the witnesses. Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 432.

45. Affidavits for a continuance should show that the facts expected to be proved by the absent witnesses cannot otherwise be proved. People v. Quincy, 8 Cal. 89; Pierce v. Payne, 14 Cal. 420.

46. A new trial not granted on the affidavit of the attorney of record that he, as well as his client and witnesses, were absent on the trial of the case because of a verbal agreement by opposing counsel to give notice on the day of trial, when such affidavit is met by counter affidavits of the opposing counsel, and when an attorney did appear and contest the case on the trial. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 13 Cal. 230.

47. An affidavit for continuance, on the ground that a witness is absent, when the opposite party admits that the witness would testify to the facts set forth, is evidence, but not conclusive proof, of its contents; it must be regarded only as a deposition. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 645.

VIII. ON INSTRUMENTS.

1. As to the Loss of the Original.

48. Affidavits of the loss of an instrument to be used in court may be taken ex parte, without notice. McCann v. Beach, 2 Cal. 31.

49. In this State the evidence necessary to establish the loss of an instrument as a predicate for secondary evidence may be given orally, or offered by affidavit. Bagley v. Eaton, 10 Cal. 147.

2. Not possessing the Original.

50. Courts of this State are not bound to take official notice of the rules adopted for the regulation of the various departments of the federal government, or those established by the board of land commissioners or surveyor general of the United States for California. If these officers have adopted a rule, refusing to allow original papers to be taken from the files, that fact should be shown by affidavit, before evidence of their contents could be admitted. Hensley v. Tarpey, 7 Cal. 289.

51. An affidavit by a party to the suit, that the original deed "is not in his possession, or under his control," is sufficient to admit in evidence a certified copy from the recorder's office, the deed having been properly acknowledged and recorded, and the grantee being a third person. Skinner v. Flohr, 13 Cal. 638.

3. Alteration of the Original.

52. An affidavit to the effect that an instrument has been materially altered, without showing in any manner in what the alteration consists, furnishes but feeble ground upon which to base a motion to set aside a judgment. Taylor v. Randall, 5 Cal. 80.

IX. TO A BILL OF COSTS.

53. The affidavit of an attorney of a party to the correctness of a bill of costs is good under the statute. Burnham v. Hays, 3 Cal. 119.

54. If the original affidavit to a bill of costs is a nullity, the defendant should take proper steps to have it set aside, or appeal from the judgment on the ground that the costs have been waived by operation of the statute; but having himself moved for a retaxation of costs, it was proper for the court to allow such amendments as are necessary. Ib.

X. AS AN ADMISSION.

55. An affidavit by defendant, in effect acknowledging the debt for which suit is brought, is admissible in evidence for plaintiff, though made in a former suit between the parties. Whitney v. Buckman, 13 Cal. 539.

56. In an action for mesne profits, plaintiff offered in evidence the record of an action by defendant against a third person for the use and occupation of the same premises, for a time prior to the time sued for in this action, in which defendant, in an affidavit, fixed the value at a certain sum, together with evidence that the value of the use and occupation was as great in the one case as the other: held, that the evidence of the affidavit was admissible as a solemn admission by a party to the record, in relation to a particular fact; that such admissions are not irrelevant, whether made directly or incidentally. Shafter v. Richards, 14 Cal. 126.

XI. OF PUBLICATION OF SUMMONS AGAINST ABSENT DEFENDANTS.

57. The affidavit of the attorney of record, showing that defendant conceals himself to avoid the service of process, is sufficient to obtain an order for the service by publication. Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 201.

58. Where there is but one clerk in the office of a public newspaper, his affidavit of the publication of summons or notice in said paper is sufficient, and it is unnecessary for the affidavit to describe him as principal clerk. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 637.

59. An affidavit which avers a cause of action against the defendant, that defendant cannot after due diligence be found in the State; that summons has been issued, but the sheriff cannot find him; that defendant's residence is in the county where the summons was issued, and that defendant still has a family residing in said county, is insufficient to authorize the publication of the summons for only thirty days; it must be for three months. Jordan v. Giblin, 12 Cal. 102.

60. An affidavit for the order of publication of summons, which states that the defendant could not, after due diligence, be found in Contra Costa county; that he had inquired of an intimate friend of his as to his whereabouts, who was unable to inform him; and that plaintiff did not know where defendant could be found within the State, is insufficient, as it does not show that defendant had left the State. Swan v. Chase, 12 Cal. 285.

XII. OF SERVICE OF SUMMONS.

61. An affidavit which avers that affiant on the day named "served the summons in this action upon the defendant, at her residence in the city of San Francisco, by delivering and leaving with her a copy thereof, attached to a copy of an amended complaint filed in this action," is insufficient, as it does not appear that the copy of the complaint was certified, etc. McMillan v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 377.

62. The affidavit of service of summons must show affirmatively compliance with all the requirements of the law. Ib. 378.

XIII. WHEN TO BE EMBODIED IN A STATEMENT ON APPEAL.

63. Affidavits used upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial upon the report of a referee must be set forth in the record, to enable the defendant to base error upon the denial of the motion on affidavits, but this omission does not affect his rights to raise the question as to errors apparent upon the face of the report itself. Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 362.

64. On an appeal from an order made on affidavits filed, no statement is necessary. The affidavits must be annexed to the order, in place of a statement, and the certificate of the clerk should specify the affidavits used; and to enable him to do so, he should, at the time, mark them as filed on the motion. Paine v. Linhill, 10 Cal. 371.

65. Affidavits used on a motion to open the judgment do not form any part of the record, where there is no certificate of the judge or clerk, or an admission of counsel that they were used for that purpose. Ritter v. Mason, 11 Cal. 214.

continues, and in case of a loss it extends to the collection or enforcement of the policy. De Ro v. Cordes, 4 Cal. 119.

3. C sold a lot of lumber to B, and A, who claimed it, notified B that the lumber belonged to him, and brought an action to recover the price: held, that the notice and the form of action recognized the right of C to sell the lumber. There was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant; C was pro tanto the agent of A, and was entitled to collect the price, and the mere notice of A to B was insufficient to interrupt the completion of the performance of the contract between C and B. Argenti v. Brannan, 5 Cal. 353.

4. And where the assignee was a commercial firm, and the assignment was made to an agent acting as the trustee of the firm, and the agent obtained from the obligor in the bond a deed for the land to the members of the firm, and subsequently the firm sold the land to their successors in business, constituting a new firm, of which some of the old firm were members: held, that the purchasers are chargeable with notice of the trust; the transfer of a bond for title to land upon a promise by the assignee to pay a certain debt of the assignor binds the assignee to perform the trust, and the obligation to pay the debt is not affected by any misrepresentations made by the assignor to the assignee, because the rights of the creditor under the transfer had already vested. Connelly v. Peck, 6 Cal. 353.

5. The right of a vendor of goods to a stoppage in transitu exists until they arrive at their final destination, or come into the possession of the consignee. Depositing the goods at an intermediate point with an agent of the vendee, to be forwarded, does not terminate the transitus. Markwald v. His Creditors, 7 Cal. 214.

6. A municipal corporation must execute contracts by some agent. The authority to this agent may be general, in reference to certain classes of cases, or it may be special, in reference to a particular case. Lucas v. City of San Francisco, 7 Cal. 472; Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 272.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES AN AGENCY.

1. The memorandum of an auctioneer is looked upon as a contract between the vendor and vendee, reduced to writing and executed by their mutual agent, who ceases to be such agent after the sale has closed. Craig v. Godfroy, 1 Cal. 416.

2. Where an agent authorized to effect insurance retains the policy, his agency

II. DUTIES OF AN AGENT.

7. It is the duty of a consignee to render an account of his sales, but he is not bound to take upon himself the risk of remittance, nor can he throw such risk upon his principal without orders. Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 457.

8. To hold that the statute of limitations ran against the principal, where the factor failed to inform the principal of the sale, or remit the proceeds, would be to permit him to take advantage of his own wrong. Ib. 461.

9. Where one is an agent to do with the property as if it were his own, he is obligated to act in good faith and without gross negligence, and cannot be held responsible for moneys which he never received, unless he failed to get them because of his gross negligence or bad faith. Herrick v. Hodges, 13 Cal. 433.

III. HOW FAR THE AUTHORITY OF AN AGENT EXTENDS.

10. An authority to an agent to deliver goods, confers no authority to take them back, or to countermand the shipment. Adams v. Blankenstein, 2 Cal. 418.

11. When an agent is required to accomplish a certain end, or to do a certain thing, all necessary incidental powers are implied. Lucas v. City of San Francisco, 7 Cal. 473.

12. An agent cannot delegate discretionary powers, but he may delegate mere mechanical powers or duties. Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 542.

13. The words "attorney in fact" and "agent," are not synonymous. All attorneys in fact are agents, but all agents are not necessarily attorneys in fact. Porter v. Hermann, 8 Cal. 624.

14. An agent for the collection of a note is confined to the taking of money in payment, and has no power to take goods in payment, unless special authority be given, of which there must be proof. Mudgett v. Day, 12 Cal. 140.

15. The affidavit to a claim against an estate must be made by the claimant in person, and not by his attorney in fact. Macoleta v. Packard, 14 Cal. 180.

16. General words in an agency must be construed in reference to matters specially mentioned. Taylor v. Robinson, 14 Cal. 399.

17. Death of the principal revokes the authority of the agent, and a deed of land made by the agent after such death does not bind the representatives of the principal. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 16.

18. As to the pueblo lands of San Francisco, the agents of that municipal corporation can sell or dispose of them only in the way, and according to the order of the legislature; and, therefore, the legislature may, by law operating immediately upon the subject, dispose of this property, or give effect to any previous disposition, or attempted disposition of it. The property itself is a trust, and the legislature is the prime and original controlling power, managing and directing the use, disposition and direction of it. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 233.

19. A power of attorney authorizing the agent to "superintend my real and personal estate, to make contracts, to settle outstanding debts, and generally to do all things that concern my interest in any way, real or personal whatsoever, giving my said attorney full power to use my name, to release others or bind myself, as he may deem proper and expedient, hereby making the said Schoolcraft my general attorney and agent, and by these presents ratifying whatsoever my said attorney may do by virtue of this power," gives the agent power to execute a lease of real estate, containing a clause that the lessee "shall have the privilege of purchasing any part of the said land during the continuation of this lease, at its value, in preference to any other persons. De Rutte v. Muldrow, 16 Cal. 512.

20. Where a power of attorney, relative to real estate, authorizes the agent "to grant, bargain and sell the same, or any part or proportion thereof, for such sum or price, and on such terms as to him might seem meet," the agent has no power to make a conveyance in consideration of love and affection in the principal for the grantee in the conveyance, and such conveyance is on its face a nullity. The power of attorney authorizes a sale for a moneyed consideration only. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 557.

21. The common council of the city of San Francisco were the mere agents of the corporation, and possessed only the powers which were specially delegated to them by the charter, and when that instrument granted a power with a specific designation as to the mode in which it should be used, the mode was restricted, and no other mode could be followed. McCracken v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 619.

IV. WHAT ACTS BIND THE PRINCIPAL.

22. A deed purporting to convey real estate, executed by an agent or attorney in his own name instead of the name of his principal, is not binding upon the latter, and does not transfer the title to the property. Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 413.

23. An agent authorized by power of attorney to wind up and adjust the affairs of a mercantile firm in New York, which had been conducted in the name of his principal, derives no authority from such power to bind his principal by a promissory note given for the purchase of real estate in San Francisco. Ib.

24. Though a deed executed by an agent having power to convey in his own name be inoperative as a conveyance, it will be good as an agreement, and the principals may be decreed to convey. Salmon v. Hoffman, 2 Cal. 142.

25. The assent of an ordinary agent, who had general charge of his principal's business during her temporary absence, will not justify the sheriff who holds an execution against a third person in levying it upon property in the possession of the principal in her absence. Fitch v. Brockman, 2 Cal. 578.

26. If a ferryman permits a party himself to drive his team upon and from the ferry, he constitutes the driver quoad hoc his agent, and is responsible for any damage which occurs. May v. Hanson, 5 Cal. 364.

27. The plaintiff sued to recover for services as agent of defendants, under an alleged agreement with defendants' agent, but there was no proof that the agent had authority to make the agreement: held, that the plaintiff should have sued for work and labor done, and not upon the agreement. Johnson v. Pacific M. S. S. Co., 5 Cal. 408.

28. Where A authorizes B to do all acts in his name concerning their mining operations, followed by an authority to sign B's name to any company articles, does not authorize A to sign B's name to a promissory note, even where the money was used in carrying on the joint mining operations. Washburn v. Alden, 5 Cal. 464.

29. A party who authorizes another to transact all business, authorizing the attorney to make, execute, and deliver promissory notes, etc., will be held liable for all such notes executed in his name by his attorney, when they have reached the hands of an innocent holder, although they may have been made for the private purposes of an attorney. Hellman v. Potter, 6 Cal. 15.

30. An authority to do a particular act must be exercised in the manner designated, or it is not obligatory; and where A authorizes B to sign his name as surety to a note, and B signs A's name with his own as joint and several makers of the note, A is not liable. Bryan v. Berry, 6 Cal. 397.

31. The fact that the owner of a vessel lost while being towed to sea was the agent of the owners of the steam tug, does not relieve the latter from any of the obligations under which they contract with others. White v. Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 471.

32. The transfer of a bill of lading constitutes the assignee the agent of the assignor, and this act being for his benefit, his assent must be presumed. Le Cacheux v. Cutter, 6 Cal. 519.

33. Where a coach, at the time of the accident, was driven by the servant or agent of the owner, the rule in such cases is that the principal is liable only for simple negligence, and that exemplary damages cannot be imposed upon him. Wardrobe v. Cal. Stage Co., 7 Cal. 120.

34. When the defendant permitted a party to act in his own name, and to hold himself out to plaintiff in a false character, and having enjoyed the supposed advantage of this conduct, he is estopped from denying the character assumed by the party. Osborne v. Hendrickson, 7 Cal. 285; Cal. Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 591.

35. Where the agent discloses the name of the principal, or that fact is otherwise known to the party receiving a bill of exchange, at the time the same is made, then the agent is not responsible, though the name of the principal be not stated on the face of the paper, and only the name of the agent be signed, with the term "agent" appended to it. Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 542—overruling same case, 5 Cal. 488.

36. The acts of a special agent do not bind the principal, unless strictly within the authority conferred. Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 244.

37. The acts of an agent beyond his authority are as the acts of a stranger, and before the principal can be bound, he must know what has been done, so that he may advisedly exercise his own judgment upon the circumstances, in the same way as if he had originally made the contract himself. Ib.

38. Although between the agent and his principal the act was unauthorized, yet the principal is bound by the act of the agent, for the reason that he placed the agent in such a position as to mislead innocent parties. Ib. 249.

39. An agent who has power to sue, has the right to give an indemnity bond to the sheriff, when the property attached or levied on in that action is claimed by a third person; it is a necessary instrument to carry the power to sue into effect. Ib. 251.

40. An attorney in fact who is not an attorney at law cannot sign his name to a complaint for his principal as "plaintiff's attorney," and an action so commenced is void, as instituted without authority and by an entire stranger to the plaintiff. Dixey v. Pollock, 8 Cal. 570.

41. Where the principal of a line of stages, by letter to one acting as his agent in such business, wrote "you will do better by getting new drivers and agents, and horses," and such agent employed a sub-agent, and subsequently the principal was informed of such employment and made no objection, in an action for the wages of the sub-agent: held, that the facts were sufficient to authorize the jury to find the fact of authority in the agent to employ the plaintiff. McConnell v. McCormick, 12 Cal. 148.

42. A party in taking the conveyance in the name of his associates must be considered as having acted as their agent, and notice to him was equally notice to them. Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 168.

43. The knowledge of the agent in the course of his agency is the knowledge of the principal, and if an attorney acquires information apart from any confidential communications, he is not protected from disclosing it. Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 377.

44. Where a building is in process of construction by three tenants in common, according to a plan agreed on, a power of attorney from one to an agent, authorizing him "to represent the principal's interest in the property, to cast his vote in relation thereto in all matters relating to the administration or improvement of the property, and to do and perform every act or thing relating to and concerning such interest, except the sale or hypothecation thereof," authorizes the agent to consent to alterations in the plan. Hastings v. Halleck, 13 Cal. 211.

45. If the name of the principal and the intention to bind him appear in an instrument not under seal, the agent having authority, the principal alone will be bound, though the instrument be signed in the agent's name only. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 13 Cal. 231.

46. Where a power of attorney, not under seal, authorizes the agent to sell a saw-mill, dwelling, etc., by the execution of all needful instruments, sealed or otherwise, and the agent sells the right of the principal, and the vendee takes possession and retains it for several years, he has an equitable estate in the premises, with the right to its full enjoyment, and this right united to possession, enables him to maintain an action for interruption to his possession, or injury to the property. Ib. 234.

47. A tax collector has power to contract for publishing the delinquent list of tax payers, so as to bind the county for payment of the price. He is the agent of the county in this respect, and for any reasonable exercise of that agency the county is responsible. Randall v. Yuba County, 14 Cal. 222.

48. The authority of an agent, however general the terms, to collect or secure a claim of the principal, is not an authority to make a purchase for the principal of the property of the debtor, for the security of the claim. Taylor v. Robinson, 14 Cal. 399.

The effects of Ratification.—Actions.—By the Principal.

49. If the agent has a power coupled with an interest—that is, a power which conveys to the agent an interest in the property—then the execution of the power after the death of the principal is good. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 19.

50. If, on an executory contract for the purchase of land, made by plaintiff with the agent, during the life of the principal, money due the principal was paid after his death to the agent, who settled the amount with the estate, so that the estate received the benefit of the payment, plaintiff would be entitled in equity to call for the legal title, and could defend in ejectment by the representatives of the principal. Ib. 20.

51. Where one man acts openly and avowedly for another in leasing or controlling his property, this is sufficient, as against third persons, to show that the property is that of the person recognized by the agent as owner; and the possession of the agent is the possession of the principal, who can maintain forcible and unlawful entry and detainer against such third persons, whether the agent had any written authority or not. Minturn v. Burr, 16 Cal. 109.

52. Where, in such case, proof was admitted, without objection, of the acts of the agent in renting and controlling the property for the principal, defendant cannot afterwards claim a nonsuit on the general ground that no power of attorney from the principal was shown, and that, therefore, his possession was not sufficiently proven. Ib.

V. THE EFFECTS OF RATIFICATION.

53. It is a well settled rule, that a principal who ratifies the acts of his agent must be made acquainted with the character of those acts, and unless all the circumstances are made known to him, the ratification is void. Billings v. Morrow, 7 Cal. 174; Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 244.

54. Where the president of a corporation has an alleged power to make a contract to bind the corporation as agent, if such authority were doubtful, the acts of the corporation may amount to a ratification of the contract. Shaver v. Bear

River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 10 Cal. 401.

55. Ratification by a principal of the acts of his agent, depends upon the knowledge of those acts on the part of the principal, and where the knowledge is partial, so will be the ratification. Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 535.

56. To adoption and ratification there must be some relation, actual or assumed, of principal and agent. Ellison v. Jackson Water Co., 12 Cal. 551.

57. Acts of an agent without authority, subsequently ratified by the principal, bind the principal back to the inception of the transaction. Taylor v. Robinson, 14 Cal. 400.

58. But such ratification cannot defeat rights of third persons acquired between the act of the agent and the ratification of the principal, as attachments levied on property of the debtor after a sale by or to an agent. Taylor v. Robinson, 14 Cal. 401.

See RATIFICATION.

VI. ACTIONS.

1. By the Principal.

59. The owner of a ship chartered by and in the name of his agent, may although he is not mentioned in the charter party, be shown by extrinsic evidence to be the principal in the contract, and will be allowed to avail himself of its provisions. Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 482.

60. In an action for money had and received by a consignor, the amount of goods sold on credit by the consignee, having no authority so to sell, can be recovered; such sale must be taken as made for cash, and to the vendor belongs the demand created by the sale against the vendee, and the vendee is liable to the plaintiff for money had and received. Johnson v. Totten, 3 Cal. 347.

61. A principal has a right to waive a tort against his factor, and bring an action to compel him to account, and for the net proceeds arising from the sales, when the plaintiff can only recover the net proceeds of sales effected by him, after deducting necessary charges and commissions. Lubert v. Chauviteau, 3 Cal. 462.

62. A principal may sue in his own name, on a contract made and signed by his agent without disclosing his principal; but he must show the agency and the power of the agent to bind him at the time of making the contract; else there would be no mutuality, and, consequently, no contract. Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 358.

By an Agent.

63. A note sued on, payable to the plaintiff, although it describes him as agent of another, does not take away the right of the agent to sue in his own name at law. Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. 516.

64. Where two persons were employed by the claimants of a tract of land under a Mexican grant, as agents to procure the confirmation of the grant in the United States, and services are thus rendered, it is individual in its character, and separate actions may be maintained by such agent for his expenses thus incurred. Conner v. Hutchinson, 12 Cal. 127.

65. An action brought by an agent in his own name for a trespass in taking and converting coin from the possession of the agent, in which action the jury found that the coin belonged to the principal, and gave only nominal damages, is no bar to an action by the principal for such coin. Pico v. Webster, 12 Cal. 141.

(b.) When an Agent may not sue.

66. The endorsement of a bill of lading prima facie vests the property in the goods mentioned therein in the endorsee, but a bill of lading is not a negotiable instrument, so far as to enable an endorsee who has no property, either general or special in the goods, and no lien therein for advance or otherwise, to sue the master of the ship in his own name for non-delivery of the goods, when it appears on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff, the endorsee, is a mere naked agent of the shippers. Lineker v. Ayeshford, 1 Cal. 78.

67. An agent ordinarily cannot sue in his own name in respect to the subject matter of his agency, and this rule applies to consignees and endorsees of bills of lading, when they are in truth but the agent of the shippers. Lineker v. Ayeshford, 1 Cal. 82.

68. A, of Liverpool, shipped certain goods to San Francisco, and endorsed the bills of lading to the plaintiff, his agent, and became a bankrupt before the arrival of the goods: held, it appearing on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff was a mere naked agent of the shippers, that he could not recover the goods in his own name of the master of the ship, who claimed to hold the goods for the assignees in bankruptcy of A. Ib. 83.

69. An attorney in fact, described as such in the instrument, does not hold the character of trustee, and is not a necessary party to a suit to represent the interest of his principal. Powell v. Ross, 4 Cal. 198.

3. Against an Agent.

70. A public officer who stands in the relation of agent of the government, or of the public, is not personally liable upon contracts made by him as such officer, and within the scope of his legitimate duties; but this reason does not apply when neither the government nor the public in any way can be considered or held responsible for a contract made by a person, although a public officer. Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 392.

71. Where a party makes a purchase from an innocent agent, who afterwards parts with the money of his principal, and it afterwards turns out that such purchase avails the purchaser nothing: held, that no right of legal complaint will lie against the agent. Engels v. Heatly, 5 Cal. 136.

72. In an action against an agent for not accounting, a request to account and pay over must be alleged in the complaint and proven at the trial. Bushnell v. McCauley, 7 Cal. 422.

73. When the plaintiff employs an agent to collect a note due from defendant, and the defendant employs the same agent to collect other notes due him, and apply the same on plaintiff's note, and the agent fails, after collecting money on defendant's account: held, that unless the appropriation was actually made, the loss occasioned by the failure of the agent must fall on the defendant. Philips v. Mayer, 7 Cal. 83.

74. A complaint, alleging that the defendant collected and received certain money as the agent or attorney in fact of the plaintiff, and had embezzled and converted the money to his own use, and praying that he be adjudged guilty of fraud, and for judgment and execution against his person and property, is insufficient in this disjunctive form to sustain a verdict convicting the defendant of fraud. Porter v. Hermann, 8 Cal. 625.

75. In suit against an agent for fraudulently appropriating money of plaintiff, defendant cannot, on trial, object that the person making the demand on him before suit did not exhibit his authority so to do, unless defendant questioned his authority at the time of demand. Baxter v. McKinlay, 16 Cal. 77.

VII. EVIDENCE.

1. Of Agency.

76. It is competent to show that one or both of the contracting parties were agents for the other persons, and acted as such agents in making the contract on the one hand, so as to give the benefit of the contract on the other to charge the unnamed principals with liability. Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 482.

77. The principle upon which the infant is allowed to collect his wages, is that of agency. The infant can be his father's agent, and whether he is so or not is a question of fact, like any other question of agency, which may be proven by either direct or circumstantial testimony. Swartz v. Hazlett, 8 Cal. 124.

78. Where a paper purporting to be an admission by an agent is attached to the complaint as an exhibit, and the answer denies the agency, the paper is not evidence until the agency is proven. Garfield v. Knight's Ferry W. Co., 14 Cal. 37.

79. The person entitled to recover the legal penalty against a telegraph company, for not transmitting a message, is the party who contracts, or offers to contract for the transmission of the dispatch. He may probably do this by his agent or servant; but when the contract is made by a party as agent of another, in order to give a right of action to the principal the fact of agency must be shown. Thurn v. Alta Telegraph Co., 15 Cal. 475.

2. Declarations of an Agent.

80. The declarations of an agent or servant are admissible in evidence against the principal only when they form a part of the res gestæ; and the declarations of a barkeeper to a third person as to the contents of a package left by a guest in the charge of an innkeeper, when not made in any way in the discharge of his duty as barkeeper, are not admissible in an action against the innkeeper to prove the contents of the package. Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 225.

81. The declarations of an agent, when but the bare narrator of an act which has already taken place and was fully ended, do not form a part of the res gestæ, and are inadmissible in evidence against his principal. Innis v. Steamer Senator, 1 Cal. 461.

82. The declarations of an agent will bind the principal, if made during the continuance of the agency, and at the very time of the transaction. These declarations, when thus made, are considered as part of the res gestæ. Gerke v. Cal. St. Nav. Co., 9 Cal. 256.

83. Admissions of an agent, to bind the principal, must constitute part of the res gestæ; that is, they must be made with reference to the subject matter, or at the time of the act done. Garfield v. Knight's Ferry W. Co., 14 Cal. 37.

VIII. INSTRUMENTS EXECUTED BY AN AGENT.

84. An agent authorized by power of attorney to wind up and adjust the affairs of a mercantile firm in New York, which had been conducted in the name of his principal, derives no power therefrom to bind his principal by a promissory note given for the purchase of real estate in San Francisco. Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 413.

85. Where A authorizes B to do all acts in his own name concerning their mining operations, followed by an authority to sign B's name to any company articles, does not authorize A to sign B's name to a promissory note, even where the money was used in carrying on the joint mining operations. Washburn v. Alden, 5 Cal. 464.

86. The word "agent" appended to an agent's name has always been held as merely descriptio personæ, and in no respect affects his liability. Sayre v. Nichols, 5 Cal. 488.

87. An agent who signs his own name instead of that of his principal, when he intends to bind the latter, renders himself liable. Sayre v. Nichols, 5 Cal. 488; overruled in Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 538.

88. A party who gives a general power of attorney to another to transact all business, etc., authorizing the attorney "to make, execute and deliver promissory notes," will be held liable for all such notes executed in his name by his attorney, when they have reached the hands of an innocent holder, although they may have been made for the private purposes of an attorney. Hellman v. Potter, 6 Cal. 15.

89. When the authority given by the defendant was to sign his name to a promissory note as surety, and not as principal, and the authority was not exercised in the manner delegated, the plaintiff cannot recover. Bryan v. Berry, 6 Cal. 397.

90. A person who signs his name and appends the word "agent" to it, does not intend anything else than a designation of the capacity in which he acted, and is not personally liable. Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 538; Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 247, overruling Sayre v. Nichols, 5 Cal. 488.

91. In cases of promissory notes it is not necessary that the agent should add to his signature the word "agent," as is the usual and proper way of executing deeds of attorney. Haskell v. Cornish, 13 Cal. 47.

92. It is held that generally the mere words agent, trustee, guardian, administrator, and the like, added to the name of the signer, do not qualify the terms of the body of the obligation, when those terms import a duty of payment by such signer. Ib.

93. In instruments not under seal, or not required to be executed with any particular formality, it is not important in what form the obligation of the party executing as agent or principal is expressed, if from the entire instrument the true character of it can be gathered. Ib.

94. The general rule which governs in such cases is, that although a party acts in making an obligation of this kind as an agent, yet he does not protect himself from liability, unless the instrument shows that in executing it he is such agent, and meant only to contract for his principal. Ib.

95. A note stating that "we, the undersigned, trustees of the First African Methodist Episcopal Church, on behalf of the whole board of trustees of said association, promise to pay," etc., and signed without qualification by two persons having authority, is the note of the church and not of the signers. Ib.

96. The rule requiring the instrument to be executed or signed in the name of the principal does not apply to instruments not under seal. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 13 Cal. 231.

IX. PROPERTY IN THE HANDS OF AN AGENT.

1. When he may Pledge.

97. The pledgee, in a case of pledge of negotiable securities transferable by delivery, should be treated in the transaction as the agent of the owner, and the owner should be bound by his acts in the premises. Coit v. Humbert, 5 Cal. 262.

98. The purchase of property by a factor in his own name makes him, to all the world, the apparent owner, and as far as affects the rights of third persons, his power is unlimited. He has the right to sell or pledge. Leet v. Wadsworth, 5 Cal. 405.

99. A factor has no right to pledge goods, when his only business is to sell goods consigned to him for that purpose; wherefore, on account of his notorious employment, all the world is charged with notice that the goods in his possession are the property of others, and that he has power only to sell them and no power to pledge them. Hutchinson v. Bours, 6 Cal. 385.

See FACTOR, PLEDGE.

When a Demand is necessary.—When an Agent may be a Witness.—Jurisdiction.

2. When it becomes a Trust.

100. If a confidential agent, trusted by a principal with money used in trade, appropriates the money to the purchase of property for his own use and benefit, and the property can be identified as that so bought, the agent can be held as trustee for the owner of the money. Wells v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 139.

101. If property has been rightfully sold by an agent or trustee, if the proceeds of the sale can be distinctly traced, the property belongs in equity, and often in law, to the principal. Ib. 141.

3. When a Demand is necessary.

102. In an action to recover money received by a person acting as agent, he cannot be arrested without showing some fraudulent conduct on his part, or a demand on him by the principal and a refusal by him to pay. An arrest in such case is prohibited by sec. 15, art. 1, of the constitution. Ex parte Holdforth, 1 Cal. 440.

103. On an action against an agent for not accounting, etc., a request to account and pay over must be alleged in the complaint and proved at the trial. Bushnell v. McCauley, 7 Cal. 422.

104. The rule in relation to factors or consignees is well settled, that they are not liable to an action until a demand or instructions to remit. Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 457.

105. Where a defendant contracted with a factor who was in his debt for certain goods, but before he took them away was informed that a portion of them belonged to another, his taking such portion was an unlawful assumption of ownership and a conversion of the property, and no demand was necessary previous to bringing suit. Scriber v. Masten, 11 Cal. 306.

X. WHEN AN AGENT MAY BE A WITNESS.

106. From the necessities of commercial and business transactions, it has been found necessary to admit an agent to testify as to his authority in the performance of acts for his reputed principal. Tomlinson v. Spencer, 5 Cal. 293.

107. A broker, whose commissions depend on the result of the suit, is incompetent as a witness, on the ground of interest. Shaw v. Davis, 5 Cal. 467.

108. In an action where the defense set up is the negligence of an agent of plaintiff, the agent is not a competent witness for his employer. Finn v. Vallejo Street Wharf Co., 7 Cal. 256.

ALCALDE.

- I. Jurisdiction.
- II. Books of the Alcalde's office.

I. JURISDICTION.

1. It seems that alcaldes alone have no judicial power whatever, nor can their jurisdiction be extended or enlarged by consent of parties. Ladd v. Stevenson, 1 Cal. 21.

2. A second alcalde has no jurisdiction of any claim exceeding $100, and a judgment rendered for a greater sum is void. Howell v. Gray, 1 Cal. 134.

3. Alcaldes in California were empowered to perform the functions of judges of the first instance in those districts where there were no such judges, and this rule applied to the pueblo of San Francisco. Mena v. LeRoy, 1 Cal. 220: Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 508.

4. A grant made by an American alcalde, not appointed by, nor holding office under the authority of the Mexican Government, to a citizen of the United States du- ring the continuance of the war between the United States and Mexico, whilst California was in the temporary occupation of the American forces, and before the title of the United States to the country had become complete, was a grant without any authority in law, and no title could be derived from the grant. Woodworth v. Fulton, 1 Cal. 305; Salmon v. Fisher, 1 Cal. 414; Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 325, overruled in Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 450; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 199, and Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 616.

5. If there was a vested title in the national domain in the Pueblos of California, an alcalde alien enemy of Mexico, and without authority from the American government, had no power or right to interfere with that vested estate, or grant it to others. Woodworth v. Fulton, 1 Cal. 306; Salmon v. Fisher, 1 Cal. 414; Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 325, overruled in Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 450; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 199, and Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 616.

6. A grant of land by a Mexican Alcalde before the war will be presumed to have been made in the course of his ordinary and accustomed duties and within the scope of his legitimate authority, and the burden of proof lies on him who controverts the validity of such a grant to show that it is not made by a competent officer and in the form prescribed by law. Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 326; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 227.

7. Where it appeared that the petitioner's husband was the owner of two fifty-vara lots at the time of the concession, it would be presumed that the act of the alcalde in making the grant was in conformity with law, until the contrary was shown by the adverse party. Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 328.

8. Where a petition for a grant of land was presented to an alcalde without the signature of the petitioner, but the prayer of the petition was granted by a writing immediately following the petition, the grant was valid, notwithstanding the want of the petitioner's signature. Id.

9. A Mexican alcalde was the head of the ayuntamiento, or town council, and the executive officers of the town, and rightfully exercised the power of granting lots within the town which were the property of the town. Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 449; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 199; Hart

v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 616, overruling Woodworth v. Fulton, 1 Cal. 305; Salmon v. Fisher, 1 Cal. 414; Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 325.

10. A grant of land in San Francisco made by an Alcalde, whether a Mexican or of any other nation, raises the presumption that the alcalde was a properly qualified officer; that he had authority to make the grant, and that the land was within the boundaries of the pueblo. Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 450.

11. It is too late to question the authority of an alcalde elected in 1846. If invalid, his acts, as a de facto officer, must be held good by the courts of California. Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 452.

12. The ayuntamiento of San Francisco in 1850, by an order, authorized its alcalde to grant to plaintiff "a quantity of land in conformity with the survey of the town, as near as possible to the location of certain other lots which plaintiff was to surrender to the town. The alcalde accordingly conveyed by deed to plaintiff a lot which had been previously granted by the town to one Gerke: held, that an action for a breach of the covenants of warranty in this deed will not lie against the city. Findla v. City of San Francisco, 13 Cal. 535.

13. The true meaning of the order is, that the alcalde was to grant the city's land only, and that neither the town nor its successor is bound for an act done beyond the limit of its authority. Findla v. City of San Francisco, 13 Cal. 535.

14. The authority to grant lands in the city of San Francisco was vested in the ayuntamiento, and in the alcalde or other officers who at the time represented it, or had succeeded to its powers and obligations. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 616.

15. The official acts of such officers, in the course of their ordinary and accustomed duties, and within the general scope of their powers as here defined and explained, will be presumed to have been done by lawful authority. Id.

II. BOOKS OF THE ALCALDE'S OFFICE.

16. The book of accounts kept in the office of an alcalde is admissible in evidence as a register of the acts of that officer belonging to that office. Kyburg v. Perkins, 6 Cal. 675.

ALIEN.

- I. Power to inherit Land.
- II. Power to hold Land.
- III. Power to sue.
- IV. Naturalization
- V. Taxation upon Aliens.

ALIEN.

1. The treaty of Queretaro defined all Mexicans established in California on the 30th day of May, 1848, and who had not, on or before the 30th day of May, 1849, declared their intention to remain Mexican citizens, are to be deemed American citizens, and laws applicable to aliens will not apply to them. People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 251.

2. Laws regulating the admission of foreigners and aliens, and placing them under peculiar disabilities, on account of some supposed inconvenience which may result to the State, are political laws. People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 378.

I. POWER TO INHERIT.

3. Treaties made by the United States, removing the disability of aliens to inherit, are valid, and within the intent of the Constitution of the United States. People v. Gerke, 5 Cal. 383.

4. A nonresident alien cannot inherit* land in this State, and consequently cannot maintain ejectment for such alleged inheritance. Siemssen v. Bofer, 6 Cal. 252.

5. The provisions of the constitution giving to aliens who are bona fide residents the right to inherit, by the rules of construction exclude nonresident aliens. Siemssen v. Bofer, 6 Cal. 253; Farrell v. Enright, 12 Cal. 456.

6. The probate court has no power to direct that the portion of an estate of an intestate, originally allotted to one of the heirs-at-law, a nonresident, shall be distributed among the other heirs, if the nonresident heir shall fail to appear and claim it within a year. Pyatt v. Brockman, 6 Cal. 418.

7. By the settled doctrine of the common law, an alien could not acquire title to real property by descent or other mere operation of law. Farrell v. Enright, 12 Cal. 456.

8. A subsequent residence of an alien will not retroact so as to confer upon him any right to inherit any portion of real estate of which the ancestor died possessed. Ib.

9. The act of April 19, 1856, permitting nonresident aliens to inherit real and personal estate, is constitutional. The rights which the constitution gives to bona fide resident aliens may be enlarged, but cannot be abridged by the legislature. People v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 165.

II. POWER TO HOLD LAND.

10. An alien may hold real estate against every one, and even against the government, until office found. People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 378.

11. Foreigners may hold property in all the territories, and may inherit land in the absence of legislation upon this subject. Ib.

12. The policy of our government has been to encourage the immigration of foreigners, and to this extent a system of preemption has been adopted in all the territories and new States, in which there is no discrimination between foreigners and native citizens. Ib. 379.

13. The law of escheats in Mexico was abrogated by the conquest of the country by Americans, so far as citizens of the United States and aliens were affected. Ib. 380.

*The act of April 19, 1856, enlarged the powers of inheritance and extended it to nonresident aliens. See People v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 165.

Power to sue.—Naturalization.—Taxation upon Aliens.

14. An alien cannot be deprived of his land, or of any right incident to its ownership, by proof of his alienage in a collateral proceeding. Ramirez v. Kent, 2 Cal. 560.

15. The estate purchased by an alien does not vest in the sovereign until office found; until then the alien is seized, and may sustain actions for injuries to the property. Ib.

16. The relation of landlord and tenant exists where the landlord is an alien non-resident, and is obligatory upon the tenant, and he cannot be allowed to controvert the title of the lessor. Ib.

III. POWER TO SUE.

17. One of several defendants to a cause pending in one of the courts of this State, filed his affidavit for its removal to the United States court, on the ground that he was an alien: held, that it must appear that the contest was between a citizen of this State and citizens of a foreign state. Welch v. Tennent, 4 Cal. 203.

18. An alien friend may sue an American in the consular courts in China, established under the treaty of 1844. And the assignees of personal property assigned there in trust for foreign creditors, among others, may be compelled by such courts to execute the trust. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 285.

See PLAINTIFF.

IV. NATURALIZATION.

19. The provision of the constitution of the United States which gives congress the power to establish "an uniform rule of naturalization," is construed to mean, that the rule, when established, shall be executed by the States. Ex parte Knowles, 5 Cal. 303.

See NATURALIZATION.

V. TAXATION UPON ALIENS.

20. A State may prescribe the conditions upon which aliens may enjoy a residence within it; it may also declare the terms upon which they shall be permitted to make their residence upon any portion of their territory, and exercise a particular enjoyment. People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 243.

21. A tax upon aliens mining upon public lands, which is collected by the State, can not be viewed as a license to trespass upon the lands, but is rather a restriction on the commission of such trespasses. Ib. 244.

22. Under the treaties existing between the United States and foreign powers, even that most liberal to aliens does not exempt them from taxation by a State for the enjoyment of certain privileges. Ib. 246.

23. The power of taxation over aliens, and the conditions on which they be permitted to enjoy the protection of the States in a particular place or occupation, cannot be taken away or impaired by acts of congress or treaties with foreign nations, and the justice or expediency of the tax must be left to the discretion of the States, subject to the restrictions which may be imposed by their organic law. Ib. 248.

24. Aliens cannot be said to have any property to enjoy in the minerals or public lands, by which the constitution of the State would guarantee them against taxation for working and extracting the metals therefrom. Ib. 252.

25. The constitutional provision that requires taxation to be uniform, refers only to property, and not that the entire aggregate amount of taxation upon persons on the value of property in every city and town of the State should be equal to, and uniform with the amount in every city and town. Ib. 252.

26. A tax is a compulsory exaction which a government makes upon persons or property within its jurisdiction for the supply of the public necessities. It is, ordinarily, assessed beforehand at stated periods and collected at appointed times. Ib. 253.

27. When an alien, subject to a mining tax, was employed by one of a partnership to work a copartnership mine: held, that his employer alone, and not the firm, was liable for his tax. Meyer v. Larkin, 3 Cal. 405.

28. The act of 1855, imposing a tax of fifty dollars on every person arriving in this State by sea, who is incompetent to become a citizen, is void. People v. Downer, 7 Cal. 171. See TAXATION.

See ANSWER, COMPLAINT, PLEADING AND VARIATION.

ALTERATION.

1. No alteration or erasure will defeat the recovery of a bond, unless it materially affects the rights or condition of the obligor, or is the result of a fraudulent intent to affect the same object. Turner v. Billagran, 2 Cal. 522.

2. An affidavit to the effect that an instrument has been materially altered, without showing in any manner in what the alteration consists, furnishes but feeble ground upon which to base a motion to set aside a judgment. Taylor v. Randall, 5 Cal. 80.

3. When an answer alleges the alteration of an instrument, it must aver that it was made with the consent, or knowledge, or authority of the plaintiff. Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 175.

4. An alteration in a note, which does not vary the meaning of the nature or subject matter of the contract, is immaterial. Id.

5. The filling up of a blank is not such an alteration of the note as to vitiate it, and prevent a recovery; it supplied an omission by fixing an optional rate of interest not binding on the maker without further proof; but does not avoid the right to recover the principal and legal interest. Fisher v. Dennis, 6 Cal. 579; Visher v. Webster, 8 Cal. 112.

6. An interlineation or alteration of an instrument could only impart notice from the time it was made, and can in no way impair or defeat a title previously acquired. Chamberlain v. Bell, 7 Cal. 294.

7. When arbitrators have published their award by delivering it to the parties as the award: held, that it is not the subject of revision or correction by them, and that any alteration without the consent of the parties will vitiate it. Porter v. Scott, 7 Cal. 316.

8. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that a bill of sale included property not described therein. Where a bill of sale is defective in such particular, it can only be altered by a direct proceeding in chancery for the purpose of reforming it. Osborne v. Hendrickson, 8 Cal. 32.

9. A defense to a note that it was made payable to order, and was afterwards fraudulently altered, and made payable to bearer, and that defendant paid the note before plaintiff became assignee of it, and that the plaintiff became assignee after the note was due, is good and valid. Sherman v. Rollberg, 11 Cal. 41.

10. Equity has jurisdiction to vacate a judgment fraudulently altered so as to include a defendant not served with process, and not originally included in the judgment. Chester v. Miller, 13 Cal. 560.

11. An alteration by the court of a judgment without notice, so as to include a party not served with process, if not void is voidable at the election of the party. Id. 561.

12. Where the judgment of the court recites that summons was served on defendant, the fact that years afterwards there appears some erasure or interlineation on the sheriff's return is not sufficient to nullify the return, in the absence of a direct attack upon it for fraud, or forgery, or alteration. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 144.

I. TO A STATUTE.

1. A general statute, controlled in some of its provisions by a subsequent special statute, is revised by the amendment of the latter, intended to give effect to the former, and though the first statute gave jurisdiction to a court which could not constitutionally exercise it, the act becomes effectual by an amendment passed still later, transferring the jurisdiction to the proper body. People v. Phoenix, 6 Cal. 93.

2. Under the constitution of this State, the amendment of a statute operates as an absolute repeal of the old statute or section so amended, even if the amendment takes nothing away from the old law, but merely adds a proviso in certain cases. Billings v. Harvey, 6 Cal. 383.

II. TO A NOTARIAL ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

3. A notary derives his power from the statute. The special duty and authority of taking and certifying acknowledgments is given him. But he acts as an officer with a special authority for each particular case. He is to take an acknowledgment and certify it as parts of the same transaction. After taking the acknowledgment and making and delivering the return, his functions cease, and he is discharged from all further authority. He has no power to amend his return afterwards. Bours v. Zachariah, 11 Cal. 292.

III. TO PLEADINGS.

1. In general.

4. Great latitude is given to our courts by statute in amending and altering pleadings. Pollock v. Hunt, 2 Cal. 194; Stearns v. Martin, 4 Cal. 229.

5. Referees have no power to allow parties to alter or amend pleadings, after a case has been referred to them. De La Riva v. Berryessa, 2 Cal. 199.

6. In reference to amendments, the object of the statute is unquestionably the furtherance of justice, and the applications should be treated favorably, and granted. Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 411.

7. A refusal to allow an amendment is presumed to be right, unless the character of the proposed amendment is shown in the records. Jessup v. King, 4 Cal. 331; Canfield v. Bates, 13 Cal. 608; Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 254.

8. A party has a right to have his pleadings amended, so as to conform to the proofs. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 494.

9. An amendment adding no facts or exceptions cannot affect the merits, and its allowance is in furtherance of justice and matter of discretion, not of power. Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 396.

10. To entitle objections to consideration on appeal, they must be presented to the court below in the first instance; at least, if they are of a character which might have been there obviated by the production of other evidence, or the release of the interest of witnesses, or an amendment to the pleadings, or in any other way. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 555.

2. To the Complaint.

11. When it appears by the plaintiff's testimony, that there is a nonjoinder of persons who should have been made plaintiffs, and a motion for a nonsuit is made on this ground, the court may permit an amendment by adding the name of a co-plaintiff on such terms as may be just. Acquittal v. Crowell, 1 Cal. 192.

12. The misjoinder of parties can be corrected by amendment under the statute. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 412.

13. Where on appeal the complaint is so radically defective as not to authorize a judgment, a new trial may be granted with leave to amend upon just terms. Sterling v. Hansom, 1 Cal. 479.

14. The discovery of fraud after suit brought would entitle the party to amend

To the Complaint.

so as to include the newly discovered facts. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 285; Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 412.

15. Where the proof does not sustain the allegations of the bill, and where by the proof the complainant would be entitled to relief, in a court of equity, if his pleadings had been properly framed, an amendment should be allowed or directed to conform the pleadings to the facts which ought to be in issue, in order to enable the court to decree fully on the merits, and whenever this is not done, it is error. Connally v. Peck, 3 Cal. 82.

16. It is not error for the court to allow a complaint to be amended. Mills v. Dunlap, 3 Cal. 97.

17. A joint claim by two persons cannot be pleaded as a counter-claim by one defendant, but he may amend and allege that the whole interest therein has been transferred to him. Stearns v. Martin, 4 Cal. 229.

18. A case may be remitted to a referee, with leave to plaintiff to amend his declaration, and to the defendant to answer over, when it is necessary to enable a correct report to be made. Montefiori v. Engels, 4 Cal. 434.

19. The plaintiff sued in assumpsit to recover rent; after a trial and verdict which was set aside by the court, he amended his complaint to make it in form an action of trespass for mesne profits: held, this was erroneous, and should not be permitted, for if the new complaint is to be treated as an amendment to the old one, and to continue the original action, then two ~~cases~~ of action, incompatible in their nature, are joined. Ramirez v. Murray, 5 Cal. 224.

20. It would be proper for the court to order the complaint to be amended in an action where the defendant is arrested, so that the question of fraud should be submitted to the jury, and a judgment entered in conformity to the facts found. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 61; Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 412.

21. A party may amend by striking out a claim for damages without regard to the purpose which may influence him, and it is error to refuse this right. Grass Valley Quartz Mining Co. v. Stackhouse, 6 Cal. 414.

22. The prayer of an amended or supplemental complaint may change the character of the original bill, and pray for a different relief, if in accordance with the additional facts. Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 486.

23. Every supplemental complaint is enlarged or altered by every additional and pertinent fact, and the plaintiff has a right to attach in an amended complaint the assignment for fraud discovered since filing his original complaint. Ib.

24. After a motion for a nonsuit, the court may, upon terms, allow an amendment of the complaint, if it would not operate as a surprise upon the defendant; but if this is not done, the plaintiff cannot recover. Farmer v. Cram, 7 Cal. 136.

25. When a final judgment on demurrer to the complaint, sustaining the demurrer, was reversed, the plaintiff had the right to amend, on application to the court below. Phelan v. San Francisco County, 3 Cal. 16.

26. It is always in the power of the court to allow an amendment to the complaint, so it does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Polk v. Coffin, 9 Cal. 58.

27. If defendants were surprised by the amendment, and found it necessary to adopt a different line of defense in consequence of it, they would have been entitled to a continuance, in order to prepare for their defense. Ib.

28. The wife is a proper party defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage executed upon premises claimed as a homestead. If not made such a party, she may intervene, or by permission of the court, be allowed to file a separate answer, the plaintiff having the liberty to amend the complaint, if any matters are set up in the answer which he might wish to anticipate by further allegation. Moss v. Warner, 10 Cal. 297.

29. It is error to render a final judgment on demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. Where the complaint is defective, the court should sustain the demurrer, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint; and if the plaintiff then declines, judgment final should be given. Gallagher v. Delaney, 10 Cal. 410.

30. An affidavit which avers that affiant, on the day named "served the summons in this action upon the defendant, Mary B. McMillan, at her residence in the city of San Francisco, by delivering and leaving with her a copy thereof attached to a copy of the amended complaint filed in this action," is insufficient; the copy of the amended complaint should be certified. McMillan v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 378.

31. A justice of the peace has the right to allow a complaint to be amended, in all respects, so that the case may be determined on its merits; and this, whether the defect be in the statement of jurisdiction or any other fact. Linhart v. Buiff, 11 Cal. 280.

32. A mere order, permitting an amendment of the complaint, was of no effect, unless and until complied with. Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 46.

33. A court may order judgment creditors, as subsequent incumbrancers, to be made parties to an action by an amendment of the complaint, as a better course, or by petition on intervention. Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 70.

34. A refusal by a county court, on appeal from justice, to permit an amendment to the complaint, is matter of discretion, and there being no affidavit of materiality, nor any showing of importance of the amendment, this court will not interfere. Canfield v. Bates, 13 Cal. 608.

35. The amendment of the complaint putting the substantial matters contained therein into two counts, not being answered by defendants, and no default taken therefor, the plaintiff cannot go to trial without objecting to the answer to the original complaint, and after verdict against him, object to the want of an answer to the amended complaint. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 28.

36. Where a demurrer is sustained, and the plaintiff amends by making two counts, instead of one, he cannot, after trial, complain of error in sustaining the demurrer. Ib.

37. If after a demurrer to the complaint sustained, defendant does not offer to amend, final judgment against him will not be disturbed. Smith v. Yreka Water Co., 14 Cal. 202.

38. Complaint filed against M. & D. and H. & L. sureties; complaint amended, and H. & L. only named defendants, and on this complaint the issue was framed, and the cause tried: held, that this operated as a discontinuance as to M. & D. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11.

39. Where an amended complaint in ejectment sets up title acquired after the commencement of the suit, and a judgment by default is regularly entered, the judgment is valid. Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

40. Upon the remittitur of a cause to the court below, if the plaintiffs desire to amend their complaint so as to present their legal rights for the determination of a jury, they should be permitted to do so. McDonald v. Bear River Water and Mining Co., 15 Cal. 149.

41. The supreme court will not reverse the judgment of the court below to afford plaintiff an opportunity to amend his complaint, when he did not offer to amend below, there being no error in the record. Gibbons v. Scott, 15 Cal. 286.

42. Facts which occur subsequent to the filing of the original complaint, and which change the liabilities of the defendants, and in consequence the character of the judgment which is sought, cannot be incorporated with the original complaint by an amendment, without presenting averments inconsistent with the date of the commencement of the action. Van Maren v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 311.

43. When suit is brought against a female, who subsequently marries, her husband must be made a codefendant. But this should be done, and an averment of the marriage be made by a supplemental complaint, and not by an amendment to the original. Ib.

44. The objection to a complaint in forcible entry and detainer, that it does not aver "actual" possession—the word "possession" only being used—was a mere defect in pleading, which should have been taken advantage of below, where, if the objection be good, the complaint could have been amended, but it cannot be urged in the supreme court for the first time. Min-turn v. Burr, 16 Cal. 110.

3. To the Answer.

45. To a complaint verified the defendant filed a copy of the original verified answer by mistake; parties took depositions under the pleading and subsequently went to trial. After the close of the plaintiff's evidence, his counsel then for the first time brought the mistake to the notice of the court, by moving for judgment by default, which motion the court sustained, and refused to allow defendant to then verify his answer: held, that the court erred, and should have allowed the defendant to have verified his answer. Arrington v. Tupper, 10 Cal. 464.

46. Two defendants filed a joint plea of the statute of limitation, and the plea being held bad as to one defendant, the court, on the trial, permitted the other defendant to amend and file a separate plea of the statute: held, that this was no such gross abuse of discretion as to enable the supreme court to reverse it. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 254.

47. The defense relied on in the answer in this case being invalid, it was not error to refuse permission to amend after judgment sustaining a demurrer to the answer. Besides, the allowance of the amendment was matter of discretion, for the abuse of which only could this court interfere. Gillan v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 156.

48. It is not error for the court to refuse permission to set up the statute of limitations after answer to the merits. Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 375.

4. To a Summons.

49. The court can allow a summons to be amended by inserting the notice of the cause of action required therein. Pollock v. Hunt, 2 Cal. 194.

5. To a Verdict.

50. The court may amend the verdict of a jury when it is defective in something merely formal, and which has no connection with the merits of the cause, where the amendment in no respect changes the rights of the parties. Perkins v. Wilson, 3 Cal. 139.

6. To a Judgment.

51. The defendant was sued and served by the name of George Mott, and judgment entered against him in that name, without notice to him, the plaintiff, on his own motion, obtained an order from the court to amend the judgment by altering the name from George to Gordon: held, that this was error. McNally v. Mott, 3 Cal. 235.

52. A court may amend or render a judgment nunc pro tunc, where the record discloses that the entry on the minutes does not correctly give what was the judgment of the court. Morrison v. Dapman, 3 Cal. 257.

53. Where an amended decree, rendered at the same term as the first decree, is simply what the original decree should have been, and does no injustice to a party, this court will not disturb it on account of any alleged irregularity not affecting the merits. Gronfier v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 492.

54. When a judgment is rendered and an appeal taken, the court below loses control over the judgment, and an order amending the judgment is erroneous. Bryan v. Berry, 8 Cal. 134.

55. While the term lasts, the court has power to amend the record. After the term has passed, the record cannot be amended, unless there is something in the record to amend by. Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 173.

56. It is not admissible, in a collateral manner, to amend the record of a previous action. If it can be amended at all, or a patent defect be cured, it must be by direct proceeding. McMillan v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 379.

57. The appellate court cannot amend the record for error shown by the affidavit of the judge who tried the cause. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 115.

7. To a Bill of Costs.

58. The court has power, in the exercise of its discretion, to allow the amendment of a bill of costs and the affidavit accompanying it. Burnham v. Hays, 3 Cal. 118.

59. When the original bill of costs is filed within the time prescribed by the act, an amendment, allowed after the time, relates back to the time of filing the original, of which it forms merely a part. Id.

To a Statement on Appeal.—Effect of Filing an Answer.

60. If the original affidavit to a bill of costs is a nullity, the defendant should take proper steps to have it set aside, or appeal from the judgment, on the ground that the costs had been waived by operation of the statute; but having himself moved a re-taxation of the costs, it was proper for the court, in its discretion, to allow such amendments as were just and necessary. Burnam v. Hays, 3 Cal. 118.

8. To a Sheriff's return.

61. A sheriff has no right, after making a return, to amend it so as to affect rights which had already vested in third parties. Newhall v. Provost, 6 Cal. 87; Webster v. Haworth, 8 Cal. 25.

9. To the Answer of a Garnishee.

62. To subserve the purposes of justice, courts should allow a garnishee to amend his answer whenever it appears that he has committed a mistake, or fallen into an error, which could not reasonably have been avoided. Smith v. Brown, 5 Cal. 118.

10. To a Statement on Appeal.

63. Where amendments are made to a statement on appeal, a fair copy of the statement as amended should be made; otherwise the supreme court will not look into it. Marlow v. Marsh, 9 Cal. 259; People v. Edwards, 9 Cal. 291; Skillman v. Riley, 10 Cal. 300.

64. A statement agreed on by parties should not probably be amended by the court on motion, except under a very clear showing of mistake or fraud. Hutchinson v. Bours, 13 Cal. 52.

65. A statement on motion for a new trial regularly settled and signed by the judge, and containing all the grounds of the motion, but without any specification thereof, may be amended by the judge so as to insert a specification of the grounds of the motion, after the time for filing a statement has passed. Valentine v. Stuart, 15 Cal. 396.

11. In Justices' Courts.

66. Amendments should be regularly allowed whenever they will tend to the furtherance of justice, and the greatest liberality in this respect should be extended to pleadings in justices' courts. Butler v. King, 10 Cal. 343; Thornton v. Borland, 12 Cal. 439.

67. A justice of the peace has the right to allow a complaint to be amended in all respects, so that the case may be determined on its merits; and this whether the defect be in the statement of jurisdiction, or any other fact. The greatest liberality and indulgence should be extended in all such applications. Linhart v. Buiff, 11 Cal. 280.

68. Amendments should be liberally allowed by inferior courts in advancement of justice, and to secure a fair and speedy trial on the merits; and an arbitrary refusal to allow them under proper circumstances, would be ground of interference by the supreme court. Smith v. Yreka Water Co., 14 Cal. 202.

Effect of filing an Answer.—Failure to Answer.—Time to Answer.

I. EFFECT OF FILING AN ANSWER.

1. The mere fact of filing an answer does not operate as an appearance at the trial, so as to prevent the waiver of a jury trial under the code. Zane v. Crowe, 4 Cal. 112.

2. The answer of a defendant waives the alleged error as to the change of parties, whereby the name of such defendant has been submitted for that of another, without notice. Smith v. Curtis, 7 Cal. 587.

3. Failure of defendant in ejectment, to appear when the cause is called for trial—an answer being in—authorizes the court to try it without a jury. Waltham v. Carson, 10 Cal. 180; Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 433.

II. APPEARANCE OF THE WIFE BY ANSWER.

4. If the wife is not made a party to an answer to foreclose a mortgage executed upon the homestead, she may intervene, or by permission of the court, be allowed to file a separate answer, the plaintiff having the liberty to amend his complaint, if any matters are set up in the answer which he might wish to anticipate by further allegations. Moss v. Warner, 10 Cal. 297.

III. FAILURE TO ANSWER.

5. Where a defendant neglected to file his answer, and suffered a default and final judgment, the plaintiff has now the advantage at law, and his rights, obtained through defendant's laches, ought not to be disturbed. Whipley v. Flower, 6 Cal. 632.

6. A judgment by default is properly entered where the defendant did not answer and appear, after service was made complete by publication; nor does an appearance on a former appeal absolve him from the necessity of answering, or from the consequences of his neglect to do so. Grewell v. Henderson, 7 Cal. 292.

7. If defendants show any reasonable or valid excuse of their failure to answer, then it would have been proper for the court below to consider the nature of the facts relied on as a defense, in order to determine whether the ends of justice would be promoted by opening the judgment. Chase v. Swain, 9 Cal. 137.

8. The amendment of the complaint, putting the substantial matters contained therein into two counts, not being answered by defendants, and no default being taken therefor, the plaintiff cannot go to trial without objecting to the answer to the original complaint, and, after verdict against him, object to the want of an answer to the amended complaint. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 28.

9. An affidavit by defendant, that he was under the impression when he retained counsel in a cause that the time to answer had not expired; that he did not recollect the precise day upon which the summons and complaint were served; that he was quite ill at the time, and did not as carefully note the time as he would otherwise, is insufficient to open a judgment by default. Elliott v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 377.

IV. TIME TO ANSWER.

10. Under the Code of 1850,* the defendant might file his answer at any time before final judgment, even after a default. Stevens v. Ross, 1 Cal. 95.

11. Where suit is brought against a person in a county other than that in which he resides, he has forty days to answer, exclusive of the day of service, and a judgment by default before the expiration of that full time will be reversed on appeal. Burt v. Scrantom, 1 Cal. 417.

12. Where a defendant was served with process, but was not given the time allowed by statute to appear and answer, it would be a sufficient reason for the court to quash the writ on motion, by an amicus curiæ, or for extension of the time on defendant's motion, or a good objection on writ of error, arrest of judgment, or on motion for a new trial; but it cannot be said that the court had no jurisdiction of the person, so as to make its judgment a nullity. Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 64.

* This provision does not exist in the Code of 1851, now in force.

---

Jurisdiction admitted by Answer.—The Answer as Evidence.—Amended Answer.

---

V. THE ANSWER IS A WAIVER OF DEMURRER OVERRULED.

13. An answer is a waiver of demurrer previously interposed.* Pierce v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 471; Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 481; Deboom v. Priestly, 1 Cal. 107.

VI. JURISDICTION ADMITTED BY ANSWER.

14. Where a party made defendant in a foreclosure suit, as claiming some interest in the land, answers that he has a tax title to the land, he cannot object afterwards that equity has no jurisdiction over tax titles. Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 616.

15. Citation to heirs, to show cause against probate of will, etc., not served, is no objection to the jurisdiction of the probate court, if the heirs answer. The want of due service goes only to the service itself. Abila v. Padilla, 14 Cal. 106.

VII. THE ANSWER AS EVIDENCE.

16. The mere fact that plaintiff's counsel had read upon trial a part of the answer which had been stricken out, would not of itself be error on appeal; the defendant could have asked the court to rule out the answer as testimony, and charge the jury to disregard it. Morgan v. Hugg, 5 Cal. 409.

17. An answer responsive to, and denying the charges in a bill of equity, is not evidence for the defendant, though the bill be sustained by one witness only. Goodwin v. Hammond, 13 Cal. 169.

18. An answer under our statute is not proof for defendant, but an admission in the answer of a fact stated in the complaint is conclusive evidence against him. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 645.

19. The equity rule, requiring two witnesses to controvert an answer under oath, does not prevail in this State. The answer is only a pleading, and is not evidence for defendant. Bostic v. Love, 16 Cal. 72.

VIII. AMENDED ANSWER.

20. To a complaint verified, the defendant filed a copy of the original verified answer, by mistake; parties took depositions under the pleading, and subsequently went to trial; after the close of the plaintiff's evidence, his counsel, then for the first time, brought the mistake to the notice of the court, by moving for judgment by default, which motion the court sustained, and refused to allow defendant to then verify his answer: held, that the court erred, and should have allowed the defendant to have verified his answer. Arrington v. Tupper, 10 Cal. 464.

21. Two defendants filed a joint plea of the statute of limitation, and the plea being held bad as to one defendant, the court, on the trial, permitted the other defendant to file a separate plea of the statute: held, that this was no such gross abuse of discretion as to enable the supreme court to revise it. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 254.

22. The defense relied on in the answer being invalid, it is not error to refuse permission to amend after judgment sustaining a demurrer to the answer. Besides, the allowance of the amendment was matter of discretion, for the abuse of which only could this court interfere. Gillian v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 156.

23. It is not error for the court to refuse permission to set up the statute of limitations, after answering to the merits. Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 375.

IX. ANSWER AFTER DEMURRER.

24. The allowance to file an answer after demurrer overruled, rests in the discretion of the court below, subject to review of course, in case of its arbitrary or unreasonable exercise. Thornton v. Borland, 12 Cal. 439.

---

X. SHAM AND IRRELEVANT ANSWERS.

25. An appeal will not lie from an in-

---

* These decisions were made when an appeal was allowed from an order overruling a demurrer, which provision was restricted by the amendment to the Code, in 1854. The practice now is, to answer over and reserve an exception to the order overruling the demurrer, when the whole matter can be carried up on appeal.

---

terlocutory order striking out an answer regularly filed, and rendering judgment without trial. Stevens v. Ross, 1 Cal. 97.

26. When the complaint alleges the making and endorsing of a note, and the answer denies neither signature, the answer should be stricken out, and the plaintiff entitled to judgment. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 196.

27. A defendant should set forth in his answer the true nature of his defense, or he should not be permitted to insist on it. Walton v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 362.

28. When the answer contains no good ground of defense, the court should render judgment on the pleadings for the plaintiff. Corwin v. Patch, 4 Cal. 204.

29. Where a defense was set up in the answer, that one partner deceived the other in obtaining the note in an action on the note: held, that all the answer except that portion admitting the execution of the note and denying the indebtedness, was properly stricken out. Case v. Maxey, 6 Cal. 277.

30. An answer which denies generally all the allegations of the complaint, is equivalent to the general issue at common law, and ought not to be stricken out as sham or frivolous. Brooks v. Chilton, 6 Cal. 642.

31. A copy of a note sued on, being attached to and made part of the complaint, the answer not verified, admits the genuineness and due execution of the note, and entitles the plaintiff to judgment. Whitwell v. Thomas, 9 Cal. 499; Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 69.

32. A simple denial could not be treated as a sham answer, and yet all the purposes of vexation could be as well accomplished by it as by separate defenses, and the provision requiring defenses to be separately stated would be almost useless. Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 29.

33. If, under a simple denial in the answer, the defendant may give in evidence any defense formerly admissible under the general issue, the provision allowing sham answers to be stricken out would possess but very little practical utility. Ib.

34. A plaintiff is protected against sham defenses, which may be stricken out on motion. A sham answer is one good in form, but false in fact, and not pleaded in good faith. It sets up new matter, which is false. Ib.

35. In a suit on the note, the complaint containing the note or a copy, a denial of the indebtedness, is no denial at all. Kinney v. Osborne, 14 Cal. 113.

XI. ANSWER IN AN INJUNCTION SUIT.

36. Where the answer to a bill for an injunction denies all the equity, if any, of the bill, a preliminary injunction should not be granted. Crandall v. Woods, 6 Cal. 452.

37. Where a motion to dissolve an injunction is made upon bill and answer alone, the general rule is to dissolve the injunction, if the answer denies all the equities of the bill. The exceptions to the rule depend upon the special circumstances of the particular cases. Gardner v. Perkins, 9 Cal. 553.

38. The entire equity of the bill being denied in the answer, and there being no support of the bill, the injunction was dissolved. Burnett v. Whitesides, 13 Cal. 157.

39. The privilege of moving for a dissolution of an injunction upon the filing of an answer, is limited to cases where the injunction is originally granted without notice, or expressly reserved when the injunction is granted on a rule to show cause. Natoma W. & M. Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 551; Natoma W. & M. Co. v. Parker, 16 Cal. 85.

40. Where an injunction was granted on the complaint, restraining defendants from surveying or selling the premises, pending suit, and was dissolved on filing an answer setting up paramount title in defendants: held, that the injunction was properly dissolved, because the validity of defendant's title should be judicially determined before its assertion be enjoined. Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 263.

XII. EFFECT OF A JOINT ANSWER.

41. Defendants sued in ejectment may answer separately, or demand separate verdicts; unless they do so, they will be concluded by a general verdict. Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 80.

42. In ejectment, the verdict may be joint, against several defendants, without specifying their respective lots in a whole tract, where they file a joint answer, which contains no averment as to the particular portion of land occupied by each, no proof being offered on the point, no damages being claimed, and defendants being in possession. Mc Garvey v. Little, 15 Cal. 31.

Effect of a Joint Answer.—What an Answer should contain.

XIII. WHAT AN ANSWER SHOULD CONTAIN.

1. Cause of Defense.

43. Where the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was in the quiet and peaceable possession of premises, and was dispossessed by the defendants by force, or under an illegal order by an officer having no jurisdiction, the answer should take issue directly upon these allegations, or confess them, and state directly new matter to avoid them. Ladd v. Stevenson, 1 Cal. 22.

44. A party cannot argue an objection to the sufficiency of an answer on appeal, for the first time, the objection being different from that which he raised in the court below. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 196.

45. A defendant should set forth in his answer the true nature of his defense, or he should not be permitted to insist on it. Walton v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 362.

46. In an action to recover the purchase money of land, founded on a contract in which the plaintiff contracted to deliver a warranty deed for the land, the defendant in his answer denied that the plaintiff was the lawful owner, or that he had any title to the land: held, that to have enabled him to rescind the contract, the defendant was bound to aver and to show a paramount title in another; and that, failing in this, his defense to the action was defective. Thayer v. White, 3 Cal. 228.

47. What was matter in abatement at common law must be set up in the answer, and with such particularity as to exclude every conclusion to the contrary. Tooms v. Randall, 3 Cal. 440.

48. When the defendants are sued as factors, it is not necessary to set forth in their answer their claim for disbursements, commissions, etc., by way of set-off. Lubert v. Chauviteau, 3 Cal. 463.

49. An admission by an attorney of record, of the correctness of an amount due, for which judgment is taken, when not done in fraud of the rights of his client, destroys the effect of a denial in an answer. Taylor v. Randall, 5 Cal. 80.

50. In defense to an action on a promissory note, it is not sufficient to plead in general terms want of consideration, and that the note was obtained by fraud. The answer should set out the circumstances under which the note was given, and point out the facts which constitute the fraud. Gushee v. Leavitt, 5 Cal. 160.

51. Where an answer contains an allegation of alteration in an instrument, it must state that such alteration was made with the knowledge or consent, or by the authority of the plaintiff. Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 175.

52. A plaintiff's recovery cannot be barred by the statute of frauds, unless the statute be pleaded. Osborne v. Endicott, 6 Cal. 153.

53. Where the defendant in a replevin suit failed to claim the return of the property in his answer, and on the trial the jury found a verdict for the defendant, in which the court rendered judgment against plaintiffs for costs, which was paid: held, that the payment of the judgment as taken, was a complete discharge of plaintiff's sureties on the undertaking. Chambers v. Waters, 7 Cal. 390.

54. To constitute the justification of a publication of libel, the answer should aver the truth of the defamatory matter charged. It is not sufficient to set up facts which only tended to establish the truth of such matter. The averment of its truth was essential, without which the facts detailed could only avail in mitigation of damages. Thrall v. Smiley, 9 Cal. 536.

55. An answer which disclosed the fact that the contract was not in writing, but also avers acts of part performance, which took the contract out of the operation of the statute, is not demurrable. Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 160.

56. On an action of trespass, where there is no specific denial of the amount of damage alleged in the complaint, although the alleged cause of damage is specifically traversed, it is doubtful whether such answer amounts to a denial of the damage. Rowe v. Bradley, 12 Cal. 231.

57. When the complaint called the defendant to answer not only the character of the possession, but the fact of possession by it, a failure to deny this averment is an admission of it. Burke v. Table Mt. W. Co., 12 Cal. 407.

58. In an action of ejectment to recover mining claims, an answer to the complaint which avers "that any right that plaintiffs may have ever had to the possession, etc., they forfeited by a noncompliance with the rules, customs and regulations of the miners of the diggings embracing the claims in dispute, prior to the defendants' entry," is insufficient in not setting forth the rules, customs, etc. Dutch Flat W. Co. v. Mooney, 12 Cal. 534.

59. Where the controlling fact in issue is evaded in the answer, this evasion in a solemn judicial proceeding is a most significant circumstance. Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 98.

60. It would require clear proof that the purposes of appropriation of water for a saw-mill had been fully terminated, to hold the title to the water abandoned. This question must, however, be taken in the answer, or made on the trial, and not for the first time raised on appeal. McDonald v. Bear River & Auburn W. & M. Co., 13 Cal. 236.

61. In replevin, to enable the defendant to obtain the value of the property on judgment of dismissal against the plaintiff for failure to appear, the answer must contain some allegation or prayer relative to the change of possession from defendant to plaintiff. Gould v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 431.

62. It has been held, frequently, that a party cannot set up inconsistent defenses; but if no objection be taken to the answer, on that ground, the defendant on the trial may rely on any of these defenses. Klink v. Cohen, 13 Cal. 625.

63. The answer set up that the note sued upon was given for the land, fencing and building materials; that plaintiff falsely represented that there was building material for a barn; that this was so insufficient in quantity that it cost defendant six hundred dollars to buy more, etc.: held, that a special demurrer being put in to the answer, it sets up no defense as to the building material, because neither quantity or value is given, and the answer is fatally defective in not charging the representations to have been fraudulently made, or that there was a warranty of some particular quantity of lumber. Kinney v. Osborne, 14 Cal. 113.

64. Although an answer denies the delivery of a bond and mortgage, still their possession by plaintiff is evidence of delivery. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 644.

65. Where, in an action on a lost note, a verified complaint alleges that on a particular day the note in question was made by defendant and delivered to plaintiff, an answer denying the making and delivery of the note on the day mentioned, is sufficient. Such denial does not reach the substantial matter of the averment. Castro v. Wetmore, 16 Cal. 380.

66. Where, in an action on a lost note, the complaint verified alleges the loss, stating particularly the circumstances thereof, an answer denying the note was lost, as alleged, does not put in issue the fact of loss, which is the gist of the averment, but only the circumstances of the loss, which are collateral and immaterial. Ib.

2. Objection to the Jurisdiction.

67. The objection to the jurisdiction of the justice, on the ground of excess in the value of the subject of controversy, is properly made by the answer, and that should be determined before the justice proceeds to hear the merits of the case. Small v. Gwinn, 6 Cal. 449.

3. Objections to the Misjoinder or Nonjoinder of Parties.

68. If there is a misjoinder of parties, the objection should be taken by answer or demurrer, or the same is waived. Rowe v. Chandler, 1 Cal. 175.

69. Objection should be taken by demurrer or answer to the misjoinder of parties defendant. An answer will not be treated as a plea in abatement for a misjoinder of parties defendant, after the testimony has disclosed a proper cause of action against them. Warner v. Wilson, 4 Cal. 313.

---

Objections to the Misjoinder of Actions.—Objections to Venue.—When the Complaint is verified.

---

70. There are two ways of taking advantage of nonjoinder of parties plaintiff, when the defect does not appear upon the face of the complaint; and these are, at law, either by answer or apportionment of the damages at the trial; and in equity, by answer or demurrer. Whitney v. Stark, 8 Cal. 516.

4. Objections to the Misjoinder of Actions.

71. If several causes of action are improperly united in the same action, the objection must be taken either by demurrer or answer, or it will be deemed to have been waived. Macendray v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 395.

5. Objections to the Venue.

72. Where a motion was made to change the venue on the ground of non-residence, and no objection was made thereto in the answer, and nearly six months had elapsed before objection was made: held, it was made too late. Tooms v. Randall, 3 Cal. 439.

6. When the Complaint is verified.

73. It is no error to allow the defendant to verify his answer before trial, unless it in some way took the plaintiff by surprise, and this must be shown. Angier v. Masterson, 6 Cal. 62.

74. The objection to the want of verification to the declaration should have been made either before answer or with the answer. It comes too late after answer. Greenfield v. Steamer Gunnell, 6 Cal. 68.

75. When the complaint is verified, the answer shall contain a specific denial of each allegation controverted by defendant, or a denial thereof according to his information and belief. Every material allegation which is not so denied shall, for the purposes of the action, be taken as true. Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 200; Swartz v. Hazlett, 8 Cal. 126; Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 149.

76. By verification of the complaint, the plaintiff can prevent the defendant from interposing a general denial in suits on promissory notes by requiring a sworn answer. Brooks v. Chilton, 6 Cal. 642.

77. Where a complaint is verified, and there is no denial either of the ownership of the house during the period stated or of the occupancy of the premises by the defendant, there was in fact no denial of the amount claimed for the use and occupation of the premises. Osborne v. Hendrickson, 8 Cal. 32.

78. The object of verifying a complaint is to avoid the necessity and expense of producing proof to sustain the allegation of the complaint, in cases where the plaintiff would swear they were true, and the defendant would not deny the truth of the alleged facts under oath. Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 149; Thompson v. Lee, 8 Cal. 279.

79. It is truly painful to witness the reckless ease with which defendants, in too many cases, make "general and specific" denials, under oath, of "each and every allegation of the complaint," when it is clear that some of the material allegations of the complaint would never have been separately denied. Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 150.

80. If the facts in the complaint alleged are presumptively within the knowledge of the defendant, he must answer positively, and a denial upon information and belief will be treated as an evasion. If the facts alleged in the complaint are not personally within the knowledge of the defendant, he must answer according to his information. Curtis v. Vantine, 9 Cal. 38.

81. In no case can an allegation of the complaint be controverted by a denial of sufficient knowledge or information upon the subject to form a belief. Id.

82. There are but two forms in which a defendant can controvert the allegations of a verified complaint, so as to raise an issue; first, positively when the facts are within his own personal knowledge; and second, upon information and belief when the facts are not within his own personal knowledge. Curtis v. Vantine, 9 Cal. 38; Humphreys v. McCall, 9 Cal. 62; San Francisco Gas Co. v. City of San Francisco, 9 Cal. 474; Stewart v. Street, 10 Cal. 373; Ord v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 13 Cal. 371.

83. An answer unaccompanied by a required verification may be stricken out, and judgment ordered for plaintiff, as upon a default. Drum v. Whiting, 9 Cal. 423.

84. The language of the statute is imperative, and makes only one exception in which the verification of an answer may be omitted when the complaint is duly verified, and that is when the admission of the truth of the complaint might subject the party to a prosecution for a felony. Ib.

85. The statute imposes upon the defendant, if a natural person, and if a corporation upon its officers and agents, the duty of acquiring the requisite knowledge or information respecting the matters alleged in the complaint, to enable them to answer in the proper form. San Francisco Gas Co. v. City of San Francisco, 9 Cal. 466.

86. An answer is fatally defective in not denying any of the allegations, either positively or according to information and belief, the only forms in which the allegations of a verified complaint can be controverted so as to raise an issue. Ib.

87. To a complaint verified the defendant filed a copy of the original verified answer by mistake; parties took depositions under the pleading, and subsequently went to trial; after the close of the plaintiff's evidence, his counsel then for the first time brought the mistake to the notice of the court, by moving for judgment by default, which motion the court sustained, and refused to allow defendant to then verify his answer: held, that the court erred, and should have allowed the defendant to have verified his answer. Arrington v. Tupper, 10 Cal. 464.

88. Where the pleadings are verified, every matter of defense not directly responsible to the allegations of the complaint, must be set up in the answer. Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 430.

89. In an action upon an account stated, evidence that the items of the account are overcharged is not admissible, the complaint being verified, and the answer not averring fraud or mistake in the accounting. Ib.

90. A verification to an answer before a county recorder is good under the statute. Pfeiffer v. Rhein, 13 Cal. 648.

91. An allegation in a verified complaint that "defendants wrongfully and unlawfully entered upon and dispossessed" plaintiffs, is not sufficiently denied by a denial that "defendants wrongfully and unlawfully entered and dispossessed" plaintiffs, because such answer admits entry and ouster. Busenius v. Coffee, 14 Cal. 92.

92. A sworn answer must be consistent in itself, and must not deny in one sentence what it admits to be true in the next. Hensley v. Tartar, 14 Cal. 509.

93. Where a complaint is verified, an answer denying "generally and specifically each and every allegation in the complaint, the same as if said allegations were herein recapitulated," and also denying each allegation in the same form, with certain qualifications and exceptions, does not raise an issue upon any fact stated in the complaint. Ib.

94. In equity, the general denials made by traversing literally and conjunctively the statements of a sworn bill, are not legitimate for the purpose of putting in issue specific allegations, for in this way a party may deny the entire charges in form as stated against him, in consistency with admitting the truth of the specific charge, or even the substantial fact. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 644.

95. The rules of pleading, both under the old equity system and under our present system, are intended to prevent evasion, and to require a denial of every specific averment in a sworn bill in substance and in spirit, and not merely a denial of its literal truth, and whenever the defendant fails to make such denial he admits the averment. Ib.

7. New Matter.

96. Damages sustained by a vendee of goods by reason of his inability to comply with a contract made by him with a third person, do not legally result from a breach of the contract of his vendor to deliver the goods to him, and in an action by his vendor against him, cannot be recouped from the plaintiff's claim, unless such damages are specially alleged and set forth in the answer. Cole v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 54.

97. An answer is not merely a response to the charges and interrogatories of the complaint, but as a pleading of the defendant, in which he may set up new matter of defense, whether within his knowledge or not. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 69.

98. The defendant will not be permitted to insist at the trial that the work was done in an unworkmanlike manner, unless he has set up such defense in his answer. Kendall v. Vallejo, 1 Cal. 372.

99. To entitle a defendant to set off a claim against a demand of the plaintiff, he must set forth in his answer the nature of the claim which he intends to set off. Bernard v. Mullot, 1 Cal. 368.

100. Where defendants are sued as factors, it is not necessary to set forth in their answer their claim for disbursements, &c., by way of set-off. Lubert v. Chauviteau, 3 Cal. 463.

101. Matters in avoidance must be specially pleaded. They cannot be used as defenses under an answer which is a simple denial of the allegations of the bill. Gaskill v. Moore, 4 Cal. 235.

102. The want of capacity in a plaintiff to sue should have been specially set up in the answer. The general issue is not sufficient. Cal. Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 590; White v. Moses, 11 Cal. 70.

103. It is well settled that an officer, in order to justify the seizure of property in the possession of a stranger to the writ which he has executed, must plead specially such justification. Glazer v. Clift, 10 Cal. 304.

104. An attorney sued for professional services on a quantum valebant, and the answer denied the value of the services. The rule requiring new matter to be set up in the answer does not here apply. Bridges v. Hall, 13 Cal. 641.

105. New matter is where the defendant seeks to introduce into the case a defense not disclosed by the pleadings; something relied on by him, but not put in issue by the plaintiff. Ib.

XIV. DEFENSES.

106. Where an attorney is proceeded against with the object of expelling him from the bar, natural justice entitles him to have notice of the charges against him and an opportunity to answer. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 150.

107. Where the affidavit sets forth that the defendant has a good and substantial defense, he should set forth specifically wherein that defense consists. Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 433.

108. Infancy is a good defense to an action on an executory contract, though the defendant did not disaffirm it on coming of age. Buzzell v. Bennett, 2 Cal. 102.

109. An endorsee of a promissory note after maturity takes the same interest that the endorser had, and his claim is subject to the same legal and equitable defense. Folsom v. Bartlett, 2 Cal. 164.

110. A judgment was had in the district court in favor of the appellant, and against the respondent: held, that after judgment against him it is too late for plaintiff to file his bill for a discovery in aid of his defense, on the ground that it was meritorious, and lies entirely within the knowledge of the judgment creditor. Norris v. Denton, 2 Cal. 380.

111. It is better to place the statute of limitation within the discretion of the court, so as to allow it to be pleaded at any time, upon terms, if it be proper, whereby the ends of justice will be attained by it. Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 411.

112. Where the consideration of a contract is expressed in writing, although fictitious, it satisfies the statute of frauds, and if the consideration is not paid, that fact may be urged specifically as a good ground of defense. Hoppe v. Stout, 2 Cal. 462.

113. A general denial has the same influence as the general issue at common law, and under that accord and satisfaction may well be shown. Gavin v. Annan, 2 Cal. 497; Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 30.

114. Where the contract was entire and the covenants dependent, and the plaintiff had declared his inability to keep it, and afterwards actually abandoned it: held, these facts formed a defense to his action for a claim under the contract. Green v. Wells, 2 Cal. 585.

115. Where the contract is for goods in a vessel, which are not yet discharged and cannot be delivered, there cannot be a defense of a delivery which takes the case out of the statute, and a good legal excuse for nondelivery. Stevens v. Stewart, 3 Cal. 143.

116. On a bill for a specific performance, defendant alleged fraud in the contract sued upon, but admitted payment of the consideration money under protest affirming the fraud: held, that the receipt of payment was no waiver of the defense, and defendant was not estopped from showing fraud. Russell v. Amador, 3 Cal. 402.

117. To avoid circuitry by driving defendant to a cross action on a warranty, he is permitted to set up the breach thereof in defense, either in mitigation of damages, or as a complete answer to the whole case. Flint v. Lyon, 4 Cal. 20.

118. A party who sues out a writ of replevin from a justice's court having no jurisdiction, and obtains the property, cannot, in an action in the replevin bond, set up, as a defense, the want of jurisdiction of the court. McDermott v. Isbell, 4 Cal. 114.

119. An executed parol agreement is a good defense against an action upon a specialty. Beach v. Covillaud, 4 Cal. 315.

120. A negotiable note, taken after maturity, is subject to all subsisting equities between the maker and payee, but not such as subsisted between the maker and every intermediate holder. Vinton v. Crowe, 4 Cal. 309.

121. A bare negative qualification need never be averred in an indictment, but must be relied on as matter of defense in the progress of the trial. People v. Nugent, 4 Cal. 341.

122. A sued B for twenty-two head of cattle and two wagons, and recovered a verdict for twelve head and the wagon, which was accepted by A and allowed to stand. C, who held under B, was afterwards sued by A for the remainder of the cattle: held, that if A had commenced another suit against B, his former recovery would have been a complete bar to the action, and if B could plead the former recovery in bar, so could C, who claimed immediately through B. Cunningham v. Harris, 5 Cal. 81.

123. It is not a good plea to allege that the note sued on is the property of another and not of the plaintiff, without showing some substantial matter of defense against the one asserted to be the owner, and which could not be set against the plaintiff. Gushee v. Leavitt, 5 Cal. 161.

124. When the defense of the wife is a special one, she can defend for her own right as well when sued jointly with her husband as if the trial was separate. Deuprey v. Deuprey, 5 Cal. 388.

125. Where the answer shows that the demurrer was to the validity of the contract which gave rise to the claim, and this averment is found to be true as alleged by the judge at nisi prius upon an inspection of the record of the case, the judgment upon demurrer is a bar to the suit. Robinson v. Howard, 5 Cal. 429.

126. A defense that the affidavit of arrest is insufficient cannot be set up by third parties, and not even by the defendant himself, after judgment in an action on the bail bond. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 59.

127. When in a proceeding for the protection of the creditor's property, instituted by one of the insolvent firm against his partners, in the same court wherein assignees have been appointed in insolvency proceedings by the firm, which, however, are void, and an order is made that the assignees pay over the fund to a receiver appointed by the court, it is no answer or defense that the fund has been attached in their hands in actions brought by the creditor, or that it had been attached in the hands of a former receiver, appointed by the same court, from whom they, under a like order, had received it. Adams v. Haskell, 6 Cal. 116.

128. A defense that promissory notes were made by one partner, in the firm name, but for his own private use, would not be good against the holder without notice of the fraud. Rich v. Davis, 6 Cal. 141.

129. A defense which was fully adjudicated in another suit between the same parties cannot be considered a second time. Ib. 142.

130. A principal may sue in his own name on a contract in writing, made and signed by his agent, without disclosing his principal. But, in such a case, the defendant may make the same defenses against the newly discovered principal as he could against the agent with whom he dealt as principal. Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 358.

131. The writ of restitution obtained in an action of forcible entry and detainer, does not determine either the right of property or the right of possession, and constitutes no defense to an action of ejectment. Mitchell v. Osgood, 6 Cal. 148.

132. It is no defense to a note given by one partner to the other, for an interest in land held jointly by both, that the payee of a note had deceived his partner—the maker—in the division of partnership stock, and was indebted therefor in an amount equal to, or greater than the sum due on the note. Case v. Maxey, 6 Cal. 277.

133. A discharge in insolvency made in chambers by the district judge, in the same district, but in another county from that in which the proceedings were instituted, is no defense to an action against an insolvent. Objections which go to the jurisdiction may properly be taken on trial. Turner v. McIlhaney, 6 Cal. 288.

134. Although a party set up an equitable defense to an action at law, he is not confined to that proceeding. He may let the judgment go at law, and file his bill in equity for relief. Lorraine v. Long, 6 Cal. 453.

135. There is no particular sanctity about a sealed instrument which will estop a party from alleging fraud in the execution or in the obtaining of it; on the contrary, fraud is a legitimate defense at all times and in all proceedings, at least under our system. Hopkins v. Beard, 6 Cal. 665.

136. Where, in an action on a promissory note, the defense set up is, that the defendant executed said note as the consideration for a deed from plaintiff for certain land under false and fraudulent representations; that plaintiff had an interest therein; the defendant, if he would avoid payment, must offer to surrender the deed to be canceled, so that both parties could have been remitted to their original rights. Tissot v. Throckmorton, 6 Cal. 473.

137. The defense that defendant asked by advice of a counsel must show that such advice was given upon a full and fair statement of the case. Bliss v. Wyman, 7 Cal. 257.

138. Sureties of a bail bond cannot avail themselves, as a defense to an action thereon, of an insufficiency of the justification of the undertaking. People v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 403.

139. If there be any consideration for the assignment of a note, then the assignee is a holder for value, and the maker is precluded from resorting to any defense that he might make against the payee, were the suit brought by him. Payne v. Bensley, 8 Cal. 266.

140. Commercial paper, transferred before maturity, as collateral security for a preëxisting debt, is not subject to the defenses of payor against payee. Payne v. Bensley, 8 Cal. 266; Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 98; Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 454.

141. The claim of defendant must be affirmatively set forth by him, in his answer. The plaintiff is not supposed to know the nature of the defendant's adverse claim. Mitchell v. Steelman, 8 Cal. 369.

142. If an answer does not deny specifically that the money was loaned, but admits that interest was to be paid upon the amount, the issue goes to show that it was a loan and not a purchase. Lee v. Evans, 8 Cal. 434.

143. If a judgment would not support an action by the plaintiff against the defendants, it must be equally unavailing when offered in defense as a former recovery in an action upon an original demand. Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 457.

144. In all cases a fraudulent concealment of the fact upon which the existence of the cause of action accrues, is a good answer to the plea of the statute of limitations. Ib. 461.

145. A debtor has the right to purchase cross-demands against the partnership, and to set them up as a defense to the debt due by him to the partnership. Naglee v. Minturn, 8 Cal. 544.

146. If an assignor is guilty of such fraud as would avoid the contract, and that the assignee was bound by his acts, the defendant could not avail himself of such a defense, unless fraud was alleged in the answer. Cal. Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 592.

147. In an action on a promissory note, executed by defendant, the defense was, that he was only a surety for the maker, and that plaintiff had neglected to bring suit in due time, and no notice of demand and protest was given: held, that mere neglect to sue is no defense. Kritzer v. Mills, 9 Cal. 23.

148. Where the defendants employed the plaintiff to superintend the erection of a building, of which he was one of the contractors, they cannot plead that it is against public policy that he should occupy two positions of which the interests were in conflict, in defense of an action brought by him for services as superintendent. Shaw v. Andrews, 9 Cal. 74.

Defenses.

149. As the plaintiff is compelled to set out every fact necessary to constitute his cause of action, the defendant is, every new matter of defense. This is required by the true principles of pleading. Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 27; Glazer v. Clift, 10 Cal. 304.

150. A defense wherein the onus of proof is thrown upon the defendant, that matter to be proved by him is new matter, is where the defendant concedes the plaintiff once had a good cause of action, but insists that it no longer exists. Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 27.

151. A defense arising from a verbal contract for the sale of land, accompanied with acts of part performance, taking the contract from the operation of the statute, is permissible under our system of practice, in an action of ejectment for the recovery of the premises. Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 160.

152. At common law a party was not permitted to plead a want of consideration as a defense to an action upon a sealed instrument, the presumption of the existence of a consideration being absolute and conclusive. Mc Carty v. Beach, 10 Cal. 463.

153. A defense that the note was made payable to order, and was afterwards fraudulently made payable to bearer, and that defendant paid the note before the plaintiff became assignee of it, and plaintiff became assignee after the note was due, is good. Sherman v. Rollberg, 11 Cal. 41.

154. M., a married woman, had a sum of money left her by bequest, during coverture; she and her husband joined in a power of attorney to O., authorizing him to demand and receipt for the money. O. received the money under said power. Some time after the receipt of the money by O. the husband died. M. sued O. to recover the money, and O. answered: That the money was collected for the husband, and a settlement and discharge since with his administrator, and money from time to time was paid to the husband during his lifetime, with the knowledge of M.: held, that the money was her separate property, and these defenses would not avail. Dickenson v. Owen, 11 Cal. 75.

155. The statute on estates denies any present right to the State to take property of a deceased person when there are alien nonresident heirs, and it is a good answer to one in possession to show a want of power in him who seeks to disturb it. People v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 166.

156. In order to charge attorneys with negligence in failing to set up a defense, the plaintiff must prove the existence of such facts, and that they were susceptible of proof at the trial, by the exercise of proper diligence on the part of his attorneys. Hastings v. Halleck, 13 Cal. 209.

157. To obtain the aid of chancery to vacate a judgment, a party must show that he has exhausted all proper diligence to defend in the suit in which judgment was rendered. Riddle v. Baker, 13 Cal. 304.

158. A perfect equity united with possession is under our system equivalent for all purposes of defense to a legal title. Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 497.

159. In a criminal case, if the court below impose upon counsel, against their consent, a limitation of time for argument before the jury, it is done at the risk of a new trial, if it be shown by the uncontradicted affidavits of the counsel that the prisoner was deprived of the opportunity of a full defense; for this is his constitutional right, without which he cannot lawfully be convicted. People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 585.

160. Where in a mortgage to secure the purchase money of land for which notes were given, falling due at different times, the condition was: "provided that previous to the dates of said payment, it shall have been decided by competent authority that the title to said land is fully vested in the party of the second part, and the party of the first part is given full and peaceable possession," the holder of one of the notes transferred before maturity may sue on it at maturity, although the title of the land has not been settled, and peaceable possession not given. The fact that the purchaser of the note saw the mortgage and note, was no notice to him of any valid defense to the note. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 100.

161. A defendant having no defense to an action cannot go into equity and enjoin a judgment by default on the ground that the sheriff's return of service on him is false, and that in fact he had no notice of the proceedings. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 141; Gibbons v. Scott, 15 Cal. 286; Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 202.

162. If parties consent that defenses other than those alleged in their answers may be set up, they must be presented by regular written allegations in a properly traversable form, or they will be disregarded. Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 380.

163. Where there are several separate defenses, each of which is sufficient to defeat the action, and these defenses are submitted to the jury, with evidence in support of each, and the verdict is general for the defendants, it cannot be set aside if it be right as to any one issue, though wrong on all the others. Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 182.

164. In an action for the price of goods sold and delivered, there being a warranty as to the quality of the goods, the breach of the warranty may be relied on in defense, by way of recoupment to mitigate the amount recovered; but it is not available as a complete defense to the action. Earl v. Bull, 15 Cal. 425.

165. Mrs. L., a defendant, when a femme sole contracted a debt, upon which judgment by default was recovered against her, and an appeal taken in her name to the supreme court, where the judgment was affirmed. Subsequently, judgment was obtained against plaintiff here, as surety on her appeal bond. This judgment he paid by giving his note in full satisfaction. He now sues Mrs. L. for the sum so paid: held, that she cannot defend on the ground that the paper on which the first suit against her was brought expressed no consideration, and that the complaint therein averred none, and that hence no demand is shown against her, the judgment of the supreme court being conclusive so long as it stands, cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that the parties to it did not prosecute the appeal, but must be set aside, if at all, by a direct proceeding, impeaching it for fraud. Bostic v. Love, 16 Cal. 72.

ary 8th, 1859, plaintiff served on defendant notice to quit, on the ground of forfeiture for nonpayment of rent; defendant refused to quit or surrender the premises. Plaintiff brings ejectment. Defendant answers; denying, among other things, plaintiff's title, and his own relation of tenant: held, that plaintiff is entitled to recover; that the denial of title and the relation of tenant made defendant a trespasser, not entitled to notice to quit; that no special demand for payment of rent was necessary to work a forfeiture; that defendant could not deny title, and yet claim the benefit of holding in subordination to it. Smith v. Ogg Shaw, 16 Cal. 89; 92.

167. A party having secured a mechanic's lien under the statute, does not forfeit or waive it by causing an attachment to be issued and levied upon property of the debtor to secure the same demand. The two remedies are cumulative, and both may be pursued at the same time, and if the party attempts to pursue them in separate actions, he might be put to his election; but it is no defense to an action to enforce the mechanic's lien, that in a previous suit for the same debt an attachment was issued and levied upon the property of the debtor, particularly when such suit had been dismissed, and nothing was realized by the attachment. Brennan v. Swasey, 16 Cal. 142.

 XV. EVIDENCE UPON ISSUE JOINED.

168. In chancery, when a cause is heard on bill and answer, all the material allegations of the answer, whether upon knowledge or upon information and belief, are to be assumed as true, provided the facts and circumstances disclosed by the answer are not wholly inconsistent with a general affirmation or denial contained therein. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 69.

169. Where a bill was filed to set aside and vacate a judgment on the ground that it was obtained through fraud, venality, and corruption, and these charges were all sufficiently denied in the answer, and the cause was heard on the pleadings: held, that the effect of the denial in the answer was the same as if the charges in the bill had been disproved by testimony. Belt v. Davis, 1 Cal. 142.

Evidence upon Issue joined.

170. A fact set forth in the complaint, admitted by the defendant's answer, needs no proof. Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 483.

171. Under our practice, as well as at common law, a specific denial of one or more allegations is held to be an admission of all others well pleaded. De Ro v. Cordes, 4 Cal. 120.

172. A denial that defendant is indebted to the said plaintiff, in the manner and form set forth, is a plea of nil debet at common law, and under it the defendant may prove an eviction, payment, release, and other matters of discharge. McLaren v. Spalding, 2 Cal. 512.

173. In an action against a sheriff for refusing to levy an attachment on certain property, as belonging to the attachment debtor, testimony that the property had been claimed by a third party, and the right of property tried before a sheriff's jury, and decided in favor of claimant, is irrelevant and inadmissible, when those facts have not been set up as new matter of defense in the answer. Strong v. Patterson, 6 Cal. 157.

174. There is no necessity of a finding by the court of a fact admitted by the pleadings. A finding is only required when the allegation of a material fact in the complaint is controverted by the answer so as to raise an issue. Swift v. Muggridge, 8 Cal. 445.

175. The denial of any indebtedness without a denial of any of the facts from which that indebtedness follows, as a conclusion of law, raises no issue. Curtis v. Vantine, 9 Cal. 38.

176. The simple denial by the defendants of all right in the plaintiff, only puts in issue the right of the plaintiff to recover as against the defendants. Humphreys v. McCall, 9 Cal. 63.

177. Under the old system of pleading, a former recovery should be given in evidence under the general issue, in assumpsit, trover, case and ejectment, but under our code, only two classes of defense are allowed, a simple denial or an allegation of new affirmative matter, and these two classes of cases must be the same in all cases. Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 27.

178. It is unnecessary to decide whether the facts as alleged constitute a title sufficient to maintain this action, as against mere trespassers, as there is no sufficient denial in the answer of the allegation of actual and peaceable prior possession. McCormick v. Bailey, 10 Cal. 232.

179. A court of equity will relieve against mistakes as well as fraud in a deed or contract in writing, and parol evidence is admissible to show it, if it be denied in the answer. Wagenblast v. Washburn, 12 Cal. 212.

180. Where the answer of defendants stated that the consideration of a note, sought to be impeached by creditors, was money loaned at the time of its date, and at various times subsequently, and the note drew interest from its date upon the whole amount, it admits fraud in the judgment on the note. Scales v. Scott, 13 Cal. 78.

181. Pleadings in justices' courts are not held to much strictness, and where plaintiff avers he is administrator in fact of the intestate, and this is not denied in the answer, no further proof of plaintiff's right to sue is requisite. Liening v. Gould, 13 Cal. 599.

182. Anything which shows plaintiff has no right of recovery at all, or to the extent claimed on the case as he makes it, may be given in evidence upon an issue joined by an allegation in the complaint, and its denial in the answer. Bridges v. Paige, 13 Cal. 641.

183. Where the paper, purporting to be an admission by an agent, is attached to the complaint as an exhibit, and the answer denies the agency, the paper is not evidence until the agency is proven. Garfield v. Knight's Ferry W. Co., 14 Cal. 37.

184. Where a complaint for the possession of land avers defendants to be in possession, and the answer does not deny, but shows it affirmatively, then, even if the allegation of possession be not material, and therefore not requiring a denial, the fact of possession becomes a matter of admission or agreement between the parties as an independent fact, not in issue by the pleadings, but affecting the whole case. Powell v. Oullahan, 14 Cal. 116.

185. Where plaintiff avers defendant is indebted to him for cattle sold and delivered, and the answer denies the averment, defendant may show anything disproving the contract as averred; as that another party, who in fact sold the cattle, sold them as his own, and not as agent of plaintiff, or that defendant was not to pay until the cattle were fattened and slaughtered. Hawkins v. Borland, 14 Cal. 414.

186. Where on suit against defendants, as members of a quartz company, one defendant plead that he was not a member of the company, and the finding of the court is that the allegations of the complaint are true, and that said defendant was a member of the company, the finding supports a judgment for plaintiff.—Parke v. Hinds, 14 Cal. 417.

187. If in justification by the sheriff under such attachment, judgment and execution, it be necessary to aver in the answer that the writs of attachment and execution were returned executed by the sheriff, still the omission of this averment, though it might have been ground of demurrer, was no ground for rejecting all evidence under such justification. Walker v. Woods, 15 Cal. 69.

188. Defendants answered to an action on a note, by pleading payment, and averring payment at divers times of money to plaintiff's intestate, which he promised to apply on the note. Plaintiff put the note in evidence and rested. Defendants offered receipts to prove payment. To rebut this, plaintiff offered proof tending to show that these payments applied to an open account against defendants. Defendants then proposed to rebut, by showing that there was no such account made or existing—court refused to permit it: held, that the court erred; that the burden of proof was really on defendants to prove payments under the issue, and that they were entitled to close the proofs; at least, to rebut new matter set up by plaintiff. Lisman v. Early, 15 Cal. 200.

189. Where in a suit for a mining claim, plaintiff in his complaint states the particular facts constituting his title, and on that title seeks a recovery, and the answer denies such title, plaintiff must prove his title as averred, at least, in substance, and he cannot, against defendant's objection, recover on another and different title. Eagan v. Delaney, 16 Cal. 87.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. A party making a motion for a nonsuit on one ground, impliedly waives all others, and cannot avail himself of a different position on appeal from that assumed in the court below. Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 116; Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 222.

2. Where a written stipulation is filed by the parties in the court below to govern the proceedings there, but has not been brought to the notice of the court for its adjudication, the appellate court will not regard it. Clark v. Forshay, 3 Cal. 291.

3. If the appellant has been injured by a disregard of the stipulation, his remedy must first be sought in the court in which it is filed, or in some court of original jurisdiction. Ib.

4. The supreme court will not decide questions not directly involved in the case and unnecessary to a judgment of affirmance or reversal by that court. West v. Smith, 5 Cal. 96.

5. The statute requires that all criminal cases should be disposed of on appeal, without regard to technicalities. People v. Lockwood, 6 Cal. 206; People v. Moore,

In general.—Judgment on an Appeal.

8 Cal. 93; People v. Ah Fong, 12 Cal. 368.

6. A judgment in insolvency, if not reversed on appeal for an irregularity, is conclusive between the parties. Kohlman v. Wright, 6 Cal. 231.

7. An appearance in the supreme court on a former appeal did not absolve the defendant from the necessity of answering a complaint, or from the consequences of his neglect to do so. Grewell v. Henderson, 7 Cal. 292.

8. Hereafter the rule is established, that rehearings will not be granted with the same indulgence as formerly. Andrews v. Mokelumne Hill Co., 7 Cal. 334.

9. A judgment or order may be reversed as prescribed by the code, but not otherwise. If, therefore, an appeal be given by that title in a particular case, the judgment or order can only be reviewed in the manner therein prescribed. Haight v. Gay, 8 Cal. 300.

10. A party who appears and contests a motion in the court below cannot object on appeal that he had no notice of the motion. Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 677.

11. Questions of discretion in the judge below will not be reviewed on appeal, except in cases of gross abuse, to the injury of the party. Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

12. An appeal from an order refusing to grant an injunction, upon preliminary notice, or from an order dissolving an injunction, does not create an injunction or prolong the restraining order in the former case, nor revive it in the latter, pending the appeal. Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 109.

13. An appeal does not revive an injunction once dissolved. Ib. 110.

14. An appeal cannot operate to create an injunction under any circumstances. Ib.

15. On appeal, a judgment by default will be reversed, unless the record show service on the defendant, or appearance, though possibly a judgment so obtained could not be impeached collaterally. Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 68.

16. An enlarged discretion is given to the lower courts in the conduct and management of the public business; and with this discretion an appellate tribunal cannot interfere, unless it affirmatively appear that injustice has been done. Broadus v. Nelson, 16 Cal. 81.

17. If a judgment be not void, but merely irregular, because of the defects named, and the defects can be reached by motion before judgment, or on appeal, then the complaint here, to enjoin the enforcement of the judgment, should aver that plaintiff has paid the claim for the recovery of which the action was brought, or that he has a valid defense to the same. Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 202.

II. JUDGMENT ON AN APPEAL.

18. The supreme court, on reversing the judgment, may render such judgment as the court below should have done. Gahan v. Neville, 2 Cal. 81; Bidleman v. Kewen, 2 Cal. 250.

19. Where a jury rendered a verdict which did not carry costs "and costs of suit," the appellate court reversed that part of the judgment which gave costs, and directed the lower court so to modify the judgment. Shay v. Tuolumne Water Co., 6 Cal. 286.

20. When a case has been once taken to an appellate court, and its judgment obtained on the points of law involved, such judgment, however erroneous, becomes the law of the case, and cannot, on a second appeal, be altered or changed. Dewey v. Gray, 2 Cal. 377; Clary v. Hoagland, 6 Cal. 687; Gunter v. Laffan, 7 Cal. 592; California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 592; Cahoon v. Levy, 10 Cal. 216; Davidson v. Dallas, 15 Cal. 82.

21. At common law, the appellate court either affirms or reverses the judgment upon the record before it, and the opinion which is rendered is advisory to the inferior court, and after the reversal of an erroneous judgment, the parties in the court have the same rights that they originally had. Stearns v. Aguirre, 7 Cal. 448.

22. After the plaintiff had appealed upon a statement agreed upon as containing the facts and evidence of his case, and a judgment has been pronounced against him, going to the whole merits of the controversy, it would be exceedingly improper to allow him an opportunity to alter or change the facts upon a second trial. Gunter v. Laffan, 7 Cal. 592.

23. It would only be where there was undoubted error that the appellate court could review and correct a former decision. Osborn v. Hendrickson, 8 Cal. 32.

24. After reversal of an erroneous judgment, the parties in the court below have the same rights which they originally had. Phelan v. Supervisors of San Francisco, 9 Cal. 16.

25. Where a final judgment on demurrer to the complaint sustaining the demurrer is reversed on appeal, the plaintiff has the right to amend on application to the court below. Ib.

26. The supreme court will reverse the judgment of the court below where the facts found by the court are not sufficient to support the judgment. Davis v. Caldwell, 12 Cal. 126.

27. Where a case is appealed from the district court, to the supreme court and the supreme court reverses the judgment of the district court, and directs the entry of a final judgment, such judgment can be entered by the clerk of the district court in vacation. McMillan v. Richards, 12 Cal. 468.

28. If no motion be made in the court below to correct a clerical error disclosed by the pleadings, the error will be corrected in the supreme court at appellant's cost. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 491.

29. Where a suit is pending in the supreme court on appeal, the judgment below is suspended for all purposes, and it is not evidence upon the questions at issue, even between the parties. Woodbury v. Bowman, 13 Cal. 634.

30. Where a judgment is against two, one of whom only appeals, and the appeal is dismissed with twenty per cent. damages, the damages, with the costs, do not become part of the original judgment, and the redemptioner is not bound to pay them when he redeems from a sale under a judgment. McMillan v. Vischer, 14 Cal. 241.

31. After a judgment has been rendered on appeal, a material modification of such judgment should not be made upon a petition for rehearing; the rehearing should first be granted. Clark v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 638.

32. The provision of the code authorizing the supreme court, on the reversal or modification of the judgment or order below, to make restitution of the property and rights lost by the erroneous judgment or order, does not exclude the lower court from exercising the same power. Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 677.

33. Where judgment is entered against "the defendants," some of whom were not sued, though their names appeared as defendants by a mistake of the clerk in entitling the cause, the error may be corrected in the supreme court or the court below, on motion. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11.

34. In theory, issue is joined in the supreme court upon the assignment of errors made upon the record. The case may be regarded as a new and distinct action. Upon the issue thus made the judgment of the court must rest, and that judgment affirms the law on the matter presented for adjudication, and fixes the rights of the parties under the law. Davidson v. Dallas, 15 Cal. 83.

35. Where the judgment below is reversed and the cause remanded for new trial, it must be retried in pursuance of the principles of law declared in the opinion of the appellate court. The directions of the opinion become a portion of the judgment. Ib. 84.

36. The supreme court will not reverse the judgment of the court below to afford the plaintiff an opportunity to amend his complaint, he not having offered to amend below—there being no error in the record. Gibbons v. Scott, 15 Cal. 286.

See JUDGMENT.

III. THE RIGHT TO AN APPEAL.

37. Where an order granting a new trial was made in the court below upon the payment of costs, and the defendants paid the costs, and the plaintiff then appealed from the order, and a motion was made to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the acceptance of the costs by the plaintiff's attorney was a waiver of the right to appeal: held, that the acceptance of the costs was not a waiver of the right to appeal, and the motion was accordingly denied. Tyson v. Wells, 1 Cal. 378.

38. An appeal cannot be prosecuted by a stranger to the record—he must resort to his remedy at law. Montgomery v. Leavenworth, 2 Cal. 57; Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 315.

39. Where parties stipulate not to appeal, a court of equity will interfere nevertheless to correct fraud, or mistake appearing on the face of an award. Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 78.

40. Where an appeal is taken and perfected after the death of the appellant: held, that there was no authority to prosecute the appeal, but that all proceedings should have been stayed until the executor or the administrator could be suggested as a party. Sanchez v. Roach, 5 Cal. 248.

41. The fact that a bill of exceptions was not signed more than ten days after the trial, cannot defeat a party's right to appeal. People v. Martin, 6 Cal. 478; People v. Woppner, 14 Cal. 437; People v. Lee, 14 Cal. 511.

42. In an action against the husband alone, the homestead right cannot be determined; the wife also must be before the court, and the husband has not even the right of appeal in such a case, as the judgment could not affect the homestead. Kraemer v. Revalk, 8 Cal. 75.

43. Where an appeal is given by the statute, that remedy is exclusive, and must be pursued, and a writ of error will only lie in cases where no appeal is given by the act. Haight v. Gay, 8 Cal. 300.

44. There can be no doubt of the right of a party to appeal, either from a judgment of an order, or from both at the same time. Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 537.

45. Appeals can be taken only from the judgments of a court; where there is no judgment of any tribunal having jurisdiction, there can be no appeal. Wicks v. Ludwig, 9 Cal. 175.

46. A party cannot be permitted to prosecute two separate and distinct remedies, in the supreme court, for a review of the same question at the same time. Kirk v. Reynolds, 12 Cal. 99.

47. J. filed his bill in the district court against T., alleging a partnership between them, and praying for an account. J. then filed a petition in the same court, setting forth the bill, and that H. B. had obtained judgment against T., and issued execution upon the partnership property, praying that H. B. be made a party, and for an injunction, which was granted: held, that on an appeal of the case, it does not lie in the mouth of J. and T. to say that H. B. is not a party to the suit and has no right to appeal. Jones v. Thompson, 12 Cal. 197.

48. In criminal cases the prisoner is not bound to except to an improper ruling, but may appeal from any ruling of the court which denies him a statutory privilege. People v. Ah Fong, 12 Cal. 348.

IV. EXAMINATION OF ERRORS ON APPEAL.

49. It has been the practice, on appeal, to examine the case only upon the errors assigned by the appellant, and not to look into the exceptions taken by respondent. Jackson v. Feather River & Gibsonville W. Co., 14 Cal. 21; Seaward v. Malotte, 15 Cal. 307.

50. Where the respondent takes no appeal, at least where he files no transcript and assigns no errors, judgment will not be reversed at his instance. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 20.

51. A demurrer overruled by consent cannot be considered in the supreme court. Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 572.

V. ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

1. Requisites of the Record.

52. Where, on appeal, the record contained none of the proceedings of the court below, except the pleadings and judgments, and these were sufficient; no portion of the evidence being returned, the appellate court presumed that the proceedings were regular, and that sufficient of the evidence was adduced at the trial to warrant the judgment. Gonzales v. Huntley, 1 Cal. 32; Palmer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 42; Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 115; Kilburn v. Ritchie, 2 Cal. 148.

53. Where it appears on the face of the judgment record itself, that there was no trial before a jury, and no evidence given to the court, it will not be presumed on appeal that any evidence was adduced in the case, but the court will presume that the cause was heard on the pleadings alone. Belt v. Davis, 1 Cal. 137.

54. The appellate court will not review irregularities, where no objection was made to them in the court below, and especially when the court cannot see that they affected in the slightest degree the administration of substantial justice. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 382; People v. Baker, 1 Cal. 405.

55. Where a written or printed instrument, as for instance, a card published in a newspaper, is proposed to be given in evidence, and is rejected by the court, such evidence or the substance of it must be returned with the record, or the appellate court will not review the decision of the court below. Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 389.

56. The appellate court will not review the rulings of the court below, unless presented in proper form in a statement or bill of exceptions. The testimony is taken down by the clerk, but he is not authorized to say what decisions the court did or did not make. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 464; Pierce v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 471.

57. Unless the record shows that the interest of the witness was sufficient under our statute to disqualify him, the appellate court will deem the parties entitled to the benefit of his testimony. Johnson v. Carry, 2 Cal. 36.

58. Where an action in the district court was founded on a judgment in the court of first instance, and an appeal was taken from the judgment of the district court, the record of the court of first instance was brought up on certiorari, and the judgment examined in that form, and not as a part of the bill of exceptions. Parsons v. Davis, 3 Cal. 425.

59. The notice and affidavits filed on an application to retax costs were not introduced in the bill of exceptions or statement: held, that the judgment must be affirmed, upon the presumption that the court below decided properly upon all the evidence before it. Gates v. Buckingham, 4 Cal. 286.

60. Every intendment must be on appeal in favor of the decision of the court below, and we have repeatedly held, upon unquestionable authority, that we would not reverse a cause upon error of law, unless it clearly appeared that the party was injured by the error. Johnson v. Sepulveda, 5 Cal. 151; Ford v. Holton, 5 Cal. 321.

61. An affidavit of one of the attorneys in a cause, showing the objections made to the selection of a jury, although embodied in the transcript, is no part of the record, and therefore cannot be noticed. Magee v. Mokelumne Hill C. and M. Co., 5 Cal. 259.

62. A judgment by default will be reversed on appeal, where the record shows that the defendant has not been legally served with process. Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 449.

63. If affidavits offered to show the incompetency of a juror are not embodied in a bill of exceptions, so as to show that the court below passed upon them, the appellate court is precluded from examining them. People v. Stonecifer, 6 Cal. 411; People v. Honshell, 10 Cal. 86.

64. Objections to the introduction of evidence must be taken on the trial below, and unless so taken, cannot be assigned as error on appeal. Pearson v. Snodgrass, 5 Cal. 479; Covillaud v. Tanner, 7 Cal. 39; Potter v. Carney, 8 Cal. 574.

65. The fact of the appellants having objected in the court below to the introduction of evidence of location of a school land warrant, on the ground that it was not recorded in the proper office, is not sufficient to justify the appellate court in presuming that such was the case, when the statement on appeal contains no evidence of the fact. Nims v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 112.

66. If a party complains of error, and seeks a reversal, it is due to the court that he should point out particularly wherein the error consists; the court cannot be expected to act in the double capacity of counsel and judges. Broun v. Tolles, 7 Cal. 399.

67. It is impossible for us to determine causes upon the record alone, without the assistance of counsel, and that no brief at all is worse than one too voluminous. Brown v. Tolles, 7 Cal. 400; Mokelumne Hill C. and M. Co. v. Woodbury, 10 Cal. 187.

68. Chancery cases come before the supreme court upon the pleadings, testimony, and decree, and the court must look to the whole record, and see if there is any error in the final decree. Still v. Saunders, 8 Cal. 286; Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 85.

69. In the absence of a proper statement, the case must be decided on the judgment roll alone, which being regular on its face, the judgment should be affirmed. People v. Quincy, 8 Cal. 90; Macomber v. Chamberlain, 8 Cal. 323; Adams v. City of Oakland, 8 Cal. 510; Caney v. Silverthorn, 9 Cal. 68; Escolle v. Merle, 9 Cal. 95; Dickenson v. Van Horn, 9 Cal. 211; Karth v. Orth, 10 Cal. 193; People v. Goldbury, 10 Cal. 313; People v. Comedo, 11 Cal. 70; Sayre v. Smith, 11 Cal. 29; American River W. and M. Co. v. Bear River W. and M. Co., 11 Cal. 340; Mc Gill v. Rainaldi, 11 Cal. 391; Neuberg v. Hewson, 12 Cal. 280.

70. Instruments are sometimes admissible for one purpose and inadmissible for another; and where objected to, the grounds of the objection should be stated, and in preparing the record for appeal, so much of the evidence should be incorporated as may be necessary to indicate the pertinency and materiality of the objections taken, otherwise they cannot be regarded. Provost v. Piper, 9 Cal. 553.

71. Where parties by an express stipulation agree "that judgment be rendered upon the law and fact so found," they are not precluded from going behind the stipulation and insisting on appeal upon any assignments of error previously made. Cahoon v. Levy, 10 Cal. 216; Glitzback v. Foster, 11 Cal. 37.

72. By an assignment of errors, as the term is used in this court, is meant a specification of the errors upon which the appellant will rely, with such fullness as to give aid to the court in the examination of the transcript. Squires v. Firman, 10 Cal. 298.

73. Where the findings support the judgment, and the record discloses no exceptions to the admission of testimony, or to any ruling of the court, the judgment below will be affirmed. Hutchinson v. Ryan, 11 Cal. 142.

74. No errors can be assigned which this court will notice, on an instrument not embodied in the statement on appeal, or a bill of exceptions. Moore v. Semple, 11 Cal. 361; Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 116.

75. Instead of copying into a statement for a new trial or appeal, deeds and transcripts of record, when no point is made on the construction of the language, a brief statement of the instrument answers every purpose. Knowles v. Inches, 12 Cal. 214.

76. Before reversing the judgment of the court below, on the ground that a certain paper was admitted in evidence, which was irrelevant, the supreme court will require the irrelevancy clearly to appear. Mc Garrity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 430.

77. Errors which are immaterial, and do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, are unavailing on appeal, even when the subject of exception; much less so when they are permitted without objection. Paige v. O'Neil, 12 Cal. 493.

78. Where there are no grounds or reasons stated on motions of nonsuit and new trial, and no exceptions taken, errors cannot be assigned on appeal. Holverstot v. Bugby, 13 Cal. 44.

79. The fact that the record on appeal is erroneous in stating that the parties waived a jury, cannot be shown by an affidavit of the judge who tried the cause. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 115.

80. The supreme court will not review questions of fact in cases of fraud, where the result depends upon various considerations of greater or less force, to be found in the conduct, dealings, and relations of the parties, and various circumstances tending with more or less directness, to prove or repel the ascription of fraud. Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 441.

81. An appellant cannot complain of error, when the record shows it was not to his prejudice. Thompson v. Lyon, 14 Cal. 42.

82. Where the error of a decree is apparent by reference to the bill and decree, the party aggrieved may assign the error on appeal, though no demurrer be interposed. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 143.

83. Two defendants filed a joint plea of the statute of limitations, and the plea being held bad as to one defendant, the court on the trial permitted the other defendant to file a separate plea of the statute: held, that this was no such gross abuse of discretion as to enable the supreme court to revise it. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 254.

84. It is a very simple matter for the party appealing to allege, either at the commencement or the conclusion of his statement, that on appeal he will rely upon certain errors committed by the court. Barrett v. Tewksbury, 15 Cal. 353; Dobbins v. Dollarhide, 15 Cal. 375.

85. Although it does not appear from the record on appeal that a demurrer to the complaint was formally disposed of, yet if it does appear in the statement that one of the errors relied on is "the ruling of the court on the demurrer, and that the same should have been sustained;" and if the appellant went to trial without insisting on a disposition of the demurrer, he cannot object in the supreme court that the demurrer was not formally disposed of. De Leon v. Higuera, 15 Cal. 494.

86. Where the record shows simply a statement signed by the district judge, without any certificate preceding as to the correctness of the statement, and it does not purport to be a statement on motion for new trial, and no order appears disposing of the motion for new trial: held, that there is no statement on motion for new trial or on appeal. And the grounds of the motion for new trial not being filed within the time required by law, the appeal is from the judgment alone. Mc Cartney v. Fitz Henry, 16 Cal. 185.

2. When a new Trial should be sought.

87. An appeal may be taken from a judgment of the district court without moving for a new trial. Innis v. Steamer Senator, 1 Cal. 459.

88. The appellate court will decline to review the facts of a case, unless an assignment of errors shows that the court below refused an application for a new trial, made on the ground that the verdict was contrary to evidence, and that only as an appeal from the refusal to grant a new trial. Smith v. Phelps, 2 Cal. 121; Griswold v. Sharpe, 2 Cal. 23; Brown v. Graves, 2 Cal. 119; Ingraham v. Gildermeester, 2 Cal. 484; Whitman v. Sutter, 3 Cal. 179; Brown v. Tolles, 7 Cal. 399; Garwood v. Simpson, 8 Cal. 108; Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 537; Liening v. Gould, 13 Cal. 599; Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 380.

89. A party should appeal, if aggrieved, from an order granting a new trial during the time allowed by the statute, and cannot, after taking his chances upon a second trial, rely on this fact as error. Brown v. Tolles, 7 Cal. 399.

90. Errors in law, occurring in the court below, will be reviewed in the supreme court, although a new trial was not asked. Brown v. Tolles, 7 Cal. 399; Rice v. Gashirie, 13 Cal. 54.

91. A notice for motion for a new trial, unaccompanied by the affidavit required by statute, will not entitle the statement of the grounds of the motion to be considered on appeal. Adams v. City of Oakland, 8 Cal. 510.

92. Where the statement embodied in the record is filed on a motion for a new trial, the appellate court will only examine the action of the court below in denying the motion, nor will it allow objections to an order entered in the court below by consent of parties. Meerholz v. Sessions, 9 Cal. 277; Brotherton v. Hart, 11 Cal. 405.

93. Where the affidavits used in support of a motion for a new trial are not set forth in the record on appeal, the party moving is deprived of all ground of error based on the affidavits. Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 362.

94. Where the evidence is conflicting, the granting or refusing a new trial rests in the discretion of the court below, and this court will not interfere, whether the new trial be granted or refused. Weddle v. Stark, 10 Cal. 302.

95. If any errors intervened on the trial of a cause, an order of the court below, granting a new trial, ought not to be disturbed. Hastings v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 10 Cal. 341.

96. The supreme court will not reverse an order of the court below, in granting a new trial, where there has been no abuse of the discretion of the court in granting such order. Hanson v. Bernhisel, 11 Cal. 340.

97. The granting a nonsuit on the facts is a question of law, and if the proper exception be taken, may be reviewed on appeal without motion for a new trial. Cravens v. Dewey, 13 Cal. 42.

98. A stipulation to the effect that a statement may "be used on a motion for a new trial in this cause, and also on appeal to the supreme court," includes an appeal from the judgment, as well as an appeal from the decisions of the motion for new trial. Hastings v. Halleck, 13 Cal. 207.

99. Where the motion for a new trial, though made, does not appear to have been acted on, the appellate court will not consider the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. Myers v. Casey, 14 Cal. 543.

100. A refusal to grant a new trial is no ground of error, particularly in an equity case where there may have been no necessity for a new trial, as upon application to the court, upon the pleadings and facts before it, the proper decree might have been rendered, notwithstanding the verdict, or the error corrected by appeal. Phelan v. Ruiz, 15 Cal. 90.

101. Refusal to grant a new trial will not be reviewed on appeal, unless such refusal was an abuse of the discretion of the court below. Burnett v. Whitesides, 15 Cal. 36; Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 504.

102. A party cannot appeal from an order overruling a motion for a new trial, when he fails to prosecute his motion before the district court, especially when the case involved complicated facts, and was not tried by the judge by whom the alleged errors were committed. Mahoney v. Wilson, 15 Cal. 43; Frank v. Doane, 15 Cal. 303; Green v. Doane, 15 Cal. 304.

103. Where a motion for new trial is denied, and the record contains the statement used on such motion, but no statement on appeal from the judgment, this court can only examine the action of the court below in denying the motion—the judgment cannot be reviewed, except through the order made upon the motion, and from this order, no appeal having been taken, the case stands on the judgment roll. Burdge v. Gold Hill and Bear River W. Co., 15 Cal. 198.

104. Motion for new trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and the supreme court can interfere only in case of plain abuse of such discretion. Peters v. Foss, 16 Cal. 358.

See NEW TRIAL.

3. When the Verdict may be reviewed.

105. Where the jury has been waived by the parties and the court finds the facts, the appellate court will not review them, and they are conclusive. Wheeler v. Hays, 3 Cal. 286.

106. The appellate court must infer in favor of the verdict of the court below, unless error is clearly manifest. Allen v. Phelps, 4 Cal. 259.

107. The verdict of a jury, or the finding of a court sitting as a jury, will not be disturbed where there is a conflict of testimony. Adams v. Pugh, 7 Cal. 151; White v. Todd's Valley W. Co., 8 Cal. 444; People v. Ah Ti, 9 Cal. 17; Beckman v. McKay, 14 Cal. 253; McGarvey v. Little, 15 Cal. 31; Weaver v. Eureka Lake Co., 15 Cal. 273; Paul v. Silver, 16 Cal. 75; Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 180.

108. The supreme court will require a case of very palpable mistake or error to be made out, before it will overrule the verdict of the jury on issue of fact joined in an action for the diversion of water. Brown v. Smith, 10 Cal. 511.

109. In equity cases, submitted by the court to a jury, this court will not review the testimony, if any proof sustains the verdict and judgment. Pfeiffer v. Riehn, 13 Cal. 648.

110. There being some proof of negligence, the supreme court will not on appeal review the verdict based upon negligence. Algier v. Steamer Maria, 14 Cal. 171; Hull v. Sacramento Valley R. R. Co., 14 Cal. 389.

111. This court will not set aside the findings of the court below on conflicting proofs, especially in regard to the value of rents, or damage to property, both being of uncertain ascertainment. Paul v. Silver, 16 Cal. 75.

112. Where there is some evidence to support the verdict, and a motion for a new trial is overruled, the supreme court will not interfere. Baxter v. McKinlay, 16 Cal. 77.

113. The supreme court will consider only errors of law, to which exceptions have been regularly taken. The findings of the court below on the facts will not be reviewed. McCartney v. Fitz Henry, 16 Cal. 185.

See VERDICT.

4. When an erroneous Instruction may be reviewed.

114. The charge to the jury should be given with reference to the testimony adduced on the trial, and where the charge is returned on appeal, but no portion of the testimony, the appellate court will not undertake to determine the nature of the charge. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 385.

115. An erroneous instruction may be assigned as error if there is any evidence rendering it pertinent to the issue. Buzzell v. Bennett, 2 Cal. 102.

116. Errors assigned upon instructions given by the court below will not be considered by this court, unless there is an authenticated statement of the evidence to show the pertinency or relevancy of such instructions. Nelson v. Mitchell, 10 Cal. 93.

117. For error in refusing to give an instruction to the jury, the supreme court will not undertake to determine how far the party excepting was prejudiced, but will reverse the judgment. Busenius v. Coffee, 14 Cal. 93.

118. Where instructions to the jury are not excepted to at the time they are given or refused, and a motion for new trial is made for error in giving or refusing such instructions, they cannot be considered on appeal from the order denying the motion. Collier v. Corbett, 15 Cal. 186.

119. In criminal cases, if the instructions to the jury are erroneous under any and every state of facts, the supreme court will review them, even though there be no statement of facts—because it necessarily appears that the court erred, to the prejudice of defendant. People v. Levison, 16 Cal. 100.

120. But where the instruction may be correct under any state of facts, then the supreme court presumes in favor of the judgment below, and will not reverse it when there is no statement of facts or bill of exceptions—because the appellant must show affirmative error. Ib.

121. A refusal to give an instruction cannot be urged as error for the first time on a petition for a rehearing on appeal. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 247.

See INSTRUCTIONS.

5. Questions raised on Appeal for the first time.

122. A party cannot argue an objection to the sufficiency of the answer in the supreme court for the first time, the objection being different from that which he raised in the court below. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 196.

123. Errors cannot be relied upon in an appellate court which are not taken advantage of and raised at the trial. Morgan v. Hugg, 5 Cal. 410.

124. An error that there was an excess in the judgment by the calculation of interest and costs cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Guy v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 417.

125. Objections to the form of a complaint cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Sutter v. Cox, 6 Cal. 415.

126. The objection to the form of the verdict should have been made on a motion for a new trial, and not on appeal for the first time. Hartman v. Burlingame, 9 Cal. 564.

127. Where parties went to trial upon the issues made, it was afterwards too late to object for the first time on appeal that the proper mode of proceeding was not adopted by intervenors in the action. McKenty v. Gladwin, 10 Cal. 228.

128. When the defects in a complaint are of such a serious character as to show that plaintiff could not at any time obtain any judgment upon the cause of action alleged, then the objection may be made for the first time in the supreme court. Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 561.

129. It would require clear proof that the purposes of the water for the saw mill which had been appropriated were terminated, to hold that the title to the water was abandoned, and this question cannot be first raised on appeal. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 13 Cal. 236.

130. The question of limitation cannot be raised on appeal, unless presented in some form on the trial below, even though it be pleaded. Ib. 238.

131. Where a bill in equity shows on its face that plaintiff is not entitled to relief, the defect may be taken advantage of in the appellate court, even though no demurrer be filed. White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 525.

132. An objection that an account presented to the supervisors of a county was not “authenticated” as required by statute cannot be taken on appeal for the first time. Randall v. Yuba County, 14 Cal. 222.

133. An objection that the court below directed the jury to find specially as to a particular fact, comes too late if made on appeal for the first time, it not appearing that the party objecting was injured by the direction. People v. Chu Quong, 15 Cal. 333.

134. An objection that the finding is qualified by the words "as to plaintiff, Parke," and that the facts showing this special relation to him ought to have been found, should have been taken below, and cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Parke v. Hind, 14 Cal. 418.

135. The objection to a complaint in forcible entry and detainer, that it does not aver "actual" possession, only "possession" being used, was a mere defect in pleading, which should have been taken advantage of below, where, if the objection be good, the complaint could have been amended; but it cannot be urged in the supreme court for the first time. Minturn v. Burr, 16 Cal. 110.

136. An objection that one of the counts in a complaint is an equitable cause of action, and should not be tried by a jury, must be taken at the time, and cannot be urged on appeal if not so taken. Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 177.

137. It cannot be assigned for error in the supreme court, that the court below refused a nonsuit because of no demand made before suit, unless that ground of nonsuit was taken below. Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 180.

138. If exceptions to the rulings below be not taken at the time, they cannot be urged on appeal. Mc Cartney v. Fitz Henry, 16 Cal. 186.

139. In suit by a vendee for specific performance of a contract of sale, the averment of tender of payment was in general terms—as that the tender had been repeatedly made, and that the plaintiff has been at all times, and still is, ready and willing to pay: held, that the tender should have been stated with greater particularity as to time, but that the objection, in this respect, cannot be taken for the first time in the supreme court. Duff v. Fisher, 16 Cal. 382.

140. Objections to evidence will not be noticed in the supreme court, unless taken in the court below in the first instance, if they be of a character which might there have been obviated by the production of other evidence, or the release of the interest of witnesses, or an amendment to the pleadings, or in any other way. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 555.

141. Where objections to evidence, though not made in the court below, could not be, under any circumstances, there obviated, such objections may be taken for the first time in the supreme court—as for example, objections to the substantive cause of action, not to its technical form of statement, and to the jurisdiction of the court below, may be presented in the supreme court for the first time, or may be considered by the court, whether its attention be directed to them or not. Ib.

 VI. PROCEEDINGS ON APPEAL AS TO JURISDICTION.

1. Of the Supreme Court of the United States.

142. The constitution of the United States gives no authority to the supreme court of the United States to exercise appellate jurisdiction over the State courts, nor can such authority be derived by implication or construction.* Johnson v. Gordon, 4 Cal. 368.

143. Neither a writ of error or appeal lies to take a case from a State court to the supreme court of the United States. Ib. 274.

144. In holding the judiciary act of 1789 to be constitutional, we by no means recognize an unlimited right of appeal from the decisions of this court to the supreme court of the United States. Ferris v. Coover, 11 Cal. 179.

2. Of the Court of a United States Commissioner.

145. The American consular court of China is not the highest judicial tribunal of the jurisdiction. An appeal lies from the consul to the United States commissioner. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 286.

*Since the rendition of this opinion, the act of April 9th, 1855, provided for writs of error in certain cases from the supreme court of the state to the supreme court of the United States.

Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the State.

3. Of the Supreme Court of the State.

146. The supreme court is strictly a court of appellate jurisdiction, but it may exercise its appellate jurisdiction by means of the process of mandamus; so also it seems by means of the writs of habeas corpus, certiorari, supersedeas, prohibition. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 144; White v. Lighthall, 1 Cal. 348; Adams v. Town, 3 Cal. 248.

147. The supreme court is strictly an appellate court, having no original jurisdiction, and its appellate jurisdiction extends only to those cases in which the legislature authorizes it to entertain appeals. No power was conferred upon the supreme court to review judgments of the county courts* on appeal. White v. Lighthall, 1 Cal. 347; Adams v. Town, 3 Cal. 248.

148. Though the plaintiff recover less than $200, the defendant is entitled to an appeal if the costs, added to the judgment, exceed $200. Gordon v. Ross, 2 Cal. 157; overruled in Dumpey v. Guindon, 13 Cal. 30.

149. In equity, the supreme court, on an appeal, has full power and jurisdiction for the purposes of equity to correct the errors of the court below, in whatever shape or by whatever party the appeal is taken up. Grayson v. Guild, 4 Cal. 125.

150. The supreme court has no appellate jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanor or crimes of a less degree than felony, and that no jurisdiction can be conferred by the statute in these cases. People v. Aplegate, 5 Cal. 296; People v. Shear, 7 Cal. 140; People v. Vick, 7 Cal. 166; People v. Cornell, 16 Cal. 188.

151. Where the constitution gave the supreme court appellate jurisdiction, but the statute failed to provide the manner of appeal, a writ of error would lie to take the case up. Adams v. Town, 3 Cal. 248; Middleton v. Gould, 5 Cal. 190.

152. It is the right and duty of the supreme court on habeas corpus to review the decisions of inferior courts in cases of contempts. Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 182; Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 111, overruling Ex parte Cohen, 5 Cal. 495.

153. The supreme court has the power under its rules to reinstate cases which had been dismissed at a previous term. Haight v. Gay, 8 Cal. 300.

154. The constitution of this State confers upon the supreme court appellate power in all cases where the amount in controversy exceeds two hundred dollars, and this appellate power, having been conferred by the constitution, cannot be taken away or impaired by act of the legislature. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 314.

155. There are but two appellate tribunals under the constitution—the county and supreme courts—and neither of these courts has the right to take original jurisdiction of any case they can hear upon appeal. People v. Fowler, 9 Cal. 89.

156. The supreme court possesses appellate power in all cases; provided, that when the subject of litigation is capable of pecuniary computation, the matter in dispute must exceed in value or amount two hundred dollars, unless a question of the legality of a tax, toll, impost or municipal fine is drawn in question. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 253.

157. The supreme court will not entertain jurisdiction in cases where the record fails to show that judgment and costs amount to over two hundred dollars. Doyle v. Seawell, 12 Cal. 280.

158. The supreme court has jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from the judgment of a county court, on questions of fraud, made on the petition of an insolvent for a discharge from his debts. Fisk v. His Creditors, 12 Cal. 281.

159. Plaintiffs obtained a preliminary injunction, restraining defendants from obstructing a road leading to plaintiffs' mine. Upon the answer being filed, the injunction was dissolved. Plaintiffs being about to appeal from the order dissolving the injunction, the judge thereupon made an order that upon such appeal being perfected by filing a bond, etc., as required by him, the order granting the injunction should be revived, and continue in force. Plaintiffs perfect the appeal, and apply to the supreme court for an injunction, pending the appeal, on the ground that defendants are disregarding said reviving order, and obstructing to the ruin of plaintiffs: held, that the application must be denied, if this court had the power to grant it; that the remedy of plaintiffs under the reviving order is ample to protect them until the appeal can be heard, or the injunction be dissolved by some competent authority. Eldridge v. Wright, 15 Cal. 89.

160. The supreme court has no power to grant an injunction pending an appeal. Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 114.

161. The supreme court has no jurisdiction on appeal of a motion to offset in part a judgment for less than two hundred dollars, against another judgment of six hundred dollars. Crandall v. Blen, 15 Cal. 408.

162. On an indictment for an assault with intent to commit murder, defendant plead guilty to an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit bodily injury, and upon this plea, was adjudged to pay a fine of $1,200, or be imprisoned in the county jail. Defendant appeals: held, that the supreme court has no jurisdiction of the appeal, the offense for which defendant was punished being a misdemeanor only, and not a felony. People v. Cornell, 16 Cal. 188.

163. Where, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, the judgment is for the possession of the premises, and ninety-four dollars, treble damages, besides costs—the title not being involved—query, whether the supreme court has jurisdiction of an appeal from the county court? Paul v. Silver, 16 Cal. 76.

See SUPREME COURT.

4. Of the District Court.

164. The act of March 18th, 1850, grants an appeal to the district court from the court of sessions in the matter of license to establish a ferry, but does not provide for an appeal from the judgment of the district court; no appeal can then be taken, and unless the party can bring himself within the constitutional provisions of appeals, the judgment of the district court is final and conclusive.* Webb v. Hanson, 3 Cal. 68, 105.

165. The district court has no appellate jurisdiction under our constitution. People v. Peralta, 3 Cal. 379; Caulfield v. Hudson, 3 Cal. 389; Hernandes v. Simon, 3 Cal. 464; Gray v. Schupp, 4 Cal. 185; Reed v. McCormick, 4 Cal. 342; Townsend v. Brooks, 5 Cal. 52; Zander v. Coe, 5 Cal. 230; People v. Fowler, 9 Cal. 86.

166. So much of the act of 1855 as provides for the transfer to the district court of issues of fact already decided in the probate court, is unconstitutional and void. As the power to try de novo issues which have been tried and decided necessarily includes the power to reverse or modify such decisions, the effect of the act would be to confer appellate jurisdiction, which the district court cannot exercise. Deck's Estate v. Gherke, 6 Cal. 669.

See DISTRICT COURT.

5. Of the County Court.

167. The county court tries causes on appeal de novo, as prescribed by the statute; still, such trial is an exercise of appellate, and not of original jurisdiction. Townsend v. Brooks, 5 Cal. 53.

168. An appeal to the county court is to be tried de novo, and the court should hear the merits of the case, and not dismiss the action because the parties defendants had not notice of trial in the justice's court. Coyle v. Baldwin, 5 Cal. 75.

169. If the county court has no jurisdiction in cases on appeal, where an appeal bond is not given, as required by the statute, the objection should be made in the court below, and not on appeal from the county court. Taylor v. Randall, 5 Cal. 79.

170. On appeal from a justice's court to the county court, on questions of law alone, if a new trial be ordered, it should take place in the county court. People v. Freelon, 8 Cal. 517.

171. The county court has the sole appellate jurisdiction in all cases, civil and criminal, arising in justices' courts, subject to such restriction as the legislature may impose, by making the decisions of the justices final, in such cases as may be determined by law. People v. Fowler, 9 Cal. 86.

172. A defendant, who has been properly served with process issued out of a justice's court, who allows judgment to be taken against him, by default, admits the facts alleged in the complaint, and no appeal will lie from such judgment in reference to such facts—there being no issue of fact. People v. County Court of El Dorado County, 10 Cal. 19; Funkenstein v. Elgutter, 11 Cal. 328.

173. Where the defendant appeals on questions of law and fact to the county court, and has admitted all the facts by the default, he is not entitled to a trial de novo upon the facts, nor upon the law, unless there is a statement filed in conformity with the statute. People v. County Court of El Dorado County, 10 Cal. 20.

174. In all cases of appeal, the issue of fact must be made in the court of original jurisdiction. The county court can only retry the issue tried in the court below. This is what is meant by a trial anew in the county court, under the code. Ib.

175. The failure of a justice of the peace to state in his docket that the summons was returned “served,” will not vitiate the judgment on appeal. Denmark v. Liening, 10 Cal. 94.

176. A refusal, by the county court, on appeal from a justice’s, to permit an amendment of a complaint, is a matter of discretion with which the supreme court will not interfere, there being no affidavit of the materiality or importance of the amendment. Canfield v. Bates, 13 Cal. 608.

177. On appeal from a justice’s court, in forcible entry and detainer, the execution of an appeal bond within ten days is not a condition to the jurisdiction of the county court. Rabe v. Hamilton, 15 Cal. 32.

6. Of the Court of Sessions.

178. The court of sessions has no appellate jurisdiction in either civil or criminal cases. Its jurisdiction is original, not appellate. In all cases where an appeal lies from a justice’s court, it must be taken to the county court. People v. Fowler, 9 Cal. 87.

VII. WHEN AN APPEAL WILL LIE.

179. An appeal lies to the supreme court from any judgment, order, or determination of the court of first instance, taken before the passage of the statute of February 28th, 1850, and from any judgment, order, or determination made or rendered after the passage of said act. Payne v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 1 Cal. 35.

180. An appeal will lie from a judgment by default; for therein may exist error, as well as in a judgment rendered upon issue joined in the pleadings and trial by jury, which error may be corrected on appeal. Stevens v. Ross, 1 Cal. 97.

181. District courts cannot entertain jurisdiction of cases by certiorari, where the error complained of might be corrected by an appeal to the county court. Gray v. Schupp, 4 Cal. 185.

182. An appeal lies from the trial of an issue of fact in the probate court, sent to the district court, and from its equitable character, the facts are subject to review above. Keller v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 434.

183. The probate judge, in his discretion, must decide what issues of fact are to be sent to the district court for trial, which discretion is subject to review on appeal; and in case of gross abuse will be corrected. Ib.

184. A mandamus to compel the judge to issue a certiorari, to review the proceedings of the supervisors of a county, is improper; there should be an appeal from a refusal to issue the certiorari. People v. Hester, 6 Cal. 680.

185. The objection that the judgment was rendered in vacation, can be taken advantage of upon general appeal from the judgment. Phelps v. Peabody, 7 Cal. 53.

186. If the return to the summons is defective, the defendant must appeal from the judgment; a mere irregularity of service is not sufficient to enable him to attack a judgment collaterally. Dorente v. Sullivan, 7 Cal. 280.

187. The code prescribes that any party aggrieved may appeal in cases prescribed therein; and the question who is the party aggrieved is, would he have anything if the erroneous judgment had not been given. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 315.

188. If any of the parties employed by a receiver should not feel satisfied with his account, in whole or in part, they could then make their objections, and if any one or more of them should feel aggrieved by the final order of the court, they should all appeal, and all the questions should be brought up before the appellate court at once. Ib.

189. A plaintiff cannot have a mandamus to compel the issuance of an attachment for contempt, for violating an original injunction which had been subsequently modified ex parte; he should appeal from the order modifying the injunction. Fremont v. Merced Min. Co., 9 Cal. 19.

190. It is doubtful whether an appeal would lie from the exercise of discretion by supervisors in establishing a ferry within a mile of one previously located, the statute giving them the discretion. If it does lie, it must be made direct to some superior tribunal. Waugh v. Chancey, 13 Cal. 12.

191. Where an application for certiorari shows on its face that the party had an adequate legal remedy by appeal, the writ was denied. Clary v. Hoagland, 13 Cal. 175.

192. When a decree is entered by consent of the attorney, it is no ground of error that the decree embraces land not in the complaint; and even if error, the remedy is by appeal. Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 203.

193. Plaintiff applies to the supreme court to compel the county court to render judgment for treble damages, in an action of forcible entry: held, that the application must be denied, as plaintiff has an adequate remedy by appeal, pending which, plaintiff can enforce so much of the judgment as awards restitution. The judgment can be corrected in this court, if proper, by trebling the damages. Early v. Mannix, 15 Cal. 150.

194. In suit by a stockholder against a corporation and its officers, praying for their removal, and for an account and settlement of the affairs of the corporation, the decree, after a full hearing on the merits, was in accordance with the prayer, and also appointed a receiver to take charge of the property of the corporation, until the further order of the court; collect money due or to become due it; sell certain stock, and pay the proceeds in accordance with the decree, etc.: held, that this provision in the decree does not destroy its effect as a final decree, and that an appeal lies therefrom. Neal v. Hill, 16 Cal. 148.

VIII. WHEN AN APPEAL WILL NOT LIE.

195. No appeal lies from a judgment of a district court, on an appeal* from an order of the court of sessions upon an application for a ferry license. Webb v. Hanson, 2 Cal. 134.

196. Where an informal verdict is entered by consent of plaintiff, and a judgment in form is afterwards entered thereon, the informality will not be considered on appeal. Treadwell v. Wells, 4 Cal. 263.

197. The judgments and orders of courts or judges on contempts are declared by statute to be final and conclusive, and cannot be reviewed, even on a writ of habeas corpus. Ex parte Cohen, 5 Cal. 495; overruled in Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 182, and Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 11.

198. Where a remedy is perfectly attainable in the court of original jurisdiction—as opening a default—an appellate court will not administer it for any cause that can be assigned. Guy v. Ide, 6 Cal. 101.

199. An appeal does not lie in favor of the plaintiff in an action from a judgment of nonsuit, entered on his own motion. Imley v. Beard, 6 Cal. 666.

IX. APPEAL FROM ORDERS OF COURT.

200. An appeal will lie from an interlocutory order when it involves the merits and necessarily affects the judgment, and an order striking out an answer regularly put on file and rendering judgment without trial is within this class.† Stevens v. Ross, 1 Cal. 97.

201. Under the code, however incorrect the practice, an appeal lies from every interlocutory order and decision of an inferior court which affects a substantial right. Burgoyne v. Holmes, 3 Cal. 54.

202. An appeal will not lie from an or-

†The amendment to the code of May 15, 1851, restricted appeals from interlocutory orders.

Appeal from Orders of Court.

der of court refusing to set aside a former order; such order is merely negative, a refusal to disturb the first decision. It is the former order which is the subject of complaint, and not the refusal to alter it. Henley v. Hastings, 3 Cal. 342; Stearns v. Marvin, 3 Cal. 376.

203. No appeal can now be taken before final judgment from a mere decision, on a demurrer. Moraga v. Emeric, 4 Cal. 308.

204. An appeal does not lie from an order of the chancellor making a new party defendant. Beck v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 375.

205. Under our practice, the correctness of the order setting aside the report of facts found by the referee, if it was questioned and excepted to, can be reviewed upon appeal after final judgment. McHenry v. Moore, 5 Cal. 92.

206. By the amendment of 1854 to the code, an appeal does not lie from an interlocutory order. People v. Thurston, 5 Cal. 517.

207. An order setting aside the report of a referee appointed to take an account is merely interlocutory, and is not the subject of appeal before final judgment or decree. Johnston v. Dopkins, 6 Cal. 84.

208. An order refusing a change of venue on the application of defendant in a criminal prosecution, will only be reviewed in cases of gross abuse of discretion. People v. Fisher, 6 Cal. 155.

209. Motions for continuance in criminal cases are subject to review upon appeal. People v. Diaz, 6 Cal. 249.

210. An appeal does not lie from an order refusing an injunction.* Richards v. McMillan, 6 Cal. 422.

211. Appeals from interlocutory orders are the creations of statute, and cannot be extended by implication. Juan v. Ingoldsby, 6 Cal. 440.

212. An appeal lies from an order refusing to change a venue, but not from an order granting a change of venue. Juan v. Ingoldsby, 6 Cal. 440; Martin v. Travers, 7 Cal. 253.

213. An appeal may be taken from an order of the county judge, granting an injunction, the same as if granted by a district judge. Crandall v. Woods, 6 Cal. 452.

214. No appeal will lie from an order refusing to change the venue in a criminal case. People v. Stillman, 7 Cal. 118.

215. No appeal will lie from an order refusing to issue a commission to take testimony. Ib.

216. No appeal will lie from an order refusing to dissolve an injunction; it should have been taken from the order granting an injunction. Martin v. Travers, 7 Cal. 253.

217. An appeal will lie after final judgment, and only then from an order refusing to discharge an attachment. Taaffe v. Rosenthal, 7 Cal. 518.

218. No exception having been taken to the order of the court below overruling the motion to set aside the judgment and quash the execution, the action of the lower court in that respect cannot be reviewed on appeal. Smith v. Curtis, 7 Cal. 587.

219. An appeal lies from an order refusing to quash an execution. Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 8 Cal. 57.

220. An appeal will lie from the order of the court below, changing the judgment. Bryan v. Berry, 8 Cal. 135.

221. When an appeal is taken from all orders and rulings, and the reversal is general, it necessarily applies to all the orders. Adams v. Woods, 9 Cal. 25.

222. No appeal lies from an interlocutory order, except in the cases provided by statute. Such order can only be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment. De Barry v. Lambert, 10 Cal. 504; Baker v. Baker, 10 Cal. 528.

223. No appeal lies from an order overruling a demurrer to an indictment. People v. Ah Fong, 12 Cal. 424.

224. The statute authorizing an appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial, or which affects a substantial right, does not apply to interlocutory orders made in the progress of a trial. Ib.

225. An appeal lies from an order setting aside a final decree in equity and granting a rehearing. Riddle v. Baker, 13 Cal. 301.

226. An appeal should be taken from an order granting an injunction, and not from the order refusing to dissolve it.* Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 265.

227. An order of a probate court setting aside a judgment of that court refusing to admit a will to probate, is not an appealable order, because not within sec. 297 of the act to regulate the settlement of the estates of deceased persons. Peralta v. Castro, 15 Cal. 511.

Notice of an Appeal.—Undertaking on Appeal.

228. An injunction granted upon an order to show cause, and after a full hearing on the merits, cannot be dissolved on motion before the final hearing. The only remedy is to appeal from the order granting the injunction. Natoma W. and M. Co. v. Parker, 16 Cal. 85.

229. Where the court makes an order requiring plaintiff to appear at a certain time and show cause why a judgment in his favor should not be set aside, and it does not appear that a copy of the order was served on plaintiff or his attorney, or that any notice was given of the time at which the matter was to be heard, it is error for the court to set aside the judgment, and its order to that effect will be reversed on appeal. Vallejo v. Green, 16 Cal. 161.

X. NOTICE OF AN APPEAL.

230. Where a party, in his notice of motion served on the adverse party, asks for a specific relief, or for such other or further order as may be just, the court may afford any relief compatible with the facts of the case presented. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 153.

231. Where notice of argument has been given by the appellant, the respondent may move for an affirmance of the judgment ex parte, although he has given no notice of argument. Constant v. Ward, 1 Cal. 333.

232. A decision of the supreme court will be set aside for failure of the appellant to appear, if he had not actual notice, although a formal statutory notice is not necessary. Lightstone v. Laurencel, 2 Cal. 106.

233. When the object of a notice of appeal is accomplished, it is immaterial whether the notice is given or not, and if both parties appear, no notice is necessary to be shown. McLeran v. Shartzer, 5 Cal. 70.

234. A notice of appeal from a justice's to a county court, stating that the defendant appealed from "the whole judgment," is a sufficient notice within the statute to appeal from questions of both law and fact. Price v. Van Caneghan, 5 Cal. 124.

235. Notice of appeal must be served upon the party or his attorney in ordinary cases, and this rule must govern appeals from justices' courts, although the word "attorney" is omitted. Welton v. Garibaldi, 6 Cal. 246; Coulter v. Stark, 7 Cal. 245.

236. An appeal is made by filing and serving the notice of appeal. Both requisites must exist to complete the appeal. A failure to notify the adverse party is fatal. Whipley v. Mills, 9 Cal. 641; Hastings v. Halleck, 10 Cal. 31; Hildreth v. Gwindon, 10 Cal. 491.

237. Where a notice of appeal to the supreme court and undertaking were filed in the county clerk's office on December 16th, and on the next day a copy of the notice was served on the respondent, who within five days after filing the undertaking excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties to the undertaking: held, that the respondent was not injured by the failure of the appellant to serve a copy of the notice of appeal on the day the undertaking was filed. Mokelumne Hill C. and M. Co. v. Woodbury, 10 Cal. 187.

238. The filing of a notice of appeal must precede the filing of the undertaking on appeal. Until an appeal is taken there is nothing to give effect to the undertaking. Buckholder v. Byers, 10 Cal. 481.

239. On appeal from a justice's to a county court—the record not showing that notice of appeal had been served on the adverse party—appellant may prove by his affidavit that such notice was in fact served. Mendioca v. Orr, 16 Cal. 368.

See NOTICE.

XI. UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL.

240. On an application for justification of bail on appeal, the merits of the appeal will not be considered. Bradley v. Hall, 1 Cal. 199.

241. If the appellants have been guilty of no laches in perfecting their appeal, the court may enlarge the time, upon terms, for them to file their bond to entitle them to a stay of proceedings. Id.

242. The omission of the words "to pay to" will not invalidate the obligation of an appeal bond, or leave should be granted to file a good bond. Billings v. Roadhouse, 5 Cal. 71.

Undertaking on an Appeal.

243. Where an appeal is dismissed for want of a proper bond and no final judgment has been rendered, an appeal can be taken at any time within the period allowed by law. Martinez v. Gallardo, 5 Cal. 155.

244. An objection that there is no undertaking on appeal filed, cannot apply in a case where no right of the defendant is infringed, and a State cannot be denied a hearing in her own courts because no bond has been filed for costs, when a fund has been provided by law for such cases. People v. Clingan, 5 Cal. 391.

245. To enable the assignee of a judgment to sue on an appeal bond filed in the cause, he must have an assignment of the bond. Moses v. Thorne, 6 Cal. 88.

246. Where an appeal is withdrawn or dismissed by consent of both parties, no action can be maintained on the appeal bond. Osborn v. Hendrickson, 6 Cal. 175.

247. Where the appeal is bona fide, and not taken for delay, appellate courts will always permit a new undertaking to be filed where the original is defective. Coulter v. Stark, 7 Cal. 245.

248. Where a motion is made in the county court to dismiss an appeal, on the ground that the undertaking filed is insufficient, and before the determination thereof the other party offers to amend his undertaking: held, that it is error to refuse to allow him so to do. Cunningham v. Hopkins, 8 Cal. 83.

249. The appellant must show by the certificate that the notice and undertaking on appeal has been filed in due time, and if not shown to be filed, then the respondent must object thereto by motion to dismiss, and not for the first time in his brief. Bryan v. Berry, 8 Cal. 134; Franklin v. Reiner, 8 Cal. 340; Halleck v. Hastings, 10 Cal. 31.

250. An appeal bond will be so construed as to carry out the obvious intention of the parties. Swain v. Graves, 8 Cal. 551.

251. An undertaking on appeal is an independent contract on the part of the sureties, in which it is not necessary that the appellant should unite. Curtis v. Richards, 9 Cal. 38.

252. A district court has no jurisdiction of an action on an appeal bond to pay all costs and damages not exceeding three hundred dollars, when the costs and damages amount to less than two hundred dollars. Page v. Ellis, 9 Cal. 250.

253. When the appellant on an appeal pending from the district court to the supreme court filed in the clerk's office of the district court his notice of appeal and undertaking, the respondent, within the time allowed by law, excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties to the undertaking, and they failed to justify to the satisfaction of the clerk of said court, who issued execution on the judgment: held, that it was error in the judge of said court to make an order of supersedeas, staying said execution. Mokelumne Hill C. and M. Co. v. Woodbury, 10 Cal. 188.

254. No undertaking on appeal is necessary when the appeal is taken by the county. The board of supervisors represent the county in legal proceedings. People v. Supervisors Marin Co., 10 Cal. 346.

255. The failure of sureties on appeal to justify where they are excepted to, leaves the appeal as though no undertaking had been filed, and ineffectual for any purpose. Lower v. Knox, 10 Cal. 480.

256. Where a party gave notice of the justification of the sureties on an undertaking before the clerk of the court below, on the second of November, between the hours of ten A. M. and five P. M. of that day, and the sureties appeared upon such notice, soon after ten of that day: held, that the clerk acted properly in refusing to take their justification, the opposite party being absent, until the last hour stated in the notice. Ib. 481.

257. In an undertaking on appeal, the names of the sureties need not appear in the body of the paper. Dora v. Covey, 13 Cal. 507.

258. The statute accords the effect of a stay of execution to the undertaking on appeal, and this stay is sufficient consideration. Ib. 508.

259. Where the bond on appeal is more favorable to the appellee than the statute requires, it has been repeatedly held that he cannot complain that the statute has not been followed. Ib. 509.

260. Where an instrument, purporting to be a bond on appeal, contains words of obligation, and has a scroll opposite the name of one of the two signers, who contemporaneously verify the instrument as their bond, it is the bond of both. Canfield v. Bates, 13 Cal. 608.

Costs on an Appeal.

261. By the code, the undertaking on appeal, providing for the liability of the sureties upon condition of the affirmance of the judgment, operates as a stay, and if by a mere neglect to prosecute the appeal, and for that reason suffering it to be dismissed, after the respondent has been deprived of his rights under the judgment by the undertaking, the sureties could be released, upon the pretense that the judgment was not affirmed, it is evident that great injustice would be in many instances perpetrated, and a fraud practiced upon respondents. Karth v. Light, 15 Cal. 327.

262. After notice of exception to the sufficiency of the sureties on an undertaking on appeal to the supreme court, they cannot justify without notice to the adverse party; and in this case, the justification being made without notice, the appeal was ordered to be dismissed unless appellants within ten days file a new undertaking, and the sureties thereon justify upon notice to the respondent. Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 364.

263. An appeal will not be dismissed on the ground of insufficiency in the justification of the sureties on the undertaking, where the undertaking was both to render the appeal effectual and to stay execution, and the justification was sufficient for the former purpose. Dobbins v. Dollarhide, 15 Cal. 375.

264. Where the examination of the sureties does not disclose sufficient property to make the undertaking operate as a stay, but does disclose sufficient to render the appeal effectual, respondent's remedy is by motion in the court below for leave to proceed on the judgment, notwithstanding the undertaking, and not by motion in the supreme court to dismiss the appeal. Ib.

265. Construing sections 348 and 337 of the code together, they provide that an appeal is not effectual for any purpose, unless an undertaking be filed, or a deposit made with the clerk within five days after filing the notice, and failure to so file the undertaking or make the deposit will be fatal to the appeal, and it must be dismissed. Elliott v. Chapman, 15 Cal. 384.

266. Where an appeal is taken by a party, and as a condition to give it effect, a bond or undertaking, with or by sureties, is annexed—the undertaking being executed for the benefit of the appellant—the law presumes it was executed at his request, and probably no proof of that fact is requisite in a suit by the surety against the appellant, for money paid on account of the suretyship. At all events, very slight proof of such request would be required. Bostic v. Love, 16 Cal. 72.

267. If an undertaking on appeal to the supreme court be sufficient in amount to stay proceedings, the lien of the judgment is not extended by the appeal beyond two years from the time of its docketing; and this, where the undertaking was excepted to, there being no effort to enforce the judgment pending the appeal. Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 420.

See UNDERTAKING.

XII. COSTS ON AN APPEAL.

268. Where a judgment was affirmed in part and reversed in part, the respondent was allowed his costs in the court below, but was required to pay the costs of the appeal. Cole v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 54.

269. The clerk of the supreme court in entering up the judgment adds the words "with costs," and annexes to the remittitur a copy of the bill of costs filed; these words are a sufficient awarding of costs for the clerk below to issue execution thereon. City of Marysville v. Buchanan, 3 Cal. 213.

270. The judgment of the supreme court on appeal and the costs consequent thereon is final, and the district court has no authority to prevent immediate execution of the judgment of this court, so remitted. Ib.

271. One of the conditions upon which an appeal is allowed from a justice's court, is the payment of the costs of the action, and where this is not done the justice need not certify the appeal. McDermott v. Douglass, 5 Cal. 89; Bray v. Redman, 6 Cal. 287.

272. In an action for a dissolution of a copartnership, on appeal the appellate court modified the decree, and under the circumstances of the case, the costs of the appeal, were equally divided between the plaintiff and the defendant. Crosby v. McDermitt, 7 Cal. 148.

273. Where a judgment of the court was incorrect in part, the appellate court ordered the court below to modify its judgment accordingly, and the appellants recovered the costs of their appeal. Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 512.

274. If any one or more of the parties desire a modification of the judgment as to costs, the proper application should have been made within the ten days allowed for filing a petition for a rehearing. Gray v. Gray, 11 Cal. 341.

275. Where a case is remanded for further proceedings and costs awarded in this court, in general terms, the costs on appeal only are included, leaving the costs of the former trial to abide the events of the suit. Ib.

276. The costs upon the appeal are properly the costs of the supreme court, and the costs of making up the appeal in the court below, including the costs of making out the transcript. Ib.

277. If no motion be made in the court below to correct a clerical error disclosed by the pleadings, the error will be corrected in the supreme court at appellant's cost. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 491.

278. Where a judgment is against two, one only of whom appeals, and the appeal is dismissed with twenty per cent. damages, the damages with the costs do not become part of the original judgment, and the redemptioner is not bound to pay them when he redeems from a sale under the judgment. The clerk below can issue execution for these damages and costs. McMillan v. Vischer, 14 Cal. 241.

279. Where costs, on appeal to the supreme court, are not entered on the judgment docket in the court below, they do not become a lien on property until the levy of an execution. Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 420.

280. Where in ejectment the facts found by the court authorized a judgment for possession but not for damages, the judgment, being for possession and damages, was affirmed in the supreme court, upon respondent's remitting the damages and paying the costs of appeal. Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 434.

XIII. DAMAGES FOR A FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.

281. Where the record discloses on the part of the appellant facts to satisfy the court that the appeal was taken merely for delay, damages were awarded on dismissing the appeal: (a.) In five per cent. Pinkham v. Wemple, 12 Cal. 449. (b.) In ten per cent. Buckley v. Morse, 2 Cal. 149; Pacheco v. Bemal, 2 Cal. 150; Russell v. Williams, 2 Cal. 158; Bates v. Vischer, 2 Cal. 357; Taylor v. McKinley, 3 Cal. 104; Bliss v. Wyman, 7 Cal. 258; Winans v. Hardenburgh, 8 Cal. 293; Harvey v. Fisk, 9 Cal. 94; McCann v. Lewis, 9 Cal. 247; Primm v. Gray, 10 Cal. 523; Heston v. Martin, 11 Cal. 42; Hutchinson v. Ryan, 11 Cal. 142; Haswell v. Parsons, 15 Cal. 267. (c.) In fifteen per cent. Reyes v. Sandford, 5 Cal. 117; Parke v. Williams, 7 Cal. 250; Dewitt v. Porter, 13 Cal. 172. (d.) In twenty per cent. Nickerson v. Cal. Stage Co., 10 Cal. 522.

282. Where the questions raised by the record on appeal to this court have been repeatedly settled by this court, or are decided by reference to plain elementary principles of law, the judgment of the court below will be affirmed with damages. Pinkham v. Wemple, 12 Cal. 449.

283. If the appellate court is satisfied of an error in the computation of interest, they may permit the error to stand, leaving the excess over the proper amount to go as compensation to the respondent on account of his appeal. Whitney v. Buckman, 13 Cal. 539.

See COSTS, DAMAGES.

XIV. DISMISSAL OF AN APPEAL.

284. An appeal which had been dismissed for failure to file the transcript in time, was reinstated, upon the fact appearing that the clerk of the district court did not prepare the transcript in time, and the appellant was not at fault. Stark v. Barnes, 2 Cal. 162.

285. Appeal dismissed where the record disclosed that the court below might or might not have granted a new trial without impeachment of its legal discretion. Cooke v. Stewart, 2 Cal. 353.

Dismissal of an Appeal.—Stay of Proceedings.—Lien pending an Appeal.

286. Where an appeal is dismissed for want of a proper bond and no final judgment has been rendered, an appeal can be taken at any time within the period allowed by law. Martinez v. Gallardo, 5 Cal. 155.

287. Where a judgment of a justice of the peace is for an amount exceeding his jurisdiction, the county court on appeal should dismiss the whole case. Ford v. Smith, 5 Cal. 331.

288. Where a motion is made in the county court to dismiss an appeal on the ground that the undertaking filed is insufficient, and before the determination thereof the other party offers to amend his undertaking: held, that it is error to refuse to allow him to do so. Cunningham v. Hopkins, 8 Cal. 33.

289. A motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that the transcript was not filed within the time required by the third rule of the court, is too late after the case has been submitted. Cook v. Klink, 8 Cal. 352.

290. Where a party appealed from a justice's court to a county court, and the justice neglected to send up with the record the notice of appeal, the appellant should have an opportunity to compel the justice to send it up, and the appeal should not be peremptorily dismissed. Sherman v. Rolberg, 9 Cal. 18.

291. Where an appeal is taken in the same notice, both from a final judgment and an order refusing a new trial after sixty days from the entry of the order for a new trial, the appeal so far as the order is concerned will, on motion, be dismissed. Lower v. Knox, 10 Cal. 481.

292. An appeal will be dismissed when the record contains no copy of the pleadings. Hart v. Plum, 14 Cal. 152.

293. Dismissal of an appeal in the supreme court for want of prosecution, in accordance with the rules of the court, operates as an affirmance of the judgment below, within the statute relative to undertakings on appeal, unless the order of dismissal be vacated during the term. Karth v. Light, 15 Cal. 325; Chamberlain v. Reed, 16 Cal. 207.

294. The cases in which dismissal of an appeal will not operate as a bar to a second appeal, and hence not as an affirmance of the judgment below, are those where the dismissal has been made upon some technical defect in the notice of appeal, or the undertaking, or the like. The bar operates where the dismissal is for want of prosecution, and the order is not vacated during the term, or the dismissal is on the merits. Karth v. Light, 15 Cal. 326; Chamberlain v. Reed, 16 Cal. 207. See DISCONTINUANCE.

XV. STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

295. It seems that an appeal from an order of reference does stay the proceedings. Smith v. Pollock, 2 Cal. 92.

296. A stay of proceedings from its nature under an appeal, only operates upon orders, or judgments commanding some act to be done, and does not reach a case of injunction. Merced Min. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 132.

297. A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to grant appeals and to stay proceedings thereupon, and his action cannot be reviewed on certiorari. Coulter v. Stark, 7 Cal. 245.

298. It is only of orders or judgments which command or permit acts to be done, that a stay of proceedings on appeal can be had. Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 109.

See STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

XVI. LIEN PENDING AN APPEAL.

299. An appeal from a judgment suspends the lien which is merely an incident, and the statutory limitation of the lien commences to run only from the date of the remittitur from the appellate court. Dewey v. Latson, 6 Cal. 134; Low v. Adams, 6 Cal. 281.

See LIEN.

APPEARANCE.

1. The mere act of filing an answer does not operate as an appearance at the trial, so as to prevent the waiver of a jury trial under the civil code. Zane v. Crowe, 4 Cal. 113.

Appearance.

2. The proceedings in the case having been transferred to a magistrate who had jurisdiction, by consent of parties, the appearance of the defendant and his consent fixing the time of trial were a waiver of his right to be brought in by complaint and summons. Cronise v. Carghill, 4 Cal. 122.

3. An appearance by attorney, at common law and by the express letter of our statute, amounts to an acknowledgment of waiver of service. Suydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 281; Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 201.

4. A party ought not to be allowed the benefit of any proceeding, unless he appears and assumes the responsibility of it. His appearance for one purpose is a good appearance to the action. Douglass v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 4 Cal. 306.

5. In cases where the statute requires notice to be given to the opposing parties to actions, where both parties appear the full object of notice is accomplished, and it is immaterial whether there was notice or not. McLeran v. Shartzler, 5 Cal. 70.

6. The defendant on arrest, by putting in bail and neglecting to move to be discharged, consents to process and waives all irregularity in this respect. Matoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 59.

7. A judgment by default is properly entered where the defendant did not answer and appear after service was made complete by publication, nor does an appearance on a former appeal absolve him from the necessity of answering, or from the consequences of his neglect to do so. Grewell v. Henderson, 7 Cal. 292.

8. The only object of a summons is to bring the party into court, and if that object be obtained by the appearance and pleading of a party, there can be no injury to him. Smith v. Curtis, 7 Cal. 587.

9. A judgment void for want of personal service, is not cured by the appearance of the party for the purpose of vacating it. Deidesheimer v. Brown, 8 Cal. 840; Gray v. Hawes, 8 Cal. 569.

10. The failure to deposit in the post-office a copy of the complaint and summons directed to an absent minor, is not cured by the appearance of its mother in her own behalf. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 638.

11. The failure of the defendant to appear at the trial of an action of replevin, when the cause is called, is a waiver of a jury under the civil code. Waltham v. Carson, 10 Cal. 180; Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 433.

12. When a defendant pleads another suit pending between the same parties and for the same cause of action, and it is shown that no summons was ever issued upon the complaint, and that there was no voluntary appearance by defendant in such suit: held, that there was no suit pending. Weaver v. Conger, 10 Cal. 238; Primm v. Gray, 10 Cal. 522.

13. The appearance of an attorney wholly unauthorized, there being no fraud and no allegation of insolvency, would not give the party a right to assail the judgment on that ground. Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 201.

14. The recital of the appearance of parties is never conclusive, and where the impression is general, it is confined to those parties who have been served with process. Chester v. Miller, 13 Cal. 561.

15. Where process is served by a constable out of his township, the party could waive the objection by a voluntary appearance; but the jurisdiction is an affirmative matter to be shown by the record, and the question is not whether the defendant appeared and objected, but whether the affirmative matter is sufficiently patent upon the face of the record. Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 301; Fagg v. Clements, 15 Cal. 296.

16. On appeal, a judgment by default will be reversed, unless the record show service on the defendant or appearance, though possibly a judgment so obtained could not be impeached collaterally. Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 68.

17. In suit in the district court, on a bond given in the court of sessions for the appearance there of a party indicted for misdemeanor—the court of sessions having declared the bond forfeited for non-appearance—the sureties cannot defend on the ground that the judgment of forfeiture was erroneous and that judgment cannot be thus revised. People v. Wolf, 16 Cal. 385.

18. The question, whether a party indicted for misdemeanor has an absolute right to appear by attorney and defend, so as to prevent the forfeiture of his bond, not passed on. Ib.

19. Failure of defendant in ejectment to appear when the cause is called for trial—an answer being in—authorizes the court to try it without a jury. Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 434.

APPOINTMENT TO OFFICE.

1. The legislature having elected a State printer, who resigned, and a State printer was during the session of the legislature appointed by the governor, and he resigned after the adjournment and during the recess, whereupon the governor appointed another person to fill the vacancy supposed to exist: held, that this second appointment, as well as the first one, was irregular and void. People v. Fitch, 1 Cal. 536.

2. An appointment to fill a vacancy in the office of State printer, made by the governor during the session of the legislature, is irregular and void. Ib.

3. The power to fill an office carries by implication the power to fill a vacancy, and all necessary authority to carry out the original power and prevent it from becoming inoperative. Ib.

4. The power of filling vacancies in office vested in the governor of the State by the constitution, applies only to vacancies occurring under circumstances when the original appointing or electing power cannot act. Such power is limited by the period when the people or the legislature can elect or appoint, on the arrival of which his power ceases, and the right of appointment returns to the original appointing power. People v. Mott, 3 Cal. 505; People v. Mizner, 7 Cal. 525.

5. Though the appointment of a sheriff by a county judge was void, yet the acts of such sheriff, as a de facto officer, are good. People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 215.

6. The act to establish an insane asylum, providing that the resident physician shall hold his office for two years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified: held, that on failure of the legislature to elect at the expiration of the incumbent's term, the office becomes de jure vacant, and can be filled by the governor by appointment. People v. Reid, 6 Cal. 289.

7. The legislature having failed to classify the trustees of the insane asylum, extended the term of all the trustees to five years, and the appointments to fill vacancies could not extend beyond the original term. People v. Baine, 6 Cal. 510.

8. The legislature failing to elect successors to the board of trustees, the power of appointment vested in the governor. Ib.

9. When the time of holding an office is not fixed, the tenure of the office is at the pleasure of the appointing power, and the power to remove is an incident to the power to appoint, as a general proposition. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 102.

10. In making the appointment, the power of the executive is original and unlimited. He can select any one, from all the qualified citizens of the State, while the power of the Senate is the right to advise or refuse to advise the appointment of the particular individual. People v. Mizner, 7 Cal. 524.

11. Where the appointment to an office is vested in the governor with the advice and consent of the senate, and the term of the incumbent expires during a recess of the legislature, and the governor appoints a successor to the office: held, that there has been no vacancy in office, and that this appointment vested in the appointee a right to hold for his full term, subject only to be defeated by the nonconcurrence of the senate. Ib. 525; People v. Addison, 10 Cal. 7.

12. The power to appoint to a vacancy has to be vested in some department of the government, and the constitution was compelled to vest it in the executive, because it was the only department that could be properly and efficiently charged with such a duty. People v. Mizner, 7 Cal. 525.

13. The power to appoint for the full term of the office of resident physician of the insane asylum is vested in the legislature, and the governor has no right to exercise it. People v. Langdon, 8 Cal. 13.

14. So far as regards the act of the appointing power, the appointment is complete when the commission is duly issued by the executive; but as regards the appointee, he must perform the conditions precedent before he can hold the office. People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 44.

Appraisement.—Appropriation of the Revenue.

15. In cases where there is no incumbent to hold over, the law will allow the appointment by the executive to fill the office. Ib. 46.

16. The constitution affixes no period of tenure to the office of tax collector, nor does it provide any mode of appointment. So far as this office exists in the incumbent, it is an office created by legislative act. The legislature may direct how it shall be filled, and how its duties shall be discharged. People v. Squires, 15 Cal. 17.

17. A controller must be elected biennially, at the same time and place and manner with the governor and lieutenant governor, and an appointment of a controller by the governor before this biennial general election, whatever its effect otherwise, cannot defeat this constitutional policy, nor deprive the people of their right to fill the office of controller at such election. People v. Melony, 15 Cal. 62.

See ELECTION, GOVERNOR, OFFICE, VACANCY.

APPRAISEMENT.

1. A sale by a sheriff, under execution, of a house, claimed as a homestead by the defendant in execution, and ascertained by appraisement to be worth over $5,000, should not be made until an exact appraisement of the value of the premises is obtained, so that the sheriff can convey a definite fractional, undivided interest therein. Gary v. Easterbrook, 6 Cal. 459.

2. Where a lease contained the usual covenants for payment of rent, and re-entry for nonpayment, and provided for the appraisement of improvements erected by the lessee, and payment of their value by the lessor at the expiration of the term; and the lessor reentered for nonpayment of rent: held, that the lessee could not maintain an action, upon being evicted, for the value of his improvements. Lawrence v. Knight, 11 Cal. 298.

APPROPRIATION.

- I. Of the Revenue.
- II. By Payment.
- III. Of Mining Lands.
- IV. Of Water Courses.

I. OF THE REVENUE.

1. The common council of Sacramento, by resolution, made an appropriation to the mayor of the city of $10,000, reciting meritorious services (but such as were within the line of his official duty) as the consideration, which was exclusive of his salary, which was regularly paid. The mayor died the day the appropriation was passed, and did not accept it formally: held, that the appropriation could not be recovered in an action at law. Heslep v. City of Sacramento, 2 Cal. 581.

2. The act of May 1st, 1854, which creates the office of State printer, and requires the comptroller to draw his warrants on the treasury for such sums as may be due the State printer, is not a specific appropriation. Redding v. Bell, 4 Cal. 333.

3. The revenue act provided that the board of supervisors or courts of sessions shall levy, in addition to a State tax, a tax, not to exceed fifty cents on each one hundred dollars, for county purposes, and such other special taxes as may be by law authorized to be collected. Under this provision, the courts of sessions of Sacramento levied a tax of fifty cents for county purposes, twenty-five cents for funded tax, &c.: held, that the words of the revenue act, authorizing a tax of fifty cents on each one hundred dollars for county purposes, ought not to be restricted to the current expenses of the year as an appropriation, leaving the scrip holders of the county to look for payment to the tax collected for the floating debt. McDonald v. Griswold, 4 Cal. 352.

4. In the absence of an unexhausted specific appropriation to meet a warrant of the controller on the State treasurer, a warrant on the treasurer is absolutely void. Butler v. Bates, 7 Cal. 137.

5. Every municipal appropriation in the contemplation of law is to be paid in money. People v. Williams, 8 Cal. 101.

By Payment.—Of Mining Lands.—Of Water Courses.

6. The power of appropriation which the legislature can exercise over the revenues of the State, for any purpose which it may regard as calculated to promote the public good, it can exercise over the revenues of a county, city or town for any purpose connected with their past or present condition, except as such revenues may, by the law creating them, be devoted to special purposes. Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 351.

7. To an appropriation, within the meaning of the constitution, nothing more is requisite than a designation of the amount, and the fund out of which it shall be paid. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 28.

8. When the constitution, therefore, says, that "no money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law," it only means, that no money shall be drawn except in pursuance of law. Ib.

9. When the act of April 13th, 1854, provides, that no warrants shall be drawn except there be "an unexhausted, specific appropriation" to meet the same, it means only that the controller shall not draw a warrant for a specific object when he has already drawn for the full amount of the appropriation made for that object. Ib.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION, REVENUE, WARRANTS.

II. BY PAYMENT.

10. A draft payable, in terms, out of "an appropriation" for work done by the acceptor, becomes due on payment for the work. Nagle v. Homer, 8 Cal. 358.

11. Where it was agreed between the mortgagor and mortgagee that the land and its proceeds were to be held not only as security for the debt due the latter, but for debts due third persons, laborers on the land, for instance: held, that such agreement was an appropriation of said surplus for the benefit of said third persons, not revocable when they have acted on the faith of it; and the mortgagee is a trustee of the same for said third persons. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 121.

See PAYMENT.

III. OF MINING LANDS.

12. The government of the United States and State government have not only acquiesced in the universal appropriation of the public lands for mining purposes, but have studiously encouraged them in some instances, and recognized them in all. Conger v. Weaver, 6 Cal. 557; Weaver v. Conger, 10 Cal. 238.

13. The rights of a quartz miner come from his appropriation; and whenever his claim is defined, there is no reason, in the nature of things, why an appropriation may not as well take effect upon quartz in a decomposed state as any other sort, or why the condition to which natural causes may have reduced the rock should give character to the title of the locator. Brown v. '49 and '56 Quartz M. Co., 15 Cal. 160.

See LANDS, MINES AND MINING LAW.

IV. OF WATER COURSES.

14. Possession or actual appropriation must be the test of priority in all claims to the use of water, whenever such claims are not dependent on the ownership of the land through which the water flows. Kelly v. Natoma W. Co., 6 Cal. 108; Hoffman v. Stone, 7 Cal. 48; Maeris v. Bicknell, 7 Cal. 262.

15. There must be an actual appropriation of the water for some useful purpose allowed by law, to give a title in it. Maeris v. Bicknell, 7 Cal. 262.

16. Where a party stands by and sees a ditch owner appropriate the water of a creek, at a great expense, and does not inform him of his claim to the waters, he and his vendees are estopped from afterwards claiming the water. Parke v. Kilham, 8 Cal. 79.

17. A right to water as a usufruct may be acquired by appropriation, as against a subsequent appropriator who shows no title to the soil; and that by the appropriation of water, and the construction of a canal, the party acquires an easement or franchise which he may enjoy and protect. Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 142.

18. An appropriation of land carries with it the water on the land, or a usufruct in the water; for in such cases the party does not appropriate the water, but the land covered with water. Ib. 143.

19. When an action is properly brought to test the question as to the priority of appropriation of water courses, it is proper to pray for an injunction to prevent future injury. Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224.

20. Parties who first appropriate water for mill purposes are entitled to it to the extent appropriated, and for these purposes to the exclusion of any subsequent appropriation of it for the same or any other use. Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 38.

21. If A erects a mill on a running stream, this shows an appropriation of the water of the mill; but if he suffers a portion of the water, or the body of it, after running the mill, to go down in its accustomed course, we do not see why persons below may not as well appropriate this residuum as he could appropriate the first use. Ib.

22. Water taken for a mill is not an article of merchandise to be sold in the market; it is merely used as a motive power, and after it passes the mill and subserves its purposes, it may be appropriated as an aid to working the mines. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 13 Cal. 233.

23. There is no difference in respect to the use, or rather purpose, to which water is to be applied, and an appropriation for the uses of a mill stands on the same footing as an appropriation for the use of the mines. Ib.

24. It by no means follows that because in an agricultural district a party takes up a mill seat, gets a good title—and we esteem possession of public lands to be—to the land, and makes valuable improvements dependent on the use of water as a motive power, that he means only to use the water appropriated for the first purpose to which he applies it. Ib. 237.

25. To render a claim of water by appropriation valid, the claim must be for some useful or beneficial purpose, or in contemplation of a future appropriation for such purpose by the parties claiming it. A claim for mere speculation will not answer. Weaver v. Eureka Lake Co., 15 Cal. 274.

See WATER COURSES.

APPURTENANCE.

1. The act of March 26th, 1851, operated as a grant by which property-holders along the line of Market street, and the public, are entitled to the free enjoyment of the same, and this right or privilege could not be resumed by the State, and was not resumed by the act of April 28, 1851, confirming the contract between the appellant and the sinking fund commissioners. Breed v. Cunningham, 2 Cal. 368.

2. Where lots are sold as fronting on or bounded by a certain space, designated in the conveyance as a street, the use of such space as a street passes as an appurtenance to the grant, and vests in the grantee, in common with the public, the right of way over said street. Ib.

See FIXTURES, LAND.

ARBITRATION.

- I. Jurisdiction of Arbitrators.
- II. Submission to Arbitration.
- III. Fees of an Arbitrator.
- IV. Award.

I. JURISDICTION OF ARBITRATORS.

1. Our statute concerning referees is in aid of the common law remedy by arbitration, and does not alter its principles. Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 130.

2. Where the parties entered into a submission to arbitration, in which it was stipulated that the award be entered as the judgment of the county court: held, that it was void in toto, that court having no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the award. Williams v. Walton, 9 Cal. 145.

3. The court having no jurisdiction, the arbitrators could have none, nor could they have common law powers when appointed in the mode provided by statute. Ib. 146.

II. SUBMISSION TO ARBITRATION.

4. The submission of a cause to arbitration operates as a discontinuance of the action.* Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 47.

5. To constitute a submission to arbitration under our statute so as to give the award the effect of a judgment, the submission must be filed with the clerk in the manner specified, and a motion for a judgment upon the award made after the expiration of a specified time upon notice. Heslep v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 3; overruled in Carsley v. Lindsay, 14 Cal. 395.

6. A reference or arbitration in which there is no order of court or agreement filed with the clerk or entered on the minutes, is a voluntary withdrawal of the case from the jurisdiction of the court, by which the court loses all control over the case and has no authority to enter judgment upon the finding, except by consent of parties. Heslep v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 4.

7. Where a submission to arbitration is made an order of court under the code, the clerk may enter the judgment on the award in due time without any further order of the court. Carsley v. Lindsay, 14 Cal. 395; overruling Heslep v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 3.

III. FEES OF AN ARBITRATOR.

8. Where parties who submit a matter to arbitration agree as to whom shall pay the arbitrator, if the latter be no party to the agreement he will not be bound by it, but may look to all the parties for compensation for his services. Young v. Starkey, 1 Cal. 427.

9. Where an arbitrator refuses to deliver an award made by him until his fees are paid, and a promise to pay him is made and he delivers the award, it takes the case out of the statute of fraud, and the undertaking to pay for the services a reasonable compensation is supported by a sufficient consideration. Ib.

*This decision was rendered under the code of 1850. The code of 1851 permits arbitrations to be submitted under the order of a court.

IV. AWARD.

10. Arbitrators are not bound to award on principles of dry law, but may decide on principles in equity and good conscience, and make their award ex æquo et bono. If, however, they mean to decide according to law and mistake the law, the courts will set aside the award. Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 77.

11. In case of a general award, courts will not inquire into mistakes by evidence aliunde; but where the arbitrators have made any point a matter of judicial inquiry by spreading it upon the record, and they mistake the law in a palpable and material point, their award will be set aside. Ib.; Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 130.

12. Courts of equity, in the absence of statutes, will set aside awards for fraud, mistake or accident, either in fact or in law. Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 77; Peachy v. Ritchie, 4 Cal. 207.

13. If arbitrators state the reasons of their award, it will be presumed they intend to decide according to law. Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 79.

14. It is correct for courts to distinguish those portions of an award which are good and those which are not, where it is attacked on the ground of fraud, and the subject matter is in its nature divisible. Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 79; Williams v. Walton, 9 Cal. 146.

15. Where the object of a submission is to make an end of litigation, and the award is uncertain and incomplete upon its face, it defeats the object of the submission and must be set aside. Pierson v. Norman, 2 Cal. 601.

16. Where parties submit to an arbitrator, they are presumed to know that his award will be final, and they must be required to exercise due diligence in procuring the evidence upon which to base a proper award. Montifiori v. Engels, 3 Cal. 434.

17. By the terms of an award which were decisive between a landlord and tenant, the latter was to leave the premises on the 9th: held, that the plaintiff had no right to give a notice to quit until the 10th, after which, by the act of forcible entry and detainer, the plaintiff had six days to remove, wherefore the action commenced on the 10th was premature. Ray v. Armstrong, 4 Cal. 208.

Award.—Argument.

18. A having an award in his favor against a city, and a suit pending to enforce the same, and the council made an appropriation for the payment of the award, it was held that A cannot be compelled to litigate his rights with B, who has stood by without notice of his claim. Wilson v. Heslep, 4 Cal. 303.

19. An award rendered upon a fair arbitration of the matter in dispute and long concurred in, was conclusive of the rights of the parties, and should so have been held by the courts below. Jarvis v. Fountain Water Co., 5 Cal. 180.

20. When arbitrators have published their award by delivering it to the parties as the award: held, that it is not the subject of revision or correction by them, and that any alteration without the consent of the parties will vitiate it. Porter v. Scott, 7 Cal. 316.

21. It is the duty of arbitrators to pass upon the whole subject in controversy, and if it appears on the face of the award that they have not disposed of the whole matter, or if the terms of the award render a further inquiry necessary to ascertain a sum to be paid, or an act to be done, it is void. Ib.

22. Arbitrators must pass upon all matter submitted, or their award will be invalid. If several matters are specified in the submission, and the award does not disclose that each is determined, it is defective on its face and can be set aside on motion. Muldrow v. Norris, 12 Cal. 339.

23. If the submission provide that an award upon the matter submitted be made, or the condition of the bond be that the parties are bound—provided the award of such matters be made—then such proviso extends to all the matters submitted, and operates to render the submission conditional and the award binding only in case the arbitrators pass upon every subject either specifically referred to them, or brought to their notice under the general terms of the submission. Ib. 341.

24. Where all matters in difference are submitted, though without an “ita quod,” the arbitrator must make his award of all matters submitted to him, and whereof he has notice, otherwise the award would be entirely void. Ib. 343.

25. An useless and invalid determination upon one item properly presented in the general terms of the submission must, on principle, be as fatal to the entire action of the arbitrators as an omission intentional or unintentional to notice the item at all. Ib. 344.

26. The doctrine that an award may be good in part, or bad in part, applies to instances where there has been an excess of power in the arbitrators by their attempting to determine matters not submitted, or where there is uncertainty or illegality in an independant and distinct matter forming no consideration for other parts of the award, and the settlement of which could not have contributed to induce the arbitration. Ib.

27. Where one of the principal matters in dispute, passed upon by the arbitrators, was subsequently set aside by a higher court, and the judgment rendered upon the award vacated by reason of the error of the arbitrators in passing upon said matter, it left the award as though such item submitted had never been passed upon; and consequently, the award did not effect the purposes of the submission by settling all matters of controversy between the parties. The consideration which moved the parties to enter into the submission had failed, and hence the award is void. Ib.

28. An award cannot be impeached because contrary to law and evidence. The code prescribes the sole grounds to vacate an award by the court on motion. Carsley v. Lindsay, 14 Cal. 394.

29. That the arbitrator did not act upon all the items or property of a partnership, is no ground for vacating his award. Certainly not, if the facts were not brought before him. Ib.

ARGUMENT.

1. On a rehearing, a party will not be permitted to raise any point which was not urged on the first argument. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 197.

2. Where notice of argument has been given by the appellant, the respondent may move an affirmance of the judgment ex parte, although he has given no notice of argument. Constant v. Ward, 1 Cal. 333.

In General.—Affidavit on Arrest.

3. The plaintiff always in contemplation of law has the affirmative of the argument and the right to open and conclude. Benham v. Rowe, 2 Cal. 408.

4. The establishment and enforcement of rules, limiting the argument of counsel to a certain time, are matters resting in the sound discretion of the court, and, unless it appear that injustice has thereby been done, form no ground of appeal. People v. Tock Chew, 6 Cal. 636.

5. In a criminal case, if the court below impose upon counsel against their consent a limitation of time for argument before the jury, it is done at the risk of a new trial, if it be shown by the uncontradicted affidavits of the counsel that the prisoner was deprived of the opportunity of a full defense; for this is his constitutional right, without which he cannot be lawfully convicted. People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 584.

ARREST.

- I. In General.
- II. Affidavit on Arrest.
- III. Pleadings.
- IV. Judgment.
- V. Liability of Bail.
- VI. Discharge from Arrest.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. If an order of commitment be sufficient in substance, it will be held good on habeas corpus, although it contain more than is necessary to be stated therein. The unnecessary matter will be regarded as surplusage. People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 12.

2. An attachment for contempt for disobedience of a mandamus will not issue, unless it appear affirmatively that the mandamus was sought to be enforced by some party. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 189.

3. When the relation subsisting between the parties be that of partners, and not that of principal and agent, an embezzlement of the copartnership property is not such a fraud as will warrant an arrest under the code. Soule v. Hayward, 1 Cal. 346.

4. A defendant cannot be arrested for fraudulent representations in obtaining money, when the representations were made some time after the money was obtained. Snow v. Halstead, 1 Cal. 361.

5. Where a party is once arrested and discharged he cannot be arrested again in the same action. Mc Gilvery v. Morehead, 2 Cal. 609.

6. As a matter of practice, it is safest to award an arrest, even in cases of doubt, for the defendant is protected by his bond from abuse by the process; without which process the plaintiff may be remediless. Southworth v. Resing, 3 Cal. 378.

7. Attendance upon any court as a witness, juror, or party, only exempts the person so in attendance from arrest in a civil action, but not from obeying any ordinary process of a court. Page v. Randall, 6 Cal. 33.

8. The provision of the civil code, "that the defendant may be arrested when the action is for willful injury to person or character," is directly in conflict with the constitution. Ex parte Prader, 6 Cal. 240.

9. If the plaintiff is about to leave the State, it is no reason to apply for an exercise of equity jurisdiction to protect the defendant's rights; he has his remedy by a writ of ne exeat. Bell v. Walsh, 7 Cal. 87.

II. AFFIDAVIT ON ARREST.

10. An affidavit, in pursuance of which a warrant is issued is defective, which contains allegations upon information and belief merely; and if it states no fact within the knowledge of the affiant, it can be of little weight in any legal proceeding. People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 11.

11. The defendant can only avail himself of any defect in the affidavit previous to his examination and final order of commitment. Ib.

12. An affidavit may set forth in positive terms as within the knowledge of the deponent the commission of the offense charged therein, and proceed upon information as to the names only of the persons who were guilty of the perpetration of them. Ib.

13. The preliminary evidence upon an application for a warrant of arrest may be, either by the affidavit of some person cognizant of the facts, or by his examination under oath, taken by the officer to satisfy the person to whom the application was made, that there is reason to believe that a felony or other crime has been actually committed, as also to prove the probability of suspecting the party against whom the warrant is prayed. Ib.

14. In an action to recover money secured by a person as agent, he cannot be arrested without the affidavit showing some fraudulent conduct on his part, or a demand on him for the money and a refusal to pay. Ex parte Holdforth, 1 Cal. 440.

15. The affidavit to sustain an arrest must show the facts relied upon by positive averment; and it is not sufficient to refer to the complaint or any other paper to show what the affidavit ought itself to disclose. Mc Gilvery v. Morehead, 2 Cal. 609.

16. To entitle a party to the remedy of arrest, it is not necessary that he should know positively the commission of a fraud. It is sufficient if the circumstances detailed would induce a reasonable belief that a fraud was intended. Southworth v. Resing, 3 Cal. 378.

17. An affidavit for a requisition for a fugitive from justice is sufficient, if it does charge the commission of a distinct offense, although it does not set forth the crime with all legal exactness necessary to be observed in an indictment. Ex parte Manchester, 5 Cal. 238.

18. Courts cannot go behind this affidavit to inquire whether it is a forgery or not, because the governor of the State who issues the requisition is the only proper judge of the authenticity of the paper. Ib.

19. Though the affidavit does not charge in sufficiently distinct words that the prisoner is "a fugitive from justice," yet it is sufficient if it allege that he committed a crime and then fled. Ib.

20. Insufficiency of the affidavit on which the writ of arrest issues cannot be set up in defense by third parties, nor even by the defendant himself, after judgment. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 59.

21. An affidavit for arrest which avers on information and belief that the defendant has been guilty of a fraud in the contracting of the debt, or in endeavoring to prevent its collection in the terms required by statute, and followed by an averment of the facts on which the belief is founded, also stated on information and belief, is sufficient. Ib.

22. Side issues upon affidavits are not issues upon which juries pass. The arrest upon affidavit is only intended to secure the presence of the defendant until final judgment, and in order to detain and imprison his person afterwards, the fraud must be alleged in the complaint, be passed upon by the jury, and be stated in the judgment. Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 412.

III. PLEADINGS.

23. For the furtherance of justice, courts should allow pleadings to be amended, so as to present a question of fraud to the jury when the defendant has been arrested, that the question may be submitted to the jury and a judgment be entered in conformity to the facts found. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 61; Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 412.

24. An order of arrest, made by the judge before the complaint in the action in which it is entitled is filed in court, is void. Until the suit is instituted there can be no defendant, consequently no authority under the statute to issue an order of arrest. Ex parte Cohen, 6 Cal. 320.

25. A complaint alleging that the defendant collected and received certain money, as the agent or attorney in fact of the plaintiff, and had embezzled and converted the money to his own use, and praying that he be adjudged guilty of a fraud and for judgment and execution against his person and property, is insufficient in this disjunctive form to sustain a verdict convicting the defendant of fraud. Porter v. Hermann, 8 Cal. 623.

IV. JUDGMENT.

26. The judgment should state the fraud affirmatively, for fraud being the gravamen of the arrest, it should be conclusively found before the debtor can be imprisoned or the bail charged. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 60; Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 412.

Liability of Bail.—Discharge from Arrest.

27. The writ of arrest is only an intermediate remedy or process to secure the presence of the party until final judgment, and that the facts on which it is based must be affirmatively found, and the fraud stated in the judgment, in order to authorize an arrest on final process. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 61; Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 412.

28. To authorize a judgment convicting the defendant of fraud, the facts upon which the charge is based must be specifically alleged in the complaint. Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 412.

V. LIABILITY OF BAIL.

29. Where a party offered to surrender himself in discharge of his sureties: held, to be a good surrender and a discharge of the sureties from all liability. Babb v. Oakley, 5 Cal. 94.

30. Final process must issue against the judgment debtor on arrest before the bail becomes finally charged; and in the absence of any other provision, it would probably be necessary that a ca. sa. should issue, and be returned non est inventus, before the bail would be liable. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 60.

31. The sureties on the bail bond of a defendant arrested in a civil action are not bound to surrender the defendant within ten days after judgment against him, if no execution be issued against him. A surrender within the ten days after the issuance of an execution is good. The ten days are computed from the issuance of the execution, not from the rendition of the judgment. Allen v. Breslauer, 8 Cal. 554.

See BAIL.

VI. DISCHARGE FROM ARREST.

32. A person will be discharged on arrest when the process, though proper in form, has been issued in a case not allowed by law. Soule v. Hayward, 1 Cal. 347.

33. On a rule to show cause why the arrest of a party, ordered by the court on the allegation of fraud, should not be vacated, the question of fact involved in it must be decided like any other fact, by weight of evidence. Southworth v. Resing, 3 Cal. 378.

34. The defendant on arrest, by putting in bail and neglecting to move to be discharged, consents to process and waives all irregularity in this respect. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 59.

See BAIL.

ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

1. The defect, that there was no right of action in the plaintiff, would be fatal on motion in arrest of judgment. Sublette v. Melhado, 1 Cal. 106.

2. Courts of equity will not interfere to enjoin a judgment not manifestly wrong, simply because of a defect in the evidence; the remedy is by appeal or motion to vacate the judgment. Pico v. Sunol, 6 Cal. 295.

3. The defects in an indictment are not cured by verdict, but may be taken advantage of on motion to arrest the judgment. People v. Wallace, 9 Cal. 30.

4. Where a defendant was served with process, but was not given the time allowed by law to appear and answer, it would be a sufficient reason for the court to quash the writ on motion by an amicus curiæ, or for extension of the time on defendant's motion, or a good objection on writ of error in arrest of judgment, or on motion for a new trial; but it cannot be said that the court has no jurisdiction of the person so as to make its judgment a nullity. Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 64.

5. The court in which a void judgment is rendered, can, on motion, at any time arrest all process issued by its clerk thereon. Chipman v. Bowman, 14 Cal. 158.

ARSON.

1. An indictment which charges the accused of the crime of arson in this, that on a certain day, etc., "he did burn, or cause to be burned, a certain dwelling house," is not sufficient, because the charge is laid in the alternative, whereas it should be special, and does not set forth the facts and circumstances of the alleged offense, so that the accused may be prepared for his defense. People v. Hood, 6 Cal. 238. See CRIMINAL LAW.

ASSAULT.

1. Where a defendant was indicted for an assault with intent to commit murder, and the jury found a verdict of guilty of an assault with intent to do bodily injury: held, that the verdict only found the prisoner guilty of an assault and not of a felony. People v. Vanard, 6 Cal. 562.

2. The weapon or instrument with which the assault is committed constitutes the gist of the felony, as distinguishing the act from an ordinary assault, and should, therefore, be alleged and found. Ib. 563.

3. The owner of property, in the possession of the same, has a right to use so much force as is necessary to prevent a forcible trespass. People v. Payne, 8 Cal. 343; People v. Honshell, 10 Cal. 87.

4. In a prosecution for an assault with an intent to commit murder, where the prosecuting witness was asked, on cross examination, if he did not, previous to the assault, buy a pistol to use upon the defendant, to which he answered in the affirmative; it was competent for the prosecuting attorney to ask the witness to state his reasons for so doing; and his answer, that he was induced to do so by what he was informed by a third person that the defendant had said, was competent to show the motive of the witness. People v. Shea, 8 Cal. 538.

5. The drawing of a pistol on another, accompanied by a threat to use it unless the other immediately leave the spot, is an assault, although the pistol is not pointed at the person threatened. It is sufficient to justify the jury in finding an assault with intent to commit bodily injury. People v. McMakin, 8 Cal. 548.

6. Where the defendant was indicted for the crime of an "assault with a deadly weapon with the intent to inflict great bodily injury," and the jury found him "guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon:" held, that it was an error in the court to sentence the prisoner to two years in the State prison. People v. Wilson, 9 Cal. 260.

7. On an indictment for an assault with intent to commit murder, defendant plead guilty to an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit bodily injury, and upon this plea, was adjudged to pay a fine of $1,200, or be imprisoned in the county jail. Defendant appeals: held, that the supreme court has no jurisdiction of the appeal, the offense for which defendant was punished being a misdemeanor only, and not a felony. People v. Cornell, 6 Cal. 188.

See ASSAULT AND BATTERY, CRIMINAL LAW.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

1. The recorder of San Francisco has the right to punish for the crime of assault and battery, as fixed by the act of April 18th, 1850. People v. Ah King, 4 Cal. 307.

2. An assault and battery is not a case of fraud, in the sense that that term is employed in the constitution, nor can it be so made by the legislature. Ex parte Prader, 6 Cal. 240.

3. A party cannot be imprisoned, under a judgment for injury to person in a civil action, for assault and battery; a judgment for damages, in such a case, is as much a debt as though recovered in an action of assumpsit. Ib.

ASSENT.

1. A decree fairly entered, with the assent of an attorney, is as binding upon the client as a decree entered after resistance. Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 201.

2. If an attorney assents to a decree, the assent need not be made in open court by words spoken by the attorney. It may as well be made by stipulation out of court. Ib.

3. When a decree is entered with the assent of the attorney, it is no ground of error that the decree embraces land not in the complaint; and even if error, the remedy is by appeal. Ib. 202.

4. It is not necessary that all the trustees of an assignment should assent to act as such. The presumption is of assent; and the assent of one is enough to give effect to the trust, though the rest expressly repudiate. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 288.

ASSESSMENT.

- I. By a Private Corporation.
- II. By a Municipal Corporation.

I. BY A PRIVATE CORPORATION.

1. In a suit brought by one of the partners of a mining claim against the company, to recover his share, which had been sold for an alleged nonpayment of assessment, and also to recover his proportionate share of the gold taken out by the said company, the district court had jurisdiction. Schuepler v. Evans, 4 Cal. 212.

2. Where the tenant in common or partner goes away and remains absent from the premises, leaving his associates in possession, it creates no presumption of abandonment; nor does his refusal to pay or delay in paying the expenses of the business or the assessments, create of itself a forfeiture. Waring v. Crow, 11 Cal. 372.

tematically disregarding the by-laws, keeping no account of receipts and expenditures, failing to pay their own assessments, without any excuse: held, that a stockholder may sue in equity for an account, making the corporation and said trustees alone parties—no objection being taken that all the stockholders were not parties—and the trustees will be compelled to make good any loss occasioned by their negligence or improper conduct in failing to collect the assessments. Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 151.

II. BY A MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

4. The common council of the city of San Francisco had no authority, under the charter of 1850, to impose a penalty of one per cent. a day for the nonpayment of an assessment. Weber v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 456.

5. Where an assessment is laid upon property, it is not necessary or proper for a court to interfere by a decree, rendered in an injunction suit, to restrain the collection of the assessment, or to order a sale of the premises; the municipality should be left to make the amount of the assessment in the ordinary way. Ib.

6. An assessment was laid for the purpose of improving a street, and thereby benefiting the property of the plaintiff, in common with the property of other persons owning lots on the same street; and after the work was completed, and the benefit possible derived from it, the plaintiff can claim to be exempt from the assessment, on the ground of irregularities in the mode of making the assessment. Ib. 457.

7. The act of May 4th, 1852, "to incorporate the town of Oakland," confers no power of taxation directly, but leaves it to be derived from the general act of March 27th, 1850; and an assessment greater than provided in the latter is illegal and void. Hays v. Hogan, 5 Cal. 242.

8. Commissioners of street assessments were bound by the municipal charter at the proper time to make the proper assessment, and so apportion the expense among the property holders, in proportion to the advantages respectively derived by each from the improvement. It is the duty of the mayor to see that all the officers did their duty. Lucas v. City of San Francisco, 7 Cal. 473.

9. Where a claim to a tract of land under a Mexican grant somewhere within a certain larger tract was ascertained, and the land segregated by a survey, under a decree of confirmation by the United States supreme court: held, that the land became immediately taxable, and that an assessment thereof will be presumed to have been made after the survey, where the time allowed by law for the assessment extended to a day four days after the survey. Palmer v. Boling, 8 Cal. 389.

10. Where a general repealing statute is passed, and on the next day a supplementary act is passed excepting certain counties from the operation of the repeal to a certain extent: held, that the case was a special one, and there being no doubt of the true intention of the legislature, the supplemental act must be regarded as a part of the repealing act, and must be given the same effect as if passed on the same day. So held in the construction of the act of April 29, 1857, repealing the then existing law concerning all sheriffs as tax collectors, and requiring them to turn over the assessment rolls to their successors, taken in connection with the act of April 30, excepting certain counties from the operation of the repealing law of the day previous. Manlove v. White, 8 Cal. 377.

11. The acts of the officer making the assessment must be presumed to be in conformity with the law until the contrary is shown. Ib.

12. The listing and valuation of real estate for the purpose of taxation is an essential prerequisite to the validity of all subsequent proceedings. It is from the list made by the assessor when duly corrected by equalization, that the auditor prepares the duplicate, which gives to the officer his authority to demand the tax, and to levy and sell the property of the delinquent. Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 633.

13. A protest against an assessment for opening and grading a street must be presented within the time allowed by law, and must show affirmatively that it is signed by the requisite number of the property holders to make it effectual.

Burnett v. City of Sacramento, 12 Cal. 82.

14. The constitutional provision "that there shall be equality and uniformity of taxation upon property," does not refer to special assessments for local improvements by which individual parties are chiefly benefited in the increased value of their property, and in which the public is only to a limited extent interested. Ib. 83.

15. The injustice of general taxation for local purposes has led to the substitution of street assessments, and it seems impossible to deny that in theory they are more equitable than general taxation, for the purposes they are designed for. Ib. 84.

16. Taking the third section of the act of 1858, together with the first section, it is evident that the intention of the legislature in the passage of the act of 1858 was to substitute the assessment roll for the delinquent list required by the act of 1857, or rather, to give full and complete effect to that list as a valid warrant for the collection of the taxes therein mentioned, and then to provide, as is done in section three of that act, for their collection. Moore v. Patch, 12 Cal. 271.

17. An assessment must be made in order to create a liability on the part of the individual to pay the tax. If no such assessment be made, no liability is created, and of course there can be no default in discharging that which has no existence. Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 617.

18. The assessment must be as certain in designating the person chargeable with the tax at the commencement of the fiscal year, as it must be in designating the amount of the charge, and the property to which reference is made for the purpose of ascertaining such amount. Ib.

19. An assessment of land on "balance of land on rancho Arroyo de San Antonio, ten thousand and ninety acres, at four dollars per acre, forty thousand three hundred and sixty dollars," it appearing on the roll that the part of the ranch not assessed was comprehended within the plot of a town, certain lots in which were assessed on the same list to the same owner, is sufficient. Patten v. Green, 13 Cal. 328.

20. If the board raised the tax without proper notice to the owner, their action is void, and the assessment remains in full force. Ib. 329.

By a Municipal Corporation.

21. A flume, although not delivered to the company by plaintiff, the contractor, until after the assessment, was the property of the company at the time of assessment; taxable to it, and not to the contractor. Ib. 156.

22. An assessment of property as "a ranch commonly known as 'Clark's ranch,' situated on the Auburn road, two miles south of Grass Valley, in Nevada county, State of California," is insufficient, and a deed, on a sale under it, is void. Lachman v. Clark, 14 Cal. 133.

23. If the value of the property be rightly fixed by the assessor, the assessment is valid, though that value was arrived at in a way different from that pointed out by the statute. If an assessor cannot find the persons to be taxed, he may nevertheless assess their property. Hart v. Plum, 14 Cal. 154.

24. The provision that the assessment must be made on or before a certain day, is directory, and an assessment may be made afterwards. Ib. 155.

25. An assessment thus: "Mortgages, (Marysville,) $100,000," is insufficient under the act. The assessment does not show for what the mortgages were given, nor on what property, nor whether the debts were solvent, nor the value of the property mortgaged; and the sole fact that a mortgage is held for a given amount does not make the mortgage subject to taxation as for so much money. Falkner v. Hunt, 16 Cal. 171.

26. An assessment thus: "Personal property—mortgages (Marysville,) $100,000," is not good as an assessment of personal property, independent of the term "mortgages," on the ground that the act requires no description of personal property to be given, but its value only. The whole statement must be taken together, and that shows "mortgages" to be taxed, and they are not subject to taxation as such. Ib. 172.

27. Under this act, a lumping assessment of "personal property" is bad. Every item of taxable property need not be listed, but the different classes named in the act should be stated—as goods, money loaned, gold dust, solvent debts. Ib.

28. The common council of the city of San Francisco passed an ordinance authorizing the street commissioner to advertise for proposals to grade, plank and sewer a portion of Mission street, in said city, the same to be paid for by the property holders adjacent * * the proposals to be opened and awarded by the street commissioner, with the committees on streets from both boards of aldermen." This ordinance was published for ten days successively in a daily newspaper of the city, and the advertisement required was made in like manner for the same period. Proposals, based upon certain specifications, were received under the ordinance, and opened by the committees of the two boards and the commissioner, and the work awarded to B. Subsequently an instrument was executed by B., as contractor, and by the street commissioner, purporting to act in the name of the city, setting forth the acceptance by the city of B.'s proposal, and an agreement by her to pay him for the work at certain designated rates, and an agreement on his part to do the work to the satisfaction of the city and the street commissioner. B. began the work, and afterwards transferred his contract and his interest therein to plaintiff, who completed the work in the best manner, and to the satisfaction of the street commissioner and the city. The work was measured as it progressed by the city's engineer, who duly certified to the accounts for the same, which accounts were duly audited, and upon them warrants were drawn by the controller, by authority of the city, and delivered to plaintiff. The warrants were presented to the treasury and payment demanded and refused, on the ground that there were no funds in the treasury applicable to them. Previous to the demand, assessments had been duly levied by the city upon the property adjacent to the improvements, to meet their expenses, and these assessments had been collected by the collector of street assessments, and by him paid into the city treasury. Plaintiff sues the city, as liable either on the express contract or upon the warrants, or upon implied contracts, for the services rendered and materials furnished, or for money received by defendant to his use: held, that, as under the charter, the city had authority to order the improvements in question, the acceptance of the proposals of B. by the street commissioner and the committees of the two boards converted what were previously mere propositions on the part of the city into contracts, perfect in all their parts, binding alike upon the city and the contractor. Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 281.

29. Held, further, that the city is primarily liable; that she, and not the contractor, must look to the property holders adjacent to the improvements for the necessary expenses; that the property holders are not parties to the contracts; that the city must levy and collect the assessments; that the contractor has no claim upon the property or the property holders, but must look alone to the city; that the clause in the ordinance as to how the improvements shall be paid for, is only a designation of the sources upon which the city relies for payment. Ib. 281.

30. In this case, the city having discharged the assessments by receiving in payment thereof outstanding warrants, she is primarily liable to plaintiff as for moneys received to his use, even on the theory that she acted simply as the agent of the plaintiff in collecting the assessments. Ib. 281.

31. The improvements in this case—being to particular streets—were local in their character, and though to some extent of general benefit, yet were chiefly for the benefit and advantage of the immediate neighborhood. The advantages resulting from them do not constitute that kind of general advantage to the city from the existence of which any liability to pay for the same can be inferred. The general doctrine that when one takes a benefit which is the result of another's labor he is bound to pay for the same, does not apply to cases of this kind. The benefit is immediate to the adjacent property holders, and only indirectly to the city at large. Ib. 283.

32. Though a man can only be made to pay a tax according to law, that law may be made as well at one time as another, or by one series of acts as another, and as well after an informal assessment, or no assessment, as before. People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 344.

33. The act of 1860, authorizing suit to be brought for the unpaid taxes of the years 1858 and 1859 in the city and county of Sacramento, and prohibiting the defendants from setting up in defense any informality in the levy or assessment of the tax, and making duly certified copies of the delinquent tax list, or the original or duplicate assessment rolls, evidence of the delinquency of the property assessed, of the amount of taxes due and unpaid, and that all the forms of law in relation to the levy and assessment have been complied with, is constitutional. Ib.

34. Such a law, making the assessment prima facie proof, merely affects the remedy, and is not therefore liable to any constitutional objection. Ib.

ASSESSOR.

1. Where the account of a deputy assessor for $1,650 was audited and allowed by the board of supervisors and ordered to be paid in the following words: "Ordered, the sum of four thousand one hundred and twenty-five dollars to be paid out of the fund for current expenses, to equal sixteen hundred and fifty dollars in cash, at the rate of forty cents per dollar, October 29, 1856," and, in pursuance of such order, the county auditor drew his warrant for $4,125 upon the treasurer, and delivered it to the deputy assessor, who presented it to the treasurer, and by him it was endorsed and registered in its order of presentation among the legal warrants against the county: held, that the order was made without authority and was void, and the fact that the market or cash value of county warrants was only forty per cent. of the nominal amount, and the object of the action of the board was to give that which was at the time an equivalent to cash, did not justify the action of the board. Foster v. Coleman, 10 Cal. 281.

2. Assessors and tax collectors are constitutional officers; but it is not necessary, under the thirteenth section of article 11 of the constitution, that every portion of the revenue pass through their hands. People v. Squires, 14 Cal. 18.

I. FORM OF AN ASSIGNMENT.

1. An assignment of an account by the endorsement of the word "assigned," signed by the owner of the account, is sufficient. Ryan v. Maddux, 6 Cal. 248.

2. There is no error in permitting a party to fill up an assignment which of itself is sufficient; the additional words may be treated as surplusage. Ib.

II. IN GENERAL.

3. The consideration of the assignment of a personal chattel or chose in action may be proven by parol, and a different one established from that expressed in the instrument. Bennett v. Solomon, 6 Cal. 138.

4. A cause of action arising out of tort is not assignable. Oliver v. Walsh, 6 Cal. 456.

5. It is not necessary, in order to grant relief from a fraudulent assignment, and to set the same aside, that the assignee should have been a party to the fraud. Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 486.

6. And if the assignee, though innocent of the fraud, has, by a misplaced confidence, allowed his assignor to be his agent for the sale of property assigned, and convert the proceeds, he is liable; if he acted in complicity with fraud, he is of course liable. Ib.

7. The good faith of the assignment being questioned, evidence going to show a previous pledge of the fraud is admissible. McEwen v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 261.

8. A written assignment is not valid where it was never delivered to the plaintiff; the mere act of signing the assignment, without a delivery, is insufficient. Ritter v. Stevenson, 7 Cal. 389.

9. An assignment to a receiver in a suit to dissolve a copartnership cannot operate so as to prevent a creditor of the firm from pursuing his remedy at law, before decree, and thereby acquiring a preference or lien upon the partnership assets. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 198; Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 156; 9 Cal. 26; Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 456.

10. Where a negotiable promissory note not yet due is taken bona fide as collateral for a preëxisting debt, it is not subject to any defense existing at the date of the assignment between the original parties. Payne v. Bensley, 8 Cal. 266; Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 98; Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 454.

11. A creditor has not the right to assign the debt in parcels, and thus, by splitting up the cause of action, subject his debtor to the costs and expenses of more suits than the parties originally contemplated. Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 536.

12. A promise of a party that he would not assign the contract to any one, made without consideration, does not bind him, and is in fraud of his rights. California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 591.

13. A defense to a note, that it was made payable to order, and was altered and fraudulently made payable to bearer, and that the defendant paid the note before the plaintiff became assignee of it, and that the plaintiff became assignee after the note was due, is good and valid. Sherman v. Rollberg, 11 Cal. 41.

14. A chose in action, not negotiable, created by the immediate parties for the purpose of defrauding creditors, cannot be impeached in the hands of an innocent assignee by the creditors of the debtors making the chose in action. Wright v. Levy, 12 Cal. 262.

15. L. executed and delivered his note to N. without consideration, and for the purpose of defrauding, hindering and delaying his creditors. N. had knowledge of the fraud, and attached L.'s property in an action on the note. Then W., a creditor of L., also attached L.'s property. Before judgment, N. assigned the note to J., who was an innocent purchaser: held, that J. was not protected in his purchase. N. having been superseded by W.'s attachment, could not by any act or deed of his put his assignee in any better position than he occupied himself. Ib. 263.

16. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a conveyance or assignment, absolute on its face, was intended as a mortgage. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 124; Johnson v. Sherman, 15 Cal. 290, overruling Lee v. Evans, 8 Cal. 425, and Low v. Henry, 9 Cal. 548.

17. B. and D. contracted to furnish to G. and S., also defendants, twenty-five thousand gallons of turpentine, to be distilled by the latter. The contract was to end, April 1st, 1857. B. and D. were not bound to deliver all the turpentine at once, nor any given quantity per day. Damages for nondelivery of turpentine fixed at $3750, or fifteen cents per gallon. For accident to distillery, reasonable time to be allowed G. and S. for repairs. Distillery burned last of January, 1857, requiring eighteen days to rebuild. In January and March, 1857, G. and S., respectively, assigned their interest in the contract to plaintiff: held, that the benefit of the suspension of the work by the fire, inured to B. and D., as well as to G. and S.; that the time for the performance of the contract was extended for the eighteen days; that up to April 18th, 1851, G. and S. would be bound to receive turpentine; and even if the assignment, before this time, did not put it out of their power to comply with their contract, at least the assignee could not sue before the expiration of the extended time. Jackson v. Beers, 14 Cal. 193.

18. Plaintiff contracts to dig a ditch for a water company, the company agreeing to pay three dollars per rod—one-third of it in money, on the completion of each mile—the other two-thirds to be paid in water, at the rate of twenty-five cents per square inch, delivered through an orifice under six inches of pressure, any where along and at the main ditch; the company having the right of paying the two-thirds in cash, instead of water, if they so elect. Plaintiff having assigned this contract to L. & Co., as security for a debt due them by plaintiff, they demanded of the company payment of whatever was coming to plaintiff. The company elected to pay, and did pay, in cash, on a statement as of so much due in money: held, that even if L. & Co. had no right to receive money instead of water, yet the payment binds plaintiff, for they were acting ostensibly for him, or by his authority; that if he denied their authority, the payment would not discharge his debt to L. & Co., the assignment would remain in force, and the plaintiff would have no cause of action here; that if he affirmed the arrangement made by L. & Co., in part, he must give full effect to it, and thus confirm the settlement, as the liquidation of a money demand. If the company paid L. & Co. more than was due them from plaintiff, he must look to L. & Co. The assignment being general, L. & Co. were authorized to receive the entire amount, and became trustees of plaintiff for the excess. Myers v. South Feather River Water Co., 14 Cal. 277.

19. Plaintiff assigns to defendant, September 22d, two shares of stock in a mining company, stating in the assignment: "I authorize the transfer to him (defendant) with all the dividends made after the morning of the twenty-third of September." Both parties expected a dividend on Monday, the twenty-second. The trustees did not, in fact, declare dividends until between noon and one o'clock, on Tuesday: held, that the dividends belong to plaintiff; and that parol evidence was admissible to explain the transaction, and point its meaning. Brewster v. Lathrop, 15 Cal. 22.

20. Plaintiff delivered to defendants gold dust, to be by them forwarded to San Francisco, to be there coined and returned. The dust belonged to five persons, partners in mining, of whom plaintiff and C. were two. While the dust was in the hands of the defendants, C. sold to plaintiff, for a valuable consideration, his interest in it, and gave a receipt evidencing the sale. Defendants, after this, received coin made of the dust, and a creditor of C. attached the coin, by garnisheeing defendants. Defendants had no notice of the sale to plaintiff until the day after the attachment, when plaintiff demanded C.'s share of the coin: held, that plaintiff was entitled to the coin; that the dust in defendants' hands was in the constructive possession of all the five owners, C. having no exclusive interest in any part until it was converted into coin, and divided among the owners; that C.'s right in the dust was a chose in action, which he could assign by order in favor of the purchaser or assignee, and after such order, neither C. nor his creditors could claim any right to the money; that the statute of frauds has no application to a case like this. A garnishment does not give the creditor precedence over assignees of the fund, when the assignment is prior to the service of the garnishment. Walling v. Miller, 15 Cal. 40.

21. Parol proof of a written contract, and assignment thereof in writing, is not admissible, so as to charge the assignee, without notice, to produce the original, or account for its loss. Grimes v. Fall, 15 Cal. 65.

1. Of a Mortgage.

22. The purchaser of a mortgage cannot be charged with constructive notice of anything subsequent to the mortgage, except its assignment or satisfaction, duly entered of record; and a deed from the mortgagee to a third party, for the conveyance of the mortgaged premises, does not operate as an assignment of the mortgage. Peters v. Jamestown Bridge Co., 5 Cal. 336.

23. Where a party cancels a mortgage, and executes a new one, the last mortgagees are, in equity, assignees of the debt paid, and will be subrogated to the rights of the assignors; for in equity, the substance of the transaction would be an assignment of the old mortgage, in consideration of the money advanced. Dillon v. Byrne, 5 Cal. 456; Birrell v. Schie, 9

Cal. 107; Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 385; Swift v. Kraemer, 13 Cal. 530.

24. A mortgage is a mere incident to the debt which it secures, and follows the transfer of the note with full effect of a regular assignment. Peters v. Jamestown Bridge Co., 5 Cal. 336; Bennett v. Taylor, 5 Cal. 502; Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. 516; Bennett v. Solomon, 6 Cal. 138; Phelan v. Olney, 6 Cal. 483; Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 125; McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 411; Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal. 428; Hickox v. Lowe, 10 Cal. 206; Kock v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 263.

25. Where two notes are secured by a mortgage, and a purchaser of the second note takes therewith an assignment of the mortgage, he takes with notice of the equity of the holder of the first note, as he was informed of its existence by the mortgage itself. Phelan v. Olney, 6 Cal. 483.

26. When the holder of the second note and assignee of the mortgage entered a discharge of the mortgage, and took a new security, the discharge was valid as to him, and divested his lien under the mortgage, though void as to the holder of the note. Ib.

27. An assignment operating by its terms as a present and effectual change of ownership in the subject matter, the title is supposed, in law, to remain divested, until it be affirmatively shown that the condition of defeasance has happened. It is not unlike a chattel mortgage, which conveys the thing mortgaged, with power of use until the money secured is paid; and until payment is proven, all the right of the mortgagor to the mortgaged property passes to the mortgagee. Myers v. South Feather W. Co., 10 Cal. 583.

28. Where an assignment of a note and mortgage has been made to the plaintiffs, to indemnify them as sureties on a bail bond for the assignor, and where suit is then proceeding on such bond, it is proper for them, as such assignees, to institute suit on the note and mortgage; and a decree of foreclosure of such case, with directions to pay the money into court to await the further decree of the court, is proper, or at least, there is no error in such decree to the prejudice of the defendants. Hunter v. Leran, 11 Cal. 12.

29. R. assigned a mortgage to F. made by a company to secure him as guarantor delivering the mortgage at the same time to F., who retained it a few minutes, and returned it to R., to receive the interest from the company as his agent. The note guaranteed is unpaid. R. owes the company nothing: held, that after the assignment R. had no interest in the mortgage which a judgment creditor could reach; that the delivery of the mortgage to R. for the purpose of collecting interest, there being no circumstance of fraud or suspicion, did not impair the rights of the assignee; that the liability of F. as guarantor was a sufficient consideration for the assignment; and that such assignment is not a mortgage of a mortgage. Hall v. Redding, 13 Cal. 219.

30. A married woman cannot make an assignment of a mortgage without the concurrence of her husband. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 493.

2. Of a Lease.

31. It is questionable whether a breach of a covenant not to assign a lease would be enforced so as to produce a forfeiture. It is in restraint of alienation, and therefore against the policy of the law. Chipman v. Emeric, 5 Cal. 51.

32. The assignment of a lease as collateral security for the payment of a debt does not vest the estate in the assignee until a breach of the agreement; and an assignee is only entitled to the reversion by privity of estate, or the actual occupation and beneficial enjoyment. Engles v. McKinlay, 5 Cal. 154.

33. A conveyance by a lessee of the remainder of his unexpired term, though it employs words ordinarily used in a demise, and contains a reservation of rent, and the right of reëntury upon covenants broken, is not an underletting or sublease, but is considered in law as an assignment of his whole interest, as there remains in him no reversion of the estate. Smiley v. Van Winkle, 6 Cal. 606.

34. The valuable privilege of preëmption attached to a lease belongs to the whole property, and is therefore assignable. Laffan v. Naglee, 9 Cal. 677.

35. The assignee of a lease may discharge himself from all liability under the covenants of the lease by assigning over; and the assignment over may be to a beggar, or a femme covert, or a person on the eve of quitting the country forever, provided the assignment be executed before his departure; and even though a premium be given as an inducement to accept the transfer. Johnson v. Sherman, 15 Cal. 292; People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 25.

36. If some of the covenants of the lease do not bind the assignee, the State cannot have relief on that ground; she can claim no greater exemption than an individual from the consequences of an unwise contract. State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 457; People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 25.

37. The act of March, 1856, having authorized the commissioners to execute a lease of the State prison, without prescribing any specific form, or containing any restrictions as to assigning; and the lease being in its terms assignable, and no objections to this form of contract having been made at the time, it is too late to interpose them after the contract has been acted upon on both sides, and thus adopted and approved. The personal liability of the assignor continued after his assignment. The security of his bond was not impaired thereby. State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 457; People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 25.

3. Of a Contract.

38. Where a party alleges an assignment to him of a contract made with another, he must aver a positive transfer and the character of it. Stearns v. Martin, 4 Cal. 229.

39. An assignment of a contract as security for a debt, and also in consideration of a covenant not to sue upon the debt, entitles the assignee to sue on the contract in his own name. Warner v. Wilson, 4 Cal. 314.

40. A plaintiff, the assignee in good faith for a valuable consideration of an invoice of goods, who demanded the same and tendered the balance of the purchase money in a reasonable time, can recover the value of the goods and need not notify the vendor of the assignment. Morgan v. Lowe, 5 Cal. 326.

41. A contract not to run boats on a certain line of travel, and on failure to comply with such contract to pay $15,000, is an instrument in writing and assignable by our laws. California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 261; 8 Cal. 592.

42. A principal would be responsible for everything that an agent was permitted to do in his own name before the assignment of a contract; provided the defendant was ignorant of the fact that the contract was made for the benefit of the principal. Osborn v. Hendrickson, 7 Cal. 285; Cal. Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 591.

43. An agreement to pay a certain sum of money to a defendant, if he would withdraw his defense to a suit, is assignable, and such assignment gives a right of action in the name of the assignee. Gray v. Garrison, 9 Cal. 328.

44. Plaintiff made a written contract with the defendants to dig for them a certain mining ditch, to be paid for by the defendants in a specified manner. Plaintiff dug the ditch and subsequently assigned his interest in the contract to L. & Co., to secure them certain payments due, and authorized them to receive the amounts due on the contract until their debt was paid. L. & Co. gave defendants notice of this assignment and the defendants made several payments thereon: held, that plaintiff had no right to demand payment himself, or sue upon the contract, while this assignment was outstanding. Myers v. South Feather Water Co., 10 Cal. 582.

45. Equity upholds assignments, not only of choses in action, but of contingent interests and expectations, and of things which have no actual existence, but vest in possibility; provided they are fairly made and are not against public policy; and a contract for such interest will take effect as an assignment when the subjects to which they refer have ceased to vest in possibility and have ripened into reality. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 123.

46. B. & D. contracted to furnish G. & S.—also defendants—twenty-five thousand gallons of turpentine, to be distilled by the latter. The contract was to end April 1st, 1857. B. & D. were not bound to deliver all the turpentine at once, nor any given quantity per day. Damages for nondelivery of turpentine fixed at $3,750, or fifteen cents per gallon. For accident to distillery, reasonable time to be allowed G. & S. for repairs. Distillery burned last of January, 1857, requiring eighteen days to rebuild. In January and March, 1857, G. & S. respectively assigned their interest in the contract to plaintiff: held, that the benefit of the suspension of the works by the fire inured to B. & D. as well as to G. & S.; that the time for performance of the contract was extended for the eighteen days; that up to April 18th, 1857, G. & S. would be bound to receive turpentine, and even if the assignment before this time did not put it out of their power to comply with their contract, at least the assignee could not sue before the expiration of the extended time. Jackson v. Beers, 14 Cal. 193.

4. Of a Judgment.

47. Where A received an assignment of stock in a corporation, and the stock was subsequently attached under a judgment against the vendor, and afterwards the stock was regularly transferred to A, who then obtained an assignment of the judgment under which the stock was attached: held, that the assignment of the judgment at once merged the lien of the higher right, and that A, as regarded third parties, became the absolute owner of the stock. Strout v. Natoma W. and M. Co., 8 Cal. 80.

48. The objection that the judgment was assigned before filing the bill, is answered by the fact that upon the record the assignment is admitted to have been fraudulent, and certainly the defendants can claim nothing in a court of equity by reason of such an assignment. Russell v. Conway, 11 Cal. 103.

49. An administrator for a foreign estate has the right to assign for a valuable consideration a judgment obtained there by the intestate in his lifetime, and against a person who has since removed to this State. Low v. Burrows, 12 Cal. 189.

50. The assignee of a judgment is only the holder of an equity, with the right to use the judgment and the name of the plaintiff to enforce it, and stands in the shoes of the assignor as to all the defenses which existed against the judgment be tween the parties to it. Wright v. Levy, 12 Cal. 262.

51. Plaintiff in execution, after assigning his judgment, pretended, falsely and fraudulently, to be the owner of it, and so pretending, made a contract to discharge the judgment by taking the note of third persons not negotiable, in the mercantile sense, in payment. The makers of the note agreed to this under the supposition, induced by him, that he was the owner: held, that the makers of the note, on discovering that the plaintiff was not the owner of the judgment, properly refused to pay the note, even to assignees, before maturity thereof. Mitchell v. Hackett, 14 Cal. 665.

52. An assignee of a judgment, and of the sheriff's certificate of a sale thereunder, stands in the same position as his assignor, the plaintiff, after the judgment has been reversed, and the sale will be set aside and the property restored to the defendant, where no loss or injury will be done to the assignee. Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 681.

5. Of Covenants or rights to Land.

53. The assignment of a covenant to convey will not deprive the land of the lien; it is wholly controlled by the lien, and falls whenever it comes into conflict with it. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 287.

54. Where an assignment does not in terms convey real estate, and cannot be fairly construed to do so, it is inadmissible to prove a conveyance previous to a given date, and the equitable ownership of the land. Lord v. Sherman, 2 Cal. 502.

55. The transfer of a bond for title to land, upon a promise by the assignee to pay a certain debt of the assignor, binds the assignee to perform the trust, and the obligation to pay the debt is not affected by any misrepresentations made by the assignor to the assignee, because the rights of the creditor under the transfer had already vested. Connelly v. Peck, 6 Cal. 353.

56. Nor is the obligation of the assignee affected by the fact that the land was partnership property of the assignor and assigned where it was not so held out to the world, and where the partnership was unknown to the creditor. Ib.

57. Where the assignee was a commercial firm and the assignment was made to an agent acting as the trustee of the firm, and the agent obtained from the obligor in the bond a deed for the land to the members of the firm, and subsequently the firm sold the land to their successors in business, constituting a new firm of which some of the old firm were members: held, that purchasers are chargeable with notice of the trust. Ib.

58. The right to a præemption is not assignable, but may be mortgaged. Whitney v. Buckman, 13 Cal. 539.

6. Of an Account.

59. Where an account is verbally assigned to a creditor as a security to pay a debt from the proceeds and return the surplus, the assignment is void, and the assignee cannot sue thereupon in his own name. Ritter v. Stevenson, 7 Cal. 389; 11 Cal. 27.

60. The mere signing an assignment of an account, without delivery, is insufficient to pass a title. Ib.

III. EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT.

61. An order drawn upon a defendant for an amount due from the defendant is a prima facie assignment of the debt due. Even if it was only for part of the debt, no one could make the obligation but the defendants. McEwen v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 260; Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 97; Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 408.

62. A party on whom an order is drawn for a certain fund is not unlike that of a party summoned as garnishee after receiving notice of an assignment, by his creditor, of the demand. Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 98; Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 408.

63. Between the parties, the assignee of equities stands in the place of his assignor, with no better rights; but as to the claim of third persons, the purchaser of an equity stands unaffected by fraud of which he is ignorant, expressly or constructively. Wright v. Levy, 12 Cal. 263.

For the benefit of Creditors.

64. An agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee that the land and its proceeds were to be held, not only as security for the debt due the latter, but for debts due third persons—as laborers on the land—operates as an equitable assignment of the surplus as soon as any exists which does not pass to the administrator of the mortgagee as general assets for the benefit of creditors at large, but is subject in his hands to the same trust which attached to it before the decease of the intestate. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 121.

65. Equity upholds assignments, not only of choses in action, but of contingent interests and expectations, and of things which have no present actual existence, but rest in probabilities, provided they are fairly made, and not against public policy; and an agreement for such interests will take effect, as such assignments, when the subjects to which they refer have ceased to rest in possibility, and have ripened into reality. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 123; Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 407.

66. An order in the following words: "Messrs. F. Huth & Co.: Please hold to the order of William Pope & Sons, of Boston, five hundred pounds sterling of insurance, effected on cargo of bark Elvira, and oblige, etc.," is an equitable assignment of the funds in the hands or to come into the hands of the drawees, to the payees. Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 407.

67. And the drawees, having notice of such assignment, are liable to the payees for the amount, without an express promise to pay it. Ib.

IV. FOR THE BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

68. The power given in an assignment to sell on credit, is presumptive evidence of a fraudulent intent to hinder and delay creditors. Billings v. Billings, 2 Cal. 113.

69. A voluntary assignment, executed for the benefit of creditors, is void if not in conformity with the insolvent statute of May 4th, 1852. Chever v. Hays, 3 Cal. 472; Groschen v. Page, 6 Cal. 139.

70. After a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, in order to enable the assignee to recover goods belonging to the assignor, from consignees holding the same under a claim for advances and commissions, the demand must be made in the name and by the authority of the assignee, accompanied by notice and evidence of such authority. A demand by the assignor and a refusal by the consignees will not enable the assignee to maintain his suit for a conversion. Griffin v. Alsop, 4 Cal. 408.

71. An assignment for the benefit of certain parties who have undertaken to guarantee the payment of such creditors of the assignor as consent to an extension of time or substitution of security, is void. Groschen v. Page, 6 Cal. 139.

72. A partial or special assignment is equally void as a general assignment, and being void because it delays and hinders creditors, as well as because it is against the policy of the statute, cannot be cured by the intervention of third parties who voluntarily assume to do that for the indulgent creditors which the debtor himself could not do. Id. 140.

73. Where a simple contract creditor filed a bill against the assignee of his debtor, not attacking the assignment, and merely praying for a distribution, and the plaintiff subsequently filed a supplemental bill, setting forth that in the meantime he had become a judgment creditor, and attacking the assignment for fraud, since discovered, and praying that it be set aside, and that the moneys in the hands of the assignee be appropriated to the plaintiffs' judgment: held, that it is no objection to the supplemental bill that it prays for a different relief, and fails to bring in all the other creditors, who are alleged by the defense to be entitled to a rateable distribution. Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 486.

74. A party being about to fail, can assign a bill of lading of goods to arrive, not yet paid for, to another, in trust, to devote the proceeds to the payment of the vendor, and such assignment is good against attaching creditors. Le Cacheux v. Cutter, 6 Cal. 519.

75. The object of the insolvent law, which provides that no assignment of an insolvent debtor, otherwise than as provided in that law, shall be legal and binding upon creditors, was to do away with all voluntary assignments by a debtor in failing circumstances. It was never intended to prevent an insolvent debtor from transferring his property directly to his creditor, either absolutely in payment of his debt, or as security by way of mortgage. Dana v. Stanfords, 10 Cal. 274.

76. A debtor has an undoubted right to convey all his property to one of his creditors, in satisfaction of his debt. The insolvent law was not intended to prohibit such a preference. Dana v. Stanfords, 10 Cal. 275; Morgenthau v. Harris, 12 Cal. 247; Wellington v. Sedgwick, 12 Cal. 474; Gladwin v. Gladwin, 13 Cal. 332.

77. To avoid an assignment, there must be a real design on the part of the debtor to prevent the application of his property, in whole or in part, to the satisfaction of his debts. A creditor violates no rule of law when he takes payment or security for his demand, though others are thereby deprived of all means of obtaining satisfaction of their own equally meritorious claims. Dana v. Stanfords, 10 Cal. 277.

78. From the very power which a man possesses over his own property, it follows that he can dispose of it in any manner he may see fit, which does not contravene the general policy of the law. Ib.

79. If a creditor is insolvent at the time of the assignment, the party contesting the validity of the assignment should affirmatively show such fact. The insolvency cannot be presumed from the language of the assignment. Morgenthau v. Harris, 12 Cal. 247.

80. To constitute an assignment void within the insolvent law, there must be a trust in favor of the assignor or third persons. Wellington v. Sedgwick, 12 Cal. 474.

81. Personal property beyond the limits of this State, assigned in trust to pay the creditors of the assignor, the assignor and assignee both residing at the time in the foreign jurisdiction where the property was, and possession being taken by the latter, vests in the assignee according to the lex loci; and his title will be maintained here against execution creditors of the assignor. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 276.

82. Such an assignment is not void as contravening our insolvent law. Ib.

83. Assignments of personal property in China, made there between citizens of the United States resident there, will be tested by the common law. Ib. 281.

84. Assignees of personal property assigned in China in trust for foreign creditors, among others, may be compelled by the American consular courts to execute the trust. Ib. 283.

85. An assignment of personal property in trust for creditors need not be delivered as a deed. The making of the trust and its acceptance are sufficient, especially if accompanied or followed by the possession of the property. Ib. 287.

86. As no conditions are imposed on the creditors of an assignment, an acceptance by them is presumed, upon the general principle that a party is presumed to assent to acts done for his benefit. Ib.

87. An assignment must be taken and the property administered in reference to and according to the rules of law prevailing in the place of contract; and one of the rules of equity jurisprudence is, that the individual property must go to the individual creditors, and firm assets must go to the firm creditors. Ib.

88. An assignment of assets or property in trust for creditors, of itself suggests specific and well defined obligations upon the trustees. Ib.

89. The want of a schedule of the property in an assignment, though sometimes regarded as a circumstance of fraud, will not of itself avoid the assignment. Ib. 288.

90. An assignment in trust for creditors to two firms jointly, and by the firm names simply, is good, and the acceptance of the trust by one of the trustees is sufficient. Ib.

91. After the assignee of property in trust for creditors takes possession, the title and trust become fixed and executed, and the assignment is not revocable. Ib.

92. One partner of a firm expressly or by implication sole manager, his copartners being absent at a great distance, may assign the firm property in trust for the benefit of creditors, if the assignment be necessary for their protection. Ib. 289.

93. If the trustee employ the partner assigning to aid them in winding up the concern, and pay him and allow his wife some furniture, etc., it is not proof of fraud in the assignment, there being no evidence that these benefits were promised at the time of the assignment. Ib.

Notice of Assignment.—When the Assignor may be a Witness.—When an Assignee may sue.

V. NOTICE OF ASSIGNMENT.

94. If the plaintiff was the assignee in good faith and for a valuable consideration of the goods in controversy, and demanded the same within a reasonable time after the arrival of the vessel, and tendered the balance of the purchase money, no notice of the assignment was necessary to charge the defendants. Morgan v. Lowe, 5 Cal. 326.

VI. WHEN THE ASSIGNOR MAY BE A WITNESS.

95. Where the plaintiff was the assignee of a claim, the written contract upon which it was founded having been destroyed by the assignor, before the assignment, it was error to admit the assignor as a witness to prove the contents of the written paper thus destroyed by him. Smith v. Truebody, 2 Cal. 347.

96. The assignor of a chose in action is incompetent as a witness for the assignee. Jones v. Post, 4 Cal. 15; Griffin v. Alsop, 4 Cal. 408; Allen v. Citizen's Steam Nav. Co., 6 Cal. 402; Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 321.

97. A substantial and a formal assignee stand upon the same ground; neither can introduce the assignor as a witness. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 321.

98. An assignor of an agreement to pay a certain sum of money to a defendant, if he would withdraw his defense to a suit, may be a witness for the assignee in an action on the agreement, as it is not for an unliquidated demand. Gray v. Garrison, 9 Cal. 328.

99. If in any case one partner can assign to another partner his interest in a firm claim, and then become a witness for him, he cannot when the claim is for goods sold and delivered, because this is an unliquidated demand within the practice act. Cravens v. Dewey, 13 Cal. 42.

100. Where goods are seized by the sheriff on an execution against G., and the owners of the goods so in the sheriff's hands assign them to plaintiff, who replevins them on the ground of fraud in the original sales, the assignors are competent witnesses for plaintiff. This is not assigning a chose in action, but a sale of specific goods. Coghill v. Boring, 15 Cal. 218.

VII. WHEN AN ASSIGNEE MAY SUE.

101. An assignment of a contract as security for a debt, and also in consideration of a covenant not to sue upon the debt, entitles the assignee to sue on the contract in his own name. Warner v. Wilson, 4 Cal. 313.

102. To enable the assignee of a judgment to sue on the appeal bond filed in the cause, he must have an assignment of the bond. Moses v. Thorne, 6 Cal. 88.

103. Where an account is verbally assigned to a creditor, with the understanding that, in case he collects it, he will credit his claim with a portion thereof, and return the balance to the assignor, but if nothing is received, no sum is to be credited, the assignment is void, and the assignee cannot sue thereon in his own name. Ritter v. Stevenson, 7 Cal. 389.

104. An agreement to pay a certain sum of money to a defendant, if he would withdraw his defense to a suit, is assignable, and such assignment gives a right of action in the name of the assignee. Gray v. Garrison, 9 Cal. 328.

105. Where there is no final settlement of the partnership accounts, and no balance struck, and no express promise on the part of the individual members to pay their ascertained portion of this amount, no action can be maintained therefor in assumpsit, nor can the claim be assigned so that the assignee may sue. Bullard v. Kinney, 10 Cal. 63.

106. Under our system of practice an action may be brought in the name of the assignee as the party beneficially interested. Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 98.

ASSISTANCE, WRIT OF.

1. A writ of assistance will lie to put a party purchaser in possession of land under a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage. Wolf v. Fleischacker, 5 Cal. 244;

Attachment.—In general.

Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 191; Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 677.

2. In our system, the order to deliver possession should be first made, unless a direction to that effect is made in the decree; and if upon its service that is disregarded, the court can at once direct the writ of assistance to issue. Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 193.

3. Prima facie, plaintiff in a foreclosure suit is entitled, after sale of the premises and sheriff's deed to him, to a writ of assistance as against the mortgagor, and those entering under him subsequent to the decree, if they refuse to surrender possession. Skinner v. Beatty, 16 Cal. 157.

4. Where in such case a writ of assistance is granted, and the mortgagee and his wife move to set it aside on the ground that they had moved upon and occupied the mortgaged premises as a homestead before the execution of the mortgage by the husband, and continually ever since, and it appears that the mortgage was given for the purchase money of the premises, the motion must be denied, even though the wife was not a party to the foreclosure. Ib. 158.

5. If a writ of assistance be improperly issued or executed, the court granting it can, on summary motion, set aside the writ or the service, and restore the possession. Ib.

VI. Levy under the writ of Attachment.

1. Lien by Attachment.

VII. Claims by third persons of property Attached.

VIII. Process of Garnishment.

IX. Attachments against Vessels.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. In an action to recover damages for collision, there being no indebtedness arising upon contract, an attachment cannot issue. Griswold v. Sharpe, 2 Cal. 24.

2. The remedy by attachment is given by the statute of this State to those contracts for the direct payment of money which contracts are made in or are payable in this State. Dulton v. Shelton, 3 Cal. 207.

3. A debt due for merchandise sold in Boston to residents of San Francisco, and forwarded to the latter, they stipulating to pay by remitting funds to Boston, is not the subject of an attachment under the code. The contract must be made in this State, or must contain a stipulation that the money is to be paid here. Ib. 208.

4. The return of an attachment cannot be amended so as to postpone the rights of creditors attaching subsequently, but before the collection. Newhall v. Provost, 6 Cal. 86; Webster v. Haworth, 8 Cal. 25.

5. Property in the custody of the law is not liable to seizure without an order from the court having charge thereof, and such attachment is no defense to an action brought to compel the delivery of the money. Adams v. Haskell, 6 Cal. 116; Yuba County v. Adams, 7 Cal. 37.

6. A confession of judgment to a bona fide creditor, and the issuance of execution and making levy under the same by the judgment debtor, without the knowledge of the judgment creditor, done with the knowledge that another creditor is about to attach, and for the purpose of defeating his attachment, is void as to the attaching creditors. Ryan v. Daly, 6 Cal. 239.

7. Where the defendant as sheriff collects money on an attachment, more than sufficient to satisfy the attaching creditor, and after the expiration of his term of office another attaching creditor attaches the surplus, and seeks to make the sheriff liable therefor on his official bond: held, that the demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained, as there was no relation between the plaintiff and his bondsmen to render them liable. Graham v. Endicott, 7 Cal. 146.

8. In a case where one partner files his bill for a dissolution of the copartnership and the appointment of a receiver, it seems that until a dissolution has been judicially declared and a receiver ordered to make a pro rata distribution of the assets among the creditors, they are not prevented from resorting to adverse proceedings, and thereby gaining a preference by attachment. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 199; Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 156; 9 Cal. 26; Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 456.

9. Where a creditor commenced an attachment suit against his debtor on four promissory notes, one of which was not due, and obtained judgment by default: held, that it was fraudulent and void as to subsequent attaching creditors, and that the judgment must stand or fall as a whole. Taaffe v. Josephson, 7 Cal. 356; overruled in Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 442.

10. The suit commenced, the affidavit and undertaking in form are a necessary predicate for the writ of attachment, and should be given in evidence to justify the officer. Thornburgh v. Hand, 7 Cal. 562.

11. The attaching creditors do not stand in the position of joint trespassers, the seizure of the second being subject to the first, and the sheriff is the separate agent of both, and must look to that attaching creditor for whose benefit alone he disposed of the property. Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 253; questioned, 4 Cal. 80.

12. The object of the attachment is to obtain security for the judgment, and the statute will not allow the party who already has this security to use this process to obtain that which he already possesses. Payne v. Bensley, 8 Cal. 567.

13. Where husband and wife execute a conveyance of their property, which the husband delivers to the purchaser before the purchase money therefor is paid, which is afterwards fraudulently attached in a suit brought by the real though not the ostensible purchaser against the husband alone: held, that equity will compel a can-celation of the deed so obtained. Still v. Saunders, 8 Cal. 287.

14. Where G. & Co., concealing their insolvency, obtained an extension from their creditor B., and before maturity of these notes, B., apprehending that G. & Co. would fail before the paper became due, and that other creditors of G. & Co. would exhaust their assets by attachments, obtained by agreement an antedated note for the amount due by G. & Co. at the date thereof, and attached G. & Co.'s property: held, that B.'s attachment and claim was valid against subsequent attaching creditors, the case not being one of either actual or constructive fraud. Brewster v. Bours, 8 Cal. 505.

15. Where an attachment was issued on a complaint which was a printed form, with the blanks filled up by the clerk at the request of the plaintiff, but no name signed to it till next day and after other attachments on the same property, when it was signed by the clerk with the name of plaintiff's attorney: held, that the action of the clerk, though not correct, was only an irregularity, and the complaint was not void. Dixey v. Pollock, 8 Cal. 572.

16. In a contest between the attaching creditors, all the equities are in favor of the most diligent, and an irregularity cannot be taken advantage of by a stranger to the action in which it occurs. Ib.

17. The application of an attaching creditor to compel the sheriff to pay over the proceeds of goods attached, there being conflicting claims between several attaching creditors, may be made by motion. Ib.

18. Proceedings by attachment are statutory and special, and must be strictly pursued. Having once invoked the stringent provisions in reference to attachments, the plaintiffs could not resort to other remedies to the prejudice of the defendant, so long as they relied upon their attachment lien. Roberts v. Landecker, 9 Cal. 265.

19. After the issuance of certificates of deposit, there is nothing in the possession of a banker belonging to the depositor upon which an attachment could fasten, as the certificates are negotiable. McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 418.

20. A judgment in an attachment suit need not direct the sale of the property attached, as the law makes it the duty of the sheriff to sell it. Low v. Henry, 9 Cal. 551.

21. An attachment issued before the issuance of the summons in the suit is void, and the subsequent issuance of the summons cannot cure it. Ib. 552.

22. After the issuance of a promissory note, there is nothing in the possession of the maker belonging to the payee upon which an attachment could fasten. Gregory v. Higgins, 10 Cal. 340.

23. Where a clerk of the court refuses to issue execution on a judgment in his office, because the judgment has been attached at the suit of another party, a bill in equity cannot be sustained to release the attachment and compel the clerk to issue execution, as the remedy is at law by an action on the official bond of the clerk. Miller v. Sanderson, 10 Cal. 490.

24. Where A., who carried on a printing office, and was indebted to the hands of the office, placed in the hands of B. a certain amount of money, with directions to B. to pay the hands, which B. neglected to do, and where there was no evidence showing that the hands agreed to look to B. for their money, or that A. was indebted to the hands in an amount equal or approximate to the sum in B.'s hands, and the money was subsequently attached in the hands of B. at the suit of C.: held, that the money was liable to attachment. Chandler v. Booth, 11 Cal. 342.

25. Money in the hands of a bailee until there is a privity of contract between the bailee and the third persons, for whose benefit the trust is made, may be attached. Hardy v. Hunt, 11 Cal. 348.

26. An attaching creditor of the bailee, levying on the money in the hands of a stakeholder, with whom it had been deposited by the bailee, cannot claim that the bailor is estopped by having allowed the bailee to use the money in his own name, when the specific money was in question and could be distinguished. The creditor had not been misled by acts or declarations of the bailor, nor had he given credit to the bailor by reason thereof. Ib.

27. Lawful possession of personal property is prima facie evidence of ownership, and property thus possessed is prima facie liable to be seized on a writ of attachment against the party in possession of the property. Killey v. Scannell, 12 Cal. 75.

28. After the presentation and acceptance of a bill of exchange, there is nothing in the possession of the drawee belonging to the drawer upon which an attachment could fasten. Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 98.

29. An officer who puts a receiver in possession of the property of another against whom he has no process, or asserts through himself or another, an unlawful dominion over such property, is a trespasser. Rowe v. Bradley, 12 Cal. 230.

30. L. executed and delivered his promissory note to N. without consideration, and for the purpose of defrauding, hindering and delaying his creditors. N. had knowledge of the fraud and sued, and attached upon the note, L.'s property. After this, W., a creditor of L., sued and attached the same property. Before judgment, N. sold and assigned the note to J., an innocent purchaser: held, that J. is not protected in his purchase. N. having been superseded by W.'s attachment, could not by an act or deed of his put his assignee in any better position than he occupied himself. Wright v. Levy, 12 Cal. 263.

31. A deputy sheriff who seizes property under an attachment is not authorized, by virtue of his office, to bind the sheriff by contract for the payment of a keeper to take charge of the property so attached. Krum v. King, 12 Cal. 413.

32. A sheriff who levies a writ of attachment upon personal property in obedience to the command of the writ, has no right to let the property go out of his hands, except in due course of law; and if he does, and the debt is lost, he is responsible to the plaintiff in the attachment for the amount of the debt. Sandford v. Boring, 12 Cal. 541.

33. Where A contracts with a telegraph company to have his despatch transmitted, authorizing his agent to secure a debt due him from a third party by attachment, and this is so negligently performed that other creditors of the common debtor obtain the first attachment, and exhaust the assets of the debtor, which would not have been the case had the telegraph company performed its contract within a reasonable time, the company is liable, not only for the cost of the despatch, but for the amount of A's claim, which constitute the natural and proximate damages resulting from the breach of contract. Parks v. Alta Telegraph Co., 13 Cal. 425.

34. An attachment issued before the maturity of the debt is prima facie void as against a subsequent attachment. Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 441.

35. Where goods were fraudulently purchased by an insolvent, the creditor may attach before the maturity of the debt, and other creditors subsequently attaching cannot complain that the suit was prematurely brought. Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 442; overruling Taaffe v. Josephson, 7 Cal. 356.

36. Where, under the fourth section of the attachment act of 1858,* defendant puts in issue the truth of the facts alleged in the affidavit, to wit: "That defendant was about fraudulently to convey his property to hinder, delay or defraud creditors," proof that defendant was able to pay the debt, that he put plaintiff off from time to time, and threatened to assign his property for the benefit of his creditors if sued, is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of fraud. White v. Leszynsky, 14 Cal. 166.

37. Plaintiff sues the sheriff for seizing certain chattels claimed by plaintiff. Defendant justifies under a writ of attachment in the suit of F. v. C., and also under an execution issued upon a judgment had in that suit, setting up that plaintiff claimed the chattels by purchase from C., and that such purchase was*fraudulent as to F., a creditor of C. After the evidence on both sides was closed, the court, on motion of plaintiff, struck out the attachment proceedings, judgment and execution, and all evidence justifying thereunder, on the ground that defendant had not proved all of the debt upon which the attachment issued: held, that this was error; that, had no debt been proved, the judgment and execution being introduced, with an offer to show a levy and sale thereunder, were enough, if not to justify the first seizure under the attachment, at least to diminish the damages, by showing that the property was appropriated by law to the proper purpose, to wit: paying C.'s debt, if it really were his property, or subject, as his, to the process because of the fraud. Walker v. Woods, 15 Cal. 68.

38. But even if any proof aliunde of C.'s indebtedness were required, when the attachment papers, affidavit, undertaking, etc., were regular on their face, the judgment was prima facie sufficient to admit the attachment papers in proof. Ib. 69.

39. If, in justification by the sheriff under such attachment, judgment and execution, it be necessary to aver in the answer that the writs of attachment and execution were returned executed by the sheriff, still the omission of this averment, though it might have been ground of demurrer, was no ground for rejecting all evidence under such justification. Ib. 70.

40. Plaintiff here cannot dispute the regularity of the proceedings in such attachment, unless they were void on their face. Defendant could show his attachment proceedings, the judgment, execution and levy, and then that the sale by C. to plaintiff was fraudulent. No proof of the indebtedness of C. to F. was necessary, after showing the affidavit, undertaking and attachment; and no irregularities—in justifying sureties and the like—could be availed of by plaintiff. Ib.

41. Plaintiff sued out an attachment against K., and the sheriff levied it on certain goods. Other creditors issued attachments, which were levied by the sheriff on the same goods. Plaintiff then dismissed his attachment, and sued the sheriff in replevin, claiming that K. obtained a portion of the goods of plaintiff by fraud. Instead of taking the goods out of the sheriff's possession, plaintiff made an arrangement with the sheriff, whereby he agreed to sell the goods, and keep the proceeds to answer any judgment plaintiff might obtain in his replevin suit. Sheriff sold the goods, paid the money into court, saying nothing about this arrangement, and the money was paid, by order of the court, on the claims of the other creditors. The sureties of the sheriff had nothing to do with, and gave no sanction to the arrangement. Plaintiff had judgment in replevin: held, that the sureties on the sheriff's official bond are not liable to plaintiff for the goods or the money received from the sale—this agreement between him and plaintiff being no part of the sheriff's official duty; that the sheriff, as such, had no legal authority to sell these goods and to hold the money on bailment for plaintiff; and that, in so far as plaintiff trusted the sheriff with the goods, and authorized him to sell them, he became the agent of plaintiff, and must be looked to as such. Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 68.

*This section has been amended April 28th, 1860, restoring the former provisions, and allowing an attachment upon the contract without averring any fraud.

Affidavit on Attachment.—Undertaking on Attachment.

42. A party having secured a mechanic's lien under the statute, does not forfeit or waive it by causing an attachment to be issued and levied upon property of the debtor to secure the same demand. The two remedies are cumulative, and both may be pursued at the same time. Brennan v. Swasey, 16 Cal. 142.

43. If the party attempts to pursue them in separate actions, he might be put to his election; but it is no defense to an action to enforce the mechanic's lien, that in a previous suit for the same debt an attachment was issued and levied upon the property of the debtor, particularly when such suit had been dismissed, and nothing was realized by the attachment. Ib.

44. Plaintiff, January 10th, 1858, in a suit entitled "C. & M. et al., composing the Wisconsin Quartz Mining Co." a corporation, attached a quartz mill and ledge belonging to the corporation. June 26th, 1858, the complaint was amended so as to make the corporation, as such, the party defendant, and judgment was rendered against the company August 14th, 1858, the property sold, and plaintiff, the purchaser. October, 1857, W. received from the corporation a chattel mortgage on this property, had decree of foreclosure August 9th, 1858, sale October following, W. the purchaser. Defendants here are in possession under sheriff's sale on the decree. Plaintiff derives title under his judgment and sale: held, that he cannot recover; that he acquired no lien by his attachment, because the property attached belonged to the corporation, which was not a party to the suit until after the levy and return of the writ; that plaintiff's right only attached from the date of his judgment, August 14th, 1858, and his lien being subsequent to the lien of W.'s judgment, August 9th, 1858, under which defendants claim, the latter have the better right. Collins v. Montgomery, 16 Cal. 403.

II. AFFIDAVIT ON ATTACHMENT.

45. If the affiant had not good reason to believe the matters set forth in his affidavit on attachment, the defendant, whose name and credit has been impaired by the wrongful issuing out of the writ, has no recourse on the bond if his property has not been attached, but must resort to a criminal action, or to a private action for a tort. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 412.

46. The affidavit for an attachment is not sufficient which avers that the defendant is indebted in the alternative, upon an express or implied contract. Hawley v. Delmas, 4 Cal. 195.

III. UNDERTAKING.

1. On Attachment.

47. In an action on an attachment bond for damages accruing from a wrongful issuing out of an attachment, counsel fees cannot constitute damages. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 412; overruled in Ah Thaie v. Quan Wan, 3 Cal. 219.

48. The undertaking should precede the writ and accompany the affidavit. Benedict v. Bray, 2 Cal. 254.

49. If a justice issue an attachment and take a bond in a suit for a sum exceeding his jurisdiction, the proceedings are void, and no action can lie on the bond. Ib.

50. An attachment bond executed before the writ has been levied and the attachment dismissed by the plaintiff is void. Ib.

51. In an action on an attachment bond, if the bond is void, the obligee cannot recover on the bond damages sustained by the attachment. Ib. 255.

52. An undertaking on attachment need not be executed in form to the defendants; it need only specify the conditions it shall contain. Taaffe v. Rosenthal, 7 Cal. 518.

53. A mistake in the recital of the bond, as to the amount for which attachment issued, may be explained and corrected on parol. Palmer v. Vance, 13 Cal. 556.

2. On release of Attachment.

54. To charge the sureties on the release attachment bond, it is necessary to allege the consideration of the undertaking, and aver that the property was released. Palmer v. Melvin, 6 Cal. 652.

Discharge of an Attachment.—Levy under an Attachment.

3. On an indemnity to Sheriff.

55. An agent who has power to sue has the right to give an indemnity bond to the sheriff, when the property attached or levied on in that action is claimed by a third person; it is a necessary instrument to carry the power to sue into effect. Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 251.

56. Where property was seized under two attachments and the property was claimed by a third party, whereupon both attaching creditors indemnified the sheriff, who went on and sold it and paid the proceeds to the first attaching creditor, the amount not equalling his judgment, and afterwards the claimant obtained judgment against the sheriff for the value of the property: held, that the recourse must be had against the first attaching creditor, for whose benefit the property was sold. Ib. 253; questioned 15 Cal. 80.

57. Where a sheriff seizes goods on two attachments in behalf of different plaintiffs, and the property being claimed by a third person, the plaintiffs in the attachment suits execute to the sheriff separate indemnifying bonds, there is no joint liability between the plaintiffs to the sheriff. Each bond must be sued on as an independent obligation. White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 525.

III. DISCHARGE OF AN ATTACHMENT.

58. An order improperly dissolving an attachment will be reversed. Reiss v. Brady, 2 Cal. 132.

59. After final judgment an appeal may be taken from an order refusing to discharge an attachment. Taaffe v. Rosenthal, 7 Cal. 518.

60. A motion to discharge a writ of attachment "because the said writ was improperly issued" is insufficient. The notice should specify the grounds of the motion and wherein it will be urged that the writ was improperly issued. Freeborn v. Glazer, 10 Cal. 338.

IV. DAMAGES FOR A WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT.

61. Where real property is attached and the possession of the owner not disturbed, it is difficult to perceive how anything further than nominal damages can be recovered for the injury caused by the attachment. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 411.

62. Damages caused by the depreciation of real estate under an attachment, and the injury caused to the credit and reputation of the defendant, are too remote to submit to the consideration of a jury in an action on the undertaking on attachment. Ib. 412.

63. The fact that defendants had a probable cause of action, arising from the protest of the second of exchange, is no defense in a suit brought for malicious prosecution in having the plaintiff's property attached, for a party may willfully sue for a much greater amount than is due, and attach the property of the other and put him to charges. Weaver v. Page, 6 Cal. 684.

V. LEVY UNDER THE WRIT OF ATTACHMENT.

64. The presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the acts of the officer, and a return which simply states that the property was attached is sufficient prima facie to show a due and proper execution of the writ. Ritter v. Scannell, 11 Cal. 248.

65. T. commenced suit against I. by attachment; the writ was levied upon certain personal property by the plaintiff, H., as sheriff. M. I., wife of I., claimed the property, and brought her action of replevin under the code, which action was decided in favor of the sheriff. Other creditors attached the same property, which the sheriff sold and paid the proceeds into court. In an action on the replevin bond it was held that T. had a lien by attachment upon the goods, which continued even after the replevy by M. I. Hunt v. Robinson, 11 Cal. 272.

66. No parol instructions of the plaintiff in an attachment or execution respecting property seized by the sheriff under either writ will discharge such sheriff from liability. The statute is express that such instruction, including the care and disposition of the property levied upon, must be in writing. Sandford v. Boring, 12 Cal. 541.

 Levy under the writ of Attachment.—Lien by Attachment.

67. When process of attachment or execution comes to the hands of the sheriff, he must obey the exigency of the writ, which he must execute with all reasonable celerity. Whitney v. Butterfield, 13 Cal. 338.

68. In the service of process, the sheriff is responsible only for unreasonably or not reasonably executing it. He is not bound to start on the instant of receiving a writ to execute it, without regard to anything else. Ib.

69. Where one writ of attachment was placed in the sheriff's hands on Sunday, and another against the same defendant was placed in the hands of a deputy at a quarter past twelve on Monday morning, the sheriff not knowing the fact; and the first levy was made under the last writ at one o'clock Monday morning—the sheriff was not guilty of negligence in executing the first writ, no special circumstances being shown. Ib. 340.

70. The sheriff need not on Sunday endorse on the writ of attachment the fact of its reception. Ib. 341.

71. Attachments do not bind the property of the defendant from the time of the issuance, but only from the time of the actual levy; and the attachment first levied, by our statute, has the priority. Ib.

72. The sheriff could no more officially receive a writ on Sunday, for service on Sunday, than he could execute it on Sunday. It can only be considered officially in his hands when Sunday has expired. Ib. 342.

73. A writ of attachment is effectual to change the title of personal property only from the time of levy. Taffls v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 50.

74. Attachment issues against H., and the sheriff proceeds with the writ to his store, which is locked and fastened, front and rear, by iron shutters. The sheriff, with his deputy, stands at the doors guarding all entrance. H. now files his petition in insolvency, and the usual order of stay of proceedings is made. H. returns to the store and advises the sheriff of these things. The sheriff threatens to break open the store, when H. gives him the key, and he enters and levies: held, that the sheriff had no right to levy the attachment; and that the property vested in the assignee of the insolvent, subsequently appointed, by relation from the filing of the petition and schedule. Ib. 51.

75. A ratification cannot defeat rights of third persons acquired between the act of the agent and the ratification by the principal, as attachments levied on property of a debtor after a sale by or to an agent. Taylor v. Robinson, 14 Cal. 401

1. Lien by Attachment.

76. The remedy by attachment is not a distinct proceeding, in the nature of an action in rem, but is an adjunct, or a proceeding auxiliary to the action at law, designed for the purpose of securing the property of the debtor to answer the judgment which may be obtained. Low v. Adams, 6 Cal. 281.

77. A lien by attachment enables a creditor to file a creditor's bill without waiting for judgment and execution. Heyneman v. Dannenberg, 6 Cal. 379; Conroy v. Woods, 13 Cal. 633.

78. As soon as a vessel is seized by service of process in a court of admiralty, a lien attaches in favor of the party at whose suit the seizure is made; it is not necessary that the vessel should be attached. Meiggs v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 708; Fisher v. White, 8 Cal. 423.

79. The lien of attachment having become fixed upon funds in the hands of a receiver follows the property in the hands of his successor. Adams v. Woods, 9 Cal. 29.

80. The lien of an attachment takes effect immediately upon the fulfillment of the statutory provisions, and cannot be divested by a failure of the sheriff to make a proper return. Ritter v. Scannell, 11 Cal. 249.

81. A deposit in the recorder's office of a copy of the writ of attachment, with a description of the property attached, is sufficient to operate as notice of the lien to third parties. Ib.

82. Where a first attachment against an insolvent is set aside as fraudulent, in a suit brought by a subsequent attaching creditor, to which various other attaching creditors, prior and subsequent, are parties, the plaintiff in the suit cannot claim priority over the attachments preceding his, on the ground that by his superior diligence the fraud had been discovered. The prior attachments became liens, in the nature of a legal estate vested in the sheriff for the benefit of the creditors. Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 444.

Claims by third persons of Property attached.—Garnishment.

83. The lien of firm creditors must be preferred to the lien of an individual creditor of the remaining partner attaching first. Conroy v. Woods, 13 Cal. 631.

VI. CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS OF PROPERTY ATTACHED.

84. An officer attaching goods under civil process is entitled to notice of the claim of a third party to the goods, and a demand for them, or he is not liable in damages to such party for such seizure and detention. Taylor v. Seymour, 6 Cal. 514; Daumiell v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 44; Killey v. Scannell, 12 Cal. 75.

85. In an action against a sheriff for refusing to levy an attachment on certain property, as belonging to the attachment debtor, testimony that the property had been claimed by a third party, and the right of property tried by a jury and decided in favor of claimant, is irrelevant and inadmissible where those facts have not been set up as new matter of defense in the answer. Strong v. Patterson, 6 Cal. 157.

86. An officer who seizes property in the hands of the debtor may justify under the execution or process, but when he takes property from a third person who claims to be the owner thereof, if on execution, he must show the judgment and execution; if on attachment, the writ of attachment, and as we think, the proceedings on which it is based. Thornburgh v. Hand, 7 Cal. 561.

87. So far as a sheriff is concerned, when the property is attached and claimed by a third person, the agent of the plaintiff has to determine whether he would at once give up the levy and lose the debt, or take a trial by sheriff's jury, or indemnify the officer without trial. Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 251.

88. Under our practice, if the property attached be claimed by a third person, the sheriff may protect himself by a trial before a jury of six; and if the verdict be in favor of the claimant, the sheriff may relinquish the attachment, unless indemnified. Ib. 258.

89. The owner of property attached or levied upon as the property of another is not conclusively estopped from showing title in himself because he has given an accountable receipt for its delivery to the officer, although the receipt admits that the property is attached or levied upon as the property of the debtor, if he makes known to the officer his claim at or before the time the receipt is given. But if he fails to make known his claim, and thus influences the conduct of the officer, he is estopped from afterwards asserting it, provided the facts of his claim were known to him at the time. Bleven v. Freer, 10 Cal. 177.

VII. GARNISHMENT.

90. A sheriff who levies an attachment by virtue of the powers of the court has not the right of property in the debt, and cannot maintain an action in his own name for the recovery of the debt. Sublette v. Melhado, 1 Cal. 105.

91. The liability of a garnishee dates from the service of the attachment and affidavit, and not from the notice to appear. Johnson v. Carry, 2 Cal. 36.

92. The service of the writ of attachment is sufficient to put a garnishee upon notice of the plaintiff's demand, and any payment thereafter is a fraud upon his rights. Ib.

93. Where a garnishee is called to answer on a certain day, and appears, and the summoning party declines, or is not prepared to take the answer, and a term expires without any action on the garnishment, the summons is discontinued, and the party discharged from liability to answer. Ogden v. Mills, 3 Cal. 254.

94. Where a garnishee, in discharge of a rule, answers on oath that he was released by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff had abandoned his examination, he should be discharged by the court, unless this be controverted by the plaintiff. Ogden v. Mills, 3 Cal. 254.

95. Money in the hands of the sheriff, collected on execution, is not a debt due to the plaintiff in the execution, but is in the custody of the law until properly disposed of; and is not the subject of attachment or garnishment. Clymer v. Willis, 3 Cal. 365.

96. The sheriff cannot attach money collected on execution in his own hands. If at any time such money is subject to other process in his hands, such process must be executed by the coroner. Ib.

97. Unless the answer of a garnishee discloses liens having priority of claim upon the funds in his hands, judgment must be entered for the amount he admits due. Cahoon v. Levy, 4 Cal. 244.

98. A garnishee can only be required to answer as to his liability to the debtor defendant, at the time of the service of the garnishment. Norris v. Burgoyne, 4 Cal. 410.

99. A garnishee should be allowed to amend his answer whenever it appears that he has committed a mistake or fallen into an error which could not reasonably have been avoided; and the appellate court will not interfere except in case of gross abuse of discretion. Smith v. Brown, 5 Cal. 118.

100. An order requiring a garnishee to pay into court the amount for which judgment has been rendered against him, may be considered as improper. Ib.

101. The doctrine of garnishment, although partially regulated by statute, is not the less a common law proceeding, and therefore, in proceedings against a garnishee, the parties are entitled to a jury trial. Cahoon v. Levy, 5 Cal. 294.

102. It was no defense that before A had notice of the assignment of a debt, attachments in favor of the creditors of B had been served upon him, and that he sold the goods, and paid the proceeds to the attaching creditors after such notice. Morgan v. Lowe, 5 Cal. 326.

103. In proceedings against a garnishee, it is the duty of the court simply to render judgment against the garnishee for the amount found due by him to the judgment debtor. An order that the garnishee pay over the money into court is improper. Brumagin v. Boucher, 6 Cal. 17.

104. Service of copy of execution and notice of garnishment upon a third party, constitutes no lien on property of the debtor in his hands, capable of manual delivery. Johnson v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 196.

105. A garnishment served on the owner, in a suit against the head contractor, after the commencement of the building and before notice served, must prevail over the lien of a subcontractor. Cahoon v. Levy, 6 Cal. 296; contra, Tuttle v. Montford, 7 Cal. 360, per force of the amendment to the statute.

106. Where shares of stock in a corporation have been regularly transferred as security for a loan, the mortgagee is the only proper garnishee in a suit against the mortgagor, and on attachment of his interest in the corporation. Edwards v. Beugnot, 7 Cal. 165.

107. Where B was garnisheed in a suit against C, the day before he accepted an order drawn by A in favor of C, but failed to inform C thereof, and C, for a valuable consideration, sold the order to D, an innocent purchaser: held, that B, having made the order negotiable, could not plead the garnishment. Garwood v. Simpson, 8 Cal. 105.

108. An attachment may be served on funds in the hands of a receiver, as it is not the bringing of an action against the receiver, nor does it change the custody of the funds. The receiver holds it for whoever can make out a title to it. Adams v. Woods, 9 Cal. 28.

109. A plaintiff who has sued out an attachment, and given the necessary notice to a garnishee that the property in his hands is attached, and subsequently the garnishee fraudulently disposes of the property, has a right to waive his lien on the property and bring suit for the value of the property against the garnishee. Roberts v. Landecker, 9 Cal. 266.

110. The indebtedness of the maker upon a promissory note, before its maturity, is not the subject of attachment. His obligation is not to the payee named in the note, but to the holder, whoever he may be. Gregory v. Higgins, 10 Cal. 340.

111. An attaching creditor of the bailee, levying on the money in the hands of a stockholder with whom it had been deposited by the bailee, cannot claim that the bailor is estopped by having allowed the bailee to use the money in his own name, when the specific money was in question, and could be distinguished. The creditor had not been misled by acts or declarations of the bailor, nor had he given credit to the bailor by reason thereof. Hardy v. Hunt, 11 Cal. 350.

112. B. assigned a mortgage to F.

Garnishment.—Attachment against Vessels.—In general.

against a company, to secure him against his liability as surety, delivering the mortgage at the same time to F., who retained it a few moments, and then returned it to R. to receive the interest from the company, as his agent. The note guaranteed was unpaid, and R. owes the company nothing: held, that after the assignment R. had no interest in the mortgage which a judgment creditor could reach by garnishment. Hall v. Redding, 13 Cal. 219.

113. Plaintiff delivered to defendants gold dust, to be by them forwarded to San Francisco, to be there coined and returned. The dust belonged to five persons, partners in mining, of whom plaintiff and C. were two. While the dust was in the hands of defendants, C. sold to plaintiff, for a valuable consideration, his interest in it, and gave a receipt evidencing the sale. Defendants after this received coin made of the dust, and a creditor of C. attached the coin, by garnisheeing defendants. Defendants had no notice of the sale to plaintiff until the day after the attachment, when plaintiff demanded C.'s share of the coin: held, that plaintiff was entitled to the coin; that the dust in defendants' hands was in the constructive possession of all the five owners, C. having no exclusive interest in any part until it was converted into coin, and divided among the owners; that C.'s right in the dust was a chose in action, which he could assign by order in favor of the purchaser or assignee, and after such order, neither C. nor his creditors could claim any right to the money; that the statute of frauds has no application. Walling v. Miller, 15 Cal. 40.

114. A garnishment does not give the creditor precedence over assignees of the fund, when the assignment is prior to the service of the garnishment. Ib.

1 Cal. 163; Ray v. Bark Henry Harbeck, 1 Cal. 451.

116. Where a bond is given for a release of a vessel attached by virtue of a statute which does not apply to vessels of that peculiar class: held, that the principal and sureties were not liable on the bond. McQueen v. Ship Russell, 1 Cal. 165.

117. When the bond is given, the vessel shall be released, leaving the action to proceed in the same manner against the vessel as if the vessel is not liable. The giving the bond cannot vest a jurisdiction over the subject matter. Ib. 166.

118. The rule that requires seizure of the thing to give jurisdiction in actions in rem is altered by our statute. Service on a person standing in particular relation to the thing confers jurisdiction on the court from which process issues. Averill v. Steamer Hartford, 2 Cal. 309; Meiggs v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 408; Fisher v. White, 8 Cal. 422.

119. As soon as a vessel is seized by a court of admiralty, a lien attaches in favor of the party at whose instance the seizure is made. Meiggs v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 408.

120. If it was the intention of the legislature to provide that a lien should only be acquired by attachment, this would virtually be denying a right to creditors for small sums. It would be almost impossible for a mechanic or merchant of small capital or credit, who had a claim of a few hundred dollars against one of our large steamers or some sea-going vessel, to give the necessary bonds to detain her until his suit could be determined; and in the meantime she might be run off, and sold free of all such debts or incumbrances. Ib.

IX. ATTACHMENT AGAINST VESSELS.

115. An act of the legislature authorizing the issuing of attachments against boats and vessels "used in navigating the waters of the State," does not apply to vessels belonging to a foreign port, and which visit one of the harbors of this State for a few days only.* Souter v. Sea Witch,

*These cases were decided under the code of 1850. The code of 1851 permits these attachments to issue.

ATTORNEY.

- I. In general.
- II. Negligence by an Attorney.
- III. Compensation of an Attorney.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Where an attorney is proceeded against, with the object of expelling him from the bar, he is entitled to have notice of the charge against him, and an opportunity to make his defense. This is dictated by natural justice, and the uniform practice in such cases. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 150.

2. It is not usual for courts to interpose by a proceeding for contempt against an attorney, for any act independent of his profession, or not connected with his professional employment as an attorney. Ib.

3. Being officers of the court, attorneys are, in many respects, subject to the orders of the court; but these orders must be the result of sound and legal, and not of arbitrary and uncontrolled discretion. Ib.

4. An attorney licensed to practice in the supreme court is, by the rules of the court, authorized by virtue thereof to practice in all the courts of this State; and a district court cannot expel him from the bar. Ib. 190.

5. A writ of mandamus will lie from the supreme court to an inferior court, to restore an attorney removed by it from the bar. Ib.

6. An attorney has power to bind his client, by consenting to elect an order of court for relief, made in lieu of a money judgment; and the client has no power to refuse it. Hart v. Spalding, 1 Cal. 214.

7. An agreement of an attorney or counsel to waive a jury trial must be in writing, and filed with the clerk or entered on the minutes, to conclude his client. Smith v. Pollock, 2 Cal. 94.

8. An attorney at law took an assignment of a lot upon which there was a lien for purchase money, after suit brought against the assignee for recovery of the money. The attorney defended the suit throughout all the stages, without disclosing his claim: judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and all right, title and interest of the defendant in the lot was sold by the sheriff, and purchased by the plaintiff. The attorney also claimed the lot in possession of his tenant, refusing to pay rent in arrear, and denying a lien existed. In a new action, he was made a party, and in view of these facts, it was held that his silence in relation to his own claim, throughout his connection with the former suit, was a fraudulent concealment; and he was decreed to deliver possession to the plaintiff, and pay all costs of this and the former suits, and the arrear rents. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 288.

9. An agreement of an attorney for the continuance of a cause, not reduced to writing, will not be regarded by the court. Peralta v. Maria, 3 Cal. 187.

10. An appearance by attorney at common law, and by our code, amounts to a waiver of service of summons. Suydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 281; Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 200.

11. An admission by an attorney of record of the correctness of an amount due, for which judgment is taken, when not done in fraud of the rights of his clients, destroys the effect of a denial in the answer. Taylor v. Randall, 5 Cal. 80.

12. A confidential counselor, solicitor, or attorney of the party, cannot be compelled to disclose communications made to him, or entries made by him, in that capacity, and from necessity extends to their respective clerks to sustain the confidential relations between attorney and client. Lansberger v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 451.

13. Where a party changes his attorney in an action, and there is no regular substitution of attorneys as pointed out by statute, notices may be served on the attorney of record. Grant v. White, 6 Cal. 55.

14. An affidavit by an attorney, showing that defendant conceals himself to avoid service of process, is sufficient to authorize an order for the service on defendant by publication. Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 201.

15. We are very reluctant to believe that any officer of the court would designedly endeavor, by omission in the transcript, to mislead the court, and thus procure by fraud a favorable decision. Such a proceeding, if shown to the satisfaction of the court, would unquestionably result in depriving the offender of an opportunity of again misleading it. Ib.

16. Notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace may be served on the attorney of the adverse party. Welton v. Garibaldi, 6 Cal. 246; Coulter v. Stark, 7 Cal. 245.

17. A receiver when fully appointed should retain his own solicitor and counsel, who ought not to be the same as are employed by any of the parties in the suit. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 318.

18. An attorney in fact who is not an attorney at law cannot sign his name to a complaint for his principal as plaintiff's attorney; and an action so commenced is void, as instituted by an entire stranger to the plaintiff, without authority. Dixey v. Pollock, 8 Cal. 572.

19. The mistake of counsel as to the competency of a witness is no ground for granting a new trial. Packer v. Heaton, 9 Cal. 571.

20. The provision of the code authorizing judgment, personal and final, against an absent defendant, for whom the court has appointed an attorney with privilege to defend within six months, is not unconstitutional. Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 111.

21. Surprise by an attorney at the ruling of the court on the trial, as to the admission of testimony, is not a ground for a new trial. Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 526.

22. The employment of new counsel, after a decision is rendered, is no ground for an extension of the time prescribed by the court for filing a petition for a rehearing. Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 633.

23. An attorney is not permitted to disclose the confidential communications of his clients, yet if he acquires information apart from any such communications, he is not precluded from disclosing it. Hunter v. Watson, 11 Cal. 377.

24. An affidavit which avers a cause of action against the defendant—that defendant cannot, after due diligence, be found in the State; that summons has been issued, but the sheriff cannot find him; that defendant's residence is in the county where the summons issued; and that defendant still has a family residing in said county, is insufficient to authorize the court to appoint an attorney to represent such absent defendant. Jordan v. Giblin, 12 Cal. 102.

25. The authority of an attorney who appears will be presumed, and his action will bind the party, unless in cases of fraud or insolvency of the attorney. Nor will such action be renewed, on the ground of mistake, unless the mistake be unmixed with any fault or negligence of either the party or his attorney. Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 200.

26. A decree fairly entered by consent of an attorney is as binding upon his clients as a decree entered after resistance. Ib.

27. It seems that the appearance of an attorney wholly unauthorized, there being no fraud or allegation of insolvency, would not give the party a right to assail the judgment on that ground. Ib. 201.

28. If the attorney assents to a decree, the assent need not be made in open court, by words spoken by the attorney. It may be made by stipulation out of court. Ib.

29. When a decree is made by consent of the attorney, it is no ground of error that the decree embraces land not in the complaint; and even if error, the remedy is by appeal. Ib. 203.

30. A new trial will not be granted on the affidavit of the attorney of record that he, as well as his client and witnesses, were absent on the trial of the case, because of a verbal agreement by opposing counsel to give notice of day of trial, when such affidavit is met by counter affidavits by the opposing counsel, and when an attorney did appear and contest the case on the trial. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 13 Cal. 230.

31. If the charter of a municipal corporation provides for a city attorney to attend to the business of the city, other counsel may be employed when necessary, especially if the law suit was abroad. Smith v. City of Sacramento, 13 Cal. 533.

32. In a criminal case, if the court below impose upon counsel against their consent a limitation of time for argument before the jury, it is done at the risk of a new trial, if it be shown by the uncontradicted affidavits of the counsel that the prisoner was deprived of the opportunity of a full defense; for this is his constitutional right, without which he cannot be lawfully convicted. People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 584.

33. Courts have a large discretion over the conduct of proceedings before them, and may limit counsel to reasonable time. But in capital cases this should be done, if at all, only in very extraordinary and peculiar instances. Ib.

34. Where the judge below requires a statement of the evidence in a chancery case and the attorney does not object, but fails to furnish it, and in consequence thereof the court, on motion of plaintiffs for judgment on the pleadings and verdict, refuses to proceed until such statement is furnished, mandamus will not lie. The court below must take the steps by it deemed necessary or proper in the premises. It may rehear the cause on the pleadings and proof, or possibly it may require the attorney to prepare the statement. Purcell v. McKune, 14 Cal. 232.

35. On an indictment for murder, the court of sessions is not bound to assign counsel for the prisoner. People v. Moice, 15 Cal. 331.

36. There were pending before the board of U. S. land commissioners three cases—No. 558, Nos. 45 and 812. The claimants in No. 558 entered into a written agreement with V., the claimant, and B., his attorney of record, in cases Nos. 45 and 812, by which the former agreed to pay to V. a certain portion of the proceeds of the sales of that portion of the claim No. 558 known as the Miranda claim, the parties agreeing to appoint an agent to go on and make sales. Contemporaneous with this agreement was another between the same parties, by which V. and B. agreed to withdraw and discontinue claims Nos. 45 and 812 before the said board, and also to cause to be withdrawn the depositions of Theodore Miranda and Francisca Miranda, taken before a commissioner in said case No. 558, and on file therein; and to use their “best endeavors to procure the confirmation of said claim No. 558.” B. was the attorney for the Miranda claim, which was for the same land as claim No. 558. To defeat claim No. 558 he acted for the U. S. law agent in taking said depositions, which were important to the government in defeating claim 558, and he attempted to carry out his agreement to withdraw said depositions—though he was not directly retained by the government. V. and B. sue for the specific execution of the agreement: held, that such agreement is against public policy, and cannot be enforced; that B. could not, without a violation of his duty to the government as an attorney, carry out such agreement. Valentine v. Stuart, 15 Cal. 397.

37. An attorney, when acting for his client, is bound to the most scrupulous good faith. Even where the attorney purchases the subject of the suit, the client may set aside the purchase at will, unless the attorney show, by clear and conclusive proof, that no advantage was taken; that everything was explained to the client, and that the price was fair and reasonable, and that the depositions having become regularly a part of the records of the land commission, and the government being thus entitled to use them, like other public archives, the agreement to withdraw them, and thus to interpose obstacles to the exercise of this right of the government, is contrary to public policy and void, and this whether the depositions were true or false, or whether the government would be benefited or not by their possession. Ib. 401.

38. An attorney, after once acting as such in the prosecution of a suit, and having opportunities for knowing the facts of his client's case, cannot go over and render assistance to the adverse side, and then enforce, in a court of equity, a contract based on such assistance. Ib.

II. NEGLIGENCE OF AN ATTORNEY.

39. In declaring against an attorney for negligence, it is only necessary to aver generally that he was retained; but if it be alleged that he was retained in consideration of certain reasonable fees and rewards to be paid him, and no future time is stated as agreed upon for the payment of such fee, the declaration must aver payment, and the omission of this is error. Covillaud v. Yale, 3 Cal. 110.

40. In order to charge attorneys with negligence in failing to set up a defense, the plaintiff must prove the existence of such facts, and that they are susceptible of proof at the trial by the exercise of proper diligence on the part of his attorneys. Hastings v. Halleck, 13 Cal. 209.

41. Skillful or unskillful and negligent conduct of a case in an unimportant subject of inquiry in an action by an attorney for the value of his professional services; anything which shows the services were not of the value claimed—as the nature of the suit conducted, its little difficulty, small amount, little skill requisite, absence of skill—is competent, under the issue of value. Bridges v. Paige, 13 Cal. 641.

42. A trial may result successfully and yet the attorney be guilty of negligence. His want of skill or neglect may put the client to great expense to redeem his mistakes. Ib. 642.

Compensation of an Attorney.

III. COMPENSATION OF AN ATTORNEY.

43. In an action brought for the distribution of the effects of a corporation, it being for the interest of all parties that the company should be legally dissolved: held, that costs and a counsel fee on each side should be paid out of the fund. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 75.

44. District courts had no right under the code of 1850 to allow counsel fees in admiralty cases. Selby v. Bark Alice Tarleton, 1 Cal. 104.

45. An attorney has no lien upon a judgment recovered by him in favor of his client for a quantum meruit compensation for his services; such lien extends only to costs given by statute. Ex parte Kyle, 1 Cal. 332; Mansfield v. Dorland, 2 Cal. 509; Russell v. Conway, 12 Cal. 103.

46. If a retainer be absolute upon its face, but did not specify in what manner or by whom the fees were to be paid, evidence should be admitted to show whether the fee was contingent or not. Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 391.

47. An attorney is always entitled to his retaining fee in advance, unless he stipulates to the contrary. Covillaud v. Yale, 3 Cal. 110.

48. In an action upon an injunction bond to recover damages for the wrongful issuing of the writ, it was held that the amount paid to counsel as a fee to procure the dissolution of an injunction was properly allowed as part of the damages. Ah Thae v. Quan Wan, 3 Cal. 217; overruling Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 412.

49. Generally, the recovery of counsel fees as part of the damage is not allowed—as where the loss is consequential; but where the loss is direct—as in the case of an improper commencement and prosecution of a writ, or other process, in a suit—it should be allowed. Summers v. Farish, 10 Cal. 353; Heyman v. Landers, 12 Cal. 111; Prader v. Grim, 13 Cal. 587.

50. Counsel fees, not exceeding five per cent., were stipulated to be paid in the mortgage on foreclosure: held, that it is not necessary to aver in the complaint that five per cent. was reasonable counsel fees, but like costs, they were a mere incident to the debt, and might be fixed by the court at its discretion, not exceeding five per cent. Carriere v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 435; Gronfier v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 492.

51. In an action to recover the value of services as attorney in a certain suit, it is incompetent to prove the value of plaintiff's services in another action. Hart v. Vidal, 6 Cal. 56.

52. A witness who is not an attorney is incompetent to prove the value of an attorney's services in a cause. Hart v. Vidal, 6 Cal. 57.

53. Where an individual doing business under the firm name of "D. W. & Co." incurred obligations for professional services to the plaintiff, an attorney, and pending the litigation of his matters formed a partnership with two others under the same firm name, and one of the new members of the firm thus formed subsequently dismissed the suit in the firm name, and when payment for the services was demanded did not deny the liability of the firm, but refused payment and disputed the amount charged: held, that the firm was estopped from denying their liability. Burrittt v. Dickson, 8 Cal. 115.

54. But where it was shown that the plaintiff's partner had drawn up the partnership articles of defendants: held, that plaintiff was bound to know the terms on which the defendants' firm was formed, and that defendants had a right to presume such knowledge, and are not estopped by the acts above recited from denying their liability. Ib. 117.

55. A receiver having the right to stipulate with the counsel employed by him, that the counsel shall rely upon the allowance made by the court for his services, it is the duty of the receiver to report among his disbursements the claim of the counsel, leaving the amount to be fixed by the court; and if the counsel, or any other person employed by the receiver, feels aggrieved by the order of the court thereon, he can appeal therefrom. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 316.

56. Counsel for the plaintiff in a suit for dissolution cannot claim compensation as associate counsel for the receiver. Ib. 10 Cal. 317.

57. Where a first attachment against an insolvent is set aside as fraudulent, in a suit brought by a subsequent attaching creditor to which various other attaching creditors, prior and subsequent, are parties, the plaintiff in the suit cannot claim

priority over the attachments preceding his, on the ground that by his superior diligence the fraud has been discovered; but the plaintiff's costs, disbursements and counsel fees, however, should first be deducted from the fund before distribution. Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 444.

58. When an attorney sued for professional services on a quantum valebant, and the answer denied the value of the services: held, that the rule requiring new matter to be set up in the answer does not apply. Bridges v. Paige, 13 Cal. 641.

59. Relator conveyed to Y. one-third of certain real estate, in consideration that Y. should attend to a suit pending in the name of relator for the recovery of the property. Y. employed an attorney to conduct the suit, the attorney of plaintiff being discharged. Relator moved the court below to substitute another attorney in place of the one employed by Y. Court refused to grant the motion, the only reason urged for the substitution being that Y. had neglected to prosecute the suit; and it not being shown that the agreement between him and relator had been canceled by the parties. Relator applies to this court for mandamus: held, that the writ lies; that the agreement between relator and Y. does not exclude the former from the right to prosecute the suit and employ such attorney as he chooses; that the exercise of this right will not affect any right Y. may have in the property or suit; that he may intervene if a proper case be made, or prosecute his rights independently, or wait until the recovery and then claim his rights under the contract with relator. People v. Norton, 16 Cal. 440.

ATTORNEY, DISTRICT.

1. The district attorney can bring suit against bail at any time after the adjournment of the term at which the recognizance was declared forfeited. People v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 403.

2. District attorneys, however, should do their duty faithfully, but no more. They should never act as employed counsel, nor take advantage of temporary public excitement against the prisoner, or of any prejudice against him arising from any cause whatever. People v. Butler, 8 Cal. 440.

3. The fact that a district attorney has, or is entitled to a per centage on a judgment in favor of the State, will not prevent the legislature from the passage of a law releasing the judgment. People v. Bircham, 12 Cal. 55.

4. An assistant prosecuting district attorney appointed by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, under the act of April 23, 1858, (238) is not limited in his official action to any particular class of cases. The true construction of the statute is, that he shall be prosecuting attorney in the police court and shall assist the district attorney in the discharge of his various duties. People v. Magallones, 15 Cal. 428.

5. One of these duties is the prosecution of charges before the grand jury, and if the assistant may perform the duty, he must be deemed to be clothed with the powers and privileges necessary for that purpose. While acting for the district attorney his acts possess the same validity and must be regarded in the same light as if done by that officer in person. Ib. 429.

6. It is no objection to an indictment found in said court of sessions, that such assistant prosecuting district attorney was present during the session of the grand jury while the charge embraced in the indictment was under consideration. Ib.

7. The constitution of this State does not fix the term of the office of district attorney, but merely directs (art. 6, sec. 7) that the legislature shall provide for his election by the people, and shall fix by law his duties and compensation. People v. Brown, 16 Cal. 442.

8. The act of 1851, (Wood's Dig. 64) providing for the election of a district attorney in each county at the general election of that year, and every two years thereafter, etc., and the act of 1855, (Wood's Dig. 561, secs. 46 and 49) providing that the board of supervisors in each county shall fill vacancies in the office of district attorney, their appointee to hold until the next general election, the person then elected to hold for the balance of the term of the person whose place he is elected to fill, apply to the city and county of San Francisco, and are not repealed by the ninth, nor by the last section of the consolidation act of 1856. Ib. 443.

9. The policy of the act of 1851 was to create uniformity in the official terms of district attorneys by filling those terms at fixed periods. Ib.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

1. Neither the governor nor the attorney general has any power to bind the State by a contract to procure the advice of counsel as to the rights of the State in certain property. People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 258.

AUCTIONEER.

1. The memorandum required by the statute of frauds to be entered by an auctioneer in his sale book, must be made at the very time of the sale, or the vendee will not be bound by the contract; and the memorandum made in the afternoon or next day after the sale is insufficient. Craig v. Godeffroy, 1 Cal. 415.

2. An auctioneer who receives and sells stolen property is liable for the conversion to the same extent as any other individual, both upon principle and authority. Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 433; overruled in Rogers v. Huie, 2 Cal. 572.

3. Where a testator in his will appointed two persons as executors, and gave to each the power to sell his property as to them should seem proper, and the same as fully as in law may be required: held, that one of the executors could sell at private sale; and need not sell at auction, as no statutory provision then existed. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 511.

4. An auctioneer who in the regular course of his business receives and sells stolen goods, and pays over the proceeds of sale to the felon, without notice that the goods were stolen, is not liable to the true owner for a conversion. Rogers v. Huie, 2 Cal. 571; overruling Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 433.

5. Where an auctioneer sells a balance of goods without specifying their quality, he has a reasonable time to ascertain it; when this is done, and a bill of particulars is made out and delivered to the purchaser, who pays the purchase money, or a portion of it, the contract became executed, and the auctioneer will not afterwards be permitted to allege a mistake in quantity. Burgoyne v. Middleton, 4 Cal. 66.

6. A sale of land at auction where no note or memorandum of sale is made by the auctioneer, and no writing exists between the parties, is void by the statute of frauds. People v. White, 6 Cal. 75.

7. The duty imposed by the forty-ninth section of the revenue act of 1857, for selling goods at public auction, is not a tax on the auctioneer, but a tax on the sale of goods, or the proceeds of the sale—the auctioneer being made the collector of the State for the amount of the tax. State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 523.

8. This duty may be collected by action of debt by the State against the auctioneer; and the penal remedy afforded by the fifty-second section of the act is not an exclusive remedy. Ib.

9. The forty-ninth section of the act makes the auctioneer liable to pay this duty, and the meaning is, that he shall be legally held to pay it. The fact that a bond is required of the auctioneer, conditioned for the performance of his duty, shows that the legislature did not mean to Levy under the writ of Attachment.—Lien by Attachment.

67. When process of attachment or execution comes to the hands of the sheriff, he must obey the exigency of the writ, which he must execute with all reasonable celerity. Whitney v. Butterfield, 13 Cal. 338.

68. In the service of process, the sheriff is responsible only for unreasonably or not reasonably executing it. He is not bound to start on the instant of receiving a writ to execute it, without regard to anything else. Ib.

69. Where one writ of attachment was placed in the sheriff's hands on Sunday, and another against the same defendant was placed in the hands of a deputy at a quarter past twelve on Monday morning, the sheriff not knowing the fact; and the first levy was made under the last writ at one o'clock Monday morning—the sheriff was not guilty of negligence in executing the first writ, no special circumstances being shown. Ib. 340.

70. The sheriff need not on Sunday endorse on the writ of attachment the fact of its reception. Ib. 341.

71. Attachments do not bind the property of the defendant from the time of the issuance, but only from the time of the actual levy; and the attachment first levied, by our statute, has the priority. Ib.

72. The sheriff could no more officially receive a writ on Sunday, for service on Sunday, than he could execute it on Sunday. It can only be considered officially in his hands when Sunday has expired. Ib. 342.

73. A writ of attachment is effectual to change the title of personal property only from the time of levy. Taff's v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 50.

74. Attachment issues against H., and the sheriff proceeds with the writ to his store, which is locked and fastened, front and rear, by iron shutters. The sheriff, with his deputy, stands at the doors guarding all entrance. H. now files his petition in insolvency, and the usual order of stay of proceedings is made. H. returns to the store and advises the sheriff of these things. The sheriff threatens to break open the store, when H. gives him the key, and he enters and levies: held, that the sheriff had no right to levy the attachment; and that the property vested in the assignee of the insolvent, subsequently appointed, by relation from the filing of the petition and schedule. Ib. 51.

75. A ratification cannot defeat rights of third persons acquired between the act of the agent and the ratification by the principal, as attachments levied on property of a debtor after a sale by or to an agent. Taylor v. Robinson, 14 Cal. 401

 1. Lien by Attachment.

76. The remedy by attachment is not a distinct proceeding, in the nature of an action in rem, but is an adjunct, or a proceeding auxiliary to the action at law, designed for the purpose of securing the property of the debtor to answer the judgment which may be obtained. Low v. Adams, 6 Cal. 281.

77. A lien by attachment enables a creditor to file a creditor's bill without waiting for judgment and execution. Heyneman v. Dannenberg, 6 Cal. 379; Conroy v. Woods, 13 Cal. 633.

78. As soon as a vessel is seized by service of process in a court of admiralty, a lien attaches in favor of the party at whose suit the seizure is made; it is not necessary that the vessel should be attached. Meiggs v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 708; Fisher v. White, 8 Cal. 423.

79. The lien of attachment having become fixed upon funds in the hands of a receiver follows the property in the hands of his successor. Adams v. Woods, 9 Cal. 29.

80. The lien of an attachment takes effect immediately upon the fulfillment of the statutory provisions, and cannot be divested by a failure of the sheriff to make a proper return. Ritter v. Scannell, 11 Cal. 249.

81. A deposit in the recorder's office of a copy of the writ of attachment, with a description of the property attached, is sufficient to operate as notice of the lien to third parties. Ib.

82. Where a first attachment against an insolvent is set aside as fraudulent, in a suit brought by a subsequent attaching creditor, to which various other attaching creditors, prior and subsequent, are parties, the plaintiff in the suit cannot claim priority over the attachments preceding his, on the ground that by his superior

Claims by third persons of Property attached.—Garnishment.

diligence the fraud had been discovered. The prior attachments became liens, in the nature of a legal estate vested in the sheriff for the benefit of the creditors. Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 444.

83. The lien of firm creditors must be preferred to the lien of an individual creditor of the remaining partner attaching first. Conroy v. Woods, 13 Cal. 631.

VL CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS OF PROPERTY ATTACHED.

84. An officer attaching goods under civil process is entitled to notice of the claim of a third party to the goods, and a demand for them, or he is not liable in damages to such party for such seizure and detention. Taylor v. Seymour, 6 Cal. 514; Daumiell v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 44; Killey v. Scannell, 12 Cal. 75.

85. In an action against a sheriff for refusing to levy an attachment on certain property, as belonging to the attachment debtor, testimony that the property had been claimed by a third party, and the right of property tried by a jury and decided in favor of claimant, is irrelevant and inadmissible where those facts have not been set up as new matter of defense in the answer. Strong v. Patterson, 6 Cal. 157.

86. An officer who seizes property in the hands of the debtor may justify under the execution or process, but when he takes property from a third person who claims to be the owner thereof, if on execution, he must show the judgment and execution; if on attachment, the writ of attachment, and as we think, the proceedings on which it is based. Thornburgh v. Hand, 7 Cal. 561.

87. So far as a sheriff is concerned, when the property is attached and claimed by a third person, the agent of the plaintiff has to determine whether he would at once give up the levy and lose the debt, or take a trial by sheriff's jury, or indemnify the officer without trial. Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 251.

88. Under our practice, if the property attached be claimed by a third person, the sheriff may protect himself by a trial before a jury of six; and if the verdict be in favor of the claimant, the sheriff may relinquish the attachment, unless indemnified. Ib. 258.

89. The owner of property attached or levied upon as the property of another is not conclusively estopped from showing title in himself because he has given an accountable receipt for its delivery to the officer, although the receipt admits that the property is attached or levied upon as the property of the debtor, if he makes known to the officer his claim at or before the time the receipt is given. But if he fails to make known his claim, and thus influences the conduct of the officer, he is estopped from afterwards asserting it, provided the facts of his claim were known to him at the time. Bleven v. Freer, 10 Cal. 177.

VII. GARNISHMENT.

90. A sheriff who levies an attachment by virtue of the powers of the court has not the right of property in the debt, and cannot maintain an action in his own name for the recovery of the debt. Sublette v. Melhado, 1 Cal. 105.

91. The liability of a garnishee dates from the service of the attachment and affidavit, and not from the notice to appear. Johnson v. Carry, 2 Cal. 36.

92. The service of the writ of attachment is sufficient to put a garnishee upon notice of the plaintiff's demand, and any payment thereafter is a fraud upon his rights. Ib.

93. Where a garnishee is called to answer on a certain day, and appears, and the summoning party declines, or is not prepared to take the answer, and a term expires without any action on the garnishment, the summons is discontinued, and the party discharged from liability to answer. Ogden v. Mills, 3 Cal. 254.

94. Where a garnishee, in discharge of a rule, answers on oath that he was released by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff had abandoned his examination, he should be discharged by the court, unless this be controverted by the plaintiff. Ogden v. Mills, 3 Cal. 254.

95. Money in the hands of the sheriff, collected on execution, is not a debt due to the plaintiff in the execution, but is in the custody of the law until properly disposed of; and is not the subject of attachment or garnishment. Clymer v. Willis, 3 Cal. 365.

96. The sheriff cannot attach money collected on execution in his own hands. If at any time such money is subject to other process in his hands, such process must be executed by the coroner. Ib.

97. Unless the answer of a garnishee discloses liens having priority of claim upon the funds in his hands, judgment must be entered for the amount he admits due. Cahoon v. Levy, 4 Cal. 244.

98. A garnishee can only be required to answer as to his liability to the debtor defendant, at the time of the service of the garnishment. Norris v. Burgoyne, 4 Cal. 410.

99. A garnishee should be allowed to amend his answer whenever it appears that he has committed a mistake or fallen into an error which could not reasonably have been avoided; and the appellate court will not interfere except in case of gross abuse of discretion. Smith v. Brown, 5 Cal. 118.

100. An order requiring a garnishee to pay into court the amount for which judgment has been rendered against him, may be considered as improper. Ib.

101. The doctrine of garnishment, although partially regulated by statute, is not the less a common law proceeding, and therefore, in proceedings against a garnishee, the parties are entitled to a jury trial. Cahoon v. Levy, 5 Cal. 294.

102. It was no defense that before A had notice of the assignment of a debt, attachments in favor of the creditors of B had been served upon him, and that he sold the goods, and paid the proceeds to the attaching creditors after such notice. Morgan v. Lowe, 5 Cal. 326.

103. In proceedings against a garnishee, it is the duty of the court simply to render judgment against the garnishee for the amount found due by him to the judgment debtor. An order that the garnishee pay over the money into court is improper. Brumagin v. Boucher, 6 Cal. 17.

104. Service of copy of execution and notice of garnishment upon a third party, constitutes no lien on property of the debtor in his hands, capable of manual delivery. Johnson v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 196.

105. A garnishment served on the owner, in a suit against the head contractor, after the commencement of the building and before notice served, must prevail over the lien of a subcontractor. Cahoon v. Levy, 6 Cal. 296; contra, Tuttle v. Montford, 7 Cal. 360, per force of the amendment to the statute.

106. Where shares of stock in a corporation have been regularly transferred as security for a loan, the mortgagee is the only proper garnishee in a suit against the mortgagor, and on attachment of his interest in the corporation. Edwards v. Beugnot, 7 Cal. 165.

107. Where B was garnished in a suit against C, the day before he accepted an order drawn by A in favor of C, but failed to inform C thereof, and C, for a valuable consideration, sold the order to D, an innocent purchaser: held, that B, having made the order negotiable, could not plead the garnishment. Garwood v. Simpson, 8 Cal. 105.

108. An attachment may be served on funds in the hands of a receiver, as it is not the bringing of an action against the receiver, nor does it change the custody of the funds. The receiver holds it for whoever can make out a title to it. Adams v. Woods, 9 Cal. 28.

109. A plaintiff who has sued out an attachment, and given the necessary notice to a garnishee that the property in his hands is attached, and subsequently the garnishee fraudulently disposes of the property, has a right to waive his lien on the property and bring suit for the value of the property against the garnishee. Roberts v. Landecker, 9 Cal. 266.

110. The indebtedness of the maker upon a promissory note, before its maturity, is not the subject of attachment. His obligation is not to the payee named in the note, but to the holder, whoever he may be. Gregory v. Higgins, 10 Cal. 340.

111. An attaching creditor of the bailee, levying on the money in the hands of a stockholder with whom it had been deposited by the bailee, cannot claim that the bailor is estopped by having allowed the bailee to use the money in his own name, when the specific money was in question, and could be distinguished. The creditor had not been misled by acts or declarations of the bailor, nor had he given credit to the bailor by reason thereof. Hardy v. Hunt, 11 Cal. 350.

112. B. assigned a mortgage to F.

Garnishment.—Attachment against Vessels.—In general.

against a company, to secure him against his liability as surety, delivering the mortgage at the same time to F., who retained it a few moments, and then returned it to R. to receive the interest from the company, as his agent. The note guaranteed was unpaid, and R. owes the company nothing: held, that after the assignment R. had no interest in the mortgage which a judgment creditor could reach by garnishment. Hall v. Redding, 13 Cal. 219.

113. Plaintiff delivered to defendants gold dust, to be by them forwarded to San Francisco, to be there coined and returned. The dust belonged to five persons, partners in mining, of whom plaintiff and C. were two. While the dust was in the hands of defendants, C. sold to plaintiff, for a valuable consideration, his interest in it, and gave a receipt evidencing the sale. Defendants after this received coin made of the dust, and a creditor of C. attached the coin, by garnisheeing defendants. Defendants had no notice of the sale to plaintiff until the day after the attachment, when plaintiff demanded C.'s share of the coin: held, that plaintiff was entitled to the coin; that the dust in defendants' hands was in the constructive possession of all the five owners, C. having no exclusive interest in any part until it was converted into coin, and divided among the owners; that C.'s right in the dust was a chose in action, which he could assign by order in favor of the purchaser or assignee, and after such order, neither C. nor his creditors could claim any right to the money; that the statute of frauds has no application. Walling v. Miller, 15 Cal. 40.

114. A garnishment does not give the creditor precedence over assignees of the fund, when the assignment is prior to the service of the garnishment. Ib.

1 Cal. 163; Ray v. Bark Henry Harbeck, 1 Cal. 451.

116. Where a bond is given for a release of a vessel attached by virtue of a statute which does not apply to vessels of that peculiar class: held, that the principal and sureties were not liable on the bond. McQueen v. Ship Russell, 1 Cal. 165.

117. When the bond is given, the vessel shall be released, leaving the action to proceed in the same manner against the vessel as if the vessel is not liable. The giving the bond cannot vest a jurisdiction over the subject matter. Ib. 166.

118. The rule that requires seizure of the thing to give jurisdiction in actions in rem is altered by our statute. Service on a person standing in particular relation to the thing confers jurisdiction on the court from which process issues. Averill v. Steamer Hartford, 2 Cal. 309; Meiggs v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 408; Fisher v. White, 8 Cal. 422.

119. As soon as a vessel is seized by a court of admiralty, a lien attaches in favor of the party at whose instance the seizure is made. Meiggs v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 408.

120. If it was the intention of the legislature to provide that a lien should only be acquired by attachment, this would virtually be denying a right to creditors for small sums. It would be almost impossible for a mechanic or merchant of small capital or credit, who had a claim of a few hundred dollars against one of our large steamers or some sea-going vessel, to give the necessary bonds to detain her until his suit could be determined; and in the meantime she might be run off, and sold free of all such debts or incumbrances. Ib.

IX. ATTACHMENT AGAINST VESSELS.

115. An act of the legislature authorizing the issuing of attachments against boats and vessels "used in navigating the waters of the State," does not apply to vessels belonging to a foreign port, and which visit one of the harbors of this State for a few days only.* Souter v. Sea Witch,

* These cases were decided under the code of 1850. The code of 1851 permits these attachments to issue.

ATTORNEY.

- I. In general.
- II. Negligence by an Attorney.
- III. Compensation of an Attorney.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Where an attorney is proceeded against, with the object of expelling him from the bar, he is entitled to have notice of the charge against him, and an opportunity to make his defense. This is dictated by natural justice, and the uniform practice in such cases. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 150.

2. It is not usual for courts to interpose by a proceeding for contempt against an attorney, for any act independent of his profession, or not connected with his professional employment as an attorney. Ib.

3. Being officers of the court, attorneys are, in many respects, subject to the orders of the court; but these orders must be the result of sound and legal, and not of arbitrary and uncontrolled discretion. Ib.

4. An attorney licensed to practice in the supreme court is, by the rules of the court, authorized by virtue thereof to practice in all the courts of this State; and a district court cannot expel him from the bar. Ib. 190.

5. A writ of mandamus will lie from the supreme court to an inferior court, to restore an attorney removed by it from the bar. Ib.

6. An attorney has power to bind his client, by consenting to elect an order of court for relief, made in lieu of a money judgment; and the client has no power to refuse it. Hart v. Spalding, 1 Cal. 214.

7. An agreement of an attorney or counsel to waive a jury trial must be in writing, and filed with the clerk or entered on the minutes, to conclude his client. Smith v. Pollock, 2 Cal. 94.

8. An attorney at law took an assignment of a lot upon which there was a lien for purchase money, after suit brought against the assignee for recovery of the money. The attorney defended the suit throughout all the stages, without disclosing his claim: judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and all right, title and interest of the defendant in the lot was sold by the sheriff, and purchased by the plaintiff. The attorney also claimed the lot in possession of his tenant, refusing to pay rent in arrear, and denying a lien existed. In a new action, he was made a party, and in view of these facts, it was held that his silence in relation to his own claim, throughout his connection with the former suit, was a fraudulent concealment; and he was decreed to deliver possession to the plaintiff, and pay all costs of this and the former suits, and the arrear rents. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 288.

9. An agreement of an attorney for the continuance of a cause, not reduced to writing, will not be regarded by the court. Peralta v. Maria, 3 Cal. 187.

10. An appearance by attorney at common law, and by our code, amounts to a waiver of service of summons. Suydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 281; Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 200.

11. An admission by an attorney of record of the correctness of an amount due, for which judgment is taken, when not done in fraud of the rights of his clients, destroys the effect of a denial in the answer. Taylor v. Randall, 5 Cal. 80.

12. A confidential counselor, solicitor, or attorney of the party, cannot be compelled to disclose communications made to him, or entries made by him, in that capacity, and from necessity extends to their respective clerks to sustain the confidential relations between attorney and client. Lansberger v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 451.

13. Where a party changes his attorney in an action, and there is no regular substitution of attorneys as pointed out by statute, notices may be served on the attorney of record. Grant v. White, 6 Cal. 55.

14. An affidavit by an attorney, showing that defendant conceals himself to avoid service of process, is sufficient to authorize an order for the service on defendant by publication. Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 201.

15. We are very reluctant to believe that any officer of the court would designedly endeavor, by omission in the transcript, to mislead the court, and thus procure by fraud a favorable decision. Such a proceeding, if shown to the satisfaction of the court, would unquestionably result in depriving the offender of an opportunity of again misleading it. Ib.

16. Notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace may be served on the attorney of the adverse party. Welton v. Garibaldi, 6 Cal. 246; Coulter v. Stark, 7 Cal. 245.

17. A receiver when fully appointed should retain his own solicitor and counsel, who ought not to be the same as are employed by any of the parties in the suit. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 318.

18. An attorney in fact who is not an attorney at law cannot sign his name to a complaint for his principal as plaintiff's attorney; and an action so commenced is void, as instituted by an entire stranger to the plaintiff, without authority. Dixey v. Pollock, 8 Cal. 572.

19. The mistake of counsel as to the competency of a witness is no ground for granting a new trial. Packer v. Heaton, 9 Cal. 571.

20. The provision of the code authorizing judgment, personal and final, against an absent defendant, for whom the court has appointed an attorney with privilege to defend within six months, is not unconstitutional. Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 111.

21. Surprise by an attorney at the ruling of the court on the trial, as to the admission of testimony, is not a ground for a new trial. Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 526.

22. The employment of new counsel, after a decision is rendered, is no ground for an extension of the time prescribed by the court for filing a petition for a rehearing. Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 633.

23. An attorney is not permitted to disclose the confidential communications of his clients, yet if he acquires information apart from any such communications, he is not precluded from disclosing it. Hunter v. Watson, 11 Cal. 377.

24. An affidavit which avers a cause of action against the defendant—that defendant cannot, after due diligence, be found in the State; that summons has been issued, but the sheriff cannot find him; that defendant's residence is in the county where the summons issued; and that defendant still has a family residing in said county, is insufficient to authorize the court to appoint an attorney to represent such absent defendant. Jordan v. Giblin, 12 Cal. 102.

25. The authority of an attorney who appears will be presumed, and his action will bind the party, unless in cases of fraud or insolvency of the attorney. Nor will such action be renewed, on the ground of mistake, unless the mistake be unmixed with any fault or negligence of either the party or his attorney. Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 200.

26. A decree fairly entered by consent of an attorney is as binding upon his clients as a decree entered after resistance. Ib.

27. It seems that the appearance of an attorney wholly unauthorized, there being no fraud or allegation of insolvency, would not give the party a right to assail the judgment on that ground. Ib. 201.

28. If the attorney assents to a decree, the assent need not be made in open court, by words spoken by the attorney. It may be made by stipulation out of court. Ib.

29. When a decree is made by consent of the attorney, it is no ground of error that the decree embraces land not in the complaint; and even if error, the remedy is by appeal. Ib. 203.

30. A new trial will not be granted on the affidavit of the attorney of record that he, as well as his client and witnesses, were absent on the trial of the case, because of a verbal agreement by opposing counsel to give notice of day of trial, when such affidavit is met by counter affidavits by the opposing counsel, and when an attorney did appear and contest the case on the trial. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 13 Cal. 230.

31. If the charter of a municipal corporation provides for a city attorney to attend to the business of the city, other counsel may be employed when necessary, especially if the law suit was abroad. Smith v. City of Sacramento, 13 Cal. 533.

32. In a criminal case, if the court below impose upon counsel against their consent a limitation of time for argument before the jury, it is done at the risk of a new trial, if it be shown by the uncontradicted affidavits of the counsel that the prisoner was deprived of the opportunity of a full defense; for this is his constitutional right, without which he cannot be lawfully convicted. People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 584.

33. Courts have a large discretion over the conduct of proceedings before them, and may limit counsel to reasonable time. But in capital cases this should be done, if at all, only in very extraordinary and peculiar instances. Ib.

34. Where the judge below requires a statement of the evidence in a chancery case and the attorney does not object, but fails to furnish it, and in consequence thereof the court, on motion of plaintiffs for judgment on the pleadings and verdict, refuses to proceed until such statement is furnished, mandamus will not lie. The court below must take the steps by it deemed necessary or proper in the premises. It may rehear the cause on the pleadings and proof, or possibly it may require the attorney to prepare the statement. Purcell v. McKune, 14 Cal. 232.

35. On an indictment for murder, the court of sessions is not bound to assign counsel for the prisoner. People v. Moice, 15 Cal. 331.

36. There were pending before the board of U. S. land commissioners three cases—No. 558, Nos. 45 and 812. The claimants in No. 558 entered into a written agreement with V., the claimant, and B., his attorney of record, in cases Nos. 45 and 812, by which the former agreed to pay to V. a certain portion of the proceeds of the sales of that portion of the claim No. 558 known as the Miranda claim, the parties agreeing to appoint an agent to go on and make sales. Contemporaneous with this agreement was another between the same parties, by which V. and B. agreed to withdraw and discontinue claims Nos. 45 and 812 before the said board, and also to cause to be withdrawn the depositions of Theodore Miranda and Francisca Miranda, taken before a commissioner in said case No. 558, and on file therein; and to use their “best endeavors to procure the confirmation of said claim No. 558.” B. was the attorney for the Miranda claim, which was for the same land as claim No. 558. To defeat claim No. 558 he acted for the U. S. law agent in taking said depositions, which were important to the government in defeating claim 558, and he attempted to carry out his agreement to withdraw said depositions—though he was not directly retained by the government. V. and B. sue for the specific execution of the agreement: held, that such agreement is against public policy, and cannot be enforced; that B. could not, without a violation of his duty to the government as an attorney, carry out such agreement. Valentine v. Stuart, 15 Cal. 397.

37. An attorney, when acting for his client, is bound to the most scrupulous good faith. Even where the attorney purchases the subject of the suit, the client may set aside the purchase at will, unless the attorney show, by clear and conclusive proof, that no advantage was taken; that everything was explained to the client, and that the price was fair and reasonable, and that the depositions having become regularly a part of the records of the land commission, and the government being thus entitled to use them, like other public archives, the agreement to withdraw them, and thus to interpose obstacles to the exercise of this right of the government, is contrary to public policy and void, and this whether the depositions were true or false, or whether the government would be benefited or not by their possession. Ib. 401.

38. An attorney, after once acting as such in the prosecution of a suit, and having opportunities for knowing the facts of his client's case, cannot go over and render assistance to the adverse side, and then enforce, in a court of equity, a contract based on such assistance. Ib.

II. NEGLIGENCE OF AN ATTORNEY.

39. In declaring against an attorney for negligence, it is only necessary to aver generally that he was retained; but if it be alleged that he was retained in consideration of certain reasonable fees and rewards to be paid him, and no future time is stated as agreed upon for the payment of such fee, the declaration must aver payment, and the omission of this is error. Covillaud v. Yale, 3 Cal. 110.

40. In order to charge attorneys with negligence in failing to set up a defense, the plaintiff must prove the existence of such facts, and that they are susceptible of proof at the trial by the exercise of proper diligence on the part of his attorneys. Hastings v. Halleck, 13 Cal. 209.

41. Skillful or unskillful and negligent conduct of a case in an unimportant subject of inquiry in an action by an attorney for the value of his professional services; anything which shows the services were not of the value claimed—as the nature of the suit conducted, its little difficulty, small amount, little skill requisite, absence of skill—is competent, under the issue of value. Bridges v. Paige, 13 Cal. 641.

42. A trial may result successfully and yet the attorney be guilty of negligence. His want of skill or neglect may put the client to great expense to redeem his mistakes. Ib. 642.

Compensation of an Attorney.

III. COMPENSATION OF AN ATTORNEY.

43. In an action brought for the distribution of the effects of a corporation, it being for the interest of all parties that the company should be legally dissolved: held, that costs and a counsel fee on each side should be paid out of the fund. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 75.

44. District courts had no right under the code of 1850 to allow counsel fees in admiralty cases. Selby v. Bark Alice Tarleton, 1 Cal. 104.

45. An attorney has no lien upon a judgment recovered by him in favor of his client for a quantum meruit compensation for his services; such lien extends only to costs given by statute. Ex parte Kyle, 1 Cal. 332; Mansfield v. Dorland, 2 Cal. 509; Russell v. Conway, 12 Cal. 103.

46. If a retainer be absolute upon its face, but did not specify in what manner or by whom the fees were to be paid, evidence should be admitted to show whether the fee was contingent or not. Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 391.

47. An attorney is always entitled to his retaining fee in advance, unless he stipulates to the contrary. Covillaud v. Yale, 3 Cal. 110.

48. In an action upon an injunction bond to recover damages for the wrongful issuing of the writ, it was held that the amount paid to counsel as a fee to procure the dissolution of an injunction was properly allowed as part of the damages. Altshae v. Quan Wan, 3 Cal. 217; overruling Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 412.

49. Generally, the recovery of counsel fees as part of the damage is not allowed—as where the loss is consequential; but where the loss is direct—as in the case of an improper commencement and prosecution of a writ, or other process, in a suit—it should be allowed. Summers v. Farish, 10 Cal. 353; Heyman v. Landers, 12 Cal. 111; Prader v. Grim, 13 Cal. 587.

50. Counsel fees, not exceeding five per cent., were stipulated to be paid in the mortgage on foreclosure: held, that it is not necessary to aver in the complaint that five per cent. was reasonable counsel fees, but like costs, they were a mere incident to the debt, and might be fixed by the court at its discretion, not exceeding five per cent. Carriere v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 435; Gronfier v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 492.

51. In an action to recover the value of services as attorney in a certain suit, it is incompetent to prove the value of plaintiff's services in another action. Hart v. Vidal, 6 Cal. 56.

52. A witness who is not an attorney is incompetent to prove the value of an attorney's services in a cause. Hart v. Vidal, 6 Cal. 57.

53. Where an individual doing business under the firm name of "D. W. & Co." incurred obligations for professional services to the plaintiff, an attorney, and pending the litigation of his matters formed a partnership with two others under the same firm name, and one of the new members of the firm thus formed subsequently dismissed the suit in the firm name, and when payment for the services was demanded did not deny the liability of the firm, but refused payment and disputed the amount charged: held, that the firm was estopped from denying their liability. Burrittt v. Dickson, 8 Cal. 115.

54. But where it was shown that the plaintiff's partner had drawn up the partnership articles of defendants: held, that plaintiff was bound to know the terms on which the defendants' firm was formed, and that defendants had a right to presume such knowledge, and are not estopped by the acts above recited from denying their liability. Ib. 117.

55. A receiver having the right to stipulate with the counsel employed by him, that the counsel shall rely upon the allowance made by the court for his services, it is the duty of the receiver to report among his disbursements the claim of the counsel, leaving the amount to be fixed by the court; and if the counsel, or any other person employed by the receiver, feels aggrieved by the order of the court thereon, he can appeal therefrom. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 316.

56. Counsel for the plaintiff in a suit for dissolution cannot claim compensation as associate counsel for the receiver. Ib. 10 Cal. 317.

57. Where a first attachment against an insolvent is set aside as fraudulent, in a suit brought by a subsequent attaching creditor to which various other attaching creditors, prior and subsequent, are parties, the plaintiff in the suit cannot claim

priority over the attachments preceding his, on the ground that by his superior diligence the fraud has been discovered; but the plaintiff's costs, disbursements and counsel fees, however, should first be deducted from the fund before distribution. Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 444.

58. When an attorney sued for professional services on a quantum valebant, and the answer denied the value of the services: held, that the rule requiring new matter to be set up in the answer does not apply. Bridges v. Paige, 13 Cal. 641.

59. Relator conveyed to Y. one-third of certain real estate, in consideration that Y. should attend to a suit pending in the name of relator for the recovery of the property. Y. employed an attorney to conduct the suit, the attorney of plaintiff being discharged. Relator moved the court below to substitute another attorney in place of the one employed by Y. Court refused to grant the motion, the only reason urged for the substitution being that Y. had neglected to prosecute the suit; and it not being shown that the agreement between him and relator had been canceled by the parties. Relator applies to this court for mandamus: held, that the writ lies; that the agreement between relator and Y. does not exclude the former from the right to prosecute the suit and employ such attorney as he chooses; that the exercise of this right will not affect any right Y. may have in the property or suit; that he may intervene if a proper case be made, or prosecute his rights independently, or wait until the recovery and then claim his rights under the contract with relator. People v. Norton, 16 Cal. 440.

 ATTORNEY, DISTRICT.

1. The district attorney can bring suit against bail at any time after the adjournment of the term at which the recognizance was declared forfeited. People v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 403.

2. District attorneys, however, should do their duty faithfully, but no more. They should never act as employed counsel, nor take advantage of temporary public excitement against the prisoner, or of any prejudice against him arising from any cause whatever. People v. Butler, 8 Cal. 440.

3. The fact that a district attorney has, or is entitled to a per centage on a judgment in favor of the State, will not prevent the legislature from the passage of a law releasing the judgment. People v. Bircham, 12 Cal. 55.

4. An assistant prosecuting district attorney appointed by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, under the act of April 23, 1858, (238) is not limited in his official action to any particular class of cases. The true construction of the statute is, that he shall be prosecuting attorney in the police court and shall assist the district attorney in the discharge of his various duties. People v. Magallones, 15 Cal. 428.

5. One of these duties is the prosecution of charges before the grand jury, and if the assistant may perform the duty, he must be deemed to be clothed with the powers and privileges necessary for that purpose. While acting for the district attorney his acts possess the same validity and must be regarded in the same light as if done by that officer in person. Ib. 429.

6. It is no objection to an indictment found in said court of sessions, that such assistant prosecuting district attorney was present during the session of the grand jury while the charge embraced in the indictment was under consideration. Ib.

7. The constitution of this State does not fix the term of the office of district attorney, but merely directs (art. 6, sec. 7) that the legislature shall provide for his election by the people, and shall fix by law his duties and compensation. People v. Brown, 16 Cal. 442.

8. The act of 1851, (Wood's Dig. 64) providing for the election of a district attorney in each county at the general election of that year, and every two years thereafter, etc., and the act of 1855, (Wood's Dig. 561, secs. 46 and 49) providing that the board of supervisors in each county shall fill vacancies in the office of district attorney, their appointee to hold until the next general election, the person then elected to hold for the balance of the term of the person whose place he is elected to fill, apply to the city and county of San Francisco, and are not repealed by the ninth, nor by the last section of the consolidation act of 1856. Ib. 443.

9. The policy of the act of 1851 was to create uniformity in the official terms of district attorneys by filling those terms at fixed periods. Ib.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

1. Neither the governor nor the attorney general has any power to bind the State by a contract to procure the advice of counsel as to the rights of the State in certain property. People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 258.

AUCTIONEER.

1. The memorandum required by the statute of frauds to be entered by an auctioneer in his sale book, must be made at the very time of the sale, or the vendee will not be bound by the contract; and the memorandum made in the afternoon or next day after the sale is insufficient. Craig v. Godeffroy, 1 Cal. 415.

2. An auctioneer who receives and sells stolen property is liable for the conversion to the same extent as any other individual, both upon principle and authority. Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 433; overruled in Rogers v. Huie, 2 Cal. 572.

3. Where a testator in his will appointed two persons as executors, and gave to each the power to sell his property as to them should seem proper, and the same as fully as in law may be required: held, that one of the executors could sell at private sale; and need not sell at auction, as no statutory provision then existed. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 511.

4. An auctioneer who in the regular course of his business receives and sells stolen goods, and pays over the proceeds of sale to the felon, without notice that the goods were stolen, is not liable to the true owner for a conversion. Rogers v. Huie, 2 Cal. 571; overruling Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 433.

5. Where an auctioneer sells a balance of goods without specifying their quality, he has a reasonable time to ascertain it; when this is done, and a bill of particulars is made out and delivered to the purchaser, who pays the purchase money, or a portion of it, the contract became executed, and the auctioneer will not afterwards be permitted to allege a mistake in quantity. Burgoyne v. Middleton, 4 Cal. 66.

6. A sale of land at auction where no note or memorandum of sale is made by the auctioneer, and no writing exists between the parties, is void by the statute of frauds. People v. White, 6 Cal. 75.

7. The duty imposed by the forty-ninth section of the revenue act of 1857, for selling goods at public auction, is not a tax on the auctioneer, but a tax on the sale of goods, or the proceeds of the sale—the auctioneer being made the collector of the State for the amount of the tax. State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 523.

8. This duty may be collected by action of debt by the State against the auctioneer; and the penal remedy afforded by the fifty-second section of the act is not an exclusive remedy. Ib.

9. The forty-ninth section of the act makes the auctioneer liable to pay this duty, and the meaning is, that he shall be legally held to pay it. The fact that a bond is required of the auctioneer, conditioned for the performance of his duty, shows that the legislature did not mean to restrict his responsibility to the penal provision of the act—as the bond covers this duty of paying over the money to the State. State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 523.

10. The criminal process of the fifty-second section is not a remedy provided by the statute for the payment of the duty imposed, but a mere provision for the punishment of those who violate the law. The remedy spoken of by the authorities, as excluding any other remedy, means the process provided by the legislature, whereby the specific duty may be enforced. But under our act, the remedy is not such; for, after the party has been fined and imprisoned, the duty of paying over to the State the money in the hands of the auctioneer remains. Ib.

11. The giving a bond in such cases, instead of limiting the remedy to suit on the bond, is merely a cumulative security. Ib.

12. Where a power is given by statute, everything necessary to make it effectual or requisite to attain the end is implied; and where the law requires a thing to be done, it authorizes the performance of whatever may be necessary for executing its commands. Ib. 526.

13. When a statute casts upon a party an obligation to pay money to particular persons, without providing a remedy for its recovery, an action of debt will lie. Ib.

14. There is a distinction between this case and cases cited against the result reached here. That distinction is, that in the cases of the creation of a power or duty by statute, the statute giving the power or casting the duty is alone looked to to determine the power given or duty cast, and has provided its own exclusive remedy for the execution of the power or the enforcement of the duty. The statute is complete in itself; giving a power or imposing a duty on its own terms—the remedy to be taken in connection with, and as a part of the right. But this is a matter of legal inference from the statute, and this inference may be repelled by the express language or the general scope of the act. In this case, the State's money is confided to a certain class of officers or agents; bond is required of them to secure the payment; the act declares that they shall be held liable, and subject to pay this money. The meaning is, not merely that they shall be subject to punishment for not paying, but “liable for the payment”—“the parties hereby held liable,” being the expression used. This is equivalent to saying that they shall be subject to the legal course of proceeding for the enforcement of such liabilities. This is by suit in this form. When, after this, a penalty is added as a punishment for this and other violations of this general duty of auctioneers, by no rule of construction can it be held that this penalty was intended to do away with the other, and only effectual remedy first given; effect must be given to the whole statute, and these words quoted are wholly unnecessary, if the only remedy were that given in the penal clause. Ib. 531.

15. Under the act here, the auctioneer's liability does not depend upon his statement or exhibit of the sales made by him. The act creates a liability for the percentage; and the provision therein for the statement under oath, is only a means for arriving at, or enforcing a settlement. If the auctioneer fail of his duty in making the statement, he is in no better situation than if he discharged it. Ib. 532.

16. Nor does the fact that the defendant was not licensed as an auctioneer, or did not give bond, defeat the action for the duty under the act. Having done the business, and acted openly as an auctioneer, he is estopped to deny the responsibilities of an auctioneer. He cannot plead his own wrong in failing to comply with the law in bar of his responsibilities for violating its provisions. Ib.

17. Under the act, it is the duty of the auctioneer each month to make the statement of the amount of his sales for the month preceding, and at that time to pay over to the State what is then due as per his statement. No demand of payment is necessary. The auctioneer, if he fail to make the statement or pay the money, is in default by his own act, and is debtor to the State for the amount so due. Ib.

18. Semble: that the actual collection and receipt of money by the auctioneer are not necessary to create his liability for the duty. This liability attaches prima facie upon the sale of the goods; and it is for the auctioneer to show legal excuse for not collecting the proceeds of sale. Ib.

19. If the auctioneer, under this act, be merely the agent of the State to collect and pay over its dues on sales of goods, it is doubtful whether his liability to the State for the duty imposed on such sales flows from the statute. By the common law, independent of any statute, such an agent would be responsible to his principal for the money so received. If the auctioneer chooses to put himself in this relation—that is, accepts and assumes this trust—his liability would seem not to flow from the statute, but, like that of any other custodian of funds, would arise from the general law defining the responsibilities of such agents. And the principle that, as the law had already fixed the liability from these facts, the particular remedy given by the statute would be merely cumulative, would seem to apply; but this point is not here decided. Ib.

20. This suit, not being a prosecution, but a civil action for the recovery of money due the State, is properly brought in the name of the State. Ib.

AUDITOR.

1. Under the act of 1851, the county auditor can only draw warrants where the claim is audited by himself. There is a defect in the law, which this court cannot remedy on the pretext of public convenience. Draper v. Noteware, 7 Cal. 278.

2. An account audited against the city of San Francisco, but not paid at the time the consolidation act went into effect, need not again be audited to entitle it to payment. Knox v. Woods, 8 Cal. 546.

3. A county possesses no power to allow a county auditor compensation for the issuance and cancelation of warrants drawn on the county treasurer. People v. El Dorado County, 15 Cal. 174.

AVOIDANCE.

1. Matters in avoidance must be specially pleaded. They cannot be used as defenses under an answer which is a simple denial of the allegations of the bill. Gaskill v. Moore, 4 Cal. 235.

2. The nonpresentation of the claim to an administrator for his allowance, is a matter of avoidance in an action on the claim, only to be taken advantage of by plea, and it is still, in its nature and effect, nothing more than a matter of abatement. Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 363; Falkner v. Folsom's Ex'rs, 6 Cal. 412; McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 124; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 560.

3. The prosecution of the purpose to appropriate water for mining uses is a necessary element of title; and the negative of this, the abandonment of the purpose, is not so much matter of avoidance in title as it is matter showing that no title was ever obtained. Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 50; Mc Garrity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 431.

Bail.—Bailment.

BAIL.

1. The respondents were bail in a recognizance conditioned for the appearance of M. to answer an indictment found against him on the nineteenth of April, 1852. M. appeared and the indictment was quashed. Another indictment on the same charge was found by the grand jury then in session, and M. on being called made default: held, in an action upon the recognizance, that judgment will not lie against the bail. People v. Lafarge, 3 Cal. 133.

2. Where a bail bond is given to appear and answer an indictment, the complaint must aver that the indictment was found, or is pending. People v. Smith, 3 Cal. 272.

3. If the condition be to appear "when-ever the indictment may be prosecuted," and there is no averment in what court it was prosecuted, it is error; and a loose statement that the accused was called "in the court of sessions" is not sufficient. Ib.

4. An offer of defendant in a civil arrest to surrender himself in discharge of his bail is a good surrender, and discharges them from all liability. Babb v. Oakley, 5 Cal. 94.

5. The insufficiency of an affidavit on arrest in civil process cannot be pleaded as a defense by the bail; by putting in bail and neglecting to be discharged, the defendant consents to process and waives all irregularity. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 59.

6. Final process should issue in a civil action against the defendant before the bail can become finally charged. Ib. 60.

7. The district attorney can bring suit against bail at any time after the adjournment of the term at which the recognizance was declared forfeited. People v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 403.

8. Sureties on a bail bond cannot avail themselves in defense to an action thereon of an insufficiency of the justification of the undertaking. Ib.

9. A bail bond need not state in what court the defendant shall appear, as the law provides in what court he shall be tried. Ib.

10. The sureties on a bail bond of a defendant in civil process are not bound to surrender the defendant within ten days after judgment against him; only within ten days after the issuing of an execution. Allen v. Breslauer, 8 Cal. 554.

11. Where the defendants were sureties in a recognizance for the appearance of one H., who was charged with the crime of receiving two mules alleged to have been stolen, and an indictment was found against H. for "receiving stolen goods:" held, that it does not follow from this general description of the indictment that it was for the some crime mentioned in the recognizance. People v. Hunter, 10 Cal. 503.

12. Where an assignment of a note and mortgage has been made to the plaintiffs to indemnify them as sureties on a bail bond for the assignor, and where suit is then pending on such bond, it is proper for them, as such assignees, to institute suit on the note and mortgage, and a decree of foreclosure in such case, with directions to pay the money into court, to await the further decree of the court is proper, or at least, there is no error in such a decree to the prejudice of the defendants. Hunter v. Leran, 11 Cal. 12.

13. In suit in the district court, on a bond given in the court of sessions for the appearance there of a party indicted for misdemeanor—the court of sessions having declared the bond forfeited for non-appearance—the sureties cannot defend on the ground that the judgment of forfeiture was erroneous. That judgment cannot be thus revised. People v. Wolf, 16 Cal. 385.

14. The question, whether a party indicted for misdemeanor has an absolute right to appear by attorney and defend, so as to prevent the forfeiture of his bond, not passed on. Ib. 386.

BAILMENT.

1. An innkeeper, like a common carrier, is the insurer of the goods of his guest, and is bound to keep them safe from burglars and robbers without as well as thieves within his house; but he can be held to this strict liability only for such goods as are brought into his house by travelers in the character of guests. Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 229.

2. The jury should decide whether the article was taken to the inn by the guest in his character of guest, in which event the innkeeper's liability would cover all losses, or whether after he became a guest it was deposited there in the nature of an ordinary bailment. Ib. 231.

3. A common carrier is not liable for the loss of the goods entrusted to him for carriage, where it is understood that he is to receive no compensation for the carriage, and where he has exercised ordinary diligence in taking care of them; in such case he is liable only as a bailee without hire. Fay v. Steamer New World, 1 Cal. 349.

4. A party depositing securities for payment of a debt, or advancements made thereon, may agree that they shall be sold at the option or pleasure of the creditor. Hyatt v. Argenti, 3 Cal. 157.

5. Plaintiffs drew upon the defendant, who held the deposit, directing him to pay them "from the proceeds of the securities in his hands:" this was held to give an authority to the plaintiff to sell the securities deposited to meet the drafts. Ib.

6. Personal property may be pledged, mortgaged, hypothecated or placed in trust upon such terms and conditions as the parties may agree upon, and courts of law will be governed by the language of the contract in each particular case. Ib. 159.

7. Parties appointed as assignees of an insolvent firm, in a proceeding in insolvency which was illegal and void, are merely the custodians, receivers or bailees of the fund in their hands by virtue of the order of the court, and only hold it subject to the direction of the court. Adams v. Haskell, 6 Cal. 115.

8. A pledge is a bailment, which is reciprocally beneficial to both parties, and the bailee must exercise ordinary diligence in the care and custody of the goods pledged; and he is responsible for ordinary negligence. What will amount to ordinary negligence must depend on the circumstances of the transaction and the character of the pledge. St. Losky v. Davidson, 6 Cal. 647.

9. The execution and delivery of certificates of deposit by creditors of an insolvent firm to a receiver for money deposited with the creditors, changed their character from being custodians of the funds to that of mere debtors of the insolvents. Naglee v. Palmer, 7 Cal. 548.

10. When the property converted has a fixed value, the measure of damages is that value with legal interest from the time of the conversion; when the value is fluctuating, the plaintiff may recover the highest value at the time of the conversion, or at any time afterwards. Nickerson v. Chatterton, 7 Cal. 572; Douglass v. Kraft, 9 Cal. 563; Phelps v. Owens, 11 Cal. 24.

11. All conversions of money or property by a bailee are not "ipso facto unlawful or felonious under our statute. The word 'bailee,' under our criminal statute, must be construed in a limited sense, as designating 'bailees' to keep, transport and deliver." People v. Cohen, 8 Cal. 43.

12. Indictments under the statute against "bailees" should distinctly set forth the character of the bailment, the mode of conversion, the description of the property and its value. People v. Cohen, 8 Cal. 44; People v. Peterson, 9 Cal. 315.

13. In an action by the bailor, the bailee will not be allowed to set up title in a third party, except where the bailor's possession was obtained by fraud; and where the real owner of the property appears and asserts his right to the same, the bailee may show that the bailor acquired possession of the goods, either fraudulently, tortiously or feloniously, without having obtained any right thereto. Hayden v. Davis, 9 Cal. 574.

14. When a bailee disclaims his relation to the bailor, he cannot claim the right to require a demand for the money, before interest is charged against him. Dickinson v. Owen, 11 Cal. 76.

15. A party depositing money for a wager in the hands of a third person may retract the illegal act; the person holding it as the bailee of the depositor, who may resume it any time before it is paid over to the winner. Hardy v. Hunt, 11 Cal. 348.

16. A writ placed in the sheriff's hands on Sunday cannot be officially received by him on that day. It can only be considered officially in his hands when Sunday has expired; it is a mere bailment which bound him, probably as a man, but did not bind him as a sheriff, and if he chose to disregard it entirely, we do not see that he would be bound as an officer. Whitney v. Butterfield, 13 Cal. 342.

17. Where a redemptioner, under the statute, pays to the sheriff an excess of money under protest, as to the excess, the payment is not compulsory, and the sheriff is the bailee of the redemptioner as to the excess, who may recover it back on demand, the money not having been paid over to the redemptionee. McMillan v. Visser, 14 Cal. 241.

18. Where plaintiff deposits money with defendant to be loaned out from time to time, the interest to be collected, and principal and interest held by him for plaintiff until called for, there is a continuous trust, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of defendant until after demand made by plaintiff. Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 176.

19. In such case, if defendant used the money himself, he would be like a guardian using his ward's money, and be regarded as a borrower upon the same terms upon which he could have loaned to others. Ib.

20. A man may steal his own property, if by taking it his intent be to charge a bailee with the property, and thus impose a loss upon him. People v. Stone, 16 Cal. 371.

BANKRUPTCY.

BANKS AND BANKING.

1. Under the insolvent act of 1851,* a banker could not file his petition and claim its benefit, and where his petition shows upon its face that he was a banker, and the debts are due in such capacity, the court has no jurisdiction of the case. Cohen v. Barrett, 5 Cal. 210.

2. Under the corporation act of 1850, corporations are by any device restricted from carrying on the business of banking or forming moneyed corporations. They are prohibited from issuing bills or notes upon loans, or for circulation as money—that is, they shall not lend their credit. But they may borrow money upon bills, but cannot so loan. Magee v. Mokelumne Hill C. and M. Co., 5 Cal. 259.

3. The defendant, indebted to the plaintiff, a banker, paid an account in the bank to one of the clerks, and on a subsequent day agreed to lend the clerk the amount thus paid, who took the money and used it, and the amount thus paid was never credited to the defendant on the books of the plaintiff: held, that the amount paid by defendant, in the usual way of business, was a legal payment, and that defendant lost all control over it. Rhodes v. Hinkley, 6 Cal. 284.

4. Where a bill of exchange was headed with the name of a banking office, and when paid was to be charged to that office, and was signed by a person as agent: held, that the agent was not personally responsible thereon. Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 542; overruling same case, 5 Cal. 488.

5. Where A, the teller of a bank, draws a check in favor of B, payable at a future day at the bank whereof he is teller, and the check is presented for payment, and A informs the person that it will not be paid, and refuses payment as teller of the bank: held, that protest was not necessary as against A, and no other notice of nonpayment need be given. Minturn v. Fisher, 7 Cal. 574.

6. After the issuance of certificates of deposit, there is nothing in the possession of the bankers belonging to the party upon which an attachment could fasten. McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 418.

BAR, PLEA IN.

1. Infancy is a good defense to an action on an executory contract, though the defendant did not disaffirm it on coming of age. Buzzell v. Bennett, 2 Cal. 102.

2. A judgment for the maker, in a suit by the last endorsee of a note in an agreed case, is a bar to a subsequent suit by a prior indorsee, against the maker. Bidleman v. Kewen, 2 Cal. 250.

3. If a defendant fail to plead the statute of limitations at the proper time, he will not be permitted to amend his answer so as to introduce the plea, unless it be in furtherance of justice. Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 411.

4. Where the plea of a statute is claimed as a mere legal right, it must be pleaded in the first instance, and has no day of grace thereafter. Ib.

5. Where a bill disclosed that the same subject matter had been litigated between the same parties in a prior suit, and that in the said suit the plaintiff in this suit had set up the same equity which he claims by this bill, the bill was ordered to be dismissed. Burnett v. Kilbourne, 3 Cal. 327.

6. In the case of the successive occupancy of several places as residences, the recovery of any one of them by the wife, as a homestead, would bar her recovery of any other as such. Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 273.

7. A sued B for twenty-two head of cattle, and recovered a verdict for twelve head, which was accepted and allowed to stand. C, who held under B, was then sued for the remainder of the cattle: held, that if A had commenced another suit against B, his former recovery would have been a complete bar to the action, and that if B could plead the former recovery in bar, so could C who claimed immediately through B. Cunningham v. Harris, 5 Cal. 81.

8. A judgment upon demurrer is not always a bar to a subsequent action. It is only so where it determines the whole merits of the case. Robinson v. Howard, 5 Cal. 429.

9. The provisions of the criminal code, which empowers the courts to set aside indictments on motion of the prosecution, is not limited to cases of defects in the instrument itself, and such a dismissal is no bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense, when it amounts to a felony. People v. March, 6 Cal. 546.

10. The great necessity for a correct description of commercial paper, when sued on, is to enable one recovery to operate as a bar to any subsequent action for the same cause. Farmer v. Cram, 7 Cal. 136.

11. The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction directly upon the point, is as a plea, a bar and as evidence conclusive between the same parties upon the same matter directly in another court. Love v. Waltz, 7 Cal. 252.

12. Where an insolvent was liable on a note made by S. to him, and by him endorsed to R., and by him to M., and describes the same in his schedule, viz: "To R. I am contingently liable for $1,000 and interest, as endorser for one S. upon a promissory note, made and executed by said S. to said R.:" held, that the description was insufficient for inaccuracy, and that his discharge in insolvency is no bar to a recovery on the note. McAllister v. Strobe, 7 Cal. 431.

13. If a judgment would not support an action by the plaintiff against the defendants, it must be equally unavailing when offered in support of a plea of former recovery in an action upon the original demand. Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 457.

14. A plea of a former suit pending is no bar to an action, where the complaint in the former suit is so defective that a judgment rendered thereon would be a nullity. Reynolds v. Harris, 9 Cal. 340.

15. Where it appear upon the face of the complaint that the suit is barred by lapse of time, the defendant may demur. Sublette v. Tinney, 7 Cal. 425.

16. The doctrine of recrimination or compensatium criminum, applicable in suits for divorce, and the several offenses which by the statute constitute grounds of divorce, are pleadable in bar to such suits, the one to the other, within the principle of the doctrine. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 256.

17. An instrument for the sale of partnership property, in presenti, is valid, though one of the parties named in the caption as parties of the first part did not sign the same; especially where such party does not complain and the rights of the other partners are in no degree affected by it; and the agreement is no bar to an action by bill of one of the partners against the others, for an account and dissolution, and sale of the partnership property. Cayton v. Walker, 10 Cal. 456.

18. Plaintiff brought an action of replevin against the defendants to recover certain property, and obtained a judgment for its illegal detention; defendants paid the damages, but the property was not restored. Plaintiff then brought an action of trover to recover the value; defendants plead the former recovery as a bar: held, that the judgment in replevin did not constitute a bar to the action of trover—the judgment in replevin not having been satisfied. Nickerson v. California Stage Co., 10 Cal. 521.

19. In an action brought by an agent in his own name for a trespass, in taking and converting coin from the possession of the agent, in which action the jury found that the coin belonged to the principal, and gave only nominal damages, is no bar to an action by the principal for such coin. Pico v. Webster, 12 Cal. 141.

20. A judgment against one on a joint contract of several, bars the action against the others, even though the latter were dormant partners unknown to the plaintiff when the original action was brought. Brady v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 33.

21. A judgment against one or more guarantors of a note bars the action against the others. When the contract is joint, and not joint and several, the entire cause of action is merged in the judgment. Ib.

22. A note for five hundred dollars to the order of Alfred McCarty is insufficiently described where the insolvent schedule simply states “Alfred McCarty, borrowed money, April, 1855, $500;” and a discharge in such case is no bar to a suit on the note. McCarty v. Christie, 13 Cal. 81.

23. A suit at law to recover a judgment against an administrator for money embezzled by his intestate, pending which a bill in equity was filed to recover the property bought with the money, and prosecuted to a decree after judgment was taken at law for the amount, evidences no such distinct and deliberate choice to take the general claim on the estate in lieu of the claim on this property, as to bar plaintiff from prosecuting his equitable claim. Wells v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 143.

24. The cases in which dismissal of an appeal will not operate as a bar to a second appeal, and hence not as an affirmation of the judgment below, are those where the dismissal has been made upon some technical defect in the notice of the appeal, or the undertaking, or the like. The bar operates where the dismissal is for want of prosecution, and the order is not vacated during the term, or the dismissal is on the merits. Karth v. Light, 15 Cal. 326.

25. The complaint contained two counts: one upon a special contract for the sale and delivery of the goods; the other for a claim upon goods sold and delivered. Answer denied the contract, and the other allegations of the complaint; but set up a contract between the parties somewhat different, containing a guaranty as to quality, and alleging that the quality of the goods was not in accordance with the contract, and the breach was relied on as a complete defense. Evidence was introduced upon all the issues made by the pleadings. The court instructed the jury that, “if the plaintiffs, on the day the contract matured, presented their account and offered to deliver the goods, they fulfilled the contract on their part; and if the defendants did not, within a reasonable time and within the custom of the trade, make their objection to the article sold, and offer to rescind the contract, they are bound by it, and plaintiffs should recover.” The plaintiffs had verdict and judgment for the price: held, that in a subsequent action by the defendants against plaintiffs, on the breach of the warranty, for the difference in value between the goods delivered and those contracted for, the former suit is no bar; that the matter in dispute, to wit: this breach of warranty, was not adjudged; that the instruction of the court took that question from the jury, and directed them to decide the rights of the parties upon other considerations. Earl v. Bull, 15 Cal. 425.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. The captain of a vessel drew on his owner for six hundred dollars to defray the expenses of the first mate, who was injured on the voyage, and whom it became necessary to leave on shore for his recovery. In an action by the captain against the owner for wages, the owner claimed to offset the draft on the ground that the captain was liable for it, but did not produce the draft or show payment of it: held, that this offset could not be made. Wakeman v. Vanderbilt, 3 Cal. 382.

2. When a partner makes a note in the name of the copartnership, it will render all the partners liable to a bona fide holder, although it has no relation to the copartnership business, and the other partners were wholly ignorant of the transaction and were even intentionally defrauded by the copartner. Rich v. Davis, 4 Cal. 22; 6 Cal. 142.

3. An objection that securities sued on are not promissory notes must be taken advantage of by demurrer, and a demurrer having been filed without pointing out this objection, it must be considered waived. Powell v. Ross, 4 Cal. 198.

4. A negotiable note taken after maturity is subject to all existing equities between the maker and payee; but not such as subsisted between the maker and any intermediate holder. Vinton v. Crowe, 4 Cal. 309.

5. The second of a foreign bill of exchange drawn here, payable at sight, was presented to the drawee, and payment being refused, it was duly protested. Afterwards, and before suit was brought, the first of exchange was paid to the holder, with interest and cost of protest: held, that the drawer was released from the payment of damages for the dishonor of second of exchange. Page v. Warner, 4 Cal. 395.

6. A married woman has no power to make a contract, and the execution of a promissory note is not an exception to the rule. Simpers v. Sloan, 5 Cal. 458.

7. The holder of negotiable paper endorsed before maturity is supposed to be the bona fide owner of the same, and all intendments are in favor of his right to rebut, which it is necessary to show by competent testimony that he is not the bona fide holder, or that the note was not endorsed until after maturity, or some other fact from which the law will imply fraud. Palmer v. Goodwin, 5 Cal. 459.

8. The power to make a note is not one of the express corporate powers of an association, but only an incident to those powers. Smith v. Eureka Flour Mills, 6 Cal. 7.

9. In an action for contribution on a promissory note between joint obligors, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until after the payment of the debt by the plaintiff. Sherwood v. Dunbar, 6 Cal. 54.

10. Where the second of a set of bills of exchange was presented and protested, owing to the absence of the drawee, and the first of exchange arrived nine days after and was paid, with costs of protest of the second, and two months after suit was commenced on the protested bill: held, that in an action for malicious prosecution of said suit, the question whether the plaintiffs in said suit knew that the bill was in fact paid at the time when they commenced suit was a question for the jury. Weaver v. Page, 6 Cal. 684.

11. The fact that the bill, by the usual conveyance, reached its destination within a month from its date, was sufficient to raise a presumption that defendants had received notice of payment in double that time. Ib.

12. The great necessity for a correct description of commercial paper when sued on is to enable one recovery to operate as a bar to any subsequent action for the same cause. Farmer v. Cram, 7 Cal. 136.

13. An order drawn upon a party is prima facie an assignment of the debt due from the defendant. McEwen v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 260; Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 192; Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 408.

14. The holder of a negotiable promissory note is prima facie the owner thereof for a valuable consideration. Frank v. Brady, 8 Cal. 47.

15. A draft or order by A on B, to pay C or order the balance due A by B, is not a negotiable security, not being for any fixed sum; but if endorsed by B "balance due $1,293. 75" over his signature, it becomes a promise by B to pay C or his order that sum, and is negotiable. Garwood v. Simpson, 8 Cal. 104.

16. Conceding that the words "for value received" were not in the note executed by defendant, still the instrument would have had the same legal effect. People v. McDermott, 8 Cal. 291.

17. Giving a promissory note payable at a future time for a preëxisting debt does not discharge it. Its only effect is to suspend the right of recovery until the maturity of the note. Brewster v. Bours, 8 Cal. 506.

18. The possession of a promissory note, whether obtained before or after maturity, is prima facie evidence of ownership. The transfer, with or without value, confers upon the holder the right of action, and a consideration need not be proved unless a defense is interposed which would otherwise preclude a recovery. McCann v. Lewis, 9 Cal. 246.

19. The destruction of notes in no respect impairs the liability of the maker or the right of the plaintiff to recover upon them; it only impairs the evidence of the liability of the maker. Bagley v. Eaton, 10 Cal. 148.

20. Where a husband and wife executed a joint and several promissory note: held, that the note was only obligatory as the individual contract of the husband. Luning v. Brady, 10 Cal. 267.

21. The maker upon the face of a note, with whatever motive or purpose he may sign it, is bound by the contract which he signs, according to the legal effect and meaning of the words, and cannot vary it by parol. Aud v. Magruder, 10 Cal. 289.

22. The difference between a maker and an endorser or guarantor is, that the contract of the first by its terms imports an unconditional obligation to pay money; that of the last by its terms imports a conditional obligation. Ib. 290.

23. A notice of garnishment previous to the maturity of the note does not operate as a garnishment of the amount in the hands of the garnishee. Gregory v. Higgins, 10 Cal. 340.

24. From the very nature of a promissory note it is evident that before its maturity the indebtedness of the maker thereon cannot be the subject of attachment. His obligation is not to the payee named in the note, but to the holder, whoever he may be. Ib.

25. The presumption is that promissory notes are given upon a valid consideration, but this presumption being rebutted, the necessity is thrown upon the holder of proving that he received it in good faith, without notice of the illegality of the consideration. Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 526.

26. A court of equity will not exercise jurisdiction to compel the surrender and cancelation of a promissory note past due, as the party has a clear remedy at law, for it would come into the hands of an assignee charged with the same defenses and equities as attached to it in the hands of the payee. Lewis v. Tobias, 10 Cal. 578; Smith v. Sparrow, 13 Cal. 597.

27. The following written order possesses all the requisites of an inland bill of exchange: "Please pay to the bearer of these lines two hundred dollars, and charge the same to my account." The word "please" does not alter the character of the instrument. Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 97.

28. At common law, a note made payable to the wife would prima facie be the property of the husband, who could endorse it in his own name. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 493.

29. An order in the following words: "Messrs. F. Huth & Co., please hold to the order of William Pope & Sons, of Boston, five hundred pounds sterling, of insurance effected on cargo per bark Elvira, and oblige," etc., is an equitable assignment of the funds in the hands, or to come into the hands, of the drawees to the payees. Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 407.

30. To enable a vendor of goods to rescind the sale he must offer to return the notes given for the goods; but this order can be made at, or any time before, the trial. Coghill v. Boring, 15 Cal. 218.

31. Complaint avers in substance that defendant made his note, etc., setting out a copy; that plaintiff is holder by transfer from the payee, etc.; and that defendant is indebted to plaintiff thereon in the sum, etc. The complaint then avers: "Plaintiff further shows that after said note was executed, etc. * * * defendant, by virtue of * * * proceedings in insolvency, etc. * * * claims to have been discharged from the payment of the note and debt hereinbefore mentioned; and plaintiff further shows that after said discharge as aforesaid, on or about * * * defendant promised" the payee and other persons that he would pay said note to said payee on demand, etc.; and that defendant thereby revived said obligation, etc.: held, that the complaint does not set up two causes of action; that the gravamen of the action was designed to be the promise, the previous indebtedness being averred as matter of inducement. Smith v. Richmond, 15 Cal. 502.

32. Plaintiff herein having rested his case upon proving his note, and defendant not introducing any proof of his discharge in insolvency, the court below instructed the jury to find for plaintiff, and afterwards set aside the verdict and granted a new trial: held, that this court will not revise the discretion of the court below in granting the new trial; that defendant might well have been taken by surprise, and supposed it unnecessary to introduce proof of his discharge. Ib.

33. In suit to recover money due on a promissory note, and to establish a lien for the amount upon certain real estate purchased with money advanced by plaintiff to defendant, and for which advance the note was given, the clerk entered judgment by default for the amount of the note. Plaintiff, having exhausted his remedies on this judgment, by execution and proceedings supplementary thereto, obtained from the court a decree for the equitable relief sought in the complaint, to wit: for a lien upon, and a sale of the real estate: held, that this decree was coram non judice, and void—assuming the judgment by the defendant to be valid. Such judgment, if valid, terminated the controversy, and whatever related to the merits of the case was merged in the judgment. Kittridge v. Stevens, 16 Cal. 382.

II. EXECUTION OF A NOTE.

1. When executed by an Agent.

34. An agent authorized by power of attorney to wind up and adjust the affairs of a mercantile house in New York, which had been conducted in the name of his principal, derives no authority from such power to bind his principal by a promissory note given for the purchase of real estate in San Francisco. Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 413.

35. Where A authorizes B to do all acts in his name concerning their mining operations, followed by an authority to sign B's name to any company articles, does not authorize A to sign B's name to a promissory note, even where the money was used in carrying on the joint mining operations. Washburn v. Alden, 5 Cal. 464.

36. A party who gives a general power of attorney to another to transact all business, etc., authorizing the attorney "to make, execute and deliver promissory notes," will be held liable for all such notes executed in his name by his attorney when they have reached the hands of an innocent holder, although they may have been made for the private purposes of an attorney. Hellman v. Potter, 6 Cal. 15.

37. Where the authority given by the defendants was to sign his name to a promissory note as surety, and not as principal, and the authority was not exercised in the manner delegated, the plaintiff cannot recover. Bryan v. Berry, 6 Cal. 397; Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 538.

38. If in the body of a note it appear that the note is the note of the principal, or made by the signer for, and as agent of the principal, it is the note of the latter, even though the words "agent for," or the like, are not added to the signature. Haskell v. Cornish, 13 Cal. 47.

2. As Surety.

39. Where the authority given by the defendants was to sign his name to a promissory note, as surety, and not as principal, and the authority was not exercised in the manner delegated, the plaintiff cannot recover. Bryan v. Berry, 6 Cal. 397; Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 538.

40. If a party sign a promissory note, and append to his name the word "security," or "surety," he only means to bind himself as such, and not as principal. Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 538.

41. Where a promissory note is signed by two persons in the same manner, with nothing on the face of the note to show that one was merely a surety, he cannot set up in defense that he was such, and that the plaintiff had not sued in due time, and had given no notice of demand and protest. Kritzer v. Mills, 9 Cal. 23.

42. Where a party signs a joint and several promissory note, he is not entitled to notice of demand and nonpayment, though in fact he signed as surety, and such fact was known to the payee. Hartman v. Burlingame, 9 Cal. 561.

43. The failure of the holder of a note to sue, when requested by a surety, does not operate to discharge the liability of the latter. Ib.

44. An outstanding liability, as surety or endorser for another, together with an express promise by such surety or endorser to the principal, that he will make the debt his own and pay it, is a sufficient consideration for an express promise to pay an equal amount in a promissory note. Gladwin v. Gladwin, 13 Cal. 332.

3. As Guarantor.

45. One who puts his name on a promissory note, out of the usual course of regular negotiability, is not an endorser, but a guarantor, no matter what words are used in the covenant. Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 480.

46. A guarantor of a promissory note is entitled to demand and notice of protest. Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 487; Pierce v. Kennedy, 5 Cal. 139; Geiger v. Clark, 13 Cal. 580.

47. A promissory note was endorsed by a third person, before delivery by the payee; such endorsement is prima facie an accommodation to the payee; but proof that his design was to become a guarantor would make him liable to the payee; and his default, with proper averment, dispenses with this proof. Clark v. Smith, 2 Cal. 606.

48. It is not material on what part of a note a secondary promisor places his name; if the character of his liability is made to appear, his rights are the same as those of an endorser. Bryan v. Berry, 6 Cal. 398.

49. The difference between the maker and an endorser or guarantor is, that the contract of the first by its terms imports an unconditional obligation to pay money; that of the last by its terms imports a conditional obligation. Aud v. Magruder, 10 Cal. 290.

50. The mere fact that the holder, having a good note, satisfactorily guaranteed, and drawing a fair rate of interest, rests without suit until the period of guaranty had passed, is not a very pregnant circumstance to prove that there had been a contract made with the maker to wait until that period. Williams v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 428.

51. Where a promissory note was made payable to S., and previously to its delivery to the payee was endorsed for the accommodation of the maker by H. and brother and defendant, upon an agreement of the endorers with each other, that each would become surety if the other would: held, that the endorers were guarantors, and jointly, but not severally, liable, in a suit by the payee, or a third person taking the note after maturity. Brady v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 32.

52. A judgment against one or more joint guarantors of a note bars the action against the others. When the contract is joint, and not joint and several, the entire cause of action is merged in the judgment. Ib. 33.

53. A note in this form: "Sixty days from date, for value received, we jointly promise to pay F. Reeves, or bearer, the sum of four hundred dollars, etc. Oct. 11th, 1858. (Signed) E. B. Howe, J. E. Mayo;" was endorsed, "I guarantee the collection of the within note when due. (Signed) A. Hayward," contemporaneously with the signing of the note: held, that the engagement of Hayward is not original, but collateral; that he is a guarantor and not a promisor, and is entitled to legal notice of nonpayment of the note before he can be charged on his contract. Reeves v. Howe, 16 Cal. 153.

4. As Trustee.

54. Where a party signs a promissory note, with the addition to his name of the word "trustee," he is personally liable; nor can evidence be admitted to show that, at the time of the execution of the note, there was a parol agreement that he should not be personally liable, but the note was to be paid out of a trust fund. Conner v. Clark, 12 Cal. 171.

55. A note, stating that "We, the undersigned, trustees of the First African Methodist Episcopal Church, on behalf of the whole board of trustees of said association, promise to pay," etc., and signed without qualification by two persons having authority, is the note of the church, and not of the signers. Haskell v. Cornish, 13 Cal. 47.

5. Proof of Execution.

56. Where the complaint alleges the making and endorsing of a promissory note, and the answer denies neither signature, the answer should be stricken out, and the plaintiff be entitled to judgment on the pleadings. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 196; Whitwell v. Thomas, 9 Cal. 499; Kinney v. Osborne, 14 Cal. 113.

57. To force the plaintiff to prove the execution of the note to have been authorized by the corporation, the answer should have denied the genuineness and due execution of it under oath. Smith v. Eureka Flour Mills, 6 Cal. 7.

III. NOTICE AND PROTEST.

1. Notice of Nonpayment.

58. A guarantor of a promissory note is entitled to demand and notice of protest. Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 487; Pierce v. Kennedy, 5 Cal. 139; Geiger v. Clark, 13 Cal. 580.

59. A promissory note made before the statute of 1851, (which makes the 4th day of July a nonjudicial day) which fell due on the 1st July, and was payable on the fourth; held, that notice of nonpayment on the third was premature, and ineffectual to charge the endorser. Toothaker v. Cornwall, 3 Cal. 146.

60. If a note is payable in bank, notice of nonpayment may be given to the endorser on the evening of the day on which the note is payable, after the close of banking hours, and if not payable in bank, notice may be given in the evening of the day it is payable, at the close of the usual hours of commercial business. Toothaker v. Cornwall, 4 Cal. 30; overruled in McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 631.

61. In places where there are no regular hours of business, the notice may be given after sunset of the day of dishonor. Toothaker v. Cornwall, 4 Cal. 30.

62. A notice of the dishonor of a note is sufficient if it appear or can be reasonably inferred from the notice that the note or bill has been duly protested for nonpayment, or has been dishonored. Stoughton v. Swan, 4 Cal. 213.

Notice of Nonpayment.—Protest.

63. An express notice of waiver of nonpayment is equivalent to an admission that the note has been presented, or need not be presented. Matthey v. Galley, 4 Cal. 63.

64. Where payment by the maker to the endorser is relied on as the excuse for want of demand and notice, it must be a payment directly and specifically for the note, and not as security for all transactions in the aggregate. Van Norden v. Buckley, 5 Cal. 284.

65. An endorser of a promissory note, after maturity, is entitled to demand and notice of nonpayment, before he is liable to pay. Vance v. Collins, 6 Cal. 439; Beebe v. Brooks, 12 Cal. 311.

66. Notice of nonpayment may be dispensed with by express waiver, or by any act which will amount to a waiver. Minturn v. Fisher, 7 Cal. 574.

67. Where a promissory note is signed by two persons in the same manner, with nothing on the face of the note to show that one was merely a surety, he cannot set up in defense that he was such, and that the plaintiff had not sued in due time, and had given no notice of demand and protest. Kritzer v. Mills, 9 Cal. 23.

68. Where a party signs a joint and several promissory note, he is not entitled to notice of demand and nonpayment, though in fact he signed as surety, and such fact was known to the payee. Hartman v. Burlingame, 9 Cal. 561.

69. Where a draft is drawn by the president and secretary of a corporation upon its treasurer, no notice of presentation and nonpayment is necessary to hold the corporation. The draft, in such cases, is only an order of the corporation upon itself. Dennis v. Table Mountain W. Co., 10 Cal. 370.

70. Where a place of payment is named in a bill or note, it is not a substantial contract, and it is not necessary to allege and prove a demand at the place specified. Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 327; overruling Wild v. Van Valkenburgh, 7 Cal. 167.

71. In an action upon a promissory note, payable "on demand after date," it is not necessary to show actual demand before bringing suit. The institution of suit is a demand. Ziel v. Dukes, 12 Cal. 482.

72. A notice to the endorser of a note of nonpayment is sufficient, if it appear that the endorser, at the time of receiving the notice, knew what particular piece of paper was referred to, and could not have been prejudiced by the failure to describe it, and this though the notice was verbal and the note neither produced nor described. Thompson v. Williams, 14 Cal. 162.

73. Where a note due January, 1857, was endorsed by the payee to the present holder November 26th, 1858, and he, November 29th, 1858, demanded payment of the maker, and verbally notified the endorser of such demand, and that he would be held on his endorsement, it is no objection to the notice that it did not state the time of demand. The demand was good if made within a reasonable time, and before the notice; otherwise as to notes endorsed before maturity. In such a case the notice must state the time of demand. Ib. 163.

74. If much time intervenes between demand and notice, in transfers after maturity, the question may arise whether the delay has not released the endorser. Ib.

75. A notice by the holder that he had demanded payment of that note, implies that payment was demanded of the person liable to pay, to wit: the maker; and the declaration that he intended to look for payment to defendant, the endorser, implies the fact of nonpayment. Ib. 164.

76. An endorser of a note payable on demand, no demand being made until thirteen months after the endorsement to plaintiff, is prima facie not liable. The delay is unreasonable. Jerome v. Stebbins, 14 Cal. 458.

2. Protest.

77. The second of a foreign bill of exchange drawn here payable at sight was presented to the drawee, and payment being refused, it was duly protested. Afterwards and before suit was brought, the first of exchange was paid to the holder, with interest and cost of protest: it was held, the drawer was released from the payment of damages for the dishonor of the second of exchange. Page v. Warner, 4 Cal. 395.

78. By the fifth section of the act concerning notaries, bills are made protestable, and by the tenth section the protest of the notary is expressly made evidence of demand, and nonpayment of notes and bills. Conolly v. Goodwin, 5 Cal. 221.

79. At common law, promissory notes were not protestable securities; they are made so by our statute, and as a consequence the protest of them must be attended with all the incidents belonging to foreign bills of exchange. Tevis v. Randall, 6 Cal. 635.

80. Where the second of a set of bills of exchange was presented and protested, owing to the absence of the drawee, and the first of exchange arrived nine days after, and was paid with costs of protest of the second, and two months after suit was commenced on the protested bill: held, that in an action for malicious prosecution of said suit, the question whether the plaintiffs in said suit knew that the bill was in fact paid at the time when they commenced suit was a question for the jury. Weaver v. Page, 6 Cal. 684.

81. A notarial certificate of protest of a note is of itself presumptive evidence that the notary had authority from the proper parties to make the protest. Gillespie v. Neville, 14 Cal. 409.

See PROTEST.

IV. PROOF OF ENDORSEMENT.

82. A party is not required to deny an endorsement under oath, and an endorsee cannot give the notes in evidence without proof of their endorsement. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 159; Youngs v. Bell, 4 Cal. 202.

V. ENDORSER AS A WITNESS.

83. An endorser of a note is incompetent as a witness to establish the lien of a holder of the note upon the property of the maker, being directly interested to have the lien established. Soule v. Dawes, 6 Cal. 475.

84. In an action against the maker of a note, or the acceptor of a bill, the endorser is a competent witness for either party. Bryant v. Watriss, 13 Cal. 87.

VI. ACCEPTANCE OF A BILL.

85. Where an order is drawn on a firm for an unspecified sum, which is not negotiable, and an endorsement of the exact sum due is made by one of the firm, thus rendering it negotiable, it operates as a release of the firm, and as an individual acceptance of the partner endorsing. Garwood v. Simpson, 8 Cal. 106.

86. Where a draft is accepted conditionally, to be paid upon the happening of a contingency, whether the contingency has happened is a question for the jury. Nagle v. Horner, 8 Cal. 358.

87. A draft payable in terms out of an appropriation for public work done by the acceptor becomes due on payment for the work by the government. Ib.

88. A drew an order on B in favor of C, for two hundred and six dollars and fifty cents. C presented the order to B, and he paid twenty-two dollars and fifty cents thereon, and the amount was receipted on the back of the order, in the handwriting of B, and signed by C: held, that this was not an acceptance. Bassett v. Haines, 9 Cal. 261.

89. The written acceptance of the drawee is necessary to charge him as acceptor of a bill, under our statute. A parol acceptance is insufficient. Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 97.

90. The acceptance of the note of a third party by the creditor is considered as accompanied with the condition that the note shall be paid at maturity. Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 324.

91. A letter of credit, promising unconditionally to accept bills drawn upon its faith, is deemed, under our statute, an actual acceptance in favor of a person who upon its faith receives a bill so drawn for a valuable consideration. Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 454.

VII. ALTERATION OF A BILL OR NOTE.

92. An alteration which does not vary the meaning, the nature, or the subject matter of the note, is immaterial. Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 175.

93. The filling up of a blank is not such an alteration of a note as to vitiate and prevent any recovery. It supplied an omission, by fixing an optional rate of interest, not binding on the maker without further proof; but does not avoid the right to recover the principal, and legal interest. Fisher v. Dennis, 6 Cal. 579.

94. Where a promissory note was made, bearing interest monthly, but leaving the rate of interest in blank, if the rate of interest is filled in by the holder, he cannot, without some evidence of agreement, recover more than legal interest; though he had passed the note thus filled up to an innocent purchaser, the maker would be liable. Fisher v. Dennis, 6 Cal. 579; Visher v. Webster, 8 Cal. 112.

95. An answer to a suit on a promissory note, by the assignee, which sets up as one defense—1st, that the note was made payable to order, and was afterwards fraudulently altered by inserting the word "bearer" in lieu of the word "order;" 2d, that the defendant paid the note before assignment; 3d, that the note was assigned to plaintiff after maturity, etc.: held, that if true, they were amply sufficient to defeat the action. Sherman v. Rolberg, 11 Cal. 41.

VIII. DEMAND OF A NOTE OR BILL.

96. Where a place of payment is named in a bill or note, it is not a substantial contract, and it is not necessary to allege and prove a demand at the place specified. Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 327, overruling Wild v. Van Valkenburgh, 7 Cal. 167.

97. In an action upon a promissory note, payable "on demand after date," it is not necessary to show actual demand before bringing suit. The institution of suit is a demand. Zeil v. Dukes, 12 Cal. 482.

IX. ACTIONS UPON A NOTE.

98. A payor has all of the last day in which his note falls due in which to pay it; and a suit commenced for the recovery of the note on that day is premature. Wilcombe v. Dodge, 3 Cal. 260.

99. The complaint was for money loaned, and set out a draft drawn by defendants on a house in Boston, which was drawn with the understanding that plaintiff should pay the same, which he did; but did not aver that after paying the draft he canceled it, and delivered it to defendants: held, that the action should have been maintained on the outstanding draft. Lambert v. Slade, 3 Cal. 331.

100. No right of action can accrue upon a draft to the drawee, until payment. Wakeman v. Vanderbilt, 3 Cal. 382.

101. A complaint is insufficient which treats the maker and guarantor of a note as joint makers, and contains no allegation of demand and notice. Lightstone v. Laurencel, 4 Cal. 277.

102. The party to whom a note is made payable is prima facie the owner, and his right to maintain the action cannot be questioned on that ground. Price v. Dunlap, 5 Cal. 485.

103. A note payable to the plaintiff, although it describes him as the agent of another, does not take away the right of the agent to sue in his own name, at law. Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. 516.

104. Where a creditor commenced an attachment suit against his debtor on four promissory notes, one of which was not due, and obtained judgment by default: held, that it was fraudulent and void as to subsequent attaching creditors, and that the judgment must stand or fall as a whole. Taaffe v. Josephson, 7 Cal. 356; overruled in Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 442.

105. The failure of a holder of a note to sue when requested by a surety does not operate to discharge the liability of the latter. Hartman v. Burlingame, 9 Cal. 561.

106. F. & H. made and delivered to S. a joint and several promissory note for $4,500; afterwards, and before the maturity of this note, S. gave his note for $1,000, with large interest, to C., and endorsed and delivered as collateral security the note of F. and H. for $4,500. C. subsequently assigned S.'s note of $1,000 to F. and delivered the note of F. and H. as collateral security, or as he held it. After this, S. sold and assigned the note of F. and H. for $4,500, then in the possession of F., to D., the plaintiff. D. subsequently demanded of F. the $4,500 note, offering to credit the same, with the amount of the $1,000 note, and interest. F. declined to deliver the note, and D. brought suit to recover the amount of F. and H., less the $1,000 note and interest: held, that the suit was properly brought, and that D. is entitled to recover on the note against F. and H., less the amount of the $1,000 note and interest. Dupré v. Fall, 10 Cal. 430.

Defense.

1. Defense.

107. Where the complaint alleges the making and endorsing of a promissory note, and the answer denies neither signature, the answer should be stricken out, and the plaintiff be entitled to judgment. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 196.

108. An endorsee, after maturity, takes the same interest that the endorser had, and his claim is subject to the same legal and equitable defense. Folsom v. Bartlett, 2 Cal. 164.

109. A negotiable note, taken after maturity, is subject to all subsisting equities between the maker and payee, but not between the maker and any intermediate holder. Vinton v. Crowe, 4 Cal. 309.

110. It is not a good plea to allege that the note sued on is the property of another, and not of the plaintiff, without showing some substantial matter of defense against the one asserted to be the owner, and which could not be set up against the plaintiff. Gushee v. Leavitt, 5 Cal. 161.

111. It is no defense to a note given by one partner to the other for his interest in land held jointly by both, that the payee of the note had deceived his partner, the maker, in the division of partnership stock, and was indebted therefor in an amount equal to or greater than the sum due on the note. Case v. Maxey, 6 Cal. 277.

112. Where the plaintiff gave his note, payable four months after date, in consideration of which the defendants executed a contract for a deed of land, upon payment of the note: held, that after a tender of the deed, and demand and refusal to pay the note after its maturity, the plaintiff had forfeited his right to insist on a performance of the contract. Pearis v. Corillaud, 6 Cal. 621.

113. Where a negotiable promissory note, not yet due, is taken bona fide as collateral security for a preëxisting debt, it is not subject to any defense existing at the date of the assignment between the original parties. Payne v. Bensley, 8 Cal. 266; Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 98; Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 454.

114. If there is any new consideration for the assignment of a promissory note, then the assignee is a holder for value, and the maker is precluded from resorting to defenses that he might make against the payee were the suit brought by him. Payne v. Bensley, 8 Cal. 266.

115. Where a promissory note is signed by two persons in the same manner, with nothing on the face of the note to show that one was merely a surety, he cannot set up in defense that he was such, and that the plaintiff had not sued in due time, and had given no notice of demand and protest. Kritzer v. Mills, 9 Cal. 23.

116. L. advanced to H. four hundred and seventy-six dollars, and received from H., for collection, an order for the amount upon a party indebted to him. The order not being collected, L. returned it to H., and took H.'s note for the amount advanced. In a suit for the note, H. set up as a defense laches on the part of L. in not presenting the order, by means of which the debt was lost: held, that if there were any laches, they were waived by the execution of the note. Leonard v. Hastings, 9 Cal. 237.

117. Where a complaint, in an action on a promissory note executed by two defendants, averred that the defendants were partners, and that the note was executed by them; and the answer simply denied that the defendants were partners, and did not deny that they executed the note: held, that the averment of partnership was immaterial; and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the pleadings. Whitwell v. Thomas, 9 Cal. 499.

118. An answer to a suit on a promissory note by the assignee, which sets up as one defense: first, that the note was made payable to order, and was afterwards fraudulently altered by inserting the word "bearer" in lieu of the word "order;" second, that the defendant paid the note before assignment; third, that the note was assigned to plaintiff after maturity, &c.: held, that if true, they are amply sufficient to defeat the action. Sherman v. Rolberg, 11 Cal. 41.

119. Where in a mortgage to secure the purchase money of land, for which notes were given falling due at different times, the condition was: "provided, that previous to the dates of said payments, it shall have been decided by competent authority that the title to said land is fully vested in the party of the second part, and the party of the first part is given full and peaceable possession;" the holder of one of the notes, transferred before maturity, may sue on it at maturity, although the title to the land has not been settled, and peaceable possession not given. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 99.

120. The fact that the purchaser of the note saw the mortgage and note was no notice to him of any valid defense to the note. Ib. 100.

121. In a suit on a note, the complaint containing the note or a copy, the denial of indebtedness is no denial at all. Kinney v. Osborne, 14 Cal. 113.

122. Where, in an action on a lost note, a verified complaint alleges that on a particular day the note in question was made by defendant and delivered to plaintiff, an answer denying the making and delivery of the note on the day mentioned is insufficient. Such denial does not reach the substantial matter of the averment, and only raises an immaterial issue as to time. Castro v. Wetmore, 16 Cal. 380.

123. Where, in an action on a lost note, the complaint verified alleges the loss, stating particularly the circumstances thereof, an answer denying that the note was lost as alleged does not put in issue the fact of loss, which is the gist of the averment, but only the circumstances of the loss, which are collateral and immaterial. Ib.

a. Want of Consideration.

124. Where a note was given on the sale of real estate, and the vendor had neither title, nor color of title, nor possession: held, that the consideration might be inquired into, as between the original parties; and that there being no consideration, the payee could not recover against the maker, and that a guarantor on the note without consideration was not liable. Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 414.

125. Although want of, or illegality of consideration may be inquired into, in an action upon a bill or note between the original parties, by the general mercantile law the maker is estopped from setting up this defense where the securities have passed into the hands of innocent third parties, unless made void by statute. Haight v. Joyce, 2 Cal. 66; Thorne v. Yontz, 4 Cal. 323.

126. Where, by an agreement for the sale or purchase of land, the price is payable in instalments, for which the purchaser executes his notes, payable at certain times, and the vendor agrees to convey on payment of the last instalment, and suit is brought on the notes after all the instalments have become due, the tender of a conveyance by the vendor is a condition precedent to the right to sue; and the purchaser may insist on the want of such tender against an endorsee, after maturity. Folsom v. Bartling, 2 Cal. 164.

127. In defense to a promissory note, it is not sufficient to plead in general terms want of consideration and that the note was obtained by fraud, without setting out the facts. Gushee v. Leavitt, 5 Cal. 160.

128. Where a party, in consideration of a conveyance of land to him, agrees to pay an outstanding note of his vendor, and writes his name on the back of the note as a memorandum of said agreement, at the same time acknowledging his liability: held, that the liability thus assumed is not a conditional liability of an endorser, but a primary and unconditional obligation to pay the note, for which he had received a full consideration. Palmer v. Tripp, 8 Cal. 97.

129. Where A gave his promissory note to B, in part payment for a certain tract of land, payable to B thirty days after the confirmation of the Sutter land title; provided the land for which the note was given should be included in the limits of the grant: held, that the confirmation of Sutter's title was a condition precedent to the payment of the note; and to entitle A to a judgment on such note, he must prove such confirmation. Sanders v. Whitesides, 10 Cal. 89.

130. The presumption is that promissory notes are given upon a valid consideration; but this presumption being rebutted, the necessity is thrown upon the holder of proving that he received it in good faith, without notice of the illegality of the consideration. Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 526.

131. Where one of the grantees, under the "swamp and overflowed land" act of 1857, enters into an agreement to sell to defendant five of the sections of land embraced within the act, and covenants that he and his associates will execute a good and sufficient deed to the defendant, upon payment of the several notes given as the consideration; will complete the canals within the five years allowed; and that by means thereof and the operation of the statute they will have a good and valid title to the premises: held, that defendant cannot resist the payment of the first note merely because the legislature has attempted, by an unconstitutional act, to repeal the contract of the State with the vendor and his associates—the agreement itself providing for a surrender of the unpaid notes, and a return of the money paid, in case of future failure of title, and the rights of the grantees of the State being fully known to defendant. Montgomery v. Kasson, 16 Cal. 195.

b. Fraudulent Consideration.

132. Where, in an action on a promissory note, the defense set up is that defendant executed the note as the consideration for a deed from the plaintiff for certain land, under false and fraudulent representations that plaintiff had an interest therein; the defendant, if he would avoid payment, must offer to surrender the deed to be canceled, so that both parties could have been remitted to their original rights. Tissot v. Throckmorton, 6 Cal. 473.

133. Where a party has given a promissory note, and the payee assigns the note, without recourse after maturity, and suit is brought upon the note by the assignee, and the maker then files his bill against the assignor and assignee, alleging fraud in obtaining the note, and praying for an injunction, and that the note be canceled: held, that the case was a proper one for equitable relief; and the maker had the right to have the note canceled, so as to prevent future litigation. Domingo v. Getman, 9 Cal. 102.

134. L. executed and delivered his note to N. without consideration, and for the purpose of defrauding, hindering and delaying creditors. N. had knowledge of the fraud, and sued and attached upon the note L.'s property. After this, W., a creditor of L., also attached and levied upon the same property. Before judgment, N., for a valuable consideration, assigned the note to J., who knew nothing of the fraud: held, that J. was not protected in his purchase; N. having been superseded by W.'s attachment could not, by any act or deed of his, put his assignee in any better position than he occupied himself. Wright v. Levy, 12 Cal. 263.

135. If any portion of the consideration of a note be fraudulent, the entire note is void, as against creditors. McKenty v. Gladwin, 10 Cal. 229.

136. Where judgment is confessed on a note, a portion of the consideration being advanced from time to time after the date of the note, which drew interest on the whole amount from date, a portion of the interest is fraudulent, and the entire note is void against creditors. Scales v. Scott, 13 Cal. 78.

137. Suit on a note for the purchase of land. Answer sets up that the note was given for the land, fencing and building materials; that plaintiffs falsely represented that there was building material for building a barn; that this material was so insufficient in quantity, that it cost defendant six hundred dollars to buy more, etc. There were some averments as to the rotten condition of fences, which plaintiff represented to be good: held, that defendant having taken possession under the contract, and retaining it, cannot set up representations, fraudulent or otherwise, as to the fences, they being part of the freehold. Kinney v. Osborne, 14 Cal. 113.

138. Plaintiff in execution, after assigning his judgment, pretended falsely and fraudulently to be the owner of it, and so pretending, made a contract to discharge the judgment, by taking the note of third persons, not negotiable in the mercantile sense, in payment; the makers of the note agreed to this under the supposition, induced by him, that he was the owner of the judgment: held, that the makers of the note, upon discovering that the plaintiff was not the owner of the judgment, properly refused to pay the note even to assignees, before maturity thereof. Mitchell v. Hackett, 14 Cal. 665.

X. PAYMENT.

139. Where payment by the maker to the endorser is relied on as an excuse for want of demand and notice, it must be a payment directly and specifically for the note, and not as security for all transactions in the aggregate. Van Norden v. Buckley, 5 Cal. 284.

Payment.—Extension of time for Payment.

140. Where the maker does not specify that the payment to the endorser was to meet the endorsed note, the endorser had a right to apply it to any indebtedness he held against the maker, and to stand upon his strict legal rights as to demand and notice in regard to the endorsed note. Ib.

141. Where a note was delivered to the maker long before it became due, upon his giving the holder an order on the endorsers, which was dishonored, and thereupon it was returned to the holder, it did not operate as a payment. Smith v. Harper, 5 Cal. 330.

142. Where the holder of a note accepts a draft or check in payment, he is not bound to give up the note before payment of the draft or check, or it will be a substitution of new security to discharge the endorser. Ib.

143. When the plaintiff employs an agent to collect a note due from the defendant, and the defendant employs the same agent to collect other notes due him, and apply the same on plaintiff's note, and the agent becomes insolvent after collecting the money due on defendant's account: held, that unless the appropriation was actually made, the loss occasioned by the failure of the agent must fall on the defendant. Phillips v. Mayer, 7 Cal. 83.

144. Where F. sued on a note which had two endorsements, signed by the payee; the first a receipt from F. for the amount due; the second, in the words "without recourse to me:" held, that there was no presumption that the endorsements were made at different times, or that the payment was a voluntary unconditional payment. Frank v. Brady, 8 Cal. 49.

145. When the payment of a promissory note is by agreement made conditional upon the payment by the payee of a certain debt of the payor, such payment is a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to recover on the note, and must be averred in the complaint to have been made. Rogers v. Cody, 8 Cal. 324.

146. A payor is not permitted to contradict the words, by showing that when he promised to pay absolutely, he meant to bind himself to pay conditionally, or on some contingency, or if another did not, or if demand was made and notice given. Aud v. Magruder, 10 Cal. 289.

147. An agent for the collection of the note is confined to the taking of money in payment, and has no power to take goods in payment unless specific authority is given. Mudgett v. Day, 12 Cal. 140.

148. A part payment of the demand by one of two debtors is no consideration for a discharge to him of the balance. The payment of the entire amount was the obligation of both; the partial payment was but a partial discharge of the existing obligation, and furnished no claim for the relinquishment of any rights for the residue. Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 324.

149. Unless a note was received by express agreement as payment, it did not extinguish the debt. It only operated to extend the time of payment of the debt to the time the note fell due, and hence the statute of limitations would commence running only from that time. Ib.

150. Paying part of a note when all is due is no consideration for an agreement to extend the time of payment. Liening v. Gould, 13 Cal. 599.

151. A sheriff, under his general powers, cannot take anything but legal currency in satisfaction of an execution; and where he takes a note, endorses it on the execution, and then returns it satisfied, the action is not conclusive, and perhaps not prima facie evidence of satisfaction, unless it shows some authority for receiving the note. Mitchell v. Hackett, 14 Cal. 666.

152. Suit on a note. Defendants answered by pleading payment, and averring payment at divers times of money to plaintiff's intestate, which he promised to apply on the note. Plaintiff put the note in evidence and rested. Defendants offered receipts to prove payment. To rebut this, plaintiff offered proof tending to show that these payments applied to an open account against defendants. Defendants then proposed to rebut by showing that there was no such account made or existing. Court refused to permit it: held, that the court erred; that the burden of proof was really on defendants to prove payment under the issue, and that they were entitled to close the proofs; at least, to rebut new matter set up by plaintiff. Lisman v. Early, 15 Cal. 200.

Interest on a Bill or Note.—Notes described in Insolvent's schedule.

1. Extension of time of payment.

153. An agreement for the extension of the time of payment of a promissory note if without consideration, is void. McCann v. Lewis, 9 Cal. 247.

154. A mere extension of time to the maker is not a sufficient plea to discharge the surety or endorser; there must be an extension of time on an agreement with the maker, founded upon a valid consideration, and such as will suspend the right of action against the maker. Williams v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 426.

155. The mere fact that the holder, having a good note satisfactorily guaranteed and drawing a fair rate of interest, rests without suit until the period of guaranty has passed, is not a very pregnant circumstance to prove that there had been a contract made with the maker to wait till that period. Ib. 428.

156. The renewal of a note in part could not alter the original relations of the parties as debtors and creditors, except in the increased extension of the time of payment, after the maturity of the renewed note. Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 324.

XI. INTEREST ON A BILL OR NOTE.

157. In a judgment on a note bearing interest, the interest is to be computed and made part of the judgment, and the judgment to bear the agreed interest. Emeric v. Tams, 6 Cal. 156; Mount v. Chapman, 9 Cal. 297; McCann v. Lewis, 9 Cal. 247; Guy v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 417.

158. Where a note bore no interest other than legal interest, which was ten per cent. per annum, and conventional interest was ten per cent. per month, this fact alone would raise the presumption that the parties understood that the note should be paid at maturity. Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 572.

159. Where a promissory note was made bearing interest monthly, but leaving the rate of interest in blank, if the rate of interest is filled in by the holder, he cannot, without some evidence of agreement, recover more than legal interest, though he had passed the note then filled up to an innocent purchaser—the maker would be liable. Fisher v. Dennis, 6 Cal. 579; Visher v. Webster, 8 Cal. 112.

160. Where a promissory note is payable three months after date, with interest at the rate of — per month, the interest runs from the date of the note. Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 149.

161. Interest which is included in a note is as much a part of the sum for which the note was given as the principal sum itself. McKenty v. Gladwin, 10 Cal. 229; Scales v. Scott, 13 Cal. 79.

162. Where a note is antedated for the purpose of making it draw interest, for which there is no consideration, it is void as to creditors. Ib. 230.

163. Where a note on its face draws two and a half per cent. per month interest, parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that from a certain time the interest had been reduced, by a verbal agreement between the parties, to one and a half per cent. per month. Interest beyond the statutory rate cannot be established by parol. Adler v. Friedman, 16 Cal. 140.

XII. NOTES DESCRIBED IN INSOLVENT'S SCHEDULE.*

164. Where an insolvent was liable on a note, and describes the same incorrectly in his schedule: held, that the description was insufficient for inaccuracy, and that his discharge in insolvency is no bar to a recovery on the note. McAllister v. Strobe, 7 Cal. 431; Judson v. Atwill, 478.

165. The discharge by a decree under the insolvent act from the payment of the note does not release the lien of the mortgage executed to secure its payment. Luning v. Brady, 10 Cal. 267.

166. A note for five hundred dollars to the order of Alfred McCarty is insufficiently described in an insolvent's schedule, where he simply states, "Alfred McCarty, borrowed money, April, 1855, five hundred dollars," and a discharge in such case is no bar to a suit on a note. McCarty v. Christie, 13 Cal. 81.

*The amendment of April 27th, 1860, to the insolvent law of 1851 discharges the debt, whether imperfectly described or not described at all.

Notes secured by Mortgage.

XIII. NOTES SECURED BY MORTGAGE.

167. A mortgage is a mere incident to the debt which it secures, and follows the transfer of the note with the full effect of a regular assignment. Peters v. Jamestown Bridge Co., 5 Cal. 336; Bennett v. Taylor, 5 Cal. 502; Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. 516; Bennett v. Solomon, 6 Cal. 138; Phelan v. Olney, 6 Cal. 483; Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 125; McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 411; Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal. 428; Hickox v. Lowe, 10 Cal. 206; Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 263.

168. A note executed to O. as the agent of M., and the mortgage to secure the note was made to M. O., under a contract with M., was entitled to one-half of the note: held, that O., having a right to the note, had a right to foreclose the mortgage. Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. 516.

169. Where a new note, on the same terms, between the same parties, for the same sum, and of the same date, is given as a substitute for a previous note secured by mortgage, the owner is entitled to a foreclosure on the new note. Spring v. Hill, 6 Cal. 18.

170. The endorsement and delivery of one of two notes secured by a mortgage carries with it a pro rata portion of the security. Phelan v. Olney, 6 Cal. 483.

171. The purchaser of one of two notes secured by a mortgage, and the assignee of the mortgage itself, takes the assignment with notice of the equity of the holder of the other notes, as he is informed by the deed itself that it was given as security for two notes of equal amount, neither of which was due. Ib.

172. The holders of two notes secured by one mortgage stand in the same relation to the mortgaged premises until a discharge of the mortgage and acceptance of a different security. This discharge by one, though void as to the other, is valid as to the maker, and divests any lien which he had by virtue of said mortgage. Ib.

173. The discharge by a decree under the insolvent act from the payment of the note, did not release the lien of the mortgage executed to secure its payment. Luning v. Brady, 10 Cal. 267.

174. A note executed by the whole of the associates in this joint enterprise to three of them, the plaintiffs below, is equivalent, we think, to a note and mortgage executed by the defendants to the plaintiffs for an amount less, by the proportion of the number of plaintiffs to the defendants, and may be enforced in equity in like manner as if so executed. McDowell v. Jacobs, 10 Cal. 389.

175. In a suit on a promissory note and mortgage, the court may give a general judgment for the amount due on the note, at the same time a decree of foreclosure of the mortgaged premises. Rowe v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 444.

176. A corporation may bind itself by a note and mortgage made by its president and secretary and signed by them in their official capacity as such. Ib.

177. Where an assignment of a note and mortgage has been made to plaintiffs to indemnify them as sureties on a bail bond for the assignor, and where suit is then pending on such bond, it is proper for them, as such assignees, to institute suit on the note and mortgage; and a decree of foreclosure in such case, with directions to pay the money into court to await the further decree of the court, is proper, or at least, there is no error in such a decree to the prejudice of the defendants. Hunter v. Leran, 11 Cal. 12.

178. Where a husband and wife execute a note and mortgage, the note is good as to the husband, even if void as to the wife; and the property is bound by the mortgage, independent of the note of the wife. Pfeiffer v. Riehn, 13 Cal. 649.

179. Because a mortgage given to secure the payment of several notes falling due at different times provides for payment at times or in modes different from the notes, is no objection to suit on the notes at maturity. The mortgage is not a part of the contract of indebtedness. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 98.

180. Where a mortgage is conditioned to pay a note "according to the tenor and conditions thereof," and the note is recited as a "certain promissory note for the payment of the sum of $3,500 on the sixth day of June, A. D. 1858, at the said Pine Grove, with interest at the rate of two per cent. per month from date till paid," the statute is complied with as to setting out the sum to be secured, the rate of interest to be paid, and when payable. Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 57.

181. At one time, seven shares of stock in a company are pledged by defendant to plaintiff as security for a note of defendant then executed. At another time, twenty more shares are pledged as security for another note of defendant then executed. In suit on the notes, and for sale of the stock, etc., the judgment was for the amount of the notes, and directed a sale of all the shares of stock, and an application of the proceeds to the payment of the judgment: held, that the judgment was wrong so far as it ordered a sale of the stock in gross, and an application of the proceeds to the entire indebtedness. Mahoney v. Caperton, 15 Cal. 315.

FOR ENDORSEMENT OF BILLS AND NOTES, see ENDORSEMENT.

BILL OF ITEMS.

See ITEMS.

BILL OF LADING.

1. Delivery of part of the goods mentioned in one bill of lading to the consignee does not defeat a lien on the remainder for the whole freight unpaid. Frothingham v. Jenkins, 1 Cal. 43.

2. The master of a ship has a lien on the cargo for the freight, and is not bound to deliver to a consignee any part of the goods specified in a bill of lading until the whole freight is paid; and an offer to give good security for the payment of the freight is not sufficient to compel a delivery by the master. Ib.

3. The endorsement of a bill of lading prima facie vests the property in the goods mentioned therein in the endorsee; but a bill of lading is not a negotiable instrument, so far as to enable an endorsee, who has no property either general or special in the goods, and no lien thereon for advances or otherwise, to sue the master of a ship in his own name for the non-delivery of the goods, where it appears on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff, the endorsee, is a mere naked agent of the shippers. Lineker v. Ayeshford, 1 Cal. 79.

4. If a bill of lading be assigned by the consignee bona fide for a valuable consideration, without notice of any adverse interest, the property in the goods mentioned therein becomes vested in the endorsee. Ib. 81.

5. The consignee or endorsee of a bill of lading is in general to be deemed the presumptive owner of the goods, if they are shipped on account and risk of the consignee, liable, however, to be explained or rebutted as in any other receipt. Ib.

6. An agent cannot ordinarily sue in his own name in respect to the subject matter of his agency, and this rule applies to consignees and endorsees of bills of lading when they are in truth but the agent of the shippers. Ib. 82.

7. An agent, whether factor, consignee or endorsee of a bill of lading, having no property in the goods either general or special, and no lien upon them for advances or otherwise, cannot maintain an action for the nondelivery of goods against the ship owner or master who claims to hold the goods for the assignees of the shippers. Ib. 83.

8. Where the consignor of a vessel received from a consignee in a bill of lading the freight for his goods shipped in the vessel, and previously endorsed an order to another person to receive the goods: held, he was liable to the consignee of the bill of lading for a conversion of his goods. Webb v. Winter, 1 Cal. 418.

9. The consignee named in a bill of lading is to be deemed prima facie the owner of the goods mentioned therein, and upon the payment of freight may maintain an action against any person who assumes a control over them in violation of his rights of property. Ib.

10. Where suit is brought on a bill of lading made to the plaintiff jointly with another, the plaintiff has no separate cause of action. Mayo v. Stansbury, 3 Cal. 467.

11. A party being about to fail can assign a bill of lading of goods to arrive, not yet paid for, to another in trust to devote the proceeds to the payment of the vendor, and such assignment is good against attaching creditors. Le Cacheux v. Cutter, 6 Cal. 519.

Bill of Lading.—In general.

12. A bill of lading clear upon its face and without endorsement is not sufficient to put third persons upon inquiry as to the real owner of the property. The holders are presumed to be the real owners. Glidden v. Lucas, 7 Cal. 29.

BONDS.

- I. In general.
- II. Official Bonds.
- III. Bond for a Title.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. In an action upon a bond to be valid in the happening of a certain event, or performance of a certain act, the complaint must aver that the event has happened or the act performed as a condition precedent to recovery. Mickle v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 201; People v. Smith, 2 Cal. 272; Palmer v. Melvin, 6 Cal. 652; Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 59; Chambers v. Waters, 7 Cal. 390; Nickerson v. Chatterton, 7 Cal. 572; Bensley v. Atwill, 12 Cal. 240.

2. In an action upon a bond there can be no constructive parties jointly liable with the proper obligors. Lindsay v. Flint, 4 Cal. 89.

3. Where the condition of a bond is to pay the debt of another, the condition operating merely by way of defeasance; and if a defendant chooses to put his obligation in that form, he elects to be originally liable. A bond should be sued on setting out breaches and damages. Assumpsit on the condition would be bad on demurrer. Baker v. Cornwall, 4 Cal. 16.

4. An omission to allege delivery in an action on a bond can be taken advantage of only on demurrer. Garcia v. Satrustegui, 4 Cal. 244.

5. The district attorney can bring suit against the sureties on a bail bond at any time after the adjournment of the term at which the recognizance was declared forfeited, nor can the sureties avail themselves, in defense to an action thereon, of an insufficiency of the justification of the bond. People v. Carpenter, 7 Cal. 403.

6. Where plaintiff filed a bill in equity for the appointment of a receiver and other relief, and the court refused to appoint a receiver on condition that defendant file a bond to account as receiver, which defendant did, and judgment for $20,000 was rendered against defendant in that suit, and proper demand being made and refused, suit was brought by plaintiff on this bond, which was made payable to the people of the State of California: held, that the plaintiff could recover thereon. Baker v. Bartol, 7 Cal. 553.

7. A plaintiff being the real party in interest has a right to sue upon a bond, though made payable to the people of the State. Taaffe v. Rosenthal, 7 Cal. 518; Baker v. Bartol, 7 Cal. 554.

8. Under our statute undertakings are on the same footing as bonds. Canfield v. Bates, 13 Cal. 608.

9. A bond given to the sheriff voluntarily, on the delivery of property attached, though not a statutory undertaking, is valid as a common law obligation. Palmer v. Vance, 13 Cal. 556.

10. No recovery can be had on a bond purporting to be the joint bond of the principal and sureties, but signed by the latter only; it differs from an undertaking. City of Sacramento v. Dunlap, 14 Cal. 423.

11. Otherwise as to joint and several bonds. There each signer is bound without the signatures of the others named as obligors, unless at the time of executing the bond he declared he would not be bound without such signatures were obtained. City of Sacramento v. Dunlap, 14 Cal. 424.

II. OFFICIAL BONDS.

12. Under the provisions of law requiring certain officers to file their official bonds with the secretary of State within a specified period, with the approval of the governor endorsed thereon and duly signed by him, and declaring an office to be vacated by the neglect so to do in a specified time, the failure of the governor to endorse his approval on the bond does not vacate an office where an incumbent has within the time fixed by law given a sufficient bond, presented it to the governor for his approval, and deposited it in the office of the secretary of State. People v. Fitch, 1 Cal. 534; People v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 440.

13. It devolves upon an officer to see that proper bonds are filed, and the State has no right to visit upon a party the laches of her own officer. People v. Aikenhead, 5 Cal. 107.

14. When an officer is elected for a new term he should give a new bond, and the sureties on a bond of an officer for one term will not be liable for any act done by him after an election to a second term. Ib.

15. A bond not under seal is not the character of security which is required to be given by notaries public under the statute, and no recovery can be had thereon. Van de Castele v. Cornwall, 5 Cal. 426.

16. An official bond made to "the people of the State of California" is sufficient, though the statute required it to be made "to the State of California." All that is requisite is that there should be a certain obligee, and either of the above names is descriptive of the same sovereignty and may be indifferently used, as they are in various statutes. Tevie v. Randall, 6 Cal. 635.

17. A condition in a notary's bond that he shall well and truly discharge the duties of his office according to law, is the only proper condition to be inserted in his bond. Ib.

18. Where the law requires a joint and several bond, and the officer filed a bond which was in form joint, and not joint and several: held, that he and his sureties cannot complain that their obligation is less burthensome than the law required. Ib.

19. The absence of the statutory requirements does not invalidate the bond. Ib.

20. The consolidation act of San Francisco gave the officers named therein two days after the meeting of the board of supervisors in which to file new bonds. The meeting took place on the ninth of July, and the officers had the whole of the tenth and eleventh of July to execute and present their bonds. Doane v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 395; People v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 436.

Official Bonds.

21. The defect in the approval of the bond of an officer, if any existed, could not avail the sureties. The object of approval is to ensure greater security to the public, and it does not lie in the defendants to object that their bond was accepted without proper examination. People v. Edwards, 9 Cal. 292.

22. The statute which provides that every such bond shall be obligatory upon the principal and sureties therein for the faithful discharge of all duties which may be required of the officer by any law enacted subsequently, applies only to duties properly appertaining to his office, with the execution of which he may be charged. Ib.

23. The principal and each surety on an official bond obligate themselves jointly and severally in the specific sums designated, and although all the parties may be included in the same action, separate judgments are required; none can be entered against the parties for a greater amount than for the payment of which they have respectively bound themselves. Ib. 293.

24. The provisions of the statute empowering the board of supervisors to require new bonds of any county or township officer, with additional securities, whenever they deem the same necessary, does not leave the exercise of the power to their arbitrary discretion. By the term "whenever they deem the same necessary," is meant whenever their judgment pronounces, after an examination of the facts of the case, that there is a necessity for further security. People v. Supervisors of Marin County, 10 Cal. 345.

25. In determining upon the sufficiency of a bond of an officer, and whether the officer by his failure to comply with the requisition of the supervisors to file a new bond has vacated his office, the supervisors exercise powers of a judicial character. Ib.

26. An order of the supervisors requiring a new bond of an officer should specify the grounds upon which the order is made. Ib.

27. Officers are not to be subjected to the annoyance of giving a new bond upon the mere caprice of the supervisors, and they must disclose in the order the object of their order. Ib. 346.

28. No duty to approve the bond of county officers is imposed upon the supervisors, nor are they even authorized to give such approval. Ib.

29. The general bond of the sheriff is made to cover his liabilities as tax collector, though it does not, it seems, cover his liability as collector of taxes of miners' licenses. People v. Squires, 14 Cal. 16.

30. An action on the official bond of a constable lies primarily upon breach of the condition of the bond, whether the injury for which suit is brought be a trespass or not, the result of the nonfeasance or misfeasance of the officer. Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 196.

31. Where a sheriff or constable seizes the property of one man under an execution against another he is a trespasser, and liable on his official bond. Ib. 199.

32. In case of official bonds the sureties undertake in general terms that the principal will perform his official duties, and a judgment against the officer in a suit to which they were not parties is not evidence against them. Pico v. Webster, 14 Cal. 204.

33. Plaintiff sued out an attachment against K., and the sheriff levied it on certain goods. Other creditors issued attachments, which were levied by the sheriff on the same goods. Plaintiff then dismissed his attachment, and sued the sheriff in replevin, claiming that K. obtained a portion of the goods of plaintiff by fraud. Instead of taking the goods out of the sheriff's possession, plaintiff made an arrangement with the sheriff, whereby he agreed to sell the goods and keep the proceeds to answer any judgment plaintiff might obtain in his replevin suit. Sheriff sold the goods, paid the money into court, saying nothing about this arrangement, and the money was paid, by order of the court, on the claims of the other creditors. The sureties of the sheriff had nothing to do with, and gave no sanction to the arrangement. Plaintiff had judgment in replevin: held, that the sureties on the sheriff's official bond are not liable to plaintiff for the goods or the money received from the sale—this agreement between him and plaintiff being no part of the sheriff's official duty; that the sheriff, as such, had no legal authority to sell these goods and to hold the money on bailment for plaintiff; and that, in so far as plaintiff trusted the sheriff with the goods, and authorized him to sell them, he became the agent of plaintiff, and must be looked to as such. Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 68.

34. Sureties on the sheriff's official bond in this State stipulate for his official, not his personal dealings, and are entitled to stand on the precise terms of their contract. Ib.

III. BOND FOR A TITLE.

35. Where the parties to a bond for title stipulate among themselves for a forfeiture, such forfeiture cannot defeat the plaintiff's rights to the purchase money. Bagley v. Eaton, 5 Cal. 500.

36. The breach of a bond for title does not discharge the debt due for the purchase money, and the plaintiff can resort to equity to enforce its performance, or maintain an action at law. Ib.

37. At common law a bond for a title is in effect a mortgage. The legal title remains in the vendor, and an equity vests in the vendee to have the title on compliance with the conditions. The legal title, as also the equity, goes to the whole estate and includes fixtures. The vendor can bring ejectment on breach of condition, or foreclose. Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 73.

BRIBERY.

1. Defendant, a judge of the court of sessions, was charged with receiving money as a bribe not to forfeit a recognizance. There was no allegation that there was any proceeding commenced upon the recognizance, nor was there any, and the statute against bribery confines the offense to acting "more favorable to one side than another in any suit," etc.: it was held that neither charge was sufficiently set out to warrant a conviction. People v. Purley, 1 Cal. 566.

BRIDGES AND FERRIES.

- I. In general.
- II. License and granting the same.
- III. Liabilities of the Owner.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Where the southern line of a creek was the dividing line between the city of Oakland and the remainder of Contra Costa county, both the city and county have jurisdiction to build a bridge over the creek. Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 5 Cal. 428.

2. A ferry is a franchise, and is not the subject of levy, sale or delivery under execution. It involves a personal trust granted by the sovereign upon conditions imposed upon the grantee alone, and his liability cannot be removed by substitution. Monroe v. Thomas, 5 Cal. 471; Thomas v. Armstrong, 7 Cal. 287.

3. The sale of a "bridge" across a certain stream, "together with the toll house, stables and out-houses of every description," and "all the privileges and appurtenances appertaining, or in any wise belonging to said bridge," passes the land upon which the bridge rested and the other buildings were erected. Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 195.

4. Where a party purchases a bridge, toll houses, stables and out-houses appurtenant with the right and privilege of his vendor in and to a dug road made on each side of the bridge, neither the purchaser nor those claiming under him, with notice, can object to a decree enforcing the vendor's lien against the premises; that the dug road is public land, and that therefore nothing would pass under the sale upon the decree. Ib. 197.

License and granting the same.

II. LICENSE AND GRANTING THE SAME.

5. No appeal lies from a judgment of a district court on an appeal from an order of the court of sessions* upon an application of a ferry license. Webb v. Hanson, 2 Cal. 134.

6. Courts have a discretion in granting a ferry license within two miles of an established ferry, to be exercised for the promotion of public convenience. Ex parte Hanson, 2 Cal. 263.

7. The act of March 18th, 1850, grants an appeal to the district court from the court of sessions* in the matter of a license to establish a ferry, but does not provide for an appeal from the judgment of a district court. No appeal can then be had in the latter case. Webb v. Hanson, 3 Cal. 68; 105.

8. In an action brought to recover damages by the owners of a licensed ferry against a party alleged to have run a ferry within the limits prohibited by law, the complaint should allege that the defendant ran his ferry for a fee or reward, or the promise or expectation of it, other than for his own use or the convenience of his family. Hanson v. Webb, 3 Cal. 237.

9. A party must fully comply with the laws to entitle him to bring suit for an interference with his ferry privileges, and to entitle him to claim a renewal of his license as a vested right in the privileges of keeping and maintaining his ferry. Norris v. Lapsley, 5 Cal. 47.

10. In an action against a ferryman, it is not error to allow the plaintiff to introduce a ferry license after motion of nonsuit; it is a matter within the discretion of the court below. May v. Hanson, 5 Cal. 365.

11. At common law no bridge or ferry could be erected so near another, bound by law to be provided with attendance, crafts, etc., as to draw away its profits. Norris v. Farmers' and Teamsters' Co., 6 Cal. 594.

12. In this State no person has a right to establish a bridge or ferry so as to receive compensation for the same, unless authorized so to do by license issued according to law. Ib. 597.

13. A free bridge or ferry in the immediate vicinity of one regularly licensed and receiving toll would be more injurious than the establishment of a regularly licensed bridge or ferry; for the one would only divide the profits; the other would be apt to render the bridge or ferry receiving toll of no value whatsoever. Ib.

14. The fact that a free bridge or ferry established within one mile of one already licensed issued certificates for one dollar, by which the holder was entitled to passage for one month, does not constitute the holder a joint stockholder in the bridge or ferry. It is but another mode of payment and a mere evasion of the law, and subjects the owners to punishment for a misdemeanor under the statute. Ib. 598.

15. The power to grant a ferry license is not judicial, and its exercise properly belongs to the supervisors, and not to a county judge. Chard v. Harrison, 7 Cal. 116.

16. A ferry owner, whose license has expired, does not lose his right to a renewal of his license, either by the incompetency or refusal of the supervisors to act in the premises. Chard v. Stone, 7 Cal. 117.

17. Such a ferry owner, thus prevented from obtaining a renewal of his license, has a right to an injunction to restrain another party from running a ferry under an illegal license granted by the county judge, within a mile of a first established ferry. Ib.

18. The act of 1855 makes it a misdemeanor to run a ferry for pay, without a license, and provides that no toll-ferry or bridge shall be established within one mile of one regularly licensed, unless required by public convenience, etc. This does not confer a franchise upon which the owner of a regularly established ferry can maintain a civil action for its infringement. Ward v. Severance, 7 Cal. 129.

19. Where the supervisors, in the exercise of their discretion, determined, after hearing testimony, that a ferry had not been properly kept, and therefore granted it to another, there is no authority to interfere with their determination; but when they act under mistake of law, and award a license to another, supposing that he had succeeded to the rights of the owners of the franchise, the error may be corrected by mandamus, or any other proper proceeding. Thomas v. Armstrong, 7 Cal. 287.

*The appellate jurisdiction of the district court held to be unconstitutional. See DISTRICT COURT.

License and granting the same.—Liabilities of the Owner.—Broker.—Burglary.

20. A kept a ferry across the Sacramento river, under a license which had expired. Having lost his boat, he contracted with B to furnish, rig and run another under the license to A, which he was to renew, until the profits should repay B's advances, with interest. A neglected to renew his license. B, after waiting four months, applied for and obtained a license in his own name, and ran a ferry under the same. A brought suit against B for an accounting and return of the ferry: held, that A had failed to carry out his agreement, and could not recover. Tartar v. Finch, 9 Cal. 276.

21. The statute gives the supervisors discretionary power over the location of new bridges and ferries within a mile of those previously established; and if, in the opinion of the board, public convenience requires, such new bridges and ferries may be so located. Waugh v. Chancey, 13 Cal. 12.

22. The general doctrine of the United States now is, that the grant of a ferry, bridge, or road franchise does not carry with it a restriction upon the granting power to make a similar grant to other grantees, though the last grant necessarily interferes with the profits and business of the first. Indian Canon Road Co. v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 519.

III. LIABILITIES OF THE OWNER.

23. The law regards ferrymen as common carriers, and has imposed upon them the same duties and liabilities. May v. Hanson, 5 Cal. 364.

24. A ferryman undertakes to safely transport passengers or freight from and to certain points, and from the moment that he receives until he has delivered his freight in a proper and safe manner, he will be liable. It applies to the delivery as well as to the receipt of goods. Ib.

25. It is the duty of the ferryman to see that the teams are safely driven on board the boat; he may, if he thinks proper, drive himself, or may unharness the team, or unload them, for the purpose of getting them safely on board; but if he permits the party to drive himself, he constitutes him, quoad hoc, his agent, and is responsible for all accidents. Ib.

26. As soon as the ferryman signifies his assent or readiness to receive the passenger, he becomes liable for his safe transit and delivery, and is chargeable with any accident occurring, except by act of God or the public enemy. Ib.

27. In an action against a ferryman, to recover for injuries sustained in driving off from his boat, it is not incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that he exercised ordinary care to avoid the injury; but the proof of the want of such care on the part of the plaintiff lies on the defendant. He who avers a fact in excuse of his own misfeasance must prove it. Ib. 365.

28. Where the defendants hold themselves out as public ferrymen: held, that in an action against them for injuries to plaintiff's cattle by the breaking of their wharf, error in the admission of proof of their ferry license could not injure them, as they were responsible in any case. Polk v. Coffin, 9 Cal. 58.

BROKER.

1. A broker whose commission or compensation depends on his principal's recovery is incompetent as a witness, on the ground that he is directly interested in the event of the suit. Shaw v. Davis, 5 Cal. 467.

2. Where a broker buys wheat for E. & H. with their funds, and an agreement is made between them that the broker shall dispose of the wheat, and that the profits shall be equally divided, the broker is neither partner nor joint owner of the wheat. Hanna v. Flint, 14 Cal. 75.

to steal the personal goods of another within the house, without specifying the value of the goods intended to be stolen, is not sufficient. People v. Murray, 8 Cal. 520.

2. On trial for burglary, the court instructed the jury that if they found from the evidence that defendant entered a certain warehouse in the night time, and took therefrom sundry goods and chattels, he was guilty as charged: held, that the instruction was wrong, because it ignores the felonious intent of the entry and the character of it. People v. Jenkins, 16 Cal. 431.

See CRIMES AND CRIMINAL LAW.

CALAVERAS COUNTY.

1. The act of April 27th, 1855, requiring all persons holding certain warrants upon the treasurer of Calaveras county to present the same for registry before a certain day, or be forever barred from enforcing the payment thereof, is unconstitutional. Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 83.

CANALS.

See WATER COURSES.

CAPITAL.

1. Our constitution provided that San José should be the capital of the State until changed by law and a two-third vote of the legislature. The people, at an election, selected Vallejo, which was made the capital by law, after which a majority of the legislature may remove the capital; and Sacramento having been made the capital in this manner, it is not illegal or unconstitutional. People v. Bigler, 5 Cal. 29.

CAPITOL BUILDINGS.

1. The act of March 29th, 1860, providing for the construction of a State capitol in the city of Sacramento, is not unconstitutional, as creating an indebtedness or liability on the part of the State exceeding the limit of $300,000, prescribed in the eighth article of the constitution. The act authorizes the commissioners therein named to contract only to the extent of $100,000. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 253.

2. No analogy exists between this case and Nougues v. Douglass, (7 Cal. 65) because there the act of 1856 authorized a contract in a sum not exceeding $300,000, payable in State bonds, and at the time of its passage, the State was indebted to the amount limited by the constitution, without a vote of the people. Ib.

3. Nor is the act of 1860 unconstitutional, because it provides that the compensation to the owners of the land taken shall be ascertained by three commissioners, and thus deprives the owners of the right to a jury trial. The provision of the constitution, that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever," applies only to civil and criminal cases in which an issue of fact is joined. The proceeding to ascertain the value of property, under the act of 1860, and the compensation to be made, is not an action of law. It is an inquisition for the ascertainment of a particular fact, as preliminary to future proceedings, and it is only requisite that it be conducted in some equitable and fair mode, to be provided by law, either with or without a jury, opportunity being allowed to owners and parties interested in the property to give evidence as to its value, and to be heard thereon. Ib. 254.

4. The language of the constitution, as to the right of trial by jury, was used with reference to the right as it exists at common law. The right of trial by jury cannot be claimed in equity cases, unless an issue of fact be framed for the jury, under the direction of the court. Ib.

5. In this case, the district judge did not err in refusing the application to set aside the award of the commissioners, and for a new trial. The proceedings before the commissioners were regular, and "appear to have been done in good faith," within the act. Ib. 255.

CAVEAT EMPTOR.

1. Caveat emptor applies in sales of real estate where there is no fraud, warranty, &c. Salmon v. Hoffman, 2 Cal. 141.

2. Ordinarily, the maxim of caveat emptor applies to judicial sales, but it has many limitations and exceptions. Webster v. Haworth, 8 Cal. 26; Halleck v. Guy, 9 Cal. 197.

3. A bill of sale for a mining claim, not under seal and without warranty, which only purports to convey to the vendee the right, title and interest of the vendor, will not pass the title, although the vendor is in possession at the time, if such possession is without title. The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to all such cases. Clark v. McElvy, 11 Cal. 160.

4. The doctrine of caveat emptor applies only to sales made upon valid judgments; and is usually invoked with reference to sales upon execution issued against the general property of a judgment debtor. In these latter cases, a defect of title is no ground for interference with the sale, or a refusal to pay the price bid. The purchaser takes upon himself all the risks as to title, and bids with full knowledge that in any event he only acquires such interest as the debtor possessed at the date of the levy, or the lien of the judgment; and that he may possibly acquire nothing. Boggs v. Hargrave, 16 Cal. 564.

5. A somewhat different rule prevails in cases where particular property is the subject of sale, by a specific adjudication; as where the interest of A in a certain tract is decreed to be sold. To the validity of a decree of this character, the presence of A is essential; and when present, the decree binds him and is effectual, by the sale it orders, to transfer his estate. A valid decree in a mortgage case operates upon such interest as the mortgagor possessed in the property at the execution of the mortgage. That interest may not constitute a valid title; it may not, in fact, be of any value; and the purchaser takes that risk. To that extent the doctrine of caveat emptor applies even in those cases, and in all cases of adjudication upon specific interests, but no further. The interest specially subject to sale, whatever it may be worth, a purchaser is entitled to receive; it is for that interest he makes his bid and pays his money. Ib.

See CONTRACT, SALE.

CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT.

1. A certificate of deposit is a negotiable security, and, as far as negotiability is concerned, must be placed on the same footing as promissory notes; and an allegation of loss or destruction thereof must be accompanied with the tender of a bond of indemnity against all future claims against it, before payment can be enforced by law. Welton v. Adams, 4 Cal. 30.

2. Where the plaintiff filed his bill, as receiver of an insolvent firm, to foreclose a mortgage given to plaintiffs in that capacity to secure a certificate of deposit for $100,000, originally deposited by the receiver, and defendants admitted the debt, but claimed that the amount is to be distributed pro rata among the creditors of the insolvents whom the plaintiff represents; that the claims of the creditors have been filed and reported upon; and that defendants are creditors of the insolvents to the amount of the certificate of deposit: held, that equity will not compel them to pay the money into court, which they would immediately be entitled to receive back; but will order an account and set-off. The execution and delivery of the certificate of deposit by defendants changed their character from being custodians of the funds to that of mere debtors of the insolvents. Naglee v. Palmer, 7 Cal. 547.

3. Bankers, by the issuance of certificates of general deposit, become liable not to refund to the depositor the specific money deposited, but to pay its amount to the holder of the certificates on their presentation. McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 418.

4. Upon the issuance of a certificate of deposit, there is nothing in the possession of the banker belonging to the depositor upon which an attachment can fasten. Ib.

5. A certificate of deposit for $1,800, payable to the order of V., was endorsed, sold and delivered by V. to L. for four hundred dollars. Payment was then at once demanded of the maker, and notice of protest served on V.; subsequently L. transferred the certificate to plaintiff: held, that plaintiff can recover of V. only the four hundred dollars received by him; the certificate being subject, in the hands of plaintiff, to all the equities between the endorser and endorsee. Coye v. Palmer, 16 Cal. 159.

6. February 26th, 1855, Page, Bacon & Co. were indebted to plaintiff, and the debt was due. That firm being then unable to pay, an agreement was made between them and plaintiff, dated on that day, by which an extension was to be given the firm of two, four, six and eight months from date—the debt to be paid in equal instalments. In consideration of this extension, defendant and others signed and delivered to plaintiff an instrument, dated February 26th, 1855, guaranteeing the payment by P., B. & Co. of such indebtedness in the instalments, and at the different times in said agreement set forth, conditioned to be void when said certificates were fully paid. In fact, said agreement did not mention certificates. March 13th, 1856, P., B. & Co. issued to plaintiff certificates of instalments, at two, four six and eight months from that date: held, that defendant is not liable on his guaranty, which was to pay at the times mentioned in the agreement; that plaintiff, having taken certificates dated March 13th, 1856, thereby extended the time of payment, and released defendant, who was a mere surety. Gross v. Parrott, 16 Cal. 145.

CERTIORARI.

1. The authority to issue writs of certiorari given by the statute to the supreme court, is to be regarded only as auxiliary to the complete jurisdiction of the supreme court over proceedings in inferior tribunals, from which appeals lie direct. Warner v. Hall, 1 Cal. 91; Warner v. Kelly, 1 Cal. 92.

2. As a general rule at common law, where error has occurred in proceedings which cannot be reached by appeal, the writ of certiorari is a proper remedy to correct such error, unless some other statutory remedy has been given. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 156.

3. An order fining and imprisoning for contempt, which does not specify on its face wherein the contempt consisted, will be reversed on certiorari. Ex parte Field, 1 Cal. 187.

4. Writs of certiorari may be issued only to courts from whose judgments an appeal would lie to the court granting the writ. White v. Lighthall, 1 Cal. 347.

5. If inferior courts exceed their powers, the supreme court, in every case within its reach, would not fail to interfere by certiorari. Ex parte Hanson, 2 Cal. 263.

Certiorari.

6. A certiorari will not lie to a board of supervisors, on the ground of want of jurisdiction: if taken before the action of the board, they must first decide to take, or decline to take jurisdiction. Wilson v. Supervisors of Sacramento County, 3 Cal. 388.

7. When it appears from the complaint that the court below must render judgment simply by an inspection of its own records, it is obviously the most proper mode upon an appeal to bring the latter up by a certiorari, in order that it may receive the construction of the appellate court, which is the only object of the appeal. Parsons v. Davis, 3 Cal. 425.

8. District courts cannot entertain jurisdiction of cases in a justice's court by certiorari, where the error complained of might be corrected on appeal to the county court. Gray v. Schupp, 4 Cal. 185.

9. A certiorari will lie to review a mandamus issued by a county court to a justice, to compel him to issue final process in an action, when the judgment which was sought to be enforced had been reversed by the supreme court. Clary v. Hoagland, 5 Cal. 478.

10. A mandamus to compel a judge to issue a certiorari to review proceedings of the supervisors of a county will not lie. There must be an appeal from the order refusing the certiorari. People v. Hester, 6 Cal. 680.

11. The use of the writ of certiorari is confined by our statute to inferior courts, and bodies exercising judicial functions. People v. Hester, 6 Cal. 680; overruled in People v. Supervisors El Dorado County, 8 Cal. 61.

12. It is not necessary to the exercise of the power to review, that the court issuing the writ of certiorari should possess appellate jurisdiction, and the writ may issue from a district court to a county judge. Chard v. Harrison, 7 Cal. 116.

13. A writ of certiorari is not the proper remedy, where there has been no excess of jurisdiction. Coulter v. Stark, 7 Cal. 245.

14. A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to grant appeals, and to stay proceedings thereupon, and his action cannot be reviewed on certiorari. Ib.

15. A writ of certiorari will lie to a district court to review the action of the board of supervisors, otherwise their action would be beyond control. People v. Supervisors El Dorado County, 8 Cal. 61; overruling People v. Hester, 6 Cal. 680.

16. District judges have power to issue writs of certiorari, and to hear them on their return at chambers. People v. Supervisors Marin County, 10 Cal. 346.

17. Where the application for certiorari shows on its face that the party had an adequate legal remedy by appeal, the writ was denied. Clary v. Hoagland, 13 Cal. 175.

18. We think it is well settled that a common law certiorari tries nothing but the jurisdiction, and, incidentally, the regularity of the proceedings upon which the jurisdiction depends. Whitney v. Board of Delegates of the San Francisco Fire Department, 14 Cal. 500.

19. While it is well settled at common law, and must be regarded so equally under our statute, that the review under this writ cannot be extended beyond the question of power or jurisdiction, the authorities are not agreed as to what may be considered by the court of review for the purpose of determining this question. Ib.

20. The cases are numerous to the effect that the review may be extended to every issue of law and fact involved in the question of jurisdiction, and that not only the record, but the evidence itself, when necessary for the determination of this question, must be returned. Ib.

21. The decision of the board of delegates of the fire department, in the case of a contested election for chief engineer, is a judicial decision, and subject to review by the courts on certiorari. Ib.

22. Whether the decision of an inferior court, establishing the existence of a fact essential to the exercise of its jurisdiction, can be attacked in a collateral proceeding, is a question which does not arise in the case, and in relation to which we express no opinion. We have held such a decision is subject to review upon certiorari. Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 300.

23. Under the consolidation act of 1858, the Board of Supervisors of the city and county of Sacramento have no power to create the office of assistant clerk to the board, nor to raise the salaries fixed in the twenty-fourth section of the act, and their action in creating such office and raising such salaries may be reviewed on certio-

CHALLENGE TO THE JURY.

1. A prisoner in a criminal prosecution, who has not exhausted his peremptory challenges, has the right to challenge peremptorily one of the jurors after the twelve jurors are accepted, but before they are sworn. People v. Kohle, 4 Cal. 199.

2. No regular panel having been drawn and summoned, the court ordered thirty-six jurors to be summoned, which was done, and twenty-seven of them appearing, the court caused their names to be placed in a box, of which twelve were drawn to constitute a trial jury: held, not to be ground for challenge by the defendant to the whole panel. People v. Stuart, 4 Cal. 224.

3. Where a juror is challenged for actual bias, the triers are to determine the fact from the testimony, and any testimony which would lead to the conclusion that a bias existed in the juror's mind, is competent testimony; as, that the juror was a member of a secret society and had taken oaths inimical to persons of defendant's birth, rank, or religion. People v. Reyes, 5 Cal. 349.

4. Where a juror in a trial for murder stated on his voir dire that he had expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, and that such opinion, when expressed, was without qualification: held, that he was properly challenged by the prisoner and should have been rejected. People v. Williams, 6 Cal. 207.

5. In a capital case, where a juror on his examination, on his voir dire, by defendant, stated that he had formed and expressed unqualified opinion, etc., the defendant should have challenged him for cause; but where he did not challenge him, but passed him to the prosecution for examination, on which the juror stated that his opinion was formed by reading the newspapers, whereupon the prosecution accepted the juror, and the defense desired to question the juror further for cause, which was denied, but a peremptory challenge allowed: held, not to be error. People v. Stonecifer, 6 Cal. 409.

6. Where a juror in a capital case was asked if he entertained such conscientious opinions as would preclude him from finding the defendant guilty, when the offense charged was punishable with death, to which he answered that he was opposed to capital punishment on principle: held, that it was error to sustain the challenge for cause by the prosecution on such an answer. People v. Stewart, 7 Cal. 144.

7. The improper allowance of a challenge by the prosecution is sufficient to cause a reversal of the judgment on a verdict of guilty. If the challenge had been disallowed, the result might have been different, and the prisoner is entitled to be tried by a panel summoned in a particular way. Ib.

8. Where several defendants are tried together they are not allowed to sever their challenges, but all must join therein. This applies as well to peremptory as to challenges for cause. People v. McCalla, 8 Cal. 303.

9. Defendants in criminal cases, who have not been held to answer before the impanneling of the grand jury, may challenge the panel on arraignment. If they have been held to answer, they must challenge the panel before it is made up and sworn. People v. Beatty, 14 Cal. 569.

10. Challenges to the panel of the grand jury, or to individual jurors, must be made at the impanneling of the jury; and on indictment for murder transferred to the district court, the challenge cannot there be made. People v. Moice, 15 Cal. 331.

11. A challenge for implied bias, in criminal cases, must specify the particular cause of bias. It is not enough to say "I challenge the juror for implied bias." People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 130.

12. It is proper practice to examine a juror on his voir dire, generally, as to his qualifications, with the view to obtain information upon which to rest a specific challenge. Immediately after such preliminary examination is closed the challenge should be made, distinctly stating the causes. The district attorney can then except to the challenge, or deny the facts it alleges; that is, he can demur to its sufficiency, or join the issue on the truth of its averments. If the latter course be adopted, the juror can be further examined, other witnesses called, and the matter then submitted to the court. Ib. 131.

13. The allowance of a peremptory challenge, in criminal cases, after the juror has been accepted and sworn, is not matter of right, but may be permitted for good cause. Ib.

CHARACTER.

1. No inference can be drawn by a jury of the intention which induced the commission of the offense, from the previous character of the prisoner. His intention can only be determined by his acts; the law will imply a malicious intention. People v. Milgate, 5 Cal. 130; People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 217.

2. Evidence of good character is only admissible in doubtful cases, and when admitted, should be restricted to the trait of character which is in issue, and ought to bear some analogy and reference to the nature of the charge. People v. Josephs, 7 Cal. 130.

3. On a trial for murder, weakness of mind, fear and excitement of the defendant, produced by the violence of the deceased, will not justify the homicide. People v. Hurley, 8 Cal. 391.

4. The answer of a witness, that the prisoner was a gambler, not considered as an injury to the prisoner, at a time when gambling was licensed by law. People v. Butler, 8 Cal. 440.

5. The character of the deceased cannot be given in evidence, unless at the least, the circumstances of the case raise a doubt in regard to the question whether the prisoner acted in self-defense or not. People v. Murray, 10 Cal. 310.

CHARGE TO THE JURY.

CHARTER PARTY.

1. Where it appears clearly from a charter party that the intention of the owner of the ship and the charterer is that the former shall have no lien on the freight, but shall give a personal credit to the charterer, the former loses his right of lien on the cargo, and can look only to the personal responsibility of the charterer for the payment of the hire of the vessel. Brown v. Howard, 1 Cal. 424.

2. Where it was agreed in a charter party that a vessel should be chartered for fifteen months at $2,000 per month, to be employed in the Pacific trade, and that the payments for the hire of the vessel should be made semi-annually in the city of New York: held, that the owner of the vessel had lost his right of lien on the cargo for the nonpayment of the sum stipulated in the charter party. Ib.

3. The owner of a ship chartered by and in the name of his agent may, although he is not mentioned in the charter party, be shown by extrinsic evidence to be the principal in the contract, and will be allowed to avail himself of its provisions. Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 482.

4. Where by the terms of the charter party made in England, the charterer agreed to insure the advance freight at the ship's expense, it being deducted from the freight money paid, but failed to do so until long after the risk had commenced, by reason whereof the owner was compelled to insure for his own protection, the owner can recover of the charterer the amount paid by him for insurance. Lawson v. Worms, 6 Cal. 371.

5. A guarantee endorsed as a charter party at the same time with its execution, and the consideration of one being in fact the consideration of the other, and being in these words, "I hereby guarantee the fulfillment of the within charter on the part of the charterer," is good. Hazeltine v. Larco, 7 Cal. 34.

CHECKS.

1. A check is presumptive evidence of payment of a debt due, and not of money loaned. Headley v. Reed, 2 Cal. 324.

2. Checks are on the same footing with bills of exchange, excepting the differences which may arise from the custom of merchants. Sight checks are not entitled to grace; but an order in the nature of a check payable at a future day is an inland bill of exchange, and the drawer is entitled to grace and notice of nonpayment. Minturn v. Fisher, 4 Cal. 36.

3. Presentation of a check or bill of exchange before the last day of grace, and the immediate commencement of suit on the day of demand and nonpayment, are premature. Ib.

4. A payment to the sheriff for the redemption of land sold under execution cannot be made in certified checks. Thorne v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 150.

5. Where a check had been lost, and paid by a banker upon a forged endorsement, upon a suit for the check after the banker refused to deliver it to the owner: held, in the absence of rebutting evidence, the measure of damages must be the full value of the amount for which it was drawn. Survey v. Wells, 5 Cal. 127.

6. It is sufficient if a check drawn upon one day be presented for payment at the usual banking house the next day, where the payee resides in the immediate vicinity of the place of payment, otherwise he must use due diligence to hold the drawer. Ritchie v. Bradshaw, 5 Cal. 229.

7. Where A draws a check in favor of B, dated the first and payable the fifteenth of the same month, on a bank wherein he is paying teller, and the check is presented, and the holder is informed by A that it will not be paid, and at the same time payment is refused by A as teller of the bank, and no other presentment is made: held, that the check need not be protested, nor any notice of nonpayment be given, to hold A thereon. Minturn v. Fisher, 7 Cal. 575.

8. A check given for a gaming debt is void in the hands of all persons, except a bona fide holder without notice. Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 526.

9. A party taking a check after its presentation for payment to the bankers upon whom it is drawn, and after its dishonor, takes it subject to all the defenses to which it was subject in the hands of the original holder. Ib.

10. Where the illegal consideration of a check is admitted, it is incumbent on the holder, even if he took it before dishonor, to show that he took it without notice and for value. Ib.

11. With a check the presumption is that it is given upon a valid consideration; but this presumption being rebutted, the necessity is thrown upon the holder of proving that he received it in good faith, without notice of the illegality of the consideration. Ib.

CHINA.

1. The commissioner and consuls constitute a judiciary for the government of the citizens of the United States in China, and as such, and when so acting, are governed by the law of nations, the laws of the United States, the common law, and the decrees and regulations of the commissioner, until the latter are modified or annulled by congress. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 281.

2. Assignments of personal property in China, made there between citizens of the United States resident there, will be tested by the common law. Ib. 283.

3. An alien friend may sue an American in the consular courts in China, established under the treaty of 1841. Ib. 285.

CHINESE.

1. The criminal act provides that "no black or mulatto person or Indian shall be allowed to give evidence in favor of or against a white man": held, that the words Indian, negro, black and white are generic terms designating race; that therefore Chinese and all other peoples not white are excluded in the prohibition from being witnesses against whites. People v. Hall, 4 Cal. 399; Speer v. See Yup Co., 13 Cal. 73.

2. The act of 1855, imposing a tax of fifty dollars on every person arriving in this State by sea who is incompetent to become a citizen, is unconstitutional and void. People v. Downer, 7 Cal. 171.

CHOSE IN ACTION.

1. An assignee of a chose in action must sue in his own name, but the assignor, under our statute, cannot be a witness in his behalf. Jones v. Post, 4 Cal. 15; Griffin v. Aloop, 4 Cal. 408; Allen v. Cit- izens' Steam Nav. Co., 6 Cal. 402; Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 321.

2. The consideration of the assignment of a personal chattel or chose in action may be proven by parol, and a different one established from that expressed in the instrument. Bennett v. Solomon, 6 Cal. 138.

3. Debts or credits are considered property in the statute. A judgment is a debt of record, and the parties to it are called judgment creditor and debtor. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 202.

4. A nonnegotiable chose in action, created by the immediate parties to it for the purpose of defrauding creditors, cannot be impeached in the hands of an innocent assignee by the creditors of the debtors making such chose in action. Wright v. Levy, 12 Cal. 262.

5. Whether a chose in action—as a note or judgment, and the like—calling for a definite sum without condition, is the subject of levy and sale, without actual possession of the chose by the officer? Query. Crandall v. Blen, 13 Cal. 23.

6. The doctrine of continuous possession of personal property after sale or mortgage does not apply to the case of a paper, or the mere evidence of a debt, nor does the chattel mortgage act apply to it. Hall v. Redding, 13 Cal. 220.

7. Plaintiff delivered to defendants gold dust, to be by them forwarded to San Francisco, to be there coined and returned. The dust belonged to five persons, partners in mining, of whom plaintiff and C. were two. While the dust was in the hands of defendants, C. sold to plaintiff, for a valuable consideration, his interest in it, and gave a receipt evidencing the sale. Defendants, after this, received coin made of the dust, and a creditor of C. attached the coin by garnisheeing defendants. Defendants had no notice of the sale to plaintiff until the day after the attachment, when plaintiff demanded C.'s share of the coin: held, that plaintiff was entitled to the coin; that the dust in defendants' hands was in the constructive possession of all the five owners, C. having no exclusive interest in any part until it was converted into coin and divided among the owners; that C.'s right to the dust was a chose in action, which he could assign by order in favor of the purchaser or assignee, and after such order, neither C. nor his creditors could claim any right to the money; that the statute of frauds has no application to a case like this. Walling v. Miller, 15 Cal. 40.

CITIZENSHIP.

1. Under the treaty of Queretaro, all Mexicans established in California on the 30th day of May, 1848, and who had not, on or before the 30th day of May, 1849, declared their intentions to continue Mexican citizens, are to be deemed American citizens. People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 244.

2. Laws regulating the admission of foreigners and aliens, and placing them under peculiar disabilities on account of some suppressed inconvenience which may result to the State, are political laws. People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 378.

3. The mere fact that a man is a soldier in the United States army does not disqualify him from voting in this State. But he cannot vote unless he has been a citizen of the State and of the county in which he votes for the constitutional period. People v. Riley, 15 Cal. 49.

4. And a mere residence or sojourn in the county as a soldier does not make him a citizen or prove him to be such. The rule as fixed by the constitution is, that the fact of such sojourn or residence as a soldier neither creates nor destroys citizenship, leaving the political status of the soldier where it was before. Ib.

See ALIEN, ELECTION JUROR, NATURALIZATION.

CIVIL LAW.

1. The civil law, except so far as it has been expressly adopted by the legislative power, is without authority, either in Spain or Mexico. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 500.

2. All contracts made in this State prior to the act of April 22d, 1850, must have their effect and construction by the rules of the civil law. Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 569.

CLERK.

1. The clerk of a confidential counselor, solicitor or attorney of the party cannot be compelled to disclose the communications made to him, or letters or entries made by him in that capacity. Landsberger v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 451.

2. Where there was but one clerk in the office of a newspaper, his affidavit of the publication of summons or notice in said paper is sufficient, and it is unnecessary for the affidavit to describe him as principal clerk. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 637.

CLERK OF THE COURT.

1. The certificate of the clerk of the district court could not be received to contradict the plain import of the judgment. Belt v. Davis, 1 Cal. 140.

2. The supreme court will not consider the testimony as returned in a statement unless it appears settled by the parties, or by a certificate of the clerk that he took down the testimony in writing at the trial, and at the request of one of the parties. Bunting v. Beideman, 1 Cal. 182.

3. The special act of the legislature, approved April 4th, 1857, fixing the compensation of the county clerk of the county of Placer at $3,000, was intended in lieu of all fees for services rendered the county. Mitchell v. Stoner, 9 Cal. 203.

4. A mandamus will not lie against the clerk of the district court to compel him to issue execution on a money judgment rendered in the court of which he is clerk. Goodwin v. Glazer, 10 Cal. 338.

5. Where a clerk of the district court improperly refuses to issue execution on a judgment rendered in the court of which he is clerk, on the ground that the judgment has been attached at the suit of another party, a bill in equity cannot be sustained to release the attachment and compel the clerk to issue the execution, as the injured party has his remedy at law by an action on the official bond of the clerk. Goodwin v. Glazer, 10 Cal. 333; Miller v. Sanderson, 10 Cal. 490.

6. An objection to an acknowledgment by a county clerk that he had no seal of office is too narrow a construction of the law. His power was never intended to be made to depend upon the fact of his having procured a seal, or the care with which he preserved it. Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 580.

7. The clerk of a court, though a constitutional officer, is subject to its orders in the control of the records. The court cannot without great abuse of its powers take from the clerk in any way the perquisites of his office for copies of opinions and papers on file. Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 28.

8. A clerk's certificate that a statement is the same which was used on motion for new trial, is entitled to no weight, as the clerk is not authorized by law to verify a statement in that form. Fee v. Starr, 13 Cal. 171.

9. Where a judgment is against two, one only of whom appeals, and the appeal is dismissed with twenty per cent. damages, the damages with the costs do not become part of the original judgment, and the redemptioner is not bound to pay them when he redeems from a sale under the judgment. The clerk below can issue execution for these damages and costs. McMillan v. Vischer, 14 Cal. 241.

10. Where a submission to arbitration is made an order of court under the code, the clerk of the court may enter judgment on the award in due time without any further order of the court. Carsley v. Lindsay, 14 Cal. 395; overruling Heslep v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 4.

11. When the judge cannot be found, the proposed statement or bill in a criminal case may be delivered to the clerk of court for him, the clerk's office being the proper place for the deposit of the papers for the judge in his absence from his chambers. The clerk should minute on the document the date of its receipt, and hand it to the judge at the earliest convenient opportunity. People v. Lee, 14 Cal. 512.

12. Under the act of 1857 regulating fees of office in certain counties, the sheriff may charge fees for copies of the summons and injunction served by him in a suit, though the copies were prepared and printed by the plaintiff, and certified by the clerk at the plaintiff's request; but the sheriff must look for his fees to plaintiff, at whose request the copies were served, and cannot sue the clerk for money had and received—although plaintiff had paid the clerk for such copies—unless the money was delivered to him to be paid the sheriff. Edmondson v. Mason, 16 Cal. 388.

13. The clerk is entitled to charge, under that act, fees for certified copies of summons and injunction, if the copies, though prepared by plaintiff, were certified by the clerk at plaintiff's request. There is no necessity for plaintiff to obtain copies of summons and injunction from the clerk. Ib.

14. Under the code as it stood in 1854, a party who failed to file with the clerk a memorandum of costs within the time limited waived his right to costs, whether they were clerk's and sheriff's fees or other costs, and in the absence of such memorandum the clerk had no power to include costs in the judgment. *Chapin v. COLLEGE.

1. In an application for an order to incorporate a college under the act of 1850, it is necessary that subscriptions of real estate—if such subscriptions must not be cash under the statute—should define the boundaries or situation of the lands proposed to be given; and where an endowment of a proposed college consisted of real estate, the situation thereof must be ascertained and determined from the subscription papers, their value must be represented and their title established, or the application will be denied. Ex parte The California College, 1 Cal. 130.

2. On an application for an incorporation of a college, a cash subscription of $27,500, with the subscription list annexed to the petition, and accompanied by affidavits showing that the subscribers are severally worth the respective sums set opposite the names, is a sufficient compliance with the act of April 20, 1850, to authorize the supreme court to grant a charter. Ex parte The Wesleyan College,* 1 Cal. 447.

COLLISION.

1. An action to recover damages for collision cannot be sustained where the injury complained of has resulted from the negligence of both parties. Kelly v. Cunningham, 1 Cal. 366.

* The above law is repealed by the corporation act.

2. A vessel in the harbor of San Francisco, moored in the usual track of bay and river steamers, should set a light and keep a watch in a dark night, or she cannot recover damages for an injury sustained by being run into by a steamer, where there was neither gross negligence nor intentional wrong on the part of the steamer. Innis v. Steamer Senator, 1 Cal. 459.

3. In a case of collision, the plaintiff must be faultless. Griswold v. Sharpe, 2 Cal. 24.

4. In an action to recover damages for collision, there being no indebtedness arising upon contract, an attachment cannot issue. Ib.

5. In an action for collision, after the witness testifies concerning the position of the vessels and the character of the night, he was asked whether a vessel on such a night and in such a place could be seen at a considerable distance from a vessel approaching the shore; and if so, how far: held, that the question should have been allowed. Innis v. Steamer Senator, 4 Cal. 5.

COMMERCE.

1. The power to regulate commerce is general and exclusive, and no part of it can be exercised by a State. But when this power has not been exercised by congress, but lies dormant, and a State in the meantime exercises such power over a given subject, the question whether the action of the State be void in such a case is left in doubt. Mitchell v. Steelman, 8 Cal. 371.

2. The power of congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States is an exclusive power. People v. Downer, 7 Cal. 171.

The general authority given to congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations could probably find no more useful or appropriate means of exercise than in treaties and laws withdrawing our citizens domiciled in unchristian nations from the jurisdiction of such governments, and confiding their rights of property and person to judicial officers of their own country, administered under responsibilities to a common government, laws, with the general spirit and principles of which those citizens are familiar. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 282.

COMMISSIONER OF THE FEDERAL COURTS.

1. Justices of the peace alone have the power to try and commit deserted seamen under the acts of congress, and commissioners under the United States court can only arrest and commit for trial. Ex parte Crandall, 2 Cal. 144.

COMMISSIONERS OF THE FUNDED DEBT OF SAN FRANCISCO CITY.

1. A sale of land in the city of San Francisco, by a portion of the board of commissioners of the funded debt, does not pass a legal title upon which ejectment can be maintained. Leonard v. Darlington, 6 Cal. 125.

2. The act of the legislature confers the power on five commissioners, and though a majority may control, yet it is necessary that all should meet and consult, or have notice of the meeting, that they may attend if they desire. Ib.

3. A general resolution, passed by the whole board a year before the sale in question, that they would sell all the city property to pay her debts, will not give validity to the particular sale made in pursuance of a resolution to sell the particular lot, adopted by only three of the board shortly before the sale. Ib. 126.

4. The act of 1851, creating the board of fund commissioners of San Francisco, was a law authorizing a contract between the city and her creditors, who surrendered the old indebtedness and took a new security bearing a different rate of interest. This transaction was in the nature of a new contract, and the law authorizing it entered into and became a part thereof and cannot be altered or amended so as to impair or destroy the rights of parties under the contract. People v. Woods, 7 Cal. 584.

5. The provisions of the consolidation act of 1856, requiring that the sinking fund created by the act of 1851 should be first exhausted by the redemption of certificates of stock, before the treasurer should make payment annually of the sum of fifty thousand dollars, set apart by the first act for the payment of interest and for the sinking fund, are unconstitutional. Ib.

Commissioners of the Funded Debt of San Francisco City.—Of the Sinking Fund.

6. The act of May 1st, 1851, authorizing "the funding of the floating debt of the city of San Francisco," is substantially a trust deed, whereby she agrees, on a valuable consideration, to place in the hands of certain trustees so much of her revenue and property, to be applied by the trustees to the redemption of her obligations, in the mode and according to the terms of her agreement. People v. Bond, 10 Cal. 567; People v. Tillinghast, 10 Cal. 584; People v. Supervisors of San Francisco County, 12 Cal. 301.

7. The commissioners of the funded debt of the city of San Francisco are not private agents; they are public officers, clothed with important trusts, for the due administration of which they have executed bonds with security. San Francisco County v. Commissioners of the Funded Debt of the City of San Francisco, 10 Cal. 586.

8. In a bill to enjoin the issuance of bonds of the city and county of San Francisco by the fund commissioners, created by the act of April 20th, 1858, for the claims approved by the board of examiners, it is necessary that some of the persons to whom the bonds are to be issued should be made parties to the action. Hutchinson v. Burr, 12 Cal. 103.

9. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco have no control over the treasurer in the payment of the interest and principal of the sinking fund of that city. The allowance or disallowance, auditing or refusing to audit of the board are alike immaterial. People v. Supervisors of San Francisco County, 12 Cal. 301.

10. The act of 1858, amendatory of the act of May 1st, 1851, authorizing the funding of the floating debt of the city of San Francisco, and to provide for the payment of the same, is constitutional. Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 349; Thornton v. Hooper, 14 Cal. 11.

11. If, under the act, a large surplus accumulates, it may be applied to the purchase of bonds, even if no provision exists in the act for payment before the bonds are due. Ib.

12. The commissioners of the funded debt of the city of San Francisco have power, under the act of 1851, authorizing them to sell the realty conveyed to them by the commissioners of the sinking fund, created by ordinance of said city, to receive the three per cent. scrip of the city instead of cash on the sale, it being conceded that the assets of the city were sufficient to pay all debts. People v. Commissioners of the Funded Debt of the City of San Francisco, 14 Cal. 541.

13. A purchaser of such beach and water lot property, at a sheriff's sale, in August, 1851, on execution issued upon a judgment recovered in January, 1851, against the city of San Francisco, acquired a title, if the judgment became a lien upon the property sold previous to the act of May 1st, 1851, and the conveyance from the commissioners of the sinking fund to the commissioners of the funded debt. Wheeler v. Miller, 16 Cal. 126.

14. In this case, as the record does not show that the judgment ever became such lien, the decision giving title to the purchaser must be taken without reference to any rights which the commissioners of the funded debt may possess. They are not parties, and as to their rights no opinion is here expressed. Ib.

COMMISSIONERS OF THE SINKING FUND OF SAN FRANCISCO CITY.

1. The act of the city of San Francisco creating the board of sinking fund commissioners, and the deed executed to them of all the property in the city, is void for want of power in the city, and because said deed is within the statute of frauds. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 538; Heydenfeldt v. Hitchcock, 15 Cal. 514.

2. The board of commissioners of the old sinking fund of 1850, created by an ordinance of the city of San Francisco, had no power to sell the real estate of the city, the ordinance being void. But this decision has no application to the board of commissioners of the funded debt, organized after the dissolution of the first board of the sinking fund commissioners. Heydenfeldt v. Hitchcock, 15 Cal. 514.

3. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524, commented on, and attention called to the fact that plaintiff's judgment, in that case, had become a lien on the property sold before the passage of the funding act of May 1st, 1851, and that hence the act was declared unconstitutional, so far as it impaired such previous lien. . Wheeler v. Miller, 16 Cal. 125.

COMMISSIONERS OF THE STATE CAPITOL.

1. The act of 1860, authorizing the construction of a State capitol at Sacramento, is not unconstitutional because it provides that the compensation to the owners of the land taken shall be ascertained by three commissioners, and thus deprives the owners of the right to a jury trial. The provision of the constitution, that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever," applies only to civil and criminal cases in which an issue of fact is joined. The proceeding to ascertain the value of property, under the act of 1860, and the compensation to be made, is not an action of law. It is an inquisition for the ascertainment of a particular fact, as preliminary to future proceedings, and it is only requisite that it be conducted in some equitable and fair mode, to be provided by law, either with or without a jury, opportunity being allowed to owners and parties interested in the property to give evidence as to its value, and to be heard thereon. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 253.

2. In this case, the district judge did not err in refusing the application to set aside the award of the commissioners, and for a new trial. The proceedings before the commissioners were regular, and "appear to have been done in good faith," within the act. Ib.

COMMISSIONER OF STREETS.

1. The street commissioner of the city of San Francisco is empowered to use the necessary force to prevent an injury to the public streets of the city; and no action can be sustained against him, or those who act under his orders, for using such force. Clark v. McCarthy, 1 Cal. 454.

2. To entitle a party to recover, as street commissioner of San Francisco, he must show not only that he had discharged his duties; but first, that he had been lawfully elected; second, had qualified himself to hold the office, by taking the oath, and filing the bond at the same time, and in the manner required by law. Payne v. City of San Francisco, 3 Cal. 125.

3. A joint resolution of the city councils, approved by the mayor, recognizing a party as street commissioner, will not enable him to recover for services rendered in that capacity upon a quantum meruit. Ib. 128.

See STREETS AND HIGHWAYS.

COMMITMENT.

1. If an order of commitment be sufficient in substance, it will be held good on habeas corpus, although it contain more than is necessary to be stated therein. The unnecessary matter will be regarded as surplusage. People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 11.

2. Justices of the peace alone have power to try and commit deserted seamen, under the acts of congress; and commissioners, under the United States courts, can only arrest and commit for trial. Ex parte Crandall, 2 Cal. 144.

3. On finding a commitment illegal, if it appear that the party is guilty of an offense, the court will not discharge him without allowing time for his arrest by proper authority. Ib. 145.

4. A commitment for contempt, "in refusing to answer certain questions propounded to the witness by the grand jury," is not a compliance with the statute, which requires that when the contempt consists in the omission to do an act which was in the power of the person to perform, the act shall be specified in the commitment. It does not appear, from such commitment, whether the questions were legal or not. Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 183.

See CRIMES AND CRIMINAL LAW.

COMMON CARRIERS.

1. In an action against a common carrier, the rule of damages is the value of the goods at the port of delivery, and not the invoice price, or the value at the port of shipment. Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 118; Hart v. Spalding, 1 Cal. 214.

2. A common carrier is not responsible for the loss of goods entrusted to him for carriage, where it is understood that he is to receive no compensation for his carriage, and where he has exercised ordinary diligence in taking care of them; in such a case, he is only liable as a bailee without hire. Fay v. Steamer New World, 1 Cal. 349.

3. A merchant was in the habit of having his gold dust carried gratuitously on the steamer; while the owners refused to carry it for hire, or to become liable as common carriers in case of loss: held, where a quantity of gold dust, belonging to the plaintiff, was stolen from the steamer, without any negligence on the part of the master or officers, that the plaintiff could not recover its value. Ib.

4. Whether a common carrier of goods and passengers merely, can be made liable in an action for refusing to carry gold dust. Query? Ib. 350.

5. In an action against a common carrier, for nonperformance of his contract to carry a passenger, remote and contingent damages cannot be recovered. Yonge v. Pacific M. S. S. Co., 1 Cal. 354.

6. When an action is brought for damages against a common carrier, for the nonperformance of the contract to carry the plaintiff's servant, the plaintiff must show that he is entitled to claim his services. Ib.

7. Evidence showing that the plaintiff was a good book-keeper, was proper to be submitted to the jury, to enable them to form an estimate of the damages which the plaintiff had probably sustained; and they should consider the probabilities of his procuring a situation, and retaining it. Ib.

8. In an action brought by a passenger against the owners of a steamer for not furnishing him with the conveniences during the voyages which the contract of conveyance required, the court will not interfere with the verdict of a jury, where the question upon which they have passed is one solely of liquidated damages, unless beyond doubt the verdict be unjust and oppressive. George v. Law, 1 Cal. 364.

9. Delivery by a common carrier to a wrong person by mistake or by gross imposition will not discharge his responsibility to the owner for the value of the goods. The authority of an agent to deliver goods to a common carrier is not an authority to take them back or to countermand the shipment. Adams v. Blankenstein, 2 Cal. 418.

10. If a common carrier deliver goods to any but the owner, he does so at his peril; and his defense must clearly show that the person to whom he delivered the goods was duly authorized as the agent of the owner to receive them. Ib.

11. The law regards ferrymen as common carriers, and has imposed upon them the same duties and liabilities; and he is liable for the safe transit and delivery of passengers, and is chargeable with any accident occurring, except by the act of God or the public enemy. May v. Hanson, 5 Cal. 364.

12. In an action for damages brought by a passenger against a stage company for injuries to plaintiff caused by carelessness of the driver in overturning the coach: held, that the fact that the driver was informed before the accident that a passenger was to be left at plaintiff's destination, and that after the accident, the agent of defendant informed the driver that plaintiff was to stop at the destination designated, was sufficient to establish prima facie the allegation in the complaint, of a contract to safely carry, etc. Thorne v. California Stage Co., 6 Cal. 233.

13. The towing of a vessel out to sea by a steamer is the transportation of property, without resorting to any other than the necessary construction arising from the generic and common meaning assigned to the word "transport." White v. Steam Tug Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 470.

14. It is sufficient as a common carrier that the steam-tug held herself out to the world for engagement in a business for hire, which required prudence, skill and the use of adequate means to perform the contracts which she should undertake. Ib. 471.

15. Where it appears that the coach at the time of the accident was driven by the servant or agent of the owner, the rule in such cases is that the principal is liable only for simple negligence, and that exemplary damages cannot be imposed upon him. Wardrobe v. California Stage Co., 7 Cal. 120.

16. Damages which are professedly laid for the benefit of the public cannot be recovered in an action brought by a passenger of a stage coach against the owners thereof for injuries sustained by reason of the upsetting of the coach. Ib.

17. An action brought by husband and wife against a steamer for breach of a contract to carry the wife to New York via Nicaragua, the alleged breach consisting in carrying the wife to Panama, and causing her detention there, and consequent illness and other injuries, though based on a contract, sounds in tort, and the wife is a proper and necessary party plaintiff. Warner v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 9 Cal. 729; Ord v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 13 Cal. 372.

18. Where in an action to recover damages occasioned to the plaintiff from his detention by the defendants as common carriers, a witness was permitted to give his estimate of the value of the plaintiff's services per day, which he placed as high as one hundred dollars, and stated as ground for his opinion that the plaintiff was a speculator, possessed of large property, money invested in stocks, rents and other sources of income, and frequently made from one to five hundred dollars per day: held, that the testimony was inadmissible. Hastings v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 10 Cal. 341.

19. A stage company engaged in carrying passengers to and from a place is liable to pay to that place a license under the provisions of a law taxing any business carried on in that place. City of Sacramento v. California Stage Co., 12 Cal. 138.

20. A contract for the transportation of passengers from San Francisco to New York is an entirety, whether the entire voyage is to be performed in one vessel or not. Ord v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 13 Cal. 371.

21. Telegraph companies in contemplation of law are common carriers, and are subject to the rules of law governing the same. Parks v. Alta Telegraph Co., 13 Cal. 424.

22. Where A contracts with a telegraph company to have his dispatch transmitted, authorizing his agent to secure a debt due him from a third party by attachment, and this service is so negligently performed that other creditors of the common debtor obtain the first attachment and exhaust the assets of the debtor, which would not have been the case had the telegraph company performed its contract within a reasonable time, the company is liable, not only for the cost of the dispatch, but for the amount of A's claim, which constitute the natural and proximate damages resulting from the breach of contract. Ib.

23. In suits against common carriers, damages for pain of mind are recoverable. Fairchild v. California Stage Co., 13 Cal. 601.

24. Proprietors of stage coaches are not insurers or warrantors of the safety of passengers to the same extent with common carriers of goods. Ib. 602.

25. Common carriers are liable for the slightest neglect, and are held to extraordinary diligence and care. In case of injury, the presumption, prima facie, is, that it occurred by the negligence of the coachman. The onus probandi is on the proprietors to show no negligence, and that the injury was occasioned by inevitable casualty, or by some cause which human care and forethought could not prevent. Ib.

26. Where a telegraph company fails to transmit a message, upon compliance by the person contracting with it with the conditions required by sec. 154 of the act of 1850, p. 370, an action for the penalty given by the act lies in favor of such person. Thurn v. Alta Telegraph Co., 15 Cal. 474.

27. The sum to be recovered is a penalty for a breach of the duty to transmit the message, and the act is a penal law to be strictly construed. Ib. 475.

28. Under the above section, the person entitled to recover the penalty is the party who contracts or offers to contract for the transmission of the dispatch. He may, probably, do this by his agent or servant; but when the contract is made by a party as agent of another, in order to give the right of action to the principal, the fact of agency must be shown. Ib. 475.

29. Proof as follows: "I am superintendent of the California State Telegraph Company, and operator in their office at San Francisco. July 2d, plaintiff came to our office and delivered a message to be transmitted to Jackson, and paid for transmitting it there. The message was: 'Alta Express Co., Jackson: If you have package for me, forward immediately.' Signed 'C. Thurn.' In the margin of the message sent, were the words: 'F. July 2d.' Few words passed when the message was delivered; no express agreement that the California State Telegraph Co. should forward the message to Sacramento, and employ the Alta California Telegraph Co. to transmit it from there to Jackson. He must have known that we could not send it to Jackson, as we had no line there. I think there was something said about sending it by the defendant's line from Sacramento." C. Thurn, the plaintiff, sues the Alta Telegraph Co. for the penalty, under the one hundred and fifty-fourth section of the act of 1850, p. 370: held, that under these facts, he is not the person making or offering to make the contract, within the meaning of the act, and cannot recover; that the only contract proven is a contract by the State Telegraph Co. to send the message or to have it sent; and a contract, on its part, to contract on its own account with the Alta Telegraph Co. to send the message. Ib. 475.

30. If the message, in this case, had not been transmitted, plaintiff might have held the State Telegraph Co. responsible. Ib. 476.

COMMON LAW.

1. Money lost at play cannot be recovered in an action; such recovery was unknown to the common law. Bryant v. Mead, 1 Cal. 441.

2. The common law is presumed to be in force in other States, unless the contrary is shown. Thompson v. Monrow, 2 Cal. 100.

3. The statute requiring the complaint to contain a statement of the facts constituting a cause of action in ordinary and concise language, is only declaratory of the common law. Godwin v. Stebbins, 2 Cal. 105.

4. Where a right exists at common law, and a new remedy is given by statute, the latter is cumulative, and either remedy may be pursued; but where the right and remedy are given by statute, that remedy can alone be pursued. People v. Craycroft, 2 Cal. 244; State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 526.

5. There is no common law of the United States as contradistinguished from the individual States; and the courts of the United States, instead of administering the common law, conform to the law of the States. People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 379.

6. At common law all wagers were recoverable except such as were prohibited by law, or were against public policy, or calculated to affect the interest, character or feelings of third parties. Johnson v. Fall, 6 Cal. 361.

7. The common law having been adopted as the rule of decision in this State, it is our duty to enforce it, leaving all question of its policy as applied to a particular class of contracts for the consideration of the legislature. Ib.

8. A court is bound to take judicial notice of the general laws in force in this State at the cession of California, which remained unrepealed until the act of the 13th of April, 1850, establishing the common law. Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 494.

9. At common law a party was not permitted to plead a want of consideration as a defense to an action upon a sealed instrument—the presumption of the existence of a consideration being absolute and conclusive. McCarty v. Beach, 10 Cal. 463.

10. The rule of common law which requires owners of cattle to keep them confined within their own close, does not prevail in this State. The common law was adopted only so far as it was not repugnant to the constitution and statutes of the State. Waters v. Moss, 12 Cal. 538.

11. Common law is that general body of law which, by those general principles and those general usages which are to be found, not in the legislative acts of any particular State, but that generally recognized and long established law which forms the substratum of the laws of every State. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 285.

12. By the common law there were only two classes of conveyances which were held to operate upon the after acquired title—those by feoffment, by fine or by common recovery, and those by indenture of lease. Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 626.

13. In the absence of proof to the contrary, the common law is presumed to exist in those States of the Union which were originally colonies of England, or were carved out of such colonies. Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 252.

14. The same presumption prevails as to the existence of the common law in those States which have been established in territory acquired since the revolution, where such territory was not, at the time of its acquisition, occupied by an organized and civilized community; but where the population, upon the establishment of government, was formed by emigration from the original States. Ib.

15. No such presumption can prevail as to the States of Florida, Louisiana and Texas. In those States, at the time of their accession to the country, organized governments existed, the laws of which remained in force until they were abrogated by proper authority, and new laws were promulgated. Ib. 253.

16. The common law constitutes the basis of our jurisprudence, and rights and liabilities must be determined in accordance with its principles, except so far as they are modified by statute. Van Maren v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 311.

COMMON PROPERTY.

1. By the Mexican law the wife during the continuance of the marriage has a revocable and feigned dominion in and possession of one-half the property acquired by her and her husband, but the husband is the real and veritable owner and has the irrevocable dominion in all the gananciales, and may sell and dispose of them at pleasure. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 515.

2. After the death of the wife, the husband may dispose of the gananciales without being obliged to reserve for the children of the marriage either the property in or proceeds of the same. Ib.

3. A father during his life time and after the death of the wife may, although there have been children of the marriage, dispose of the gananciales for any honest purpose, where there is no intention to defraud the children, and may by last will and testament direct the sale to them for the payment of his debts. Ib. 516.

4. A having married and there being children of the marriage and his wife having died, and there being common property acquired during the marriage: held, that the children upon the death of the wife did not acquire a vested estate in the common property, and that the father had absolute dominion over and power to sell such property during his life, and the power by last will and testament to direct the sale of the same for the payment of debts, not only such as were contracted during the continuance of the marriage, but also such as were contracted by the husband after the dissolution of the marriage by the death of his wife. Ib. 517.

5. By the statute the rents and profits of the separate property of the wife are declared to be common property. Snyder v. Webb, 3 Cal. 87.

6. If a husband should purchase or invest the rents and profits of the estate of the wife, he will be held to account for her benefit in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had undertaken a specific trust. Ib. 88.

7. Upon a divorce, the statute directs that the common property shall be equally divided between the parties, and that the court granting the decree shall make the order for the division thereof: held, that a partition of the common property is one of the direct results of a decree for divorce and is part and parcel of the decree to be rendered, and one of the proper subjects of the action. Kashaw v. Kashaw, 3 Cal. 322.

8. As soon as a place acquires the character of homestead it is immaterial how the title to the property originated, whether it was the separate property of the husband or wife or the common property of both. Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 273; Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. 71.

Common Property.

9. By the Mexican laws, all property acquired during marriage was common property, and the wife could neither be bound as security for her husband nor liable as a joint contractor, except where it was shown that the contract was advantageous to the wife. Hames v. Castro, 5 Cal. 111.

10. Under the rule of the Mexican law, where the wife is the survivor of the husband, she is liable for one-half the community debts; but to fix this liability it must be shown that a fruitless effort has been made to obtain payment through an administration of the community assets, or that there is no common property and that the community is insolvent. Ib.

11. The act of April 17th, 1850, giving to the husband the entire control of the common property, does not invest him with power to dispose of the same by devise whereby the rights of the wife may be defeated. Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 256.

12. The husband and wife during coverture are jointly seized of the property, with one-half interest remaining to the wife, subject only to the husband's disposal during their joint lives. Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 256; Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 469.

13. A wife is entitled to her own share of the common property, and entitled to any legacy out of the share of the husband. Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 257.

14. Property in this State acquired by the husband after marriage but before the passage of the act of April 17th, 1850, is common property under the Mexican law, as that so acquired subsequently is by the statute, and cannot be disposed of by will. Estate of Buchanan, 8 Cal. 509; Smith v. Smith, 12 Cal. 225; Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 469.

15. The homestead being held in a sort of joint tenancy, passes on the death of the husband to the wife by right of survivorship, and forms no part of the common property. Estate of Buchanan, 8 Cal. 509.

16. The earnings of both husband and wife go into a common fund and become common property, the control and disposition of which belongs to the husband, and when applied by him or with his assent for her support, and are sufficient for that purpose, there is no basis for a divorce on the ground of willful neglect. Washburn v. Washburn, 9 Cal. 476.

17. To entitle a surviving husband or wife to the whole common property, it must be affirmatively shown that there are no descendants of the deceased. Cummings v. Chevrier, 10 Cal. 520.

18. In an action for the division of the common property of the husband and wife after a decree of divorce, the plaintiff, to bring herself within the provisions of the act of April 17th, 1850, defining the rights of husband and wife and establishing the common property, must affirmatively state such facts as give her the right to the property under the act. Dye v. Dye, 11 Cal. 166.

19. A mere general averment that property was common property is no averment of any issuable fact, but a conclusion of law, and is defective in a complaint. Ib. 169.

20. In an action for a division of the common property after a divorce, where it appeared that the property in question had been in the possession of the husband before marriage, without title, and that he purchased the property and obtained deeds thereof after marriage, the purchase money being paid with the common funds: held, that it was common property. Johnson v. Johnson, 11 Cal. 205.

21. Upon the death of a husband, the whole of the common property is assets of the deceased, to be administered upon by his personal representatives. Estate of Tompkins, 12 Cal. 124.

22. All property acquired by either spouse during the existence of the community is presumed to belong to it, and this presumption can only be overcome by clear and satisfactory proof that it was acquired by the separate funds of one or the other; and that the burthen of proof lies upon the party claiming the property as separate. Smith v. Smith, 12 Cal. 224; Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 253; Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 470; Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 493; Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 131; Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 557.

23. Where a brick building was erected on such lots during the existence of the community, the presumption that it was but the form in which the common property was invested is too cogent to be overcome by loose and unsatisfactory testimony. Smith v. Smith, 12 Cal. 224.

24. The law investing in the husband the absolute power of disposition of the common property, as of his separate estate, designed to facilitate its bona fide alienation, and to prevent clogs upon its transfer by claims of the wife. Ib.

25. The law will not support a voluntary disposition of the common property, or any portion of it, with a view of defeating any claims of the wife. Ib. 225.

26. Where a husband deliberately places a brick building upon the property of his children by a former marriage, after a second marriage, he cannot have any claim upon it or its proceeds. In case its character as common property is declared only for the protection of the interest of the wife. Ib. 226.

27. Property acquired by the husband and wife during the marriage and whilst living together, whether by onerous or lucrative title, and that acquired by either of them by onerous title, belonged to the community; whilst property acquired by either of them by lucrative title are solely constituted the separate property of the party making the acquisition. Scott v. Ward, 12 Cal. 471; Noé v. Card, 14 Cal. 596.

28. The title of the common property is in the husband, and he can dispose of the same absolutely, as if it were his own separate property. The interest of the wife is a mere expectancy, like the interest which an heir may possess in the property of his ancestor. Van Maren v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 311.

29. The separate property of the wife and the common property of both husband and wife are equally liable for the debts of the wife contracted previous to her marriage, and judgments recovered for such debts may be enforced against either class or both classes of property indiscriminately. Ib. 313.

COMPENSATION.

- I. In general.
- II. As Damages.
- III. For Private property condemned to Public use.
- IV. As a Reward.
- V. To Public Officers.
  1. To Administrators.
  2. To an Arbitrator.
  3. To Attorneys at Law.

4. To County Clerk.
5. To County Physician.
6. To Sheriff.
7. To County Treasurer.
8. To County Auditor.
9. To Clerk of the Board of Supervisors.

IN GENERAL.

1. The plaintiff introduced two witnesses to prove the value of his services in going twice to Europe to negotiate the purchase of an estate, etc.; but it was not shown that he undertook these voyages at the request of defendant, or in what capacity he went: held, that the court erred in admitting the testimony, as the question was hypothetical, and assumed a state of facts not in proof. Dopman v. Hoberlin, 5 Cal. 414.

2. A mandamus can only compel a board of supervisors to act upon a claim against the county, but cannot direct their action; and the rejection of the account is an action upon it, which is all that a mandamus could require where the compensation claimed in the account is not fixed by law. Price v. Sacramento County, 6 Cal. 256.

3. Neither the governor nor the attorney general has any power to bind the State by a contract to procure the advice of counsel as to the rights of the State in certain property. People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 258.

4. It would be impossible to estimate, with any approach to accuracy, the damage done in entering upon a mining claim and removing the auriferous earth, and hence the greater necessity of preventing by injunction what cannot be adequately compensated. Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 6 Cal. 322.

5. Where a party employed received a regular specific monthly salary for his services, the presumption of law is that all services rendered by him for his employer during that period, which are of nearly a similar nature to those of his regular duties, are paid for by his salary, and to this presumption he must show an express agreement for this extra pay, otherwise he cannot recover. Cany v. Folsom, 9 Cal. 201.

6. The term "compensation" in section 21, art. 4, of the constitution of this State, means the income of the office, not the profit over and above the necessary expenses of the office. Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 122. See WAGES.

As Damages.—For Private property condemned to Public use.

II. AS DAMAGES.

7. Where there has been a special contract to erect a building at a specified price and according to an agreed plan, and the contract is afterwards deviated from by consent, the plaintiff cannot recover upon the express contract, for the reason that the work has not been performed according to the terms of the express contract; though at the trial the measure of compensation must be graduated by the terms of the contract, so far as the work can be traced under it. De Boom v. Priestly, 1 Cal. 207.

8. A jury cannot give compensation for loss of time, remuneration for wages paid, etc., unless there is an allegation in the complaint as to these matters. Dabovich v. Emeric, 12 Cal. 181.

9. If there should be an error in the computation of interest, the supreme court would not be disposed to correct the decree on account of it, but should permit it to stand, leaving the excess over the proper amount to go as compensation to the respondent on account of the appeal. Whitney v. Buckman, 13 Cal. 539.

10. In the absence of mitigating circumstances in a trespass, the rule is compensation merely, and this refers solely to the injury done to the property, and not to collateral or consequential damages resulting to the owner; and this matter of relief is matter of law. Dorsey v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 555.

11. But where the trespass is committed from wanton or malicious motives, or a reckless disregard of the rights of others, or under circumstances of great hardship and oppression, the rule of mere compensation is not enforced, and the measure and amount of damages are matters for the jury alone, and they may award punitive or exemplary damages. Ib. 556.

12. The rule of compensation, merely as distinguished from the rule of exemplary damages, applies even though the writ under which the officer committed the trespass were void, there being no circumstances of aggravation. Ib.

III. FOR PRIVATE PROPERTY CONDEMNED TO PUBLIC USE.

13. What is termed the "swinging of lots," a measure adopted in pursuance of a resolution of a public meeting in San Francisco, cannot change the location of premises actually granted, or impair the right of the grantee therein. The taking of a part of a lot from an individual for the purpose of a public street, though it may perhaps give him a claim on the public for compensation, does not confer upon him the right to encroach to the same extent on the land of his neighbor. Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 329.

14. The destruction of a building to stop the spread of a conflagration it seems cannot be deemed the taking of private property for public use within the meaning of that clause in the constitution which prohibits such taking without just compensation. Dunbar v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 356; Surocco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 72.

15. The proprietor of a wharf may insist on compensation for the use made of his wharf above the line of low water, but no compensation can be claimed for that part of the wharf, which is below the line of low water. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 469.

16. If by the construction of a railroad through the enclosure of a farmer, it is made necessary to construct fences on either side of the road to protect his crops, the cost of such fences must be included in the compensation to be paid by the railroad company. Sacramento Valley R. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 6 Cal. 75.

17. Where private property is appropriated to public use by the supervisors of a county, without making provision for paying for the same, such act is illegal and may be enjoined. McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 124.

18. Parties in possession of land are entitled to compensation before it can be taken for public uses. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 65; City of San Francisco v. Scott, 4 Cal. 116; Sacramento Valley R. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 6 Cal. 75; McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 124; Colton v. Rossi, 9 Cal. 599; McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 528, 531; Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Co., 13 Cal. 313; Johnson v. Alameda County, 14 Cal. 107; People v. Brooks,

---

As a Reward.—To Public Officers.—To Administrators.

---

16 Cal. 47; Gillan v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 156.

19. A citizen is entitled to hold his property free from any interference, except through the taxing power, from the government or his fellow subject to this one qualification: that when it is necessary for the purposes of the public, it may be taken from him; provided, the government so taking or authorizing others to take it, shall make the owner just compensation, which must be paid or secured to him before he is deprived of his possession. Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Co., 13 Cal. 313.

20. No title or any right of possession comes from the mere condemnation of private property for public use. Just compensation, actually made or secured according to law, is a condition precedent; and such compensation must be made within a short period, or the privilege of taking the property under the condemnation will be deemed abandoned. Ib. 316.

21. The act of March 29th, 1860, providing for the construction of the State capital at Sacramento, is not unconstitutional because it provides that the compensation to the owners of the land taken shall be ascertained by three commissioners, and thus deprives the owners of the right to a jury trial. The provision of the constitution, that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever," applies only to civil and criminal cases in which an issue of fact is joined. The proceeding to ascertain the value of property, under the act of 1860, and the compensation to be made, is not an action at law. It is an inquisition for the ascertainment of a particular fact, as preliminary to future proceedings, and it is only requisite that it be conducted in some equitable and fair mode, to be provided by law, either with or without a jury, opportunity being allowed to owners and parties interested in the property to give evidence as to its value, and to be heard thereon. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 253.

22. The language of the constitution as to the right of trial by jury was used with reference to the right as it exists at common law. The right of trial by jury cannot be claimed in equity cases, unless an issue of fact be framed for the jury, under the direction of the court. Ib.

IV. AS A REWARD.

23. A municipality appropriated, by resolution, $10,000 to their mayor, for meritorious services in quelling a riot, exclusive of his salary which was paid. The mayor died from wounds received in the riot before he finally accepted the appropriation: held, that the same could not be recovered by his executor at law. Heslep v. City of Sacramento, 2 Cal. 480.

24. An agreement by one who has lost property by fire or theft to pay a certain sum to any one who will secure the arrest and conviction of the criminal is not a nude pact, but may be enforced by a person performing the service. Ryer v. Stockwell, 14 Cal. 136.

25. In such cases, the offer of a reward or compensation by public advertisement, either to a particular person or class of persons, or to any and all persons, is a conditional promise; and if any one to whom such offer is made shall perform the service before the offer is revoked, such performance is a good consideration, and the offer becomes a legal and binding contract. Until performance, the offer may be revoked at pleasure. Ib. 137.

V. TO PUBLIC OFFICERS.

26. The legislature having vested certain duties in a public officer, for which services compensation is allowed, may take those duties and the fees from the office before the expiration of the term and confer them upon another officer. People v. Squires, 14 Cal. 15.

1. To Administrators.

27. The compensation allowed by law to executors upon the whole value of the estate, both real and personal, only applies where the administration is complete, and the estate is finally settled. Ord v. Little, 3 Cal. 289.

28. Where the administrator resigns, leaving the administration incomplete, there is no fixed rule of compensation. The probate court should apportion it in reference to the compensation fixed by law for the whole, according to sound discretion. Ib.

29. An administrator being compelled by law to hold, protect and guard funds coming into his hands which he has reason to believe to be assets of the estate, until the right to the funds can be determined, is entitled to his commissions thereon. Wells v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 143.

2. To an Arbitrator.

30. Where parties who submit a matter to arbitration agree as to who shall pay the arbitrator, if the latter be no party to the agreement he will not be bound by it, but may look to all the parties for compensation for his services. Young v. Starkey, 1 Cal. 427.

31. Where an arbitrator refuses to deliver an award made by him until his fees are paid, and a promise to pay him is made, and he delivers the award, it takes the case out of the statute of fraud, and the undertaking to pay for the services a reasonable compensation is supported by a sufficient consideration. Ib.

3. To Attorneys at Law.

32. In an action brought for the distribution of the effects of a corporation, it being for the interest of all parties that the company should be legally dissolved: held, that costs and a counsel fee on each side should be paid out of the fund. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 75.

33. District courts had no right under the code of 1850 to allow counsel fees in admiralty cases. Selby v. Bark Alice Tarlton, 1 Cal. 104.

34. An attorney has no lien upon a judgment recovered by him in favor of his client for a quantum meruit compensation for his services; such lien extends only to costs given by statute. Ex parte Kyle, 1 Cal. 332; Mansfield v. Dorland, 2 Cal. 509; Russell v. Conway, 12 Cal. 103.

35. If a retainer be absolute upon its face, but did not specify in what manner or by whom the fees were to be paid, evidence should be admitted to show whether the fee was contingent or not. Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 391.

36. An attorney is always entitled to his retaining fee in advance, unless he stipulates to the contrary. Covillaud v. Yale, 3 Cal. 110.

37. In an action upon an injunction bond to recover damages for the wrongful issuing of the writ, it was held that the amount paid to counsel as a fee to procure the dissolution of an injunction was properly allowed as part of the damages. Ah Thaie v. Quan Wan, 3 Cal. 217; overruling Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 412.

38. Generally, the recovery of counsel fees as part of the damage is not allowed—as where the loss is consequential; but where the loss is direct—as in the case of an improper commencement and prosecution of a writ, or other process in a suit—it should be allowed. Summers v. Farish, 10 Cal. 353; Heynan v. Landers, 12 Cal. 111; Prader v. Grim, 13 Cal. 587.

39. Counsel fees, not exceeding five per cent., were stipulated to be paid in the mortgage on foreclosure: held, that it is not necessary to aver in the complaint that five per cent. was reasonable counsel fees, but like costs, they were a mere incident to the debt, and might be fixed by the court at its discretion, not exceeding five per cent. Carriere v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 435; Gronfier v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 492.

40. In an action to recover the value of services as attorney in a certain suit, it is incompetent to prove the value of plaintiff's services in another action. Hart v. Vidal, 6 Cal. 56.

41. A witness who is not an attorney is incompetent to prove the value of an attorney's services in a cause. Hart v. Vidal, 6 Cal. 57.

42. Where an individual doing business under the firm name of "D. W. & Co." incurred obligations for professional services to the plaintiff, an attorney, and pending the litigation of his matters formed a partnership with two others under the same firm name, and one of the new members of the firm thus formed subsequently dismissed the suit in the firm name, and when payment for the services was demanded did not deny the liability of the firm, but refused payment and disputed the amount charged: held, that the firm was estopped from denying their liability. Burritt v. Dickson, 8 Cal. 115.

To Attorneys at Law.—To County Clerk.—To County Physician.—To Sheriff.

43. But where it was shown that the plaintiff's partner had drawn up the partnership articles of defendants: held, that plaintiff was bound to know the terms on which the defendants' firm was formed, and that defendants had a right to presume such knowledge, and are not estopped by the acts above recited from denying their liability. Ib. 117.

44. A receiver having the right to stipulate with the counsel employed by him, that the counsel shall rely upon the allowance made by the court for his services, it is the duty of the receiver to report among his disbursements the claim of the counsel, leaving the amount to be fixed by the court; and if the counsel, or any other person employed by the receiver, feels aggrieved by the order of the court thereon, he can appeal therefrom. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 316.

45. Counsel for the plaintiff in a suit for dissolution cannot claim compensation as associate counsel for the receiver. Ib. 10 Cal. 317.

46. Where a first attachment against an insolvent is set aside as fraudulent, in a suit brought by a subsequent attaching creditor to which various other attaching creditors, prior and subsequent, are parties, the plaintiff in the suit cannot claim priority over the attachments preceding his, on the ground that by his superior diligence the fraud has been discovered; but the plaintiff's costs, disbursements and counsel fees, however, should first be deducted from the fund before distribution. Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 444.

47. When an attorney sued for professional services on a quantum valebant, and the answer denied the value of the services: held, that the rule requiring new matter to be set up in the answer does not apply. Bridges v. Paige, 13 Cal. 641.

48. Relator conveyed to Y. one-third of certain real estate, in consideration that Y. should attend to a suit pending in the name of relator for the recovery of the property. Y. employed an attorney to conduct the suit, the attorney of plaintiff being discharged. Relator moved the court below to substitute another attorney in place of the one employed by Y. Court refused to grant the motion, the only reason urged for the substitution being that Y. had neglected to prosecute the suit; and it not being shown that the agreement between him and relator had been canceled by the parties. Relator applies to this court for mandamus: held, that the writ lies; that the agreement between relator and Y. does not exclude the former from the right to prosecute the suit and employ such attorney as he chooses; that the exercise of this right will not affect any right Y. may have in the property or suit; that he may intervene if a proper case be made, or prosecute his rights independently, or wait until the recovery and then claim his rights under the contract with relator. People v. Norton, 16 Cal. 440.

4. To County Clerk.

49. The statute of April 4th, 1857, fixing the compensation of the county clerk of the county of Placer at $3000 per annum, was intended in lieu of all fees for services rendered. Mitchell v. Stoner, 9 Cal. 203.

5. To County Physician.

50. In a suit by a physician against a county, on a contract for his services for one year as examining physician of the hospital, the objection that he is not a graduate of a legally constituted medical institute, if good at all, cannot be taken by demurrer, unless it distinctly present the objection. McDaniel v. Yuba County, 14 Cal. 445.

6. To Sheriff.

51. A sheriff cannot maintain an action against a county for compensation for "taking care of the court house, and keeping and guarding the jail of the county during his incumbency of the office of sheriff." The law fixes his compensation for the performance of such official duty. Stockton v. Shasta County, 1 Cal. 114.

7. To County Treasurer.

52. Under the Sacramento consolida-

To County Auditor.—Clerk of the Board of Supervisors.—Complaint in general.

tion act of 1858, the treasurer of the city and county of Sacramento is entitled to receive for his official services only $3000 per annum. He is not entitled to the percentage allowed by the State to county treasurers for money paid by them into the State treasury. This percentage belongs to the city and county of Sacramento. Sacramento County v. Bird, 15 Cal. 295.

8. To County Auditor.

53. The board of supervisors of a county possesses no power to allow the county auditor compensation for the issuance and cancelation of warrants drawn on the county treasurer. People v. Supervisors of El Dorado County, 11 Cal. 174.

9. Clerk of the Board of Supervisors.

54. Under the consolidation act of 1858, the board of supervisors of the city and county of Sacramento has no power to create the office of assistant clerk to the board, nor to raise the salaries fixed in the twenty-fourth section of the act, and its action in creating such office and raising such salaries, may be reviewed on certiorari. Robinson v. Supervisors Sacramento County, 16 Cal. 211.

COMPLAINT.

- I. In general.
- II. What the Complaint should contain.
  1. Cause of Action.
  2. Statement of a Condition precedent.
- III. Admission of Fact set up in Complaint.
- IV. Amendment to the Complaint.
- V. Supplemental Complaint.
- VI. Joinder of Causes of Action in a Complaint.
- VII. Dismissal of a Complaint.
- VIII. Surplusage in a Complaint.
- IX. Verification to a Complaint.
- X. Prayer to a Complaint.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. The complaint contained averments against defendants as common carriers, and the action was for damage done to merchandise in their transportation: held, that it was indispensable for the plaintiff to prove that defendants were common carriers, and that the goods were delivered to and received by them as such for the purpose of being transported for hire. Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 116.

2. Where in an action against administrator the complaint is founded on an instrument alleged to have been executed by the intestate, it is not necessary under the statute that the administrator should deny the signature of the intestate under oath. It must be proven. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 411.

3. The objection to a defect of parties in the complaint should be taken advantage of by demurrer, or it must be deemed to have been waived and could not have been raised at the trial. Sampson v. Shaeffer, 3 Cal. 202; Warner v. Wilson, 4 Cal. 313; Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 257; Oliver v. Walsh, 6 Cal. 456; Tissot v. Throckmorton, 6 Cal. 473; McKune v. McGarvey, 6 Cal. 498; Andrews v. Mokelumne Hill Co., 7 Cal. 334; Alvarez v. Brannan, 7 Cal. 510; Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 170; Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 557.

4. An allegation that the goods were purchased of A, the agent, then and there acting for defendant, is sufficiently certain to prevent any misapprehension of its meaning, and is the same as if the allegation was of the purchase from defendant. Cochran v. Goodman, 3 Cal. 245.

5. Where the complaint in hæc verba sets forth the bill of the article purchased, it is sufficient to inform the defendant with what he is charged, for he is presumed to know what was intended by his own account. Id.

6. Objections to the form of a complaint cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court. Sutter v. Cox, 6 Cal. 415.

7. An allegation in a complaint that the parties kept a saloon for the purpose of gaming and selling liquors and cigars, does not raise the presumption that the gaming was necessarily unlawful, or that the saloon was a common gaming house, as the word might apply to lawful games, as billiards, etc. Whipley v. Flower, 6 Cal. 632.

8. If the defendant is described in the caption of the complaint as administrator, it is immaterial so long as the facts stated in the body of the complaint show that he is not sought to be charged as administrator. People v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 350.

9. Where an attachment was issued on a complaint which was a printed form, with the blanks filled up by the clerk at the request of plaintiff, but no name signed to it until next day, and after other attachments on the same property, when it was signed by the clerk with the name of plaintiff's attorney: held, that the action of the clerk, though not correct, was only an irregularity, and the complaint was not void. Dixey v. Pollock, 8 Cal. 572.

10. The allegations of the complaint must be construed most strongly against the pleader. Dickinson v. Maguire, 9 Cal. 50.

11. It is necessary in the service of papers to follow the provisions of the statute, and the return should show that the defendant was served with a certified copy of the complaint. McMillan v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 379.

12. An answer responsive to and denying the charges in a bill of equity is not evidence for the defendant, though the bill be sustained by one witness only. Goodwin v. Hammond, 13 Cal. 169; Bostic v. Love, 16 Cal. 72.

13. A bill quia timet and to enforce the specific execution of an agreement lies only where there is no adequate remedy at law. But where the damages resulting from the breach of such agreement are susceptible of precise admeasurement, equity will not take jurisdiction unless there are some peculiar equitable circumstances. White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 525.

14. Though a pleading is not strictly proof for the party making it, still a complaint may be read to the jury to show what allegations are not denied, and hence admitted. Garfield v. Knight's Ferry & Table Mt. W. Co., 14 Cal. 36.

15. Where a paper purporting to be an admission by an agent is attached to the complaint as an exhibit, and then the answer denies the agency, the paper is not evidence until the agency is proven. Id. 37.

16. Where the return of a sheriff states that he served the defendants with a certified copy of the complaint, it will be presumed that the copy was certified by the clerk, and not by some one else. Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 119.

17. Where plaintiff avers defendant is indebted to him for cattle sold and delivered, and the answer denies the averment, defendant may show anything disproving the contract as averred; as that another party who in fact sold the cattle, sold them as his own, and not as agent of the plaintiff; or that defendant was not to pay until the cattle were fattened and slaughtered. Hawkins v. Borland, 14 Cal. 414.

18. If, as contended in this case, a judgment by default be void, because of the seal of the district court to the summons issued in the action in which the judgment was entered, or because of a defect in the certificate of the sheriff of the service of summons and copy of complaint, or because of irregularities of the clerk in entering the judgment, the district court can quash the execution issued on such judgment, and injunction to restrain the enforcement thereof does not lie. Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 202.

II. WHAT THE COMPLAINT SHOULD CONTAIN.

1. Cause of Action.

19. Where a plaintiff alleged in his complaint that he was satisfied that defendant procured certain property through fraud, but there were no other allegations in the complaint showing fraud: held, that the issue tendered was immaterial—it not presenting a point upon which the case could be decided upon its merits. Snow v. Halstead, 1 Cal. 361.

20. A plaintiff must recover, if at all, according to the averments in his complaint, and a court is not warranted in rendering a judgment in favor of the plaintiff when there is no averment in the complaint upon which the judgment can be based. Sterling v. Hanson, 1 Cal. 480; Benedict v. Bray, 2 Cal. 256.

21. The plaintiff must recover on the allegations in his complaint, if at all, and if the complaint fails to aver that property was partnership property, the judgment of the court should not find that fact. Sterling v. Hanson, 1 Cal. 480.

22. The code of practice requiring the complaint to contain a statement of the facts constituting a cause of action, in ordinary and concise language, is only declaratory of the common law. Godwin v. Stebbins, 2 Cal. 105.

23. A plaintiff can only recover for such causes of action as are stated in his complaint. Benedict v. Bray, 2 Cal. 256.

24. In an action of detinue it is usual to aver a bailment or finding; but the manner in which the defendant became possessed of the property has always been held to be mere matter of inducement. Otero v. Bullard, 3 Cal. 189.

25. The allegation that the use and occupation of the lot in question was at the request of the defendant, and by the permission of plaintiff, was the allegation of a contract, which the plaintiff is bound to establish to enable him to succeed. Sampson v. Shaeffer, 3 Cal. 201.

26. The allegation of ignorance in making the necessary averments in a complaint, or of insufficient conduct in the prosecution of a former suit, does not constitute grounds for relief in chancery. Barnett v. Richey, 3 Cal. 327.

27. The complaint was for money loaned, and set out a draft drawn by defendant which plaintiff was to pay and did pay, but did not aver that after paying the draft he canceled and delivered it up to the defendant: held, that this defect was fatal to the form of action and should have been upon the outstanding draft. Lambert v. Slade, 3 Cal. 331.

28. Where the complaint alleged, in September, 1849, the plaintiff settled on a tract of land, "the same being public land of the United States;" that subsequently H., a foreigner, built a house and occupied a portion of the tract; and now, that H.'s executor is offering the same for sale, and plaintiff prays an injunction and damages for the occupation: held, that the complaint sets forth no principle on which to base a claim. O'Conner v. Corbitt, 3 Cal. 372.

29. The allegation of possession at the time of the ouster complained of is a sufficient allegation of title to sustain the declaration. Hutchinson v. Perley, 4 Cal. 34.

30. The statute does not require an allegation in the complaint of possession; an averment that the premises "are unlawfully withheld from the plaintiff" is somewhat general, yet not insufficient in a justice's court—except upon demurrer. Cronise v. Carghill, 4 Cal. 122.

31. In forcible entry and detainer, a description of the land sufficiently definite to enable the administration of substantial justice is all that is required in actions before a justice of the peace. Hernandez v. Simon, 4 Cal. 183.

32. A complaint is insufficient which treats the maker and guarantor of a note as joint makers, and contains no allegation of demand and notice. Lightstone v. Laurencel, 4 Cal. 277.

33. Where a complaint alleges that the plaintiffs were in possession and lawfully entitled to possession at the time of eviction, it was held that the complaint must be treated as a declaration in ejectment. Ramirez v. Murray, 4 Cal. 293.

34. In an action upon a promise to pay money, if the complaint contains no averment of consideration or of indebtedness, except by way of recital, it is insufficient. Shafer v. Bear River & Auburn W. & M. Co., 4 Cal. 295.

35. A declaration is insufficient which alleges an indebtedness and sets forth an account, but does not allege the sale or delivery of the articles to the defendant, nor show in what place or what manner the indebtedness accrued—whether on account of the defendant or that of another. Mer-shon v. Randall, 4 Cal. 326.

36. To enable the plaintiff to recover in an action of ejectment founded on prior possession, he must allege in his complaint and prove an actual ouster by defendants, or those under whom he holds. Payne v. Treadwell, 5 Cal. 311; Watson v. Zimmerman, 6 Cal. 47.

37. Where a complaint, though defective, states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the objections to it should be taken by demurrer. Greenfield v. Steamer Gunnell, 6 Cal. 68.

38. To maintain a creditor's bill in chancery, in order to reach equitable assets, which are alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed, it is not sufficient simply to aver that the conveyance was fraudulent, but facts and circumstances must be set forth, which will reasonably sustain the theory of the bill. Kinder v. Macy, 7 Cal. 207.

39. A complaint alleging that the defendant sold to plaintiffs a certain share of fruit growing in an orchard, and after a sale executed a guaranty that the share of plaintiffs should be at their disposal; and further alleging a demand for the same, and the refusal of the defendant to deliver; is demurrable, as it should contain an averment of the assignment of the breach of the contract or guaranty. Dabovich v. Emeric, 7 Cal. 212.

40. A complaint alleging that plaintiffs are the owners and in possession of certain mining claims on a certain stream, and are entitled to the natural flow of the waters of the stream, which had been diverted to their injury by defendants, sets forth a sufficient cause of action. Leigh Co. v. Independent Ditch Co., 8 Cal. 323.

41. A complaint alleging that the defendant collected and received certain money as the agent or attorney in fact of the plaintiff, and had embezzled and converted the money to his own use, and praying that he be adjudged guilty of a fraud and for judgment and execution against his person and property, is insufficient to sustain a verdict convicting the defendant of fraud. Porter v. Hermann, 8 Cal. 623.

42. No averment of notice to the defendant is requisite in the complaint where the matters assigned as breaches lie as much in the knowledge of the one party as of the other. People v. Edwards, 9 Cal. 292.

43. The supreme court does not deem it necessary to decide whether in all cases where a judgment is based upon a complaint which does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the judgment itself may be treated as a nullity. Reynolds v. Harris, 9 Cal. 341.

44. A complaint against a sheriff and his sureties for selling under execution the homestead of plaintiffs, which sets out that the sheriff was in possession of a certain execution against the plaintiff, I. Kendall, under which he sold the property, and averring damages in the sum of $2,000, the value of the property, is insufficient, as the same does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, as the sheriff's deed conveys nothing if the property was a homestead. Kendall v. Clark, 10 Cal. 18.

45. If a complaint should only allege that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in a named sum, which the defendant refused to pay, it would be insufficient. It must allege the facts which constitute the indebtedness. Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 28.

46. A complaint which alleges that the plaintiffs were on a certain day the owners and proprietors of a certain valuable water ditch for the purpose of conveying water, and at which time and place the defendants were also the owners of a certain other water ditch for the purpose aforesaid, and that afterwards, on the same day and year, at, etc., aforesaid, the said defendants' ditch was so badly and negligently constructed and managed, and the water therein so negligently and carelessly attended to that said ditch broke away, and the water therein flowed over and upon the ditch of plaintiffs, greatly damaging and injuring the same, and carrying down therein and thereon great quantities of rock, stone, earth and rubbish, and breaking said plaintiffs' ditch, and depriving them of the use and profit of the water flowing therein, to said plaintiffs' damage of $3,000, and thereof they bring suit, is sufficient. Tuolumne County Water Co. v. Columbia and Stanislaus Water Co., 10 Cal. 195.

47. The averment in the complaint that the plaintiff is the owner of the note and mortgage in suit, is a sufficient answer to a demurrer on the ground that it does not appear by the complaint that the plaintiff is the holder of the note. Rollins v. Forbes, 10 Cal. 300.

48. A demurrer to a complaint on the ground "that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action," and which then specifies that the complaint shows no joint cause of action in the plaintiff, and that it prays for a judgment in favor of three plaintiffs for an injury done to one, is a good demurrer for misjoinder of parties. Summers v. Farish, 10 Cal. 350.

49. In an action for damages for breaking defendants' dam and flooding the plaintiff's mining claim, where the complaint is one count, and charges that "the defendants' said reservoir, by reason of some defect in its construction, insufficiency for the purpose for which it was constructed, or carelessness and mismanagement on the part of the said defendants, broke away," etc.: held, that the complaint is sufficient. Hoffman v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 10 Cal. 416.

50. A jury cannot give compensation for loss of time, remuneration for wages paid, etc., unless there is an allegation in the complaint as to these matters. Dabovich v. Emeric, 12 Cal. 181.

51. A general averment in the complaint to enforce the vendor's lien, that the mortgage is defective as a security, is not sufficient to withdraw the case from the general rules of equity. Hunt v. Waterman, 12 Cal. 305.

52. It is no ground of demurrer to a complaint that the christian name of one of the plaintiffs does not appear. Nelson v. Highland, 13 Cal. 75.

53. A complaint is sufficient which states that defendant was indebted for a certain sum of money, ascertained to be due upon a statement of account, and which defendant promised to pay. Dewitt v. Porter, 13 Cal. 172.

54. A legatee who has been represented by counsel at the allowance of accounts against an estate, and seeks, after a lapse of time, to come in and have the allowance set aside on a mere general averment of newly discovered evidence, must show in his complaint how and why the facts could not have been discovered at the time. Williams v. Price, 13 Cal. 213.

55. In an action of damages for diverting the water of a river from plaintiff's mill, an averment in the complaint of possession of the land and mill, is sufficient against a trespasser, without averring riparian ownership or prior appropriation of the water. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 13 Cal. 230.

56. Where a bill in equity shows on its face that plaintiff is not entitled, the defect may be taken advantage of in the supreme court, even though no demurrer be filed. White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 525.

57. An allegation in the complaint that plaintiffs are the sons of Joaquin Castro, and have been in possession of the rancho since his decease, is, in the absence of a special demurrer, a sufficient allegation of heirship. Castro v. Armesti, 14 Cal. 39.

58. Bill filed by a judgment creditor of J., upon order of court permitting it, against the defendants as executors. Bill avers that the will of deceased "directed by written or oral instructions" the executors to sell certain cattle and retain the proceeds for the use and benefit of J., after first discharging his then debts; that it also declared that he, the testator, had made a secret assignment for J., which the executors would carry into effect according to his instructions when convenient. Bill charges that defendants have not sold the cattle, but have converted them to their own use: held, that a demurrer was properly sustained; that a pleading must be taken most strongly against the pleader, and that there is no law giving effect to an oral instruction of a testator—as a will or part of a will; and that the creditor of J. can have no more rights than J. himself. Sparks v. De la Guerra, 14 Cal. 111.

59. Where the complaint shows no legal cause of action, a judgment by default can no more be taken than it can over a general demurrer. Abbe v. Marr, 14 Cal. 211.

60. Where the facts averred by plaintiff as constituting his cause of action show turpitude on his part, he states himself out of court. Ib.

61. The endorser of a note payable on demand, no demand being made within thirteen months after the endorsement to plaintiff, is prima facie not liable. The delay is unreasonable, and in such case the facts to excuse the delay are an essential part of the complaint, and if not averred therein it is insufficient. Jerome v. Stebbins, 14 Cal. 458.

62. Every fact which, if controverted, plaintiff must prove to maintain his action, must be stated in the complaint. Ib.

63. Upon the face of the complaint a good cause of action appears, and it would be going beyond precedent or reason to hold the action of the court void in giving effect to such a complaint when no objection was urged by the only party who could take exception to it. Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

64. A complaint in ejectment, with general averments in the usual form, is sufficient without a specific averment of the facts. To set out the facts connected with the title, and the wrongful acts of the defendant, would produce confusion, without benefit. Garrison v. Sampson, 15 Cal. 95.

65. In ejectment for mineral lands, plaintiff averred possession of a large tract of land, including the mining ground in controversy, and that he occupied the land for agricultural and mining purposes, without stating that any use was made of the particular portion held by defendants. This averment of possession, and also the averment of ouster, was insufficiently denied in the answer; but the answer averred affirmatively that, at the time defendants entered upon the ground in dispute, it was a part of the public domain of the United States; contained large and valuable deposits of gold; that they entered upon and took possession of it for mining purposes, and that they have since held and used it for such purposes only. The court below gave judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings: held, that these affirmative averments of defendants being proved, plaintiff could not recover without showing such an actual and meritorious possession and occupancy as rendered the interference of the defendants unjust and inequitable; that he could not recover on the pleadings, because the character of his possession did not appear, the complaint not averring that this particular portion of the land was ever used by plaintiff for any purpose whatever. Smith v. Doe, 15 Cal. 104.

Cause of Action.

66. The allegation of possession is too broad to defeat the rights of a person who has, in good faith, located upon public mineral land for the purpose of mining. Id.

67. A complaint in ejectment, averring that plaintiff was in the actual possession of the premises by inclosure and cultivation; that defendants, on a certain day, entered upon the same and ousted the plaintiff, and that defendant is still in possession, is sufficient. Boles v. Weifenback, 15 Cal. 144; Boles v. Cohen, 15 Cal. 151.

68. In an action to recover damages for the diversion of the water of a stream from plaintiffs' mills, an averment as to the precise quantity of water required for the use of the mills, and to which plaintiffs claimed to be entitled, is an immaterial averment: and a recovery of damages would not establish plaintiffs' right to the exact quantity of water claimed, so as to be res judicata in a subsequent suit. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn Water and Mining Co., 15 Cal. 149.

69. Complaint in ejectment may be for two separate and distinct pieces of land; but the two causes of action must be separately stated, affect all the parties to the action, and not require different places of trial. Boles v. Cohen, 15 Cal. 152.

70. Complaint in ejectment need not state the exact time of the alleged ouster, especially when no claim is made for damages, and no recovery had for them—the allegation in this case as to time of ouster being, “on or about December 12th, 1857.” Collier v. Corbett, 15 Cal. 185.

71. Each party must allege every fact which he is required to prove, and will be precluded from proving any fact not alleged; and he must allege nothing affirmatively which he is not required to prove. Negative allegations, however, are frequently necessary, though they are not to be proved. Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 415.

72. A subsequent purchaser of land mortgaged is a proper if not a necessary party to a foreclosure suit, and if the complaint be faulty in praying to hold him as trustee of the mortgagor, on account of fraud in the purchase, such defect cannot be reached by demurrer. De Leon v. Higuera, 15 Cal. 495.

73. Mrs. L., when a femme sole, contracted a debt, upon which judgment by default was recovered against her, and an appeal taken in her name to the supreme court, where the judgment was affirmed. Subsequently, judgment was obtained against plaintiff here, as surety on her appeal bond. This judgment he paid, by giving his note in full satisfaction. He now sues Mrs. L. for the sum so paid: held, that she cannot defend on the ground that the paper on which the first suit against her was brought expressed no consideration, and that the complaint therein averred none, and that hence no demand is shown against her—the judgment of the supreme court, being conclusive so long as it stands, cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that the parties to it did not prosecute the appeal, but must be set aside, if at all, by a direct proceeding impeaching it for fraud: held, further, that the complaint need not set out any separate property of the defendant, because the wife was liable in personam before coverture, and under our statute continues so after marriage. Bostic v. Love, 16 Cal. 72.

74. In an action of forcible entry and detainer, the complaint described the premises as “about ten rods square, situated within and comprising the northwesterly corner of that certain piece or parcel of land, bounded and described as follows, to wit:" (the complaint then goes on to give the metes and bounds of a tract containing one hundred and forty-six acres.) "The said ten rods square being situated from twenty to fifty feet, more or less, southeasterly from the house of defendant, and near the gate aforesaid, and near the junction of the San Bruno turnpike road with the road leading from the city of San Francisco to Hunter's Point." Said gate was where this last road passed through. The proof among other things showed this ten rods to be called the northeasterly instead of the northwesterly corner of the tract. The judgment for plaintiff followed the description in the complaint. Defendant appeals: held, that the variance in the description of the premises did not prejudice appellant; that the question was one of identity, and the fact that the corner of the small tract was called the northeasterly instead of the northwesterly corner was itself insufficient to defeat the action, if the other and more definite marks of description sufficiently indicated and identified the premises. Paul v. Silver, 16 Cal. 75.

75. Where, in suit for a mining claim, plaintiff in his complaint states the particular facts constituting his title, and on that title seeks a recovery, and the answer denies such title, plaintiff must prove his title as averred, at least in substance, and he cannot, against defendant's objection, recover on another and different title. Eagan v. Delaney, 16 Cal. 87.

76. Bill for an injunction to restrain defendants from taking possession of certain real estate—a warehouse and wharf. Complaint avers plaintiffs' title to the property and their possession; that defendants have conspired together, and are threatening to take by force the property from plaintiffs, and are making preparations, and using violent means to drive plaintiffs and their workmen from the premises; that plaintiffs are in possession of teams, carriages, etc., for transporting goods from said warehouse and wharf to Los Angeles, as a business connected with said premises, and that, unless defendants are restrained from executing their threats, plaintiffs will be ruined in their business and their property be destroyed: held, that these allegations are insufficient to authorize an injunction, there being no averment of insolvency of defendants, and the complaint not showing that there is no adequate remedy at law. Tomlinson v. Rubio, 16 Cal. 206.

77. Only such facts need be alleged in a complaint in ejectment as are required to be proved, except to negative a possible performance of the obligation, which is the basis of the action, or to negative an inference from an act which is in itself indifferent. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 243.

78. In ejectment, the only facts necessary to be alleged are, that the plaintiff is seized of the premises, or of some estate therein in fee, or for life, or for years, according to the fact, and that the defendant was in their possession at the commencement of the action, and withholds the possession from plaintiff. The seizin is the fact to be alleged. It is a pleadable and issuable fact, to be established by conveyances from a paramount source of title, or by evidence of prior possession. Ib.

79. There is no necessity, in a complaint in ejectment, of negating the possible rightful character of defendant's possession. Such possession is a pleadable and issuable fact; but if it rest upon any existing right, defendant must show it affirmatively in his defense. Ib.

80. In quo warranto for an alleged usurpation of the office of pilot for the port of San Francisco, the complaint avers that defendants hold, use, exercise, usurp and enjoy the office, without a license, and also contains allegations as to the right of relator to the office: held, that these allegations as to relator's right cannot be reached by general demurrer, the complaint being good as against the defendants; that they are not interested in the question as to the right of relator, but only in the determination of their own right to the office. People v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 364.

81. Where, in an action on a lost note, the complaint verified alleges the loss, stating particularly the circumstances thereof, an answer denying that the note was lost as alleged does not put in issue the fact of loss, which is the gist of the averment, but only the circumstances of the loss, which are collateral and immaterial. Castro v. Wetmore, 16 Cal. 380.

82. Where, in an action on a lost note, a verified complaint alleges that on a particular day the note in question was made by defendant, and delivered to plaintiff, an answer denying the making and delivery of the note on the day mentioned is insufficient. Such denial does not reach the substantial matter of the averment, and only raises an immaterial issue as to time. Ib.

83. A complaint in ejectment describing the premises as "lot No. 1, in block No. 23, as per plot of the town of Red Bluff, as laid out by the Red Bluff land corporation, in 1853, being on the corner of Main and Sycamore streets, twenty-five feet on Main by one hundred and fifteen feet on Sycamore, and running back to the alley," and specifying the county in which they are situated, by the terms, "in said county," referring to the designation, "county of Tehama," in the title of the suit, sufficiently describes the premises. The description by metes and bounds is required only so far as they may be necessary to identify with certainty the property. Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 433.

84. A complaint in ejectment should not set out the mesne conveyances through which plaintiffs deraign title. These are matters of evidence, not pleading, and should be stricken from the complaint on motion. Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 571.

85. In ejectment the complaint should only aver that on some day designated plaintiffs were possessed of the land, describing it; that while thus possessed, defendant entered upon the same and ousted them, and has ever since withheld the possession from them, to their damage, specifying such sum as might cover the value of the use and occupation from the date of the ouster. Ib.

86. The fact that a complaint in ejectment, in addition to describing the premises by metes and bounds, also designates them as one-half of a certain preëmption claim taken up by one Morris—from whom plaintiffs traced title—in 1850, and surveyed by the county surveyor, and recorded in conformity with the statute, does not make it essential to plaintiffs' recovery as against a defendant in possession, that they allege in their complaint, and on the trial prove such facts as will bring them within the provisions of the preëmption laws of the United States, or the possessory act of this State. The designation of the property as part of a preëmption claim does not preclude the claimants from relying upon any other source of title than the United States or the State. Ib. 572.

87. In suits for damages for timber cut and removed, as in this case, the true rule, so far as the title to the land is concerned, is this: The plaintiff out of possession cannot sue for the property severed from the freehold, when the defendant is in possession of the premises from which the property was severed—holding them adversely, in good faith, under claim and color of title—in other words: the personal action cannot be made the means of litigating and determining the title to the real property as between conflicting claimants, and the complaint need not show title; but this rule does not exclude the proof of title on the part of the plaintiff in other cases, for it is upon such proof that the right of recovery rests. It is because the plaintiff owns the premises, or has the right to their possession, that he is entitled to the chattel which is severed, and that must be in the first instance established. A mere intruder or trespasser is in no position to raise the question of title with the owner so as to defeat the action. Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 579.

2. Statement of a Condition precedent.

88. A ship master cannot require payment of freight unless ready to deliver the goods, and consignees cannot require a delivery of goods unless ready to pay the freight, and neither party can maintain an action to compel the other party to perform his part, unless ready to perform the correlative act. Frothingham v. Jenkins, 1 Cal. 44.

89. In an action on a contract to be valid on the happening of a certain event or the performance of an act, the complaint must aver and there must be proof that the event has happened or the act performed as a condition precedent to recovery. Mickle v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 201; People v. Smith, 2 Cal. 272; Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 59; Palmer v. Melvin, 6 Cal. 652; Chambers v. Waters, 7 Cal. 390; Nickerson v. Chatterton, 7 Cal. 572; Bensley v. Atwill, 12 Cal. 240.

90. The conditions of a bond were such that if on a sale of the balance of the goods in the hands of the plaintiff, and the subsequent winding up of the accounts of M. with them, the nett proceeds should be sufficient to cancel the indebtedness of M. to plaintiffs, the obligation to be void: held, in an action on said bond, that the complaint must aver the conditions precedent, the sale of goods, the subsequent winding up of the accounts of M., and the insufficiency of the net proceeds to cancel the indebtedness. Mickle v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 201.

91. Where promises are dependent, neither party can maintain an action against the other without showing performance or an effort on his part to perform his conditions. Osborne v. Elliott, 1 Cal. 338.

92. A agreed to convey to B a certain vessel, and B gave his promissory note for the consideration money: held, that A being the holder of the note, could not sue thereon without showing that he had conveyed the vessel to B, or had tendered a conveyance. Ib.

93. Where the defendants stipulated to sell to the plaintiffs certain merchandise shipped from Batavia to San Francisco, agreeing that the contract should be considered as binding until the arrival of the ship: held, that the fulfillment of it on either side depended on the contingency of the ship's arrival, and that an action could not be maintained by the vendee of the goods, it appearing that the ship had never arrived at her port of destination. Middleton v. Ballingall, 1 Cal. 446.

94. Where by an agreement for the sale or purchase of land the price is payable in instalments, for which the purchaser executes his notes, payable at certain times, and the vendor agrees to convey on payment of the last instalment, and suit is brought on the notes after all the instalments have become due, the tender of a conveyance by the vendor is a condition precedent to the right to sue; and the purchaser may insist on the want of such tender against an endorsee after maturity. Folsom v. Bartlett, 2 Cal. 164.

95. Where a declaration states a condition precedent, and fails to aver a performance, the defect must be urged on a demurrer, and it is too late after a verdict. Happe v. Stout, 2 Cal. 461.

96. A lessee admits the authority of his lessor by taking a lease, and no averment of the lessor's right to lease is necessary as against him. Morse v. Roberts, 2 Cal. 516.

97. In an action brought to recover damages by the owner of a licensed ferry against a party alleged to have run a ferry within the limits prohibited by law, the complaint should allege that the defendant run his ferry for a fee or reward, or the promise or expectation of it, or other than for his own use. Hanson v. Webb, 3 Cal. 237.

98. Where a bail bond is given to appear and answer an indictment, the complaint thereon must aver that the indictment was found or is pending. People v. Smith, 3 Cal. 272.

99. If the condition be "to appear whenever the indictment may be prosecuted," and there is no averment in what court it was prosecuted, it is error; and a loose statement that the accused was called "in the court of sessions" is not sufficient. Ib.

100. It is proper to declare in what the common property consists, its nature and value; and in the absence of such an allegation, the presumption would be that there is none at all. Kashaw v. Kashaw, 3 Cal. 321.

101. The contract sued on required lumber to be delivered from time to time at such wharf or place as the defendants should designate. The plaintiffs were ready to deliver, but the defendants refused to designate the place of delivery, or to accept the lumber: held, that this refusal was a breach of the condition precedent on the part of the defendants; and that plaintiffs were entitled to sue for a breach of the contract. Warner v. Wilson, 4 Cal. 314.

102. A party must fully comply with the laws to entitle him to bring suit for an interference with his ferry privileges, and to entitle him to claim a renewal of his license as a vested right. Norris v. Lapsley, 5 Cal. 47.

103. On an action charging conspiracy to obtain a favorable compromise of suits about to be commenced, it is not sufficient merely to show that there were no grounds to warrant these suits. It ought, in addition, to be proved that the intentions of the parties were unfairly directed to the obtaining of such an end, by understanding and agreement between them, which may be shown either by their words or acts. Leavitt v. Gushee, 5 Cal. 153.

Statement of a Condition precedent.

104. Where a contract stipulated for the delivery of a vessel, but designated no particular place for such delivery: held, that a notice of a readiness to deliver must be treated, under the contract, as an actual delivery. Albretson v. Hooker, 5 Cal. 178.

105. A promise to stay proceedings under a judgment is a condition precedent to a guaranty given thereupon, and a performance thereof should be alleged and proven to recover on the guaranty. Smith v. Compton, 6 Cal. 26.

106. A complaint for money had and received, which does not allege a demand, is bad and demurrable. Reina v. Cross, 6 Cal. 31.

107. An allegation on the part of the plaintiff that he has performed all the conditions precedent of the contract, is sufficiently explicit to recover upon. California Steam N. Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 263.

108. Where a deed contains a covenant that if the grantees shall pay a certain sum of money before a certain day, then this instrument is to take effect as a full and complete conveyance in fee of all and singular the lands: held, that the payment of the purchase money was a condition precedent to the vesting of the legal estate. Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 314.

109. A complaint should aver that an account was presented to the administrator for allowance, and rejected, to enable the plaintiff to recover. Ellissen v. Hallock, 6 Cal. 393.

110. In an action on a release bond in attachment, the complaint should set forth as a condition precedent the release of the property attached upon the delivery of the bond. Palmer v. Melvin, 6 Cal. 652.

111. In pleading a judgment of a probate court, it being a limited and inferior jurisdiction, it is necessary to set forth the facts which give jurisdiction. Smith v. Andrews, 6 Cal. 654.

112. A complaint should not aver that a claim for damages for property taken was presented to the board of supervisors and rejected, to enable the plaintiff to recover. McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 124.

113. In an action against an agent for not accounting, etc., a request to account and pay over must be alleged in the complaint and proven at the trial. Bushnell v. McCauley, 7 Cal. 422.

114. Where the payment of a promissory note is by agreement of parties made conditional upon the payment of a certain debt, such payment is a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to recover on the note, and must be averred in the complaint to have been made. Rogers v. Cody, 8 Cal. 324.

115. When by the terms of a contract, expressed or implied, a request or demand constitutes a condition precedent to the bringing of the action, then it must be averred. Tissot v. Darling, 9 Cal. 285.

116. An averment in the complaint, in a suit on an appeal bond, that execution had been issued on the judgment and returned unsatisfied, is unnecessary. The nonpayment of the judgment can be shown without issuing an execution. Ib.

117. In an action on an undertaking executed to release property from attachment, the complaint should allege that the property attached was released upon the delivery of the undertaking. Williamson v. Blattan, 9 Cal. 501.

118. The plaintiff must show in his complaint that he comes within the exception of the provision of the code which requires an action to be tried in a particular county. Uhlfelder v. Levy, 9 Cal. 615.

119. An appointment to an office is complete when the commission is duly issued, but the person appointed is required to give bond and take the oath of office before he can possess the office; these acts constitute a condition precedent to the holding the office. People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 43.

120. Where payment for land was to be made thirty days after a confirmation of the title by the United States—provided that land should be included in the limits of the grant: held, that the confirmation of the title was a condition precedent to recovery of the payment, and should be proven. Sanders v. Whitesides, 10 Cal. 90.

121. It is a general principle of the common law that whoever seeks redress for the violation of a contract, resting upon mutual and dependent covenants, to obtain success must himself have performed the obligations on his part. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 254.

122. By the common law, a party to a contract was compelled to show a literal performance of the stipulation of it before he could claim damages for a nonperformance against the other. Green v. Covillard, 10 Cal. 325.

Statement of a Condition precedent.

123. In an action for the division of the common property of husband and wife, after a decree of divorce, the plaintiff must bring herself within the provisions of the statute, and must state affirmatively such facts as give her the right to the property under the act. Dye v. Dye, 11 Cal. 166.

124. In an action at common law for an account for rent by a tenant in common against his cotenant, the complaint is fatally defective which does not aver that the defendant occupied the premises upon any agreement as receiver or bailiff. Pico v. Columbet, 12 Cal. 419.

125. Where the court orders a new trial upon the payment of costs, and such payment is made by the order a condition precedent, and the defendant does not except to the order at the time and appeals, the only thing from which he can appeal is the annexing of this condition to the granting of the motion. Rice v. Gashirie, 13 Cal. 54.

126. No title nor any right of possession comes from the mere condemnation of private property for public use. Just compensation actually made or secured according to law, is a condition precedent. Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Co., 13 Cal. 316.

127. Pending a suit by two joint owners of land to recover possession, one conveys his half to the other, taking back a mortgage for the purchase money conditioned to become due when the mortgagor recovers possession by the suit or compromise, or when he parts with his title: held, that the mortgage does not become due by a sale of half the land to counsel employed to recover the possession, together with sales of most of the other half to various parties. Steinbeck v. Leese, 13 Cal. 367.

128. To sustain an action on an account it must be shown there was a demand in favor of plaintiff acceded to by defendant. Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 429.

129. Execution against the judgment debtor is not a condition precedent to suit on a bond to release property attached. Palmer v. Vance, 13 Cal. 557.

130. In quo warranto to determine the right to an office, an allegation that defendant is in possession of the office without lawful authority is a sufficient allegation of intrusion and usurpation, and if the complaint be defective in this particular, the defect must be reached by special demurrer. People v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 45.

131. In an action of damages for violation of a contract to grind wheat and deliver the flour on demand upon payment of the price agreed on for grinding, tender of the price is necessary to maintain the action. Vance v. Dingley, 14 Cal. 53.

132. In suit in equity to set aside a judgment by default on a return by the sheriff of personal service, on the ground that defendant, in fact, was not so served, and never had any notice of the proceedings, and that he had a valid defense to the action, the allegations relative to this defense showed that it was based upon an executory agreement, by the terms of which certain things were to be done by plaintiff, and in consideration thereof he was to be released from the debt for which the action was brought: held, that the allegations are insufficient in this, that they do not state that any of these things were performed by him, or that he ever offered, or was, or has been at any time ready or willing to perform the same. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 138; Gibbons v. Scott, 15 Cal. 286; Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 202.

133. On appeal from a justice's court in forcible entry and detainer, the execution of an appeal bond within ten days is not a condition to the jurisdiction of the county court. Rabe v. Hamilton, 15 Cal. 32.

134. A complaint by husband and wife, to recover the homestead conveyed away by deed of the husband alone, must aver either that the premises were occupied as a homestead at the date of the conveyance, or that they had not been previously abandoned. Harper v. Forbes, 15 Cal. 203.

135. A complaint in replevin, alleging that the testator was seized and possessed of certain premises at the time of his death, on the nineteenth of July, 1855, and that the plaintiffs were appointed the executors of his last will and testament, without averring in direct terms, either previously or subsequently, the fact of the testator's death, or that he left a last will and testament, is defective as a pleading. Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 577.

136. A complaint in replevin alleging that F. was seized and possessed of certain premises at the time of his death; that the plaintiffs were appointed the executors of his last will and testament, and ever since their appointment have been in the possession of the premises; that certain persons, whose names are not designated, entered upon the same without authority, and cut down timber growing thereon to the amount of about three hundred cords; that the defendant afterwards also entered upon the premises without authority and removed the wood thus cut, and still detains it from the plaintiffs; that they have demanded the possession of the same from him, and that he refuses to deliver it to them to their damage of $1,100—the alleged value of the wood—sufficiently shows plaintiffs' ownership. Ib. 578.

137. The complaint here averring that the plaintiffs were duly appointed executors of the last will and testament of the deceased, and have ever since been such executors, and as such have ever since been in possession of the premises, is not demurrable on the specific ground that it does not show that plaintiffs are the executors of F., or have any authority to maintain the action, though it is subject to other objections. The complaint should state the death of Folsom; his leaving a last will and testament; the appointment therein of the plaintiffs as executors; the probate of the will; the issuance of letters testamentary thereon to the plaintiffs, and their qualification and entry upon the discharge of their duties as executors. Ib. 579.

III. ADMISSION OF FACT SET UP IN THE COMPLAINT.

138. Where the complaint alleges the making and endorsing of a promissory note and the answer denies neither signature, the answer should be stricken out and the plaintiff be entitled to judgment. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 196; Whitwell v. Thomas, 9 Cal. 199; Kinney v. Osborne, 14 Cal. 113.

139. Courts will protect the rights of the actual possessor, and if the complaint avers possession by the plaintiff and is not denied by the answer it will be assumed by the court as a conceded fact. Folsom v. Root, 1 Cal. 376.

140. A fact set forth in the complaint admitted by the defendant's answer needs no proof. Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 483.

141. A demurrer admits the facts as alleged in a complaint to be true. Selkirk v. Sacramento County, 3 Cal. 326; Tuolumne Water Co. v. Chapman, 8 Cal. 397.

142. Under our practice and that of the common law, a specific denial of one or more allegations is held to be an admission of all others in the complaint well pleaded. De Ro v. Cordes, 4 Cal. 120.

143. A default admits the facts as alleged in a complaint to be true. Tuolumne W. Co. v. Chapman, 8 Cal. 397; Rowe v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 444; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 558; McGregor v. Shaw, 11 Cal. 48; Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 119; Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

144. A defective allegation of a fact in a complaint may be cured by default or verdict, but not the entire absence of any allegation whatever. Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 588.

145. Where the complaint called the defendant not only to answer the character of the possession, but the fact of possession by it, a failure to deny this averment is an admission of it. Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co., 12 Cal. 407.

146. Though a pleading is not strictly proof for the party making it, still a complaint may be read to the jury to show what allegations are not denied, and hence admitted. Garfield v. Knight's Ferry and Table Mountain Water Co., 14 Cal. 36.

147. Where the complaint for the possession of land avers defendants to be in possession, and the answer does not deny, but affirmatively shows it, then, even if the allegation of possession be not material, and therefore not requiring a denial, the fact of possession becomes a matter of admission or agreement between the parties, as an independent fact not in issue by the pleadings, but affecting the whole case. Powell v. Oullahan, 14 Cal. 116.

148. Where a complaint avers title in an administrator, a default admits it. Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 119.

149. It matters not what the pleadings are; the complaint covering the amount, the defendant was fixed by his admission, or even by evidence to which he did not except, to the damages shown by such admissions or evidence. Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 201.

Amendment to the Complaint.

150. Where the bond in the complaint answers to the description of the bond offered in evidence, and the complaint avers that the mortgage was given to secure this bond—the denials in the answer being literal and conjunctive—the execution of the bond and mortgage was held to be admitted by the answer, as also that the mortgage was given to secure the debt evidenced by the bond. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 644.

IV. AMENDMENT TO THE COMPLAINT.

151. When it appears by the plaintiff's testimony that there is a nonjoinder of persons who should have been made plaintiffs, and a motion for a nonsuit is made on this ground, the court may permit an amendment by adding the name of a plaintiff on such terms as may be just. Acquittal v. Crowell, 1 Cal. 192.

152. The misjoinder of parties can be corrected by amendment under the statute. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 412.

153. Where on appeal the complaint is so radically defective as not to authorize a judgment, a new trial may be granted, with leave to amend upon just terms. Sterling v. Hanson, 1 Cal. 479.

154. The discovery of fraud after suit brought would entitle the party to amend so as to include the newly discovered facts. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 285; Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 412.

155. Where the proof does not sustain the allegations of the bill, and where by the proof the complainant would be entitled to relief in a court of equity if his pleadings had been properly framed, an amendment should be allowed or directed, to conform the pleadings to the facts which ought to be in issue, in order to enable the court to decree fully on the merits, and whenever this is not done it is error. Connally v. Peck, 3 Cal. 82.

156. It is not error for the court to allow a complaint to be amended. Mills v. Dunlap, 3 Cal. 97.

157. A joint claim by two persons cannot be pleaded as a counter claim by one defendant; but he may amend, and allege that the whole interest therein has been transferred to him. Stearns v. Martin, 4 Cal. 229.

158. A case may be remitted to a referee with leave to plaintiff to amend his declaration, and to the defendant to answer over, when it is necessary to enable a correct report to be made. Montifiori v. Engels, 4 Cal. 434.

159. The plaintiff sued in assumpsit to recover rent. After a trial and verdict, which was set aside by the court, he amended his complaint to make it in form an action of trespass for mesne profits: held, this was erroneous and should not be permitted, for if the new complaint is to be treated as an amendment to the old one, and to continue the original action, then two causes of action, incompatible in their nature, are joined. Ramirez v. Murray, 5 Cal. 224.

160. It would be proper for the court to order the complaint to be amended in an action where the defendant is arrested, so that the question of fraud should be submitted to the jury, and a judgment entered in conformity with the facts found. Matoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 61; Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 412.

161. A party may amend by striking out a claim for damages, without regard to the purpose which may influence him, and it is error to refuse this right. Grass Valley Quartz Mining Co. v. Stackhouse, 6 Cal. 414.

162. The prayer of an amended or supplemental complaint may change the character of the original bill, and pray for a different relief, if in accordance with the additional facts. Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 486.

163. Every supplemental complaint is enlarged or altered by every additional and pertinent fact, and the plaintiff has a right to attach in an amended complaint the assignment for fraud discovered since filing his original complaint. Ib.

164. After a motion for a nonsuit, the court may, upon terms, allow an amendment of the complaint, if it would not operate as a surprise upon the defendant; but if this is not done, the plaintiff cannot recover. Farmer v. Cram, 7 Cal. 136.

165. When a final judgment on demurrer to the complaint, sustaining the demurrer, was reversed, the plaintiff had the right to amend, on application to the court below. Phelan v. San Francisco County, 6 Cal. 16.

166. It is always in the power of the court to allow an amendment to the complaint, so it does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Polk v. Coffin, 9 Cal. 58.

Amendment to the Complaint.

167. If defendants were surprised by the amendment, and found it necessary to adopt a different line of defense in consequence of it, they would have been entitled to a continuance, in order to prepare for their defense. Ib.

168. The wife is a proper party defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage executed upon premises claimed as a homestead. If not made such a party, she may intervene, or by permission of the court be allowed to file a separate answer, the plaintiff having the liberty to amend the complaint, if any matters are set up in the answer which he might wish to anticipate by further allegation. Moss v. Warner, 10 Cal. 297.

169. It is error to render a final judgment on demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. Where the complaint is defective, the court should sustain the demurrer, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint; and if the plaintiff then declines, judgment final should be given. Gallagher v. Delaney, 10 Cal. 410.

170. An affidavit which avers that affiant, on the day named, "served the summons in this action upon the defendant, Mary B. McMillan, at her residence in the city of San Francisco, by delivering and leaving with her a copy thereof attached to a copy of the amended complaint filed in this action," is insufficient; the copy of the amended complaint should be certified. McMillan v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 378.

171. A justice of the peace has the right to allow a complaint to be amended, in all respects, so that the case may be determined on its merits; and this, whether the defect be in the statement of jurisdiction or any other fact. Linhart v. Buiff, 11 Cal. 280.

172. A mere order, permitting an amendment of the complaint, was of no effect unless and until complied with. Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 46.

173. A court may order judgment creditors, as subsequent incumbrancers, to be made parties to an action by an amendment of the complaint, as a better course, or by petition on intervention. Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 70.

174. A refusal by a county court, on appeal from justice, to permit an amendment to the complaint, is matter of discretion, and there being no affidavit of materiality, nor any showing of importance of the amendment, this court will not interfere. Canfield v. Bates, 13 Cal. 608.

175. The amendment of the complaint putting the substantial matters contained therein into two counts not being answered by defendants, and no default taken therefor, the plaintiff cannot go to trial without objecting to the answer to the original complaint, and after verdict against him object to the want of an answer to the amended complaint. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 28.

176. Where a demurrer is sustained, and the plaintiff amends by making two counts, instead of one, he cannot, after trial, complain of error in sustaining the demurrer. Ib.

177. If after a demurrer to the complaint sustained defendant does not offer to amend, final judgment against him will not be disturbed. Smith v. Yreka Water Co., 14 Cal. 202.

178. Complaint filed against M. & D. and H. & L. sureties; complaint amended, and H. & L. only named defendants, and on this complaint the issue was framed, and the cause tried: held, that this operated as a discontinuance as to M. & D. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11.

179. Where an amended complaint in ejectment sets up title acquired after the commencement of the suit, and a judgment by default is regularly entered, the judgment is valid. Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

180. Upon the remittitur of a cause to the court below, if the plaintiffs desire to amend their complaint so as to present their legal rights for the determination of a jury, they should be permitted to do so. McDonald v. Bear River W. & M. Co., 15 Cal. 149.

181. The supreme court will not reverse the judgment of the court below to afford plaintiff an opportunity to amend his complaint, when he did not offer to amend below, there being no error in the record. Gibbons v. Scott, 15 Cal. 286.

182. Facts which occur subsequent to the filing of the original complaint, and which change the liabilities of the defendants, and in consequence the character of the judgment which is sought, cannot be incorporated with the original complaint by an amendment, without presenting averments inconsistent with the date of the commencement of the action. Van Maren v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 311.

183. When suit is brought against a female, who subsequently marries, her husband must be made a codefendant. But this should be done, and an averment of the marriage be made by a supplemental complaint, and not by an amendment to the original. Ib.

184. The objection to a complaint in forcible entry and detainer, that it does not aver "actual" possession—the word "possession" only being used—was a mere defect in pleading, which should have been taken advantage of below, where, if the objection be good, the complaint could have been amended, but it cannot be urged in the supreme court for the first time. Minturn v. Burr, 16 Cal. 110.

V. SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT.

185. Every supplemental complaint is enlarged or altered by every additional and pertinent fact, and the plaintiff has a right to attach in an amended complaint the assignment for fraud discovered since filing his original complaint. Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 486.

186. Where suit is brought against a female, who subsequently marries, her husband must be made codefendant. But this should be done, and an averment of the marriage be made by a supplemental complaint, and not by an amendment to the original. Van Maren v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 311.

187. If the husband be made a party at the trial, upon suggestion of the marriage, in open court with the consent of all parties, by an order of court, and the complaint is then and there amended by simply inserting the names of the husband and wife in place of the female defendant alone, and they then file an answer, it cannot be for the first time objected in the supreme court that a supplemental complaint should have been filed. Ib.

188. Nor is it any objection in such a case that, after the amendment of the complaint, the suit was against defendants jointly, while the evidence failed to show any cause of action against the husband. The action being for services rendered to the defendant, wife, previous to her marriage, the liability of the common property of the defendants, and the necessity of making the husband a party, arise from the subsequent marriage; and as the orders and proceedings of the court, however informal and irregular, show the true facts of the case, the judgment will be a bar to any future action against the defendants for the same cause. Ib.

189. Facts which occur subsequent to the filing of the original complaint, and which change the liabilities of the defendants, and in consequence the character of the judgment which is sought, cannot be incorporated into the original complaint by an amendment, without presenting averments inconsistent with the date of the commencement of the action. Ib.

190. D. and M. are owners each of one undivided one-half of certain real estate. D. executes a mortgage to plaintiffs upon his undivided half, which was recorded on the same day. Subsequently D. and M. convey to the defendant, E., an undivided one-third of the entire property—making D., M. and E. each owners of one undivided one-third—one-half of E.'s interest being subject to the mortgage to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs foreclose—making D. alone the party—get judgment for the amount due, and a decree directing a sale of all the interest D. had at date of mortgage. At the sale, plaintiffs become the purchasers for the full amount of their judgment, costs, etc., and in due time receive a sheriff's deed, no redemption being made. Meantime, but subsequent to the decree, and before the sheriff's deed, E. purchases the remaining interest of D. and M. Plaintiffs sue for the sale of the property—a partition being impossible without prejudice—and for an account from the tenant in possession; and ask to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale the one-third of the amount bid by them at the sale under their decree of foreclosure, on the ground that the decree was invalid as to the one-sixth interest conveyed to E.; and that plaintiffs believed, at the time of their bid, they were acquiring a title to all the interest D. had at the time of his mortgage to them; and that the sheriff stated such interest was offered for sale: held, that upon proper application in the original foreclosure suit, the court would have released the plaintiffs from the purchase, set the sale aside, and opened the decree, and allowed them to file a supplemental complaint, bringing in E. and others interested, as parties. Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 470; Boggs v. Hargrave, 16 Cal. 566.

Joinder of Causes of Action in the Complaint.

VL. JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION IN THE COMPLAINT.

191. If several causes of action are improperly united in the same action, the objection must be taken by demurrer or it will be deemed to be waived, and the action will be sustained. Macondray v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 395; Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 125; Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224; Clark v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 638.

192. A contract contained a covenant for stipulated damages, and by the same contract the parties were constituted partners: it was held, that in action on said contract the legal demand for damages could be joined with the equitable demand for a dissolution. Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 294.

193. In a complaint for trespass, the plaintiff in one count claimed five hundred dollars, the alleged value of the property destroyed, and five hundred dollars damages: it was held, that these causes of action were properly joined. Tendesen v. Marshall, 3 Cal. 440.

194. A claim for damages for a personal tort cannot properly be united in an action with a demand cognizable in equity. Mayo v. Madden, 4 Cal. 28.*

195. A claim for possession of real property, with damages for its detention, cannot be joined with a claim for consequential damages arising from a change of a road, by which a tavern keeper may have been injured in his business. Bowles v. The Sacramento Turnpike Co., 5 Cal. 225.

196. It is not misjoinder of causes of action to demand in the same action that defendant account for and refund a proportion of the outfit and advances made by plaintiff, as agreed in the same contract. Garr v. Redman, 6 Cal. 576.

197. A party may declare in tort, under our pleadings, and at the same time ask for the equitable interposition of the court to protect the subject matter in litigation until the case is heard. Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 125; Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224; Weaver v. Conger, 10 Cal. 237.

198. A complaint which joins an action of "trespass quare clausum fregit," ejectment and prayer for relief in chancery will be held bad on demurrer. To sustain such complaint would be subversive of all the rules of pleading. Bigelow v. Gove, 7 Cal. 135.

199. It is not necessary in an action against a sheriff to recover damages (in addition to the two hundred dollars imposed by law as a penalty) for a failure to execute and return process, that two suits should be brought. Damages and the penalty may be recovered in one suit. Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 642.

200. An action at law which prays for a judgment against the party who executed the note sued upon may be joined with an equitable demand to foreclose a mortgage given by that party and his wife to secure the payment of the note. Rollins v. Forbes, 10 Cal. 300; Rowe v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 444; Rowland v. Lieby, 14 Cal. 157.

201. In an action for injuries to a mining claim, a claim for damages to the plaintiff by reason of the breaking away of the defendant's dam, and the consequent washing away of the pay-dirt of the plaintiff, may properly be joined with a claim for damages in the preventing plaintiff from working his claim. Fraler v. Sears Union Water Co., 12 Cal. 557.

202. The union in one count of a complaint of an allegation that defendants have wrongfully built dams and flumes across Mormon Creek, so as to turn the water of said creek out of its natural channel," etc., and thus divert it from plaintiff, with an allegation that "defendants have constructed gates, etc., in their said dams and flumes, which they hoist for the purpose of cleaning out said dams and flumes of slum, stone and gravel," the accumulation of which renders the water useless to plaintiff, does not make the complaint demurrable on the ground that it unites several distinct causes of action in one count.

* In the opinion of Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 126, the court stated that the case of Mayo v. Madden, 4 Cal. 28, was not analogous.

Dismissal of a Complaint.—Surplusage in a Complaint.

Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 27.

203. Common counts cannot all be united in one count, as one cause of action, without any specification of the sums due upon each several cause. Buckingham v. Waters, 14 Cal. 147.

204. In a complaint in ejectment, parties may seek, in addition to a recovery of the premises, an injunction restraining the commission of trespass in the nature of waste pending the action; but the grounds of equity interposition should be stated subsequently to and distinct from those upon which the judgment at law is sought. Natoma Water and Mining Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 548.

205. Though the prayer, or one of the prayers, may indicate a distinct cause of action against one defendant, yet it is immaterial if the allegations of the complaint, taking them all together, make no homogeneous case as against all the defendants. De Leon v. Higuera, 15 Cal. 495.

206. Complaint avers in substance that defendant made his note, etc., setting out a copy; that plaintiff is holder by transfer from the payee, etc., and that defendant is indebted to plaintiff thereon in the sum, etc. The complaint then avers: "Plaintiff further shows that after said note was executed, etc. * * * defendant, by virtue of * * * proceedings in insolvency, etc. * * * claims to have been discharged from the payment of the note and debt hereinbefore mentioned; and plaintiff further shows that after said discharge as aforesaid, on or about * * * defendant promised" the payee and other persons that he would pay said note to said payee on demand, etc.; and that defendant thereby revived said obligation, etc.: held, that the complaint does not set up two causes of action; that the gravamen of the action was designed to be the promise, the previous indebtedness being averred as matter of inducement. Smith v. Richmond, 15 Cal. 502.

207. An objection that one of two counts in a complaint is an equitable cause of action, and should not be tried by jury, must be taken at the time, and cannot be urged on appeal if not so taken. Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 177.

VII. DISMISSAL OF A COMPLAINT.

208. Where a complaint disclosed that the same subject matter had been litigated between the same parties in a prior suit, and that in the said suit the plaintiff in this suit had set up the same equity which he claims by this bill, the bill was ordered to be dismissed. Barnett v. Kilbourne, 8 Cal. 327.

209. Plaintiff demurred to defendant's answer, and defendant moved to dismiss the complaint, which motion was argued with the demurrer. The court dismissed the complaint on defendant's motion: held, that the action of the court may be considered as sustaining a demurrer to the declaration, because either the motion to dismiss may have been treated as a demurrer, or the plaintiff's demurrer to the answer may have been first visited upon the bill. Den v. Den, 6 Cal. 82.

210. Where a notice of motion to dismiss a complaint on specified grounds is given, to obtain a review of the order made on the motion, the record must disclose the papers read, or the evidence offered in their support. Freeborn v. Glazer, 10 Cal. 338.

VII. SURPLUSAGE IN A COMPLAINT.

211. Where the complaint, in an action to recover possession of a mining claim in a justice's court, contains an allegation of injury done and a prayer for damages, the latter should be disregarded or stricken out, and the plaintiff be allowed to try his right to the claim. Van Etten v. Jilson, 6 Cal. 19.

212. Superfluous matter in a complaint, when inserted by itself, should be struck out or disregarded as surplusage. Boles v. Cohen, 16 Cal. 152.

213. In an action for the seizure and conversion of a bag of gold coin, the complaint, after the usual averments, went on to detail the manner of the seizure, with the incidents occurring on the street at the time, and everything done by defendants, plaintiff and the "crowd," relating to or constituting the evidence of the wrongful conversion: held, that this narration should have been stricken out, on motion, as irrelevant and redundant matter. Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 414.

Verification of a Complaint.—Compromise.

214. An unessential, or, what is the same thing, an immaterial allegation, is one which can be stricken from the pleading without leaving it insufficient, and need not be proved or disproved. Whether an allegation be material, may be determined by the question, "Can it be made the subject of a material issue?" In other words, "If it be denied, will the failure to prove it decide the case in whole or in part?" If it will not, then the fact alleged is not material. Ib. 416.

215. An allegation in a complaint on ejectment that the possession of defendant is "wrongful or unlawful," is not the statement of a fact, but of a conclusion of law. The words are mere surplusage, and though they do not vitiate, they do no good. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 244.

216. The averment in a complaint for replevin of timber cut, of "unlawful and wrongful," as applied to the entry upon the premises and the cutting down of the timber, and to defendant's removal and detention of the same, may be stricken out as surplusage. Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 578.

IX. VERIFICATION TO A COMPLAINT.

217. The objection to the want of verification of a complaint, where verification is required by statute, must be taken either before answer or with the answer. Greenfield v. Steamer Gunnell, 6 Cal. 68.

218. There are but two forms in which a defendant can controvert the allegations of a verified complaint: first, positively, when the facts are within his personal knowledge; and second, upon information and belief when they are not. Curtis v. Richards, 9 Cal. 37; Humphreys v. McCall, 9 Cal. 62.

219. Where the complaint is verified, an answer denying "generally and specifically each and every material allegation in the complaint, the same as if such allegations were herein recapitulated;" and also denying each allegation in the same form, with certain qualifications and exceptions, does not raise an issue upon any facts stated in the complaint. Hensley v. Tartar, 14 Cal. 509.

X. PRAYER TO A COMPLAINT.

220. Although the prayer of a complaint be inartificially framed, under the general prayer for relief the court may disregard the mistakes and treat them as surplusage, and grant such relief as will conform to the bill. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 283.

221. The complaint, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, need not pray for treble damages to warrant the court in trebling them. Hart v. Moon, 6 Cal. 162.

222. Objections to the prayer of a complaint cannot be taken by demurrer. Rollins v. Forbes, 10 Cal. 300.

223. The averments, and not the form of the prayer of a complaint, must determine the character of the pleading; and the designation of a complaint as a bill in equity does not make it such. Pico v. Columbet, 12 Cal. 419.

COMPROMISE.

1. In an action, charging conspiracy to obtain a favorable compromise of suits about to be commenced, it is not sufficient merely to show that there were no grounds to warrant the suits. It ought in addition to be proven that the intentions of the parties were unfairly directed to the obtaining of such an end, by understanding and agreement between them, which may be shown either by their words or acts. Leavitt v. Gushee, 5 Cal. 153.

Condemnation of Private Property.

CONCILIATION.

1. Since the occupation of California by the Americans, and before the adoption of the code, the proceeding of conciliation has been deemed a useless formality by the greater portion of the members of the bar, by the courts, and by the people. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 64.

CONDEMNATION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY.

1. What is termed the "swinging of lots," a measure adopted in pursuance of a resolution of a public meeting in San Francisco, cannot change the location of premises actually granted, or impair the right of the grantee therein. The taking of a part of a lot from an individual for the purpose of a public street, though it may perhaps give him a claim on the public for compensation, does not confer upon him the right to encroach to the same extent on the land of his neighbor. Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 329.

2. The destruction of a building to stop the spread of a conflagration it seems cannot be deemed the taking of private property for public use within the meaning of that clause in the constitution which prohibits such taking without just compensation. Dunbar v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 356; Surocco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 72.

3. The proprietor of a wharf may insist on compensation for the use made of his wharf above the line of low water, but no compensation can be claimed for that part of the wharf which is below the line of low water. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 469.

4. If by the construction of a railroad through the enclosure of a farmer, it is made necessary to construct fences on either side of the road to protect his crops, the cost of such fences must be included in the compensation to be paid by the railroad company. Sacramento Valley R. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 6 Cal. 75.

5. Where private property is appropriated to public use by the supervisors of a county, without making provision for paying for the same, such act is illegal and may be enjoined. McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 124.

6. Parties in possession of land are entitled to compensation before it can be taken for public uses. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 65; City of San Francisco v. Scott, 4 Cal. 116; Sacramento Valley R. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 6 Cal. 75; McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 124; Colton v. Rossi, 9 Cal. 599; McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 528, 531; Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Co., 13 Cal. 313; Johnson v. Alameda County, 14 Cal. 107; People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 47; Gillan v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 156.

7. A citizen is entitled to hold his property free from any interference, except through the taxing power, from the government or his fellow subject to this one qualification: that when it is necessary for the purposes of the public, it may be taken from him; provided, the government so taking or authorizing others to take it shall make the owner just compensation, which must be paid or secured to him before he is deprived of his possession. Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Co., 13 Cal. 313.

8. No title or any right of possession comes from the mere condemnation of private property for public use. Just compensation, actually made or secured according to law, is a condition precedent; and such compensation must be made within a short period, or the privilege of taking the property under the condemnation will be deemed abandoned. Ib. 316.

9. The act of March 29th, 1860, providing for the construction of the State capital at Sacramento, is not unconstitutional because it provides that the compensation to the owners of the land taken shall be ascertained by three commissioners, and thus deprives the owners of the right to a jury trial. The provision of the constitution, that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever," applies only to civil and criminal cases in which an issue of fact is joined. The proceeding to ascertain the value of property, under the act of 1860, and the compensation to be made, is not an action at law. It is an inquisition for the ascertainment of a particular fact, as preliminary to future proceedings, and it is only requisite that it be conducted in some equitable and fair mode, to be provided by law, either with or without a jury, opportunity being allowed to owners and parties interested in the property to give evidence as to its value, and to be heard thereon. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 253.

10. The language of the constitution as to the right of trial by jury was used with reference to the right as it exists at common law. The right of trial by jury cannot be claimed in equity cases, unless an issue of fact be framed for the jury, under the direction of the court. Ib.

CONDITIONS.

- I. Precedent.
- II. Subsequent.

I. PRECEDENT.

1. The third section of the act "to provide for the construction of canals and for draining and reclaiming certain swamp and overflowed lands in Tulare valley," passed April 11th, 1857, is a grant upon condition precedent, and not upon condition subsequent, and passes no estate to the grantee until performance of the condition annexed—that is, until the reclamation of the lands. Montgomery v. Kasson, 16 Cal. 193.

2. This grant is a contract between the State and the grantees, by which the State grants certain lands upon condition of work to be performed; the grant to take effect when the work is done. It is a contract by which rights may be acquired absolutely upon the performance of the acts specified as the consideration moving the State. Ib. 194.

For CONDITION PRECEDENT, in the Complaint, see COMPLAINT, II, 2, p. 229.

II. SUBSEQUENT.

3. The sovereign power may, in disposing of the natural domain, annex such conditions to a grant as it sees fit; and in such case a restriction against alienation inserted in a grant and authorized by law will not be held void on the ground that it is against the policy of law. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 283.

4. Where a contract of pledge is absolute upon its face, the party asserting a condition or limitation must show it. Hyatt v. Argenti, 3 Cal. 164.

5. Where the contract is entire, a breach of part is a breach of the whole, and discharges the party complaining of it from the performance of any of the conditions on his part, and gives him a complete right of action. Haskell v. McHenry, 4 Cal. 411.

6. Questions as to the performance of a certain condition in a grant can only be made by the grantor, and not by a mere naked trespasser. Buckelew v. Estell, 5 Cal. 108.

7. If the legislature had no authority to annex conditions to removal of the capital by which the State could be benefited, then so much of the act as refers to and fixes conditions is unconstitutional, and may be stricken out, leaving the removal of the capital to stand. People v. Bigler, 5 Cal. 27.

8. In an action of ejectment under a Mexican grant, the supreme court is bound to regard the decisions of the United States supreme court establishing the rule that a conditional grant from Mexico conveys a good title without performance of the conditions sufficient to maintain ejectment, and admissible to qualify the plaintiffs' actual possession. Gunn v. Bates, 6 Cal. 271.

9. The power to impose conditions after the contract is once complete and perfect is exercising the power to impair its obligation, which the constitution of the United States and of this State have prohibited. Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 84.

10. The condition that the party of the second part shall deliver up the property upon a failure to comply with its terms to the party of the first part, to be sold by them to pay the debts of the firm outstanding, then to pay the balance over to the party of the second part, is only a trust retained upon the property sold, which may be enforced like any other trust. Cayton v. Walker, 10 Cal. 455.

11. Where an agreement operates by its terms a present and effectual change of ownership in the subject matter, the title is supposed in law to remain divested until it be affirmatively shown that the conditions of defeasance have happened. Myers v. South Feather Water Co., 10 Cal. 583.

12. We apprehend that when parties go into a partition of property upon certain terms and conditions, each to receive a several portion of a common estate, the instrument of partition, founded upon mutual releases, itself is such affirmation of interest and title on the part of each as to estop him to deny that he did have ownership and interest in the premises. Tewksbury v. Provizzo, 12 Cal. 25.

13. Whether the conditions of a deed are complied with or not is a matter between the grantor and grantee with which third persons have nothing to do. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 115.

14. Where no conditions are imposed upon creditors in an assignment, an acceptance is presumed upon the general principle that a party is presumed to assent to acts done for his benefit. Forbes v. Scanell, 13 Cal. 287.

15. Laws may be absolute, dependent upon no contingency, or they may be subject to such conditions as the legislature in its wisdom may impose. They may take effect only upon the happening of events which are future and uncertain; and among others the voluntary act of the parties upon whom they are designed to operate. Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 357.

16. Where a Mexican grant contained clauses designated in the instrument as conditions against alienation, mortgage or mortmain, and directing the grantee to obtain juridical possession thereof: held, that these clauses were not properly conditions, and that there was nothing in any of the provisions which were onerous or burthensome to the grantee, or which could be regarded as a valuable consideration moving the government to make the grant. Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 471.

17. Conditions are sometimes attached to donations which would be regarded as changing the character of the transaction from one of gift to one of purchase. Ib. 472.

18. Donations may be absolute or accompanied with conditions the performance of which may be essential to the enjoyment of the property donated. It would seem that under the Spanish and Mexican law, a more comprehensive meaning was attached to the term donation than that usually given to it in our jurisprudence. Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 598.

19. The proviso in the act of March 26th, 1851, granting certain beach and water lot property in San Francisco to the city, that the city shall pay into the State treasury, within twenty days after their receipt, twenty-five per cent. of all moneys arising in any way from the sale or other disposition of the property, is not a condition, either precedent or subsequent, annexed to the grant. Holladay v. Frisbie, 15 Cal. 634.

CONFESSIOIN.

1. Where the admission or confession of a party was resorted to as evidence, it was held error to exclude any portion of it made at the same time with that portion of it which was admitted. People v. Navis, 3 Cal. 106.

2. Where admissions made by defendant are proven on the trial, the objection that it is not first shown that such admissions were made freely and not under the influence of fear or other improper inducements, should be made to the introduction of the testimony. People v. Rodriguez, 10 Cal. 60.

3. The provision of the statute concerning divorces, that "no divorce shall be granted in any action by default of the defendant, nor on the admission or statement of either party," does not prohibit the introduction of confessions in evidence, but simply prevents granting a decree on them alone. Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 93.

4. The object of the rule requiring proof in corroboration of defendant's confessions, is to guard against collusion; and where the entire testimony, confessions and circumstances repel all suspicion of collusion and leave no doubt of the truth of the confessions, the court should act upon them. Ib. 94.

5. In a criminal case, proof of statements made by defendant must be by the witness himself, and not by a written memorandum made by him at the time, which he says is correct. People v. Elyea, 14 Cal. 145.

6. On an indictment for murder, it appeared that the prisoner on the day of the killing called at a mill, several hundred yards from where deceased was killed, and borrowed a chisel—having been previously in the habit of borrowing tools at the mill. His shirt was bloody, and two spots of skin were knocked off his nose. Defendant's counsel asked the witness, "Did he (prisoner) state how he came by those hurts? If so, state all the conversation then and there between you two in respect to those hurts, and his errand there." Objected to and ruled out: held, that there was no error in the ruling, the declarations not appearing to have any connection with the offense charged; that declarations of a prisoner, to be admissible as part of the res gestæ, must be contemporaneous with the main fact under consideration, and so connected with it as to illustrate its character: held, further, that even if in this case such declarations were improperly excluded, the prisoner was not prejudiced, because he was convicted of manslaughter only, showing that the jury negatived the idea of malice and premeditation. People v. Wyman, 15 Cal. 74.

7. It is not error in the court, in a criminal case, to charge the jury to give such weight to the defendant's confession as they deem it entitled to, "judging from the circumstances under which it was given, and the motives which would naturally actuate the party in giving it;" and that they might, in their discretion, believe or disbelieve parts of such confession. Ib.

8. Confessions of a defendant indicted for larceny, made to the prosecutor and owner of the property stolen, upon inducements held out by him, that if defendant would disclose his confederates he would use his influence to get defendant acquitted, are not admissible in evidence against him. People v. Smith, 15 Cal. 410.

9. Query. Whether there is any foundation for the distinction between confessions induced by persons who have no authority or control over the prisoner, and those by persons having such authority as constables, prosecutors and the like. Ib.

See ADMISSIONS, CRIMES AND CRIMINAL LAW.

CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.

1. An application by a judgment creditor to set aside his confession of judgment, should show that the claim was not just and that the judgment ought not to have been confessed. Arrington v. Sherry, 5 Cal. 514.

2. A junior judgment creditor has no right to join with the defendant in an application to set aside such confessed judgment. He must resort to a court of chancery if he is dissatisfied. Ib.

3. A confession of judgment to a bona fide creditor and the issuance of execution and making levy under the same by the judgment debtor without the knowledge of the judgment creditor, done with the knowledge that another creditor is about to attach, and for the purpose of defeating his attachment, is void as to the attaching creditor. Ryan v. Daly, 6 Cal. 239.

4. In a confession of judgment the omission to comply fully with the statute to set forth explicitly the facts and circumstances upon which the debt was incurred does not ipso facto make the judgment void; it merely throws the burden of proof on the judgment creditor, if his judgment is contested by other creditors, of proving that his judgment was fair and not fraudulent. Richards v. McMillan, 6 Cal. 422; Cordier v. Schloss, 12 Cal. 146.

5. Judgment by confession for over two hundred dollars in a justice's court is void for want of jurisdiction. Feillett v. Engler, 8 Cal. 77.

6. Where a judgment was rendered by confession in open court, upon an allegation of indebtedness and appearance of the parties, whatever errors intervened, they cannot at the instance of one not a party to the judgment be invoked to set aside or show the judgment was a nullity. Cloud v. El Dorado County, 12 Cal. 133.

7. In a suit to set aside judgment confessed by a party to defraud his creditors, it is not necessary that plaintiff should be either a judgment or execution creditor. A lien acquired by attachment suffices. Scales v. Scott, 13 Cal. 78.

8. Where judgment is confessed on a note, a portion of the consideration being advanced from time to time after date of the note, which drew interest on the whole amount from date, a portion of the interest is fraudulent, and the entire note is void against creditors. Ib.

CONFISCATION.

1. It seems that in the year 1833, or 1834, the property of the missions in California was confiscated by the Mexican government, with the exception of limited portions reserved for religious purposes, and that in carrying into effect this confiscation, the officers of the Mexican government took possession of the lands and property of the Mission Dolores, except a small portion reserved. Santillan v. Moses, 1 Cal. 93.

CONFLAGRATION.

See FIRE.

CONFLICT OF LAW.

1. The law of Louisiana requires a co-partnership contract to be in writing; the law of California does not: held, that a verbal contract of copartnership made in Louisiana to be executed in California was valid. Young v. Pearson, 1 Cal. 450.

2. The political laws, as the laws of slavery of the ceded or conquered country, give way to the laws of the acquiring country. Ex parte Perkins, 2 Cal. 439.

3. On May 1, 1851, the legislature "passed" two acts, one to regulate criminal cases, the other to regulate fees in office, both fixing the fees of the clerk in criminal cases, and essentially different: held, that the latter act must govern, as the subject of fees was the sole object of that act, and a mere incident of the criminal act. Dobbins v. Supervisors Yuba County, 5 Cal. 415.

4. The act of May 3d, 1852, providing for the disposal of the 500,000 acres of land granted by Congress to this State, is not in conflict with the act of Congress of 1841, which provides for their location after they have been surveyed. Nims v. Palmer, 6 Cal. 13.

5. From our constitution, if a statute or section of a statute is reenacted, it is totally inconsistent with the idea that the old statute or section still remains in force, or has vitality for any purpose whatever. Billings v. Harvey, 6 Cal. 383.

6. Where an act is passed between the time of the commission of the act and the death of the victim, defining the offense and providing for its punishment, and providing that upon trials for crimes committed previous to its enactment the party should be tried by the laws in force at the time of the commission of the crime, the prisoner must be tried under the law in force when the violation of the law was committed. People v. Gill, 6 Cal. 638; 7 Cal. 357.

7. The law does not favor repeals by implication; where there is an apparent conflict between two acts, it is the duty of the court, if possible, to reconcile them; but if this cannot be done, then the last act must govern. Scofield v. White, 7 Cal. 401; Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 316.

8. The power of congress to regulate commerce is exclusive when exercised. The act of congress of July 29th, 1850, authorizing mortgages upon sea-going vessels to be recorded, and making the record notice to third parties, being in conflict with our statute of frauds, the latter must yield. Mitchell v. Steelman, 8 Cal. 370.

9. Different principles of the law must be harmoniously applied to the circumstances of the particular case. Adams v. Woods, 9 Cal. 29.

10. Rights of property acquired by contract, valid in the place where made, will be protected here. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 276.

11. Under the chattel mortgage act of 1857, a mortgage of shares of stock in an incorporated company is valid without a transfer on the books of the company, as is required by the corporation act of 1853 relative to pledges of stock by delivery of the certificates. The act of 1853 has no effect on the act of 1857. Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 58.

Conquest.—Consideration in general.

12. Statutes should be construed according to what appears to be the intention of the legislature, and even though two statutes relating to the same subject be not in terms repugnant or inconsistent, if the later statute was clearly intended to prescribe the only rule which should govern, it will be construed as repealing the original act. City and County of Sacramento v. Bird, 15 Cal. 295.

13. The fifty-fourth section of the act of April 16th, 1850, concerning crimes and punishments, (Wood's Dig. 335) is not repealed by the act of April 19th, 1856, (statutes 1856, 131) amendatory of, and supplementary to the act of 1850. Section two of the act of 1856 does not conflict with section fifty-four of the act of 1850. These sections refer to a different class of offenses. Under the latter, the abduction must be accompanied with a removal into another county, State or territory, or a design to remove the party beyond the limits of the State. Under the former, the abduction need not be accompanied with any such removal or design—the intent to detain and conceal being the gist of the offense. People v. Chu Quong, 15 Cal. 333.

CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE.

CONQUEST.

1. As a general rule, the laws of a conquered or ceded territory remain in force until changed by the new sovereign. But a strict application to this rule would, in many cases, be unjust; and the Mexican laws on the subject of usury and implied warranty in the sale of land may be deemed to have been abrogated by the customs and usages of American emigrants before any formal act of legislation abolishing those laws. Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 47.

2. Political laws, as the laws of slavery of the ceded or conquered country, give way to the laws of the acquiring country. Ex parte Perkins, 2 Cal. 439.

3. It is a well established principle of international law, that the military occupation of a conquered territory does not in general effect any change in the laws of that territory. The political connection between its inhabitants and their former sovereign or State is interrupted or suspended so long as the occupation continues, and is entirely severed on the completion or confirmation of the conquest, whether by treaty of cession or otherwise. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 559.

4. The right of the conqueror to govern the enemy's territory which he may occupy is not derived from the constitution or political institutions of his own State, but flows directly from the laws of war, as established by the usage of the world and confirmed by the writings of publicists and the decisions of courts; in fine, from the law of nations. Ib.

5. Although the conqueror may suspend the laws, and entirely displace the former local and civil authorities, or limit or change their powers, this is not usually done; and consequently, that such changes are not to be presumed, but must be proven. Ib.; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 228.

CONSIDERATION.

- I. In general.
- II. Want of Consideration.
- III. Fraudulent Consideration.
- IV. Parol Evidence to explain Consideration.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. A contract not to run boats on a certain line of travel, and on failure to comply with such contract to pay $15,000, is not void as being against public policy and in restraint of trade, where a consideration is paid therefor. California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 262.

2. In these cases, the doctrine seems to be that there must be not only a consideration for the contract, but there must be some good reason for entering into it; and it must impose no restraint upon one party which is not beneficial to the other. Ib.

3. A guaranty endorsed on a charter party at the same time with its execution, and the consideration of one being in fact the consideration of the other, and being in these words, "I hereby guarantee the fulfillment of the within charter on the part of the charterer," is good. Hazeltine v. Larco, 7 Cal. 33.

4. If the guaranty were executed subsequently, it would fail, for there is either no consideration for the promise in fact, or the new consideration is not expressed in the instrument referred to. Ib. 34.

5. Where an insolvent, after his discharge, expressly promises his creditor to pay his debt, it can be enforced, the debt being a sufficient consideration to support the subsequent promise. Feeny v. Daly, 8 Cal. 85.

6. Where a party, in consideration of a conveyance of land to him, agrees to pay an outstanding note of his vendor, and writes his name on the back of the note as a memorandum of said agreement, at the same time acknowledging his liability: held, that the liability thus assumed is not the conditional liability of an endorser, but a primary and unconditional obligation to pay the note, for a full consideration. Palmer v. Tripp, 8 Cal. 97.

7. A conveyance of land on the part of the husband to a trustee, securing the payment of an annuity to the wife in consideration of an indemnity by the trustee against all debts of the wife for maintenance or other account, is valid and supported by a sufficient consideration. Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 494.

8. Where the object of a deed is to provide for the maintenance of the wife whilst living separately from the husband, and reconciliation and cohabitation takes place, her maintenance being obligatory upon him, the consideration of the deed fails. Ib. 498.

9. Time is not in some instances of the essence of contract, it may be true; but the idea that in California, in early days, either the period of the conveyance of land, or the payment of the consideration, was immaterial or not an important element of the contract, seems to us plainly opposed to common sense. Green v. Covillaud, 9 Cal. 330.

10. The law imports a consideration to a sealed instrument from its seal. At common law a want of consideration could not be pleaded to a suit on a sealed instrument, the presumption of a consideration being absolute and conclusive. The statute of this State has not altered the presumption of a consideration which still accompanies the instrument, but only modified the rule so far as to allow it to be rebutted in the answer. McCarty v. Beach, 10 Cal. 463.

11. To constitute a consideration to a bond or other instrument in writing it is necessary that some advantage to the promisor, or injury to the promisee should occur. A part and executed consideration is not sufficient. Comstock v. Breed, 12 Cal. 288.

12. An agreement of cancelation of the lease of a ditch and the surrender of the possession to the lessor, is sufficient evidence of the surrender of such possession, although it does not appear that there was a consideration expressed in the instrument. Burke v. Table Mountain W. Co., 12 Cal. 408.

13. The nonpayment of the consideration expressed in the release does not affect the instrument as a valid release. The obligation to pay the consideration was created by the acceptance of the release, and is not dependent upon the contingency of a recovery in the action. Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 496.

14. Conveyances of real and personal property made to hinder, delay and defraud creditors are subject to the same defect, liable to be avoided at the suit of the creditors, but valid as between the parties, and vest a title which cannot be transferred perfect to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration. Ib. 497.

15. A nominal consideration stated and the operative words of a transfer grant, bargain, sell and convey, do not change the character or object of the deed. Barber v. Koneman, 13 Cal. 11.

16. R. assigned a mortgage against a company to F., to secure him against his liability as endorser, delivering the mortgage at the same time to F., who retained it a few minutes and returned it to R. to receive the interest from the company as the agent for him, F. The note is unpaid. R. owes the company nothing: held, that after the assignment, R. had no interest in the mortgage which a judgment creditor could reach; that the delivery of the mortgage to R. for the purpose of collecting interest, there being no circumstances of fraud or suspicion, did not impair the rights of the assignee; that the liability of F. as surety was a sufficient consideration for the assignment, and that such assignment is not a mortgage of a mortgage. Hall v. Redding, 13 Cal. 219.

17. An outstanding liability as surety or endorser for another, together with an express promise by such surety or endorser to the principal that he will make the debt his own and pay it, is a sufficient consideration for an express promise to pay an equal amount on demand. Gladwin v. Gladwin, 13 Cal. 335.

18. Where a Mexican grant contained clauses designated in the instrument as conditions against alienation, mortgage and mortmain, and directing the grantee to obtain juridical possession thereof: held, that these clauses were not properly conditions, and that there was nothing in any of the provisions which was onerous or burthensome to the grantee, or which could be regarded as a valuable consideration, moving the government to make the grant. Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 471.

19. The consideration which induced the grant or donation cannot change its character, unless there is a positive provision of law which makes the exception—as in that given from the fuero real, where the thing granted is in remuneration of services rendered at the expense of the community. Ib. 475.

20. The stay of proceedings accorded by the statute to the execution of the undertaking on appeal, is a sufficient consideration. Dore v. Covey, 13 Cal. 508.

21. An undertaking on injunction, reciting that it is made in pursuance of the order of court requiring a bond in the suit in which the restraining order was already in force, sufficiently expresses a consideration. The order for the bond and the undertaking must be taken together. Praeder v. Purkitt, 13 Cal. 591.

22. An agreement by one who has lost property by fire or theft to pay a certain sum to any one who will secure the arrest and conviction of the criminal is not a nude pact, but may be enforced by a person performing the service. Ryer v. Stockwell, 14 Cal. 135.

23. In such cases, the offer of a reward or compensation by a public advertisement, either to a particular person or class of persons, or to any and all persons, is a conditional promise, and if any one to whom such offer is made shall perform the service before the offer is revoked, such performance is a good consideration, and the offer becomes a legal and binding contract. Ib. 137.

24. When the consideration of a conveyance was a debt, either preëxisting or created at the time, which was not extinguished, but still subsisted between the parties, it was held to be a mortgage. People v. Irwin, 14 Cal. 435.

25. Any suspension or forbearance of a legal right constitutes a sufficient consideration for a note or bill, without regard to the possible result in the given case of any attempt to enforce such right. Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 455.

26. Where the mortgage is given to secure the payment of a promissory note, which per se imports a valuable and sufficient consideration, it is of course prima facie evidence of a just indebtedness. Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 57.

27. Where the consideration passing between the endorsee and his endorser is not equal to the amount of the paper, the endorsee, in an action against the endorser, can only recover the consideration which he has actually paid. Vallejo v. Green, 16 Cal. 160.

28. The third section of the act "to provide for the construction of canals and for draining and reclaiming certain swamp and overflowed lands in Tulare Valley," passed April 11th, 1857, is a grant upon condition precedent, and not upon condition subsequent, and passes no estate to the grantee until performance of the conditions annexed—that is, until the reclamation of the lands. It is a contract by which rights may be acquired absolutely upon performance of the acts specified as the consideration moving the State. Montgomery v. Kasson, 16 Cal. 193.

29. Where a power of attorney only

Want of a Consideration.

authorizes a sale, that is a transfer for a valuable or moneyed consideration, but it does not authorize a conveyance from motives of love and affection. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 557.

II. WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

30. Where a note was given on the sale of real estate, and the vendor had neither title, nor color of title, nor possession: held, that the consideration might be inquired into, as between the original parties; and that there being no consideration, the payee could not recover against the maker, and that a guarantor on the note without consideration was not liable. Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 414.

31. Although want of, or illegality of consideration may be inquired into, in an action upon a bill or note between the original parties, by the general mercantile law the maker is estopped from setting up this defense where the securities have passed into the hands of innocent third parties, unless made void by statute. Haight v. Joyce, 2 Cal. 66; Thorne v. Yontz, 4 Cal. 323.

32. Where, by an agreement for the sale or purchase of land, the price is payable in instalments, for which the purchaser executes his notes, payable at certain times, and the vendor agrees to convey on payment of the last instalment, and suit is brought on the notes after all the instalments have become due, the tender of a conveyance by the vendor is a condition precedent to the right to sue; and the purchaser may insist on the want of such tender against an endorsee, after maturity. Folsom v. Bartling, 2 Cal. 164.

33. In an action upon a promise to pay money, if the complaint contains no averment of consideration or of indebtedness, except by way of recital, it is insufficient. Shafer v. Bear River W. and M. Co., 4 Cal. 296.

34. In defense to a promissory note, it is not sufficient to plead in general terms want of consideration and that the note was obtained by fraud, without setting out the facts. Gushee v. Leavitt, 5 Cal. 160.

35. The statute of frauds requires the written agreement to answer for the debt of another to express the consideration upon which it is made; but where the agreement is executed at the same time as the lease, and forms the consideration for the execution, it is not a promise to answer for the debt of another, but must be considered as an original undertaking, and as a promise made upon the strength of which another was enabled at the time to obtain possession of property, and enjoy its use. Such a transaction is not embraced within the statute of frauds; as the credit given by the written guarantee of the third party is the consideration upon which the transaction is closed. Evoy v. Tewksbury, 5 Cal. 286.

36. A guarantee not under seal, nor expressing consideration, made contemporaneously with the contract guaranteed, is a part of that contract; and the expression of the consideration in the contract takes the guarantee out of the statute of frauds. Jones v. Post, 6 Cal. 104.

37. A written contract to pay more than ten per cent. per annum as interest on an indebtedness incurred prior to the contract, is void for want of consideration as to the excess of interest up to the date of the contract. Adams v. Hastings, 6 Cal. 130.

38. The indebtedness being only for the principal and legal interest, is not sufficient to support a contract to pay a greater amount than was due. It is a voluntary undertaking and cannot be enforced. Ib.

39. But a contract to pay in future a greater than legal interest on an existing indebtedness is binding—the forbearance of the creditor being a sufficient consideration. Ib.

40. Great inadequacy of consideration paid for land, as compared with its actual value, is sufficient to put the purchaser upon notice of a fraud by its vendor, in the purchase thereof at a constable's sale. Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 6 Cal. 679; Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 608.

41. There is no conclusion of fraud springing from the want of consideration in a deed which will enable a stranger to attack it, though it is a circumstance, among others, from which fraud may be inferred. Gillan v. Metcalf, 7 Cal. 139.

42. Where a party, in consideration of a conveyance of land to him, agrees to pay an outstanding note of his vendor, and writes his name on the back of the note as a memorandum of said agreement,

Want of Consideration.—Fraudulent Consideration.

at the same time acknowledging his liability: held, that the liability thus assumed is not a conditional liability of an endorser, but a primary and unconditional obligation to pay the note, for which he had received a full consideration. Palmer v. Tripp, 8 Cal. 97.

43. Where a parent executes to his infant son a conveyance of property in consideration of services performed, it must be considered as a voluntary conveyance, without legal consideration, as he is not legally bound to pay for his son's services. Such a deed is therefore void against the creditors of the parent, if made when his remaining property is insufficient to pay his debts. Swartz v. Hazlett, 8 Cal. 126.

44. A party who contracts with another for certain work, and states to third persons who furnish labor and materials that he will see they are paid therefor, has no consideration for that promise, and is within the statute of frauds. Clay v. Walton, 9 Cal. 333; Ellison v. Jackson W. Co. 12 Cal. 553.

45. Where A gave his promissory note to B, in part payment for a certain tract of land, payable to B thirty days after the confirmation of the Sutter land title; provided the land for which the note was given should be included in the limits of the grant: held, that the confirmation of Sutter's title was a condition precedent to the payment of the note; and to entitle A to a judgment on such note, he must prove such confirmation. Sanders v. Whitesides, 10 Cal. 89.

46. An arrangement between a party and tenant is void where the tenant, being a married woman, had no capacity to contract; and any agreement on the part of the plaintiff to accept her as purchaser and release the party, was void for want of consideration. Shaver v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 10 Cal. 401.

47. The presumption is that promissory notes are given upon a valid consideration; but this presumption being rebutted, the necessity is thrown upon the holder of proving that he received it in good faith, without notice of the illegality of the consideration. Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 526.

48. Paying part of a note when all is due is no consideration for an agreement to extend the time of payment. Liening v. Gould, 13 Cal. 599.

49. Where one of the grantees, under the "swamp and overflowed land" act of 1857, enters into an agreement to sell to defendant five of the sections of land embraced within the act, and covenants that he and his associates will execute a good and sufficient deed to the defendant, upon payment of the several notes given as the consideration; will complete the canals within the five years allowed; and that by means thereof and the operation of the statute, they will have a good and valid title to the premises: held, that defendant cannot resist the payment of the first note merely because the legislature has attempted, by an unconstitutional act, to repeal the contract of the State with the vendor and his associates—the agreement itself providing for a surrender of the unpaid notes, and a return of the money paid, in case of future failure of title, and the rights of the grantees of the State being fully known to defendant. Montgomery v. Kasson, 16 Cal. 195.

50. Where a son conveys real estate to his father, the only consideration being a verbal agreement by the father to make a will and devise to the son certain property, and the father dies without having complied with the agreement, the agreement is void; the conveyance is executed without consideration, express or implied, and a trust results in favor of plaintiff by implication of law, and he may set aside the conveyance and recover the property, it being shown that the transaction was not a gift. Russ v. Mebius, 16 Cal. 355.

51. If in such case the conveyance did not express the consideration for which it was given, but acknowledged the payment of a nominal consideration in money, parol evidence would be inadmissible to establish the trust in favor of the son. Id.

III. FRAUDULENT CONSIDERATION.

52. When a part of a consideration of a contract is illegal, or when an entire judgment is composed of several elements, one of which is fraudulent, the whole is void. Taaffe v. Josephson, 7 Cal. 355; Swartz v. Hazlett, 8 Cal. 129; Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 404.

53. A party cannot retain the consideration of a contract on the ground of fraud,

---

 Fraudulent Consideration.—Parol Evidence to explain Consideration.

---

and resist the payment of a penalty of an infraction of his contract on the same ground. Cal. Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 592.

54. Where, in an action on a promissory note, the defense set up is that defendant executed the note as the consideration for a deed from the plaintiff for certain land, under false and fraudulent representations that plaintiff had an interest therein; the defendant, if he would avoid payment, must offer to surrender the deed to be canceled, so that both parties could have been remitted to their original rights. Tissot v. Throckmorton, 6 Cal. 473.

55. Where a party has given a promissory note, and the payee assigns the note, without recourse after maturity, and suit is brought upon the note by the assignee, and the maker then files his bill against the assignor and assignee, alleging fraud in obtaining the note, and praying for an injunction, and that the note be canceled: held, that the case was a proper one for equitable relief; and the maker had the right to have the note canceled, so as to prevent future litigation. Domingo v. Getman, 9 Cal. 102.

56. L. executed and delivered his note to N. without consideration, and for the purpose of defrauding, hindering and delaying creditors. N. had knowledge of the fraud, and sued and attached upon the note L.'s property. After this, W., a creditor of L., also attached and levied upon the same property. Before judgment, N., for a valuable consideration, assigned the note to J., who knew nothing of the fraud: held, that J. was not protected in his purchase; N. having been superseded by W.'s attachment could not, by any act or deed of his, put his assignee in any better position than he occupied himself. Wright v. Levy, 12 Cal. 263.

57. If any portion of the consideration of a note be fraudulent, the entire note is void, as against creditors. McKenty v. Gladwin, 10 Cal. 229.

58. Where judgment is confessed on a note, a portion of the consideration being advanced from time to time after the date of the note, which drew interest on the whole amount from date, a portion of the interest is fraudulent, and the entire note is void against creditors. Scales v. Scott, 13 Cal. 78.

59. Suit on a note for the purchase of land. Answer sets up that the note was given for the land, fencing and building materials; that plaintiffs falsely represented that there was building material for building a barn; that this material was so insufficient in quantity, that it cost defendant six hundred dollars to buy more, etc. There were some averments as to the rotten condition of fences, which plaintiff represented to be good: held, that defendant having taken possession under the contract, and retaining it, cannot set up representations, fraudulent or otherwise, as to the fences, they being part of the freehold. Kinney v. Osborne, 14 Cal. 113.

60. Plaintiff in execution, after assigning his judgment, pretended falsely and fraudulently to be the owner of it, and so pretending, made a contract to discharge the judgment, by taking the note of third persons, not negotiable in the mercantile sense, in payment; the makers of the note agreed to this under the supposition, induced by him, that he was the owner of the judgment: held, that the makers of the note, upon discovering that the plaintiff was not the owner of the judgment, properly refused to pay the note even to assignees, before maturity thereof. Mitchell v. Hackett, 14 Cal. 665.

 IV. PAROL EVIDENCE TO EXPLAIN CONSIDERATION.

61. Although want of, or illegality of consideration may be inquired into in an action upon a bill or note between the original parties, by the general mercantile law, the maker is estopped from setting up this defense where the securities have passed into the hands of innocent third parties, unless made void by statute. Haight v. Joyce, 2 Cal. 66; Thorne v. Yontz, 4 Cal. 323.

62. The consideration of the assignment of a personal chattel or chose in action may be proven by parol, and a different one established from that expressed in the instrument. Bennett v. Solomon, 6 Cal. 138.

63. Under our system, a mortgage is a mere incident to the debt secured by it, and as the debt secured by it and as the consideration for endorsing a note can be gone into at any time, there can be no reason for adopting a more stringent rule as to the assignment of the mortgage securing it. Ib.

64. As to instruments under seal generally, the American rule seems to be, that the consideration clause in a deed can be explained by parol proof, at least where the consideration proven is of the same species as that mentioned in the instrument. Ib.

65. The old and unmeaning distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments is done away with by our statute, and the consideration of a sealed bond may be impeached by the obligor in the same manner as a promissory note by the maker. Comstock v. Breed, 12 Cal. 288.

66. In a bill of sale of goods sold and delivered, a recital that the consideration was paid is only prima facie evidence of that fact, which may be rebutted or explained by parol. Cravens v. Dewey, 13 Cal. 43.

CONSIGNMENT.

1. The consignee named in a bill of lading is to be deemed prima facie the owner of the goods mentioned therein, and, upon payment of freight, may maintain an action against any person who assumes a control over them in violation of his right of property. Webb v. Winter, 1 Cal. 418.

2. In an action for money had and received by the consignor, the amount of goods sold on credit by the consignee, having no authority so to sell, can be recovered. Johnson v. Totten, 3 Cal. 347.

3. A plaintiff has a right to waive a tort as against factors, and to bring his action to compel them to account, and for the net proceeds arising from the sales. Lubert v. Chauviteau, 3 Cal. 462.

4. Where there is nothing in the business of consignees to make them technical factors, third parties are not bound to know that they acted as factors in a particular case. Glidden v. Lucas, 7 Cal. 30.

5. The liability of a consignee to his principal for the proceeds of sales made accrues, in the absence of original instructions to remit proceeds on sale, on demand, or instructions to remit, and not upon receipt of proceeds by the consignee. Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 457.

6. It is the duty of the consignee, not only to inform his principal of the sales, but to remit the proceeds. His neglect deprives the principal of his funds and keeps him in ignorance of his rights. Ib.

7. The statute of limitations does not run against a claim of a consignor for moneys in the hands of the consignee, when the latter failed to apprise the former of the sales; for it would permit the consignee to take advantage of his own wrong, and to sustain a defense of which in conscience he ought not to be permitted to avail himself. Ib. 458.

CONSOLIDATION.

1. The provisions of the consolidation act of 1856, requiring that the sinking fund created by the act of 1851 should be first exhausted by the redemption of certificates of stock, before the treasurer should make payment annually of the sum of $50,000 set apart by the first act for the payment of interest and for the sinking fund, are unconstitutional. People v. Woods, 7 Cal. 584.

2. The consolidation act of 1856 gives the officers named in the fourteenth section two days after the meeting of the board of supervisors in which to file new bonds. The meeting taking place on the ninth of July, the officers had the whole of the tenth and eleventh of July to execute and present their bonds. Doane v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 394; People v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 436.

3. There is no constitutional inhibition against incorporating a portion of the inhabitants of a county as a city, or creating a county out of the territory of a city; the very necessity of the case both permits and demands it. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 103.

4. The territory of the county of Sacramento includes the city; but the city forms a portion of the county, and their respective limits are kept distinct in the consolidation act; the powers of the supervisors being different in respect to the two. The county and city is a corporation for some purposes, while they are distinct as to others. People v. Mullins, 10 Cal. 21; People v. Beatty, 14 Cal. 572.

5. Under the Sacramento consolidation act of 1858, query, what becomes of the indebtedness of the county of Sacramento to the city of Sacramento for the services of the recorder in criminal cases under the laws of the State? Curtis v. Sacramento County, 13 Cal. 295.

CONSOLIDATION OF ACTIONS.

1. The law will not tolerate a division of a joint right of action into several actions. Nightingale v. Scannell, 6 Cal. 509.

2. A defendant shall not be harassed with several suits for the same matter at the same time; the pendency of one suit may be pleaded in abatement of the other. Seligman v. Kalkman, 8 Cal. 216.

3. It often happens that a party has his election to pursue one of two or more remedies, but he should not pursue several at one and the same time. Ib. 217.

4. A creditor has not the right to assign a debt in parcels, and thus by splitting up the cause of action, subject the debtor to the costs and expenses of more suits than the parties originally contemplated. Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 536.

CONSPIRACY.

1. In an action charging conspiracy to obtain a favorable compromise of suits about to be commenced, it is not sufficient merely to show that there were no grounds to warrant the suits; it ought in addition to be proved that the intention of the parties was unfairly directed to the attainment of such an end, by understanding and agreement between them, which may be shown either by their words or acts. Leavitt v. Gushee, 5 Cal. 153.

See CRIMES AND CRIMINAL LAW.

CONSTABLE.

1. A constable has the right to appoint as many deputies as he pleases; and the deputy is not guilty of any trespass in levying by virtue of any legal process in his hands. Taylor v. Brown, 4 Cal. 188.

2. Great inadequacy of consideration paid for land, as compared with its actual value, is sufficient to put the purchaser upon notice of fraud by his vendor in the purchase thereof at constable's sale. Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 6 Cal. 679.

3. An order of the supervisors requiring a new bond of an officer should specify the grounds upon which the order is made; and where the supervisors of Marin county made an order as follows: "Ordered by the board of supervisors that John de Fries, constable of San Rafael township, file another bond with two or more sureties within fifteen days:" held, that this order was fatally defective. People v. Supervisors of Marin County, 10 Cal. 345.

4. The power to declare an office vacant is vested, under the statute, where the duty to approve the bond of the office is lodged. That duty is imposed upon the county judge, and not the supervisors; and where the supervisors of Marin county declared the office of constable vacant, because the constable failed to comply with their order to file a new bond: held, that they exceeded their jurisdiction. Ib.

5. An action on the official bond of a constable lies primarily upon breach of the condition of the bond, whether the injury for which suit is brought be a trespass or not, the result of the nonfeasance or misfeasance of the officer. Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 196.

6. The condition of the bond is that the officer shall well and faithfully discharge the duties of his office; and if it is admitted that the facts of this case establish a breach of the condition, we think there can be nothing in the point that the primary remedy is against the officer as a trespasser, and not on the bond. Ib.

7. Where a sheriff or constable seizes the property of one man under an execution against another, he is a trespasser, and liable on his official bond. Ib. 199.

8. The legislature intended that the officer and his sureties should be responsible for every abuse of his official powers, and we think there could not well be a more flagrant abuse of such powers than the seizing and selling of the property of one person under and by virtue of an execution against another. Ib. 200.

9. In an action of damages against a constable for illegal seizure of plaintiff's property, the judgment was for six hundred and fifty dollars, the sum claimed in the complaint, the value of the property being fixed therein at four hundred and fifty dollars, and the damages at two hundred dollars. The court found the damages at six hundred and fifty dollars. There was no statement on new trial or appeal: held, that the finding of the court is conclusive; and that the judgment must stand. Ib.

10. Where the record shows that suit was brought in township No. 4, Sierra county, that the summons was served, by the constable of that township, in township No. 3, and it nowhere appears either that the defendant was a resident of township No. 4, or a nonresident of the county, or that the suit was within any of the other exceptions of the statute, (Wood's Dig. 232, 233) the judgment rendered is void, and not admissible as evidence of title upon a sale made thereunder. A constable has no power to execute process out of his township.* Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 301; Fagg v. Clements, 16 Cal. 392.

IN GENERAL.

1. The Mexican constitution, admitting the Indian to citizenship, did not remove the restrictions on alienation of land by them. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 274.

2. Our constitution must be construed with reference to the known changes in the organic laws of the respective States. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 381.

3. It is a safe construction that the convention, in framing the constitution, borrowed provisions from those of other States which had already received a judicial construction; they adopted them in view of such construction, and acquiesced in its correctness. People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 50.

4. We recognize the rule that in the exposition of constitutions as of inferior laws, the solemn, deliberate, and long settled precedents of courts, and the practice and acquiescence of governments and people should possess a controlling weight. Seale v. Mitchell, 5 Cal. 405; Ferris v. Coover, 11 Cal. 178.

5. It is the duty of the court to adopt such a construction as will carry out the plain intendments of the constitution. People v. Reid, 6 Cal. 290.

6. If the court were at liberty to say that the organic law of the State was directory, then the whole constitution could be frittered away by judicial decisions, involving in its abnegation the social and political rights of the citizen. People v. Johnson, 6 Cal. 504.

7. The legislative power is the creative element in the government, and was exercised partly by the people in the formation of the constitution. Nouques v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 70.

8. The judiciary, from the very nature of its powers and the means given it by the constitution, must possess the right to construe the constitution in the last resort, in those cases not expressly or by necessary implication reserved to the other departments. Ib.

9. The legislature has the actual power to pass any act it pleases, and the supreme court would never interfere by injunction or otherwise to prevent the passage of such acts, as the constitution has provided other and more appropriate remedies. Ib.

10. If some provisions of an act are unconstitutional, this will not vitiate the whole act, unless they enter so entirely into the scope and design of the law that it would be impossible to maintain it without such obnoxious provisions. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 103.

11. The legislature may use or refer to an act unconstitutional in itself to indicate its will in respect to a constitutional purpose. People v. Bircham, 12 Cal. 55.

12. The delicate office of declaring an act of the legislature void and unconstitutional should never be exercised, unless there be a clear repugnancy between the inferior and the organic law. People v. Burbank, 12 Cal. 384.

13. The constitution is not a grant of power or an enabling act to the legislature. It is a limitation on the general powers of a legislative character, and restrains only so far as the restriction appears, either by express terms or by necessary influence. State of California v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 165.

II. UNCONSTITUTIONALITY OF LAWS.

14. To contend that a law is unconstitutional and not void, would involve a legal solecism and the paradox of an inferior agent of the government setting aside the solemn mandates of the constitution by an act of ratification. Phelan v. San Francisco County, 6 Cal. 540.

15. To render a law unconstitutional because opposed to the general policy of the constitution, that policy must be manifested by the terms of the constitution fixing with precision the particular rule, and not as gathered by general inference. Pattison v. Supervisors of Yuba County, 13 Cal. 182.

III. THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.

16. In determining the boundaries of apparently conflicting powers between the States and the general government, the proper question is not so much what has been in terms reserved to the States, as what has been expressly or by necessary implication granted by the people to the national government. Each State possesses all the powers of an independent and sovereign nation, except as far as they have been ceded away by the constitution. People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 234.

17. This State may levy a poll tax to such extent as it might deem expedient upon all persons engaged in mining upon public lands, and there is nothing in the constitution of the United States which deprives the State of the power of imposing it. Id. 238.

18. The constitution of the United States gives no authority to the supreme court of the United States to exercise appellate jurisdiction over the State courts, nor can such authority be derived by implication or construction. Johnson v. Gordon, 4 Cal. 369.

19. The provision of the constitution of the United States which gives congress the power to establish "a uniform rule of naturalization," is construed to mean that the rule, when established, shall be executed by the States. Ex parte Knowles, 5 Cal. 303.

20. The national constitution must be subject to the general rule, that an instrument is to be construed so as to reconcile and give meaning and effect to all its parts. People v. Gerke, 5 Cal. 382.

21. The provision of the practice act authorizing judgment, personal and final, against an absent defendant, for whom the court has appointed an attorney with privilege to the defendant to come in and deny in six months, is not in violation of the constitution of the United States or of this State. Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 111.

22. Under the treaty between the United States and China of July 3d, 1844, and the act of congress carrying it into effect, the United States commissioner and consuls constitute a judiciary for the government of the citizens of the United States in China, and are governed by the law of nations, the laws of the United States, the common law, and the decrees and regulations of the commissioner, until modified or annulled by congress; and such a judicial system is constitutional. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 281.

IV. SPECIAL ACTS PASSED UPON.

1. Those constitutional.

23. The insolvent law of this State is not obnoxious to any provisions of the constitution. Clarke v. Ray, 6 Cal. 605.

24. The legislature has the constitutional power to require a less amount of proof of the authenticity of a judgment rendered in another State than is set forth in the act of congress. Parke v. Williams, 7 Cal. 249.

25. It is within the legitimate power of the judiciary to declare the action of the legislature unconstitutional, where that action exceeds the limits of the supreme law; but the courts have no means and no power to avow the effects of nonaction. Myers v. English, 9 Cal. 349.

26. No provision of our constitution delegates to the legislature the power to enlarge the jurisdiction of the federal courts, and the act of 1855 authorizing writs of error from the State courts to the federal courts is void. Ferris v. Coover, 11 Cal. 185.

27. The act of the legislature authorizing and directing the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco to audit and allow the claim of a judgment creditor, is not judicial in its character and is constitutional. People v. Supervisors of San Francisco County, 11 Cal. 211.

28. The statutory provision that exception to the grand jury must be made at a particular time is constitutional. The legislature have the right to prescribe rules of practice in criminal or civil cases, and among such rules are provisions as to the time and mode of excepting to irregularities of proceeding. People v. Beatty, 14 Cal. 573; People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 479.

29. The fact that the act of 1856 authorizes the transfer of the convicts to private individuals, and the lease of the labor of future convicts, does not render the act unconstitutional. The power over the whole subject of punishment for crime is vested in the legislature—the only limitation being the inhibition against the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments, which mean those of a barbarous character unknown to the common law. State of California v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 455.

30. The act of April 27th, 1857, prohibiting gaming, is constitutional. People v. Beatty, 14 Cal. 573.

2. Those unconstitutional.

31. The act of 1855, imposing a tax of fifty dollars on every person arriving in this State by sea who is incompetent to become a citizen, is unconstitutional and void. People v. Downer, 7 Cal. 171.

V. CONSTRUCTION OF THE CONSTITUTION.

1. Art. I. Declaration of Rights.

a. Sec. 1. Right to acquire and possess Property.

32. The constitution of this State declares, among the inalienable rights of each citizen, that of acquiring, possessing and protecting property. This is one of the primary objects of government—is guaranteed by the constitution, and cannot be impaired by legislation. Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 6.

33. If the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, or the federal constitution, could be held to apply to laws concerning real estate, it is apparent that the rule must be extended further, and that all legislation touching property, or affecting the rights of the citizen, might be successfully attacked, and that State sovereignty would become State imbecility. Ib.

b. Sec. 3. Trial by Jury.

34. The waiver of a trial by jury, as guaranteed by the constitution in every case, must appear affirmatively, and not by implication. Smith v. Pollock, 2 Cal. 94.

35. An act to prevent extortion in office, passed March, 1853, is not in conflict with the constitution—it does not deprive the defendant of the right of trial by jury. Ryan v. Johnson, 5 Cal. 87.

36. The constitution provides that the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law. This latter clause refers to legislation, and is not given to courts by rule to refuse a jury trial. Exline v. Smith, 5 Cal. 112.

37. The act of 1860, providing for the construction of a State capitol at Sacramento, is not unconstitutional because it authorizes the compensation to the owners for the land taken to be ascertained by commissioners, and not a jury. The provision of the constitution, that “the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever,” applies only to civil and criminal cases in which an issue of fact is joined. The proceeding to ascertain the value of plaintiff’s property, and the compensation to be made to him, is not an action at law—it is an inquisition on the part of the State for the ascertainment of a particular fact, as preliminary to future proceedings; and it is only requisite that it be conducted in some equitable and fair mode, to be provided by law, either with or without the intervention of a jury, opportunity being allowed to the owners or parties interested in the property to present evidence respecting its value, and to be heard thereon. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 253.

38. The provision of the constitution relative to the trial by jury relates to the trial of issues of fact in civil and criminal proceedings in courts of justice, and has no relation to cases of equity, unless an issue of fact be framed for the jury under the direction of the court. Ib. 254.

c. Sec. 4. Free exercise and enjoyment of Religious Worship.

39. Our constitution, when it forbids discrimination or preference in religion, does not mean merely to guarantee religious toleration, but religious liberty. Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 506.

Rights of Persons.

40. The act of April, 1858, "for the better observance of the Sabbath," is in conflict with the first and fourth sections of article first of the constitution of this State, and is therefore void. Ib. 510.

41. The constitution of this State will not tolerate any discrimination or preference in favor of any religion; and so far as the common law conflicts with this provision it must yield to the constitution. Ib. 512.

d. Sec. 8. Rights of Persons.

a. In criminal trials.

42. A prisoner was indicted and tried for murder, and found guilty of manslaughter only, which verdict the appellate court set aside for irregularity: held, that the conviction for manslaughter is an acquittal for murder; and that any law which would compel a party to be retried for murder, in order to escape the minor offense, thereby putting the party "twice in jeopardy for the same offense," is unconstitutional. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 378; People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 278.

43. The constitution directs that a culprit shall be presented by indictment, not the accused by his true name, but the person himself, leaving the precise form or words to be determined by the legislature. People v. Kelly, 6 Cal. 213.

44. Where a defendant was indicted and convicted of murder, and on appeal a new trial was ordered on the ground of objection to a juror, whereupon, on motion of the prosecution, the indictment was set aside on account of irregularities in the summoning and empanneling of the grand jury, and subsequently a new indictment was found against him by another grand jury, under which the prisoner was convicted: held, that the second trial and conviction did not put the prisoner "twice in jeopardy for the same offense," as it is apparent that the prisoner was not put in jeopardy by the first trial, which had been held to be erroneous. People v. March, 6 Cal. 546.

45. The amendatory act of 1855 provides that "the testimony given by a witness shall in no instance be given against himself in any criminal prosecution," and the witness is bound to answer any question pertinent to the issue, being thus protected as contemplated by the constitution. Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 185.

46. In a criminal case, if the court below impose upon counsel, against their consent, a limitation of time for argument before the jury, it is done at the risk of a new trial, if it be shown that the prisoner was deprived of the opportunity of a full defense, for this is his constitutional right, without which he cannot be lawfully convicted. People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 584.

b. Condemnation of private property for public use.

47. The destruction of a building to stop the spread of a conflagration cannot be deemed a taking of private property for public use, within the meaning of that clause in the constitution which prohibits such taking without just compensation. Dunbar v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 357; Surrocco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 73.

48. Parties in possession of land are entitled to compensation therefor before it can be taken for public use. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 65; City of San Francisco v. Scott, 4 Cal. 116; Sacramento Valley R. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 6 Cal. 75; McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 124; Colton v. Rossi, 9 Cal. 599; McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 528, 531; Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Co., 13 Cal. 313; Johnson v. Alameda County, 14 Cal. 107; People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 47.

49. The act of 1860 providing for the construction of a State capitol at Sacramento is not unconstitutional because it provides that the compensation to the owners of the land taken shall be ascertained by three commissioners, and thus deprives the owners of the right to a jury trial. The provisions of the constitution that "the right of trial by jury shall be secure to all, and remain forever inviolate," applies only to civil and criminal cases in which an issue of fact is joined. The proceedings to ascertain the value of property, under the act of 1860, and the compensation to be made, is not an action at law. It is an inquisition for the ascertainment of a particular fact, as preliminary to future proceedings, and it is only requisite that it be conducted in some equitable and fair mode, to be provided by law, either with or without a jury, opportunity being allowed to owners and parties interested in the property to give evidence as to its value, and to be heard thereon. Koppikus v. State Capital Commissioners, 16 Cal. 253.

e. Sec. 15. No Imprisonment for Debt except for Fraud.

50. In an action to recover money received by a person as agent, he cannot be arrested without showing some fraudulent conduct on his part, or a demand on him by the principal, and a refusal by him to pay. An arrest in such a case is prohibited by section fifteen, article first, of the constitution. Ex parte Holdforth, 1 Cal. 440; Ex parte Prader, 6 Cal. 240.

51. An assault and battery is not a case of fraud warranting imprisonment, in the sense that term is employed by the constitution. Neither can it be made so by the legislature, and the judgment is a debt as much as though recovered in an action of assumpsit. Ib.

52. The constitution of California prohibits imprisonment for debt except in cases of fraud; consequently every intendment must be in favor of the liberty of the subject and his right to trial by jury, which is likewise secured. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 60; Ex parte Prader, 6 Cal. 240.

f. Sec. 16. No ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the obligation of Contracts.

53. An act which divests the creditor of his lien, exempts the property of the judgment debtor from execution, and places it in the hands of trustees, with power to sell if they think proper, and compels the creditor to submit to a delay of twenty years, with no security, impairs the obligation of the contract, and is unconstitutional and void. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 553.

54. The act of May 1st, 1851, funding the debt of the city of San Francisco, is unconstitutional so far as it affects the rights of judgment creditors. Ib. 557.

55. The suspension of the statute of remedies or any part thereof existing when the contract was made, is more or less impairing the obligation of the contract, and therefore unconstitutional. Thorne v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 131.

56. An act to fund the debt of a county does not impair the obligation of contracts, and is not, therefore, unconstitutional; the obligation to pay is fully acknowledged, and the right to secure the whole amount of his debt is unaffected. Hunsaker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 289.

57. The provisions of the "settler's act" of 1856, requiring the party recovering in ejectment to pay the defendant the value of his improvements, it seems are not in violation of the provisions of the Federal constitution prohibiting States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts. Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 6.

58. The legislature is without power to affect past contracts or to alter or destroy the nature and tenure of estates. Dewey v. Lambier, 7 Cal. 348.

59. The forty-first section of the recording act relative to conveyances made before the passage of the act requiring them to be recorded is not in violation of the constitution of the United States nor of this State, as it does not impair the obligation of contracts, but merely establishes what shall be constructive notice to third parties; nor does it divest vested rights, but only introduces a rule for the subsequent protection of the rights of parties. Stafford v. Lick, 7 Cal. 487.

60. The provisions of the consolidation act of 1856, requiring that the sinking fund created by the act of 1851 should be first exhausted by the redemption of the certificates of stock before the treasurer should make payment annually of the sum of $50,000, set apart by the first act for the payment of interest and for the sinking fund, are unconstitutional. People v. Woods, 7 Cal. 584.

61. The power to impose conditions after a contract is once perfect and complete is a power to impair its obligations, and this the constitution of the United States and of this State have prohibited. Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 84.

62. The provisions of the act of April 27th, 1855, requiring all persons holding certain warrants upon the treasurer of Calaveras county to present the same for registry before a certain day, or be forever barred from enforcing the payment thereof, are therefore unconstitutional. Ib. 85.

Foreigners to enjoy and inherit Property.

63. The provision of the constitution which prohibits the passage of any law impairing the obligation of contracts relates solely to contracts between individuals, and not between individuals and the State. Myers v. English, 9 Cal. 349.

64. It is well settled that a judgment rendered in one State, and upon which suit is instituted in another, is a contract in the sense of the constitution. Scarborough v. Dugan, 10 Cal. 308.

65. The act of May 1st, 1851, authorizing the "funding of the floating debt of the city of San Francisco, and to provide for the payment of the same," is constitutional. The amendment that the commissioners may purchase stock at five per cent. above par does not affect injuriously the creditors under the act of 1851. Thorn-ton v. Hooper, 14 Cal. 11.

66. This act of 1851 is a law as well as a contract, and those provisions which are mere modes of giving effect to the substantial purposes of the act may be revised and altered. The constitution forbids impairing the obligation of contracts, but does not inhibit legislation respecting them. Ib.

67. An act denying a right of sale for the enforcement of the contract would probably be such a vital assault upon the obligation as practically to destroy it, and therefore be unconstitutional. But a repeal of a right of redemption—in other words, an act making a sale absolute instead of conditional—would not impair the contract. Tuolumne Redemption Co. v. Sedgwick, 15 Cal. 524.

68. It is said that the requirement of the statutes as to the previous approval of the board of examiners merely affects the remedy of State warrants. This is not so. On the contrary, the requirement operates directly upon the contract itself, interpolating a new term and changing the absolute right of the lessee to the warrants into a conditional and dependent one. But admitting that the requirement relates only to the remedy—that remedy is so changed by it as to materially impair the right; and legislation producing this result is as much within the inhibition of the constitution as if it directly assailed the right. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 31.

69. The grantees under the act "to provide for the construction of canals and for draining and reclaiming certain swamp and overflowed lands in Tulare Valley," passed April 11, 1857, having surveyed the lines of the canals mentioned therein, and commenced the work of excavating one of them, and continued the same within and during the year after the passage of the act, have brought themselves within the first section thereof, and secured the right to proceed with the reclamation; and, when this is accomplished, to take one-half of the lands. And if within the five years limited in the act, the reclamation be effected, the title to the alternate sections designated will vest in the grantees absolutely. With the contract and the rights of the grantees thereunder acquired by this part performance of its consideration, the legislature cannot interfere. They are protected by both the federal and the State constitutions. The act of April 20th, 1858, repealing the act of April 11th, 1857, making this grant, and declaring the rights and privileges thereunder forfeited, is unconstitutional and void. Montgomery v. Kasson, 16 Cal. 194.

g. Sec. 17. Foreigners to enjoy and inherit Property.

70. Aliens cannot be said to have any property to enjoy in the mineral or public land by which the constitution of the State would guarantee them against taxation for working and extracting the metals therefrom. People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 252.

71. The provisions of the constitution giving to aliens who are bona fide residents the right to inherit, by the rules of construction, exclude nonresident aliens. Siemssen v. Bofer, 6 Cal. 253.

72. The constitution expressly prohibits nonresident aliens from inheriting, and being thus incapacitated, they cannot maintain an action of ejectment for lands devised or bequeathed. Ib. 254.

73. The seventh section of the first article of the constitution of this State only removes the disability of alienage to such foreigners as are bona fide residents of the State; it leaves the right of nonresident foreigners, in respect to real property, as it exists at common law. Farrell v. En-right, 12 Cal. 456.

---

No Slavery.—Right of Suffrage.—Elections.—Distribution of Powers.

---

74. The constitution gives to the bona fide resident alien certain rights which may be enlarged, but cannot be abridged by the legislature.* State of California v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 165.

h. Sec. 18. No Slavery.

75. By virtue of their police power, the States possess jurisdiction to arrest and restrain fugitive slaves and to remove them from their borders, but not so as to obstruct the owner in reclaiming his slave under the constitution of the United States. Ex parte Perkins, 2 Cal. 434.

76. If the constitution of the State does abolish slavery and affirm the Mexican law, and if she have the power to control her own internal police as fully before as after her recognition by the other States, yet it does not follow that upon her admission into the Union she will have any authority to impair the obligation of rights subsisting under the federal constitution. Ib.

77. The right of transit through each State with every species of property known to the constitution of the United States and recognized by that paramount law, is secured by that instrument to each citizen, and does not depend upon the uncertain and changeable ground of mere comity. Ex parte Archy, 9 Cal. 165.

78. To allow mere visitors to this State for pleasure or health to bring with them as personal attendants their own slaves, is not any violation of the end contemplated by the constitution of this State. Ib. 166.

2. Art. II. Right of Suffrage.

a. Sec. 1. Who may vote.

79. The mere fact that a man is a soldier in the United States army does not disqualify him from voting in this State. But he cannot vote unless he has been a citizen of the State and of the county in which he votes for the constitutional period. People v. Riley, 15 Cal. 49.

80. And a mere residence or sojourn in the county as a soldier does not make him a citizen, or prove him to be such. The rule, as fixed by the constitution, is that the fact of such sojourn or residence as a soldier neither creates nor destroys citizenship—leaving the political status of the soldier where it was before. Ib.

See ALIENS, NATURALIZATION, VOTE.

b. Sec. 6. Elections.

81. An election cannot take place under the constitution without statutory regulation. People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 60.

See ELECTION.

3. Art. III. Distribution of Powers.

82. The constitution forbids not only the exercise of the functions of one department by any other department, but it has gone further, and to secure the complete integrity of each, has by the third article expressly forbidden persons charged with the powers of one from exercising duties properly belonging to another department. Burgoyne v. Supervisors of San Francisco County, 5 Cal. 21; People v. Town of Nevada, 6 Cal. 144.

83. That portion of an act prescribing that no injunction shall be issued against the commissioners appointed for the sale of the State interest within the water line of San Francisco is unconstitutional, as it exercises judicial functions. Guy v. Hermance, 5 Cal. 74.

84. Where discretion exists, the power of each is absolute, but there is no discretion where rights have vested under the constitution, or by existing laws. The legislature can pass such laws as it may judge expedient, subject only to the prohibitions of the constitution. If it overstep those limits and attempt to impair the obligation of contracts, or to pass ex post facto laws, or grant special acts of incorporation for other than municipal purposes, the judiciary will set aside its legislation and protect the rights it has assailed. Within certain limits it is independent; when it passes over those limits its power for good or ill is gone. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 39.

*The act of April 19th, 1856, enlarged the powers of inheritance, and extended it to nonresident aliens.

Legislative Department.

85. The fourth article of the constitution reads as follows: "The powers of the government of the State of California shall be divided into three separate departments—the legislative, the executive and judicial—and no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except in the cases hereinafter expressly directed or permitted." There is nothing in this distribution of powers which places either department above the law, or makes either independent of the other. It simply provides that there shall be separate departments, and it is only in a restricted sense that they are independent of each other. Ib.

4. Art. IV. Legislative Department.

a. Sec. 3. Members of Assembly.

86. The legislature has power so to change the assembly districts as to join two counties in one district. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 104.

b. Sec. 17. Approval of Bills.

87. The court may go behind the record evidence of a statute and inquire whether it was passed or approved in accordance with the constitution. Fowler v. Pierce, 2 Cal. 171.

88. The constitution provides that if any bill presented to the governor (having passed both houses of the legislature) shall not be returned within ten days after it shall have been presented to him—Sundays excepted—the same shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature by adjournment prevent such return. Price v. Whitman, 8 Cal. 415; overruling People v. Whitman, 6 Cal. 660.

c. Sec. 21. No person eligible who holds a lucrative Federal office.

89. The federal office of surveyor general is a "lucrative office," and the office of comptroller of the State an "office of profit," under the twenty-first section of article fourth of the constitution of this State. People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 43.

90. Under the twenty-first section of article four of the constitution of this State, a person holding the federal office described in that section is incapable of being elected to a State office; he cannot receive votes cast so as to give him a right to take the State office upon or after resigning the federal office. The word "eligible" in this section means capable of being chosen—the subject of selection or choice. Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 121.

91. The term "compensation" in sec. 21, art. 4, of the constitution of this State, means the income of the office, not the profit over and above the necessary expenses of the office. Ib. 123.

d. Sec. 22. No money to be drawn from the treasury but as appropriated.

92. When the constitution, therefore, says that "no money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law," it only means that no money shall be drawn except in pursuance of law. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 28.

93. To an appropriation within the meaning of the constitution, nothing more is requisite than a designation of the amount, and the fund out of which it shall be paid. It is not essential to its validity that funds to meet the same should be at the time in the treasury. As a matter of fact, there have seldom been in the treasury the necessary funds to meet the several amounts appropriated under the general appropriation acts of each year. The appropriation is made in anticipation of the receipt of the yearly revenues. Ib.

e. Sec. 25. Every Law to embrace but one object.

94. The constitution requires that every law enacted by the legislature shall embrace but one object, and that shall be expressed in the title. A law is constitutional in view of this section, where the subjects embraced in the same statute, and not expressed by the title, have congruity or proper connection. De Witt v. City of San Francisco, 2 Cal. 299.

Formation of Corporations.—Executive Department.

95. The constitution of the State is not to be considered as a grant of power, but rather as a restriction upon the powers of the legislature; and that it is competent for the legislature to exercise all powers not forbidden by the constitution of the State, or delegated to the general government, or prohibited by the constitution of the United States. People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 49; Thompson v. Williams, 6 Cal. 89.

96. The provision that "every law enacted by the legislature shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in the title." is merely directory, and does not nullify laws passed in violation of it. Washington v. Page, 4 Cal. 388.

97. A legislature may exercise all powers not prohibited to them by the constitution; except, perhaps, in the single case of acts contrary to natural justice; and even this exception has more foundation in the speculation of moralists than the decisions of wise jurists. People v. Bigler, 5 Cal. 27.

98. Under the constitution of this State the amendment of a statute operates as an absolute repeal of the old statute or section so amended, even if the amendment takes nothing away from the old law, but merely adds a proviso in certain cases. Billings v. Harvey, 6 Cal. 383.

99. Whether there is any restriction upon legislative power irrespective of the constitution, is a question upon which ethical and political writers have differed. Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 10.

100. It is an express restriction upon the powers of the legislative department so full, clear, definite and certain, that it would seem to need no application of legal rules of construction; and where the language of the constitution is express, and the intent plain, there is no power in the judicial department to set it aside, whatever inconvenience may result from a legitimate application of the provision. Nouques v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 66.

101. The twenty-fifth section of art. 4 of the constitution, which requires that every law enacted by the legislature shall embrace but one object, and that shall be embraced in the title, is merely directory;

it does not defeat laws passed in violation of it. Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 316.

f. Sec. 31. Formation of Corporations.

102. The 31st section of the 4th article of the constitution provides that corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act, except for municipal purposes: held, that the term "municipal purposes" is limited to governmental and cannot be extended to commercial purposes. Low v. City of Marysville, 5 Cal. 216.

g. Sec. 37. Organization of Cities.

103. There is no constitutional inhibition against incorporating a portion of the inhabitants of a county as a city, or creating a county out of the territory of a city; as a consolidation, the very necessity of the case both permits and demands it. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 103; People v. Mullins, 10 Cal. 21; People v. Beatty, 14 Cal. 572.

5. Art. V. Executive Department.

a. Sec. 2. Election of a Governor.

104. The constitution is just as clear and express that the governor shall hold his office until his successor is qualified, as it is that he shall hold it two years from the time of his installation. People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 44.

b. Sec. 8. Governor to fill vacant offices.

105. The constitutional power of filling vacancies vested in the governor applies only to vacancies occurring under circumstances when the original appointing or electing power cannot act. People v. Fitch, 1 Cal. 535.

106. Such power is limited by the period when the people or the legislature can elect or appoint, on the arrival of which his power ceases, and the right of appointment returns to the original appointing power. Ib.

107. The power to remove an officer is an incident to the power to appoint, as a general proposition, and is made so expressly by the constitution. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 102.

108. The power of a governor to fill a vacancy in an office is not derived from the statute, but from article 5, section 8 of the constitution, and that the appointee of the executive would only hold until an election by the next legislature. People v. Langdon, 8 Cal. 12.

109. It would seem the evident intent of the constitution is to limit the executive patronage, and where the term of an office is fixed by the constitution or a statute, the power of a removal does not exist in the executive. People v. Mizner, 7 Cal. 523; People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 46.

110. To constitute the "holding" of an office within the meaning of the constitution, there must be a concurrence of two wills—that of the appointing power and that of the person appointed. The appointment is complete when the commission is duly issued, but the person appointed is required to give bonds and take the oath of office before he can possess the office. These acts constitute a condition precedent to the holding the office. People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 43.

111. Where the constitution clearly enumerates the events that shall constitute a vacancy in a particular office, we must suppose all other causes of vacancy excluded, especially when this construction can lead to no injurious consequences. Ib. 45.

c. Sec. 16. Vacancy in the office of Governor.

112. The constitution itself clearly defines the sense of the phrase "vacancy" of the office of governor, as used in the 16th section, by specifically enumerating in the succeeding section the instances which devolve the duties of the executive upon the lieutenant governor. Ib.

d. Sec. 18. State Officers.

113. It is part of the constitutional policy of this State that all elective officers connected with the executive department of the government shall be elected at the same time and place and in the same manner. People v. Meloney, 15 Cal. 62.

114. A controller must be elected biennially, at the same time and place and in the same manner with the governor and lieutenant governor, and an appointment of a controller by the governor before this biennial general election, whatever its effect otherwise, cannot defeat this constitutional policy, nor deprive the people of their right to fill the office of controller at such election. Ib.

6. Art. VI. Judicial Department.

a. Sec. 1. Courts of the State.

115. Where the statute fails to provide for an appeal, the party must bring himself within the constitutional provisions of appeals; or the judgment of the court below will be final and conclusive. Webb v. Hanson, 3 Cal. 68; Ib. 105.

116. The constitution of the State recognizes a distinction between law and equity. Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 7.

117. Each branch of the judicial department had its functions assigned by the constitution and was beyond the control of either of the other departments of the government as far as its powers and jurisdiction are concerned. Parsons v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 5 Cal. 44.

118. The superior court of San Francisco, as an inferior municipal court, is a constitutional court. Seale v. Mitchell, 5 Cal. 403.

119. The distribution of power among the several courts enumerated in the constitution embraces all cases of ordinary judicial cognizance, whether of law or equity, or criminal, or such as pertain to the administration of estates of deceased persons, or such as may not be classed as those belonging to law or equity, but are such special cases as the legislature may prescribe. Zander v. Coe, 5 Cal. 232.

120. Where the constitution does not limit the jurisdiction of the various courts of this State to a particular class of cases or subject matter, and jurisdiction in certain cases is not conferred exclusively upon any particular court, the same may be disposed of among the various courts as the legislature may think proper. O'Callaghan v. Booth, 6 Cal. 67.

121. The superior court of the city of San Francisco, which was created under the power of the constitution, "to establish such municipal and other inferior courts as may be deemed necessary," is a municipal court, whose jurisdiction need not necessarily be confined to its municipality, and the act extending its jurisdiction so as to let its process run beyond its territory is constitutional. Hickman v. O'Neal, 10 Cal. 294; overruling Meyer v. Kalkman, 6 Cal. 589.

b. Sec. 2. Judges of the Supreme Court.

122. The unconstitutionality of the statute empowering the Governor to commission a person as judge of the supreme court during the temporary absence of one of its judges fully discussed. People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 198, 610.

c. Sec. 4. Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

123. The constitution of the State confers the authority of peace officers upon the justices of the supreme court and the district judges. People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 13.

124. The supreme court has no jurisdiction in cases where the matter in dispute is less than two hundred dollars, nor has the constitution which defined this jurisdiction excepted those cases pending before its adoption. Luther v. Ship Apollo, 1 Cal. 16.

125. The legislature has not provided the supreme court with a jury in any case, nor authorized it to cause an issue of facts to be made up in that court and referred to another court for trial. All issues of fact are to be tried in the inferior courts of this State. Ex parte the Attorney General, 1 Cal. 87.

126. The constitution has not clothed the supreme court with the powers and jurisdiction of the court of king's bench in England. Ib.

127. The supreme court is strictly an appellate tribunal, and has no original jurisdiction except in cases of habeas corpus, and consequently is not empowered to issue a writ of quo warranto for the purpose of inquiring by what authority a person exercises the duties of an office. Ib. 88.

128. The supreme court having no original jurisdiction to issue a writ of quo warranto, application for the same should be made to the district court, and should the relief be refused which it alone has the power to grant, the supreme court may issue the writ of mandate commanding the necessary process to be issued, or by its writ of injunction or prohibition prevent the abuse of the power and correct errors on appeal in the exercise of their powers. Ib. 89.

129. The constitution has not enumerated the courts from whose judgments an appeal will lie to the supreme court, and the statutes have not conferred upon the supreme court appellate jurisdiction over judgments of county courts.* Warner v. Hall, 1 Cal. 91.

130. The supreme court cannot exercise the jurisdiction conferred by the constitution until the mode in which it shall be exercised is prescribed by statute. Ib.

131. Authority is vested by the statute in the supreme court to issue writs of mandamus in all cases in which it may appear to form the appropriate remedy, and the constitution warrants that authority whenever the issuance of that writ may be necessary to render the appellate jurisdiction effectual. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 145.

132. It could never have been the intention of the framers of the constitution to deny to the higher courts, both original and appellate, any jurisdiction in that large class of cases where the relief sought is not susceptible of pecuniary estimation. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 253.

133. The supreme court is limited in its appellate jurisdiction to actions where the amount involved is over two hundred dollars, and cannot entertain an appeal in an action where the amount in controversy is less, though the costs added thereto exceed two hundred dollars. Dumphy v. Guindon, 13 Cal. 30; overruling Gordon v. Ross, 2 Cal. 156.

134. The words "matter of dispute" in the constitution, conferring jurisdiction on the supreme court, mean the subject of litigation—the matter for which suit is brought. Dumphy v. Guindon, 13 Cal. 30.

*The act of May 15th, 1854, confers this appellate jurisdiction on the supreme court.

d. Sec. 5. Judges of the District Court.

135. When a district judge is elected by the people on the occasion of a vacancy in the office, he is under the constitution elected for a full term of six years. People v. Burbank, 12 Cal. 387; People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 85.

136. The constitution, though it fixes the period of the tenure of the office of district judge, does not fix any day for the commencement of the term; and if it did, it would not follow that it applies to judges afterwards elected to new districts. People v. Burbank, 12 Cal. 391; People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 85.

137. All the constitution means by the expression "during the term," as used in secs. 15 and 16 of art. 6, is during the time or period for which the officer is elected. People v. Burbank, 12 Cal. 392.

e. Sec. 6. Jurisdiction of the District Court.

138. District courts have no appellate jurisdiction constitutionally. People v. Peralta, 3 Cal. 379; Caulfield v. Hudson, 3 Cal. 389; Hernandes v. Simon, 3 Cal. 464; Gray v. Schupp, 4 Cal. 185; Reed v. McCormick, 4 Cal. 342.

139. Although the jurisdiction of mining claims is given to justices' courts, yet if the amount in controversy is above two hundred dollars, the district court has jurisdiction as defined and confirmed by the constitution. Ilicks v. Bell, 3 Cal. 224.

140. Where the principal sum sued for is less than two hundred dollars, the district court has no jurisdiction constitutionally. Arnold v. Van Brunt, 4 Cal. 89.

141. The constitutional provision that in all issues of fact joined in the probate courts the jurisdiction of the district courts shall be unlimited, does not confer appellate jurisdiction on the district courts from the probate courts. Reed v. McCormick, 4 Cal. 343.

142. The district courts of this State have the same control over the persons of minors as well as their estates that the court of chancery in England has. This jurisdiction is conferred by the constitution, and cannot be divested by any statute. Wilson v. Roach, 4 Cal. 366.

143. Where an action has been commenced in a district court in good faith for a sum greater than two hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, a judgment may be rendered for an amount less than the sum prescribed by the constitution limiting the jurisdiction of the court in the commencement of the action. Jackson v. Whartenby, 5 Cal. 95.

144. The jurisdiction given by the constitution to the district court is exclusively original and not appellate, and only when the amount in controversy exceeds two hundred dollars. Zander v. Coe, 231.

145. So much of the act of 1855 as provides for the transfer to the district court of issues of fact already decided in the probate court, is unconstitutional and void. Deck's Estate v. Gherke, 6 Cal. 669.

146. The legislature must directly select the places for holding the district court; it does not follow that the right to select a county seat may not be conferred by law upon the people, as the constitution does not require that the district court shall be held at a county seat. Upham v. Supervisors of Sutter County, 8 Cal. 382.

147. The office of sheriff and tax collector are constitutional offices, and though the offices of sheriff and tax collector are distinct from the constitution, yet they may be united in the same hands. People v. Squires, 14 Cal. 15.

148. The vesting of the office of tax collector in the sheriff being by legislative act, although the office cannot be destroyed by the legislature, yet the legislature is not restricted in this respect by the constitution, may direct in what manner the duties shall be discharged, and how the office may be temporarily filled Ib. 17.

149. The constitution of this State does not fix the term of the office of district attorney, but merely directs (art. 6, sec. 7) that the legislature shall provide for his election by the people, and shall fix by law his duties and compensation. People v. Brown, 16 Cal. 442.

g. Sec. 8. County Court and Court of Sessions.

a. County Judge.

150. By the constitution, judges of the county courts held their offices, when elected, for four years. People v. Templeton, 12 Cal. 401.

151. The period of the tenure of a county judge is fixed by the constitution at four years. The legislature may fix the commencement of the term, as also the time of the election. People v. Rosborough, 13 Cal. 187.

b. Courts of Sessions.

152. The officers composing the court of sessions are judicial officers, and consequently are forbidden by the constitution from exercising any other functions. Burgoyne v. Supervisors of San Francisco County, 5 Cal. 22; Phelan v. Supervisors of San Francisco County, 6 Cal. 540.

153. The justices of the peace, are not regarded in the constitution as supernumeraries of the court of sessions, and in the language of the decision there quoted, they must, as necessary officers, begin with and continue through the trial. People v. Ah Chung, 5 Cal. 105.

c. Jurisdiction of the Courts of Sessions.

154. The eighth section of the sixth article of the constitution necessarily limits the jurisdiction of the courts of sessions to criminal business. Burgoyne v. Supervisors of San Francisco County, 5 Cal. 22.

155. The appellate jurisdiction, in either civil or criminal cases, conferred on the courts of session by the statute, is unconstitutional. People v. Applegate, 5 Cal. 295; People v. Shear, 7 Cal. 141; People v. Vick, 7 Cal. 166; People v. Fowler, 9 Cal. 87.

156. The court of sessions, under the constitution, can only exercise powers of a judicial character. Hardenburgh v. Kidd, 10 Cal. 403.

h. Sec. 9. Jurisdiction of the County Court.

157. The "special cases" mentioned in the constitution, as those which the legislature may confer jurisdiction on the county court, was not meant to include any class of cases for which the courts of general jurisdiction had always supplied a remedy. Parsons v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 5 Cal. 44.

158. The constitutional provision "that county courts shall have such jurisdiction, in cases arising in justices' courts and in special cases, as the legislature may prescribe, but shall have no original civil jurisdiction, except in such special cases," cannot be held to confer exclusive original jurisdiction in all special cases upon the county court, but only to such jurisdiction as the legislature may permit to the county courts. O'Callaghan v. Booth, 6 Cal. 66.

159. Cases of insolvency under the act of 1852 are special cases within the meaning of the constitution, and the legislature may confer jurisdiction in such cases upon the county courts. Harper v. Freelon, 6 Cal. 76.

160. There is no prohibition in the constitution to this grant of authority to the county judge, to award injunctions in cases brought in the district court, and the implication is decidedly in favor of its exercise. Thompson v. Williams, 6 Cal. 89; Orandall v. Woods, 6 Cal. 451.

161. The act of March 27th, 1850, conferring upon the county court the power to incorporate towns, is unconstitutional. People v. Town of Nevada, 6 Cal. 144.

162. The act giving jurisdiction over the subject of contested elections to the county judge is constitutional, and district judges are embraced within it. Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 150.

163. County courts, under the statute, have jurisdiction in proceedings by mandamus, and the statute is constitutional. Jacks v. Day, 15 Cal. 92.

164. Aside from previous decisions of this court, the true construction of our constitution (art. 6, sec. 9) is, that the legislature has power to confer on county courts jurisdiction in such specially enumerated and defined cases as, in its discretion, should be confined to those tribunals. Ib.

i. Sec. 10. Seats of Justice.

165. By the constitution of this State, the legislature must fix the seats of justice in the county, and cannot delegate that power to any body, or to a decision by popular vote. Dickey v. Hurlbut, 5 Cal. 344—see Upham v. Supervisors of Sutter County, 8 Cal. 382.

j. Sec. 11. Fees to Judicial Officers.

166. Recorders of cities cannot, within the provision of the constitution inhibiting judicial officers, except justices of the peace from taking fees. Curtis v. Sacramento County, 13 Cal. 294.

k. Sec. 12. Judicial Decisions.

167. The legislature cannot require the supreme court to give the reasons of its decisions in writing. The constitutional duty of the court is discharged by the rendition of its judgment. Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 25.

l. Sec. 14. Justices of the Peace.

168. The cognizance of all cases under two hundred dollars, and only in these cases, in civil actions, is left to justices courts. Zander v. Coe, 5 Cal. 232.

169. The apparently unlimited power granted by the fourteenth section of the constitution to the legislature to prescribe the powers of justices of the peace, must be taken with the qualifications attached to this grant by the previous section; and when so construed, it is obvious and apparent that it is only those cases which were undisposed of by the previous grants of powers which are within the control of the legislature, and which may be vested either in the magistrates or county courts. Such are all cases of law and equity, where the amount does not exceed two hundred dollars. Ib. 234.

170. The statute which vested magistrates with jurisdiction in civil cases, where the sum in controversy amounts to more than two hundred dollars, is unconstitutional and void. Zander v. Coe, 5 Cal. 234; Freeman v. Powers, 7 Cal. 105.

171. The constitution vests the legislature with power to confer such jurisdiction on justices' courts, as are not exclusively vested in other courts. The act conferring criminal jurisdiction on justices' courts is constitutional. People v. Fowler, 9 Cal. 87.

7. Art. VIII. State Debts.

172. The language of the constitution is without ambiguity, and expressly forbids the legislature from creating a debt of more than $300,000 in any way, unless the same is left to the vote of the people. People v. Johnson, 6 Cal. 500.

173. This feature of our constitution was admirably designed to check the improvident expenditure of money and the accumulation of taxes. Ib. 503.

174. The legislature can adopt the present indebtedness of the State over and above the constitutional amount, and submit the same to the people for ratification, in conformity to article eight of the constitution; and also make appropriations for the future necessary expenses of the government over and above the revenues. Ib. 506.

175. If the legislature has no right to create a State debt beyond the limit fixed by the constitution, that body has no constitutional right to tax the people to pay a void debt. Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 70.

176. The provision of the constitution which prohibits the State from creating debts over $300,000, or loaning its credit only, applies to the State as a corporation, as a political sovereign represented by the law-making power, and does not prevent the State authorizing counties or municipal corporations to create debts beside the State debt up to the constitutional limit.

State Debt.—Promiscuous Provisions.

Pattison v. Supervisors Yuba County, 13 Cal. 183.

177. The act of March 21st, 1856, creating a board of State prison commissioners and defining their duties, is constitutional. It does not create a debt or liability against the people of the State, in contravention of the eighth article of the constitution, and the contract made with Estill under the act is valid and binding upon the State. State of California v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 454.

178. The support of convicts is as much the duty of the State as to provide for the salaries of her officers. It constitutes one of the ordinary sources of the State's expenditures; and a law authorizing a contract for keeping the prisoners at a fixed price—the payment and service being future acts—is not in conflict with the constitution. Ib. 455.

179. Under the contract made with Estill for the payment to him of $10,000 per month on his lease of the prison and convicts, that sum per month is appropriated by the act; but these appropriations are to take effect, and the services are to be rendered, in future. Until the services are rendered, there is no debt on the part of the State. The State became indebted only as the services were each month performed. The lessee could not have claimed, at any time after the contract was made, the aggregate of all the monthly installments, because the State never owed him that amount. Ib.

180. The eighth article of the constitution was intended to prevent the State from running into debt, and to keep her expenditures, except in certain cases, within her revenues. These revenues may be appropriated in anticipation of their receipt, as effectually as when actually in the treasury. The appropriation of the moneys, when received, meets the services as they are rendered, thus discharging the liabilities as they arise, or rather anticipating and preventing their existence. The appropriation accompanying the service operates in the nature of a cash payment. Ib.

181. The act of March 29th, 1860, providing for the construction of a State capitol in the city of Sacramento, is not unconstitutional, as creating an indebtedness or liability on the part of the State exceeding the limit of $300,000 prescribed by the constitution. The act authorizes the commissioners therein named to contract only to the extent of $100,000. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 253.

182. The provision in section five, article three, of the charter of San Francisco of 1851, as to not creating liabilities beyond $50,000, over and above the annual revenue of the city, etc., is directory, and not a limitation upon the power of the city to contract debts. The legal effect of this provision is entirely different from the clause in the eighth article of our constitution, prohibiting the legislature from creating debts against the State. Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 264.

8. Art. XI. Miscellaneous Provisions.

a. Sec. 1. Seat of Government.

183. The legislature by a constitutional vote passed an act to remove the capital from San José to Vallejo. It would seem as though the fact that it secured to our State, then in its infancy, without funds or credit, so munificent a donation, that it ought not to be regarded as a wanton abuse of constitutional power. People v. Bigler, 5 Cal. 27.

184. Vested rights have grown up under the laws passed at the place to which the capital was changed, and unless it be constitutional, all laws there passed are a dead letter. Ib. 28.

b. Sec. 11. Suits against the State.

185. In the absence of any statute to that effect, the State cannot be sued, and the judgment against her is erroneous. People v. Talmage, 6 Cal. 258.

c. Sec. 13. Taxation shall be equal and uniform.

186. The constitutional provision that requires taxation to be uniform, refers only to property, and not that the entire aggregate amount of taxation upon persons or the value of property in every city and town of the State should be equal to and uniform with the amount in every other city and town. People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 252.

187. The provision that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State does not operate as a limitation to the taxing power of the legislature, and apply to every species of taxation; but is to be taken as applying only to direct taxation on property as such. People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 49.

188. The power of the legislature to tax trades, professions and occupations, is a matter completely within the control and rules inhibited by the constitution, eminently belonging to and vesting in the sound discretion of the legislature. Ib.

189. The revenue act of May, 1853, does not violate that provision of the State constitution which provides that all laws of a general nature shall be uniform in their operation. By a uniform operation, it was intended that laws must, if possible, affect persons and property alike. A perfectly equal tax law is utopian and impossible, from the very nature of the subject. Ib. 55.

190. The provision of the charter of Sacramento authorizing the improvement of the streets, and the mode and manner of the assessment, is not in conflict with section thirteen of article eleven of the constitution. Burnett v. City of Sacramento, 12 Cal. 83.

191. Where the legislature passed an act to remedy the failure on the part of the tax collector to publish the names of the owners, together with a list of the property, such act cannot be defeated upon the constitutional ground that it is not uniform in its operation. Such act is not general, but special. Moore v. Patch, 12 Cal. 272.

192. The only limitation upon the taxing power of the legislature is the provision for equality and uniformity found in the constitution. People v. Burr, 13 Cal. 350.

193. The fact that the legislature has once exercised its powers in limiting the extent of taxation in municipal corporations under the provision of the constitution, does not prevent the legislature from again exercising its power by enlarging the authority to tax. Ib. 355.

194. An act of the legislature authorizing boards of supervisors to appoint a collector of foreign miners' licenses, is not unconstitutional. Assessors and tax collectors are constitutional officers; but it is not necessary under the thirteenth section of article eleven of the constitution that every portion of the revenue pass through their hands. People v. Squires, 14 Cal. 17.

195. The act of 1860 authorizing suit to be brought for the unpaid taxes of the years 1858 and 1859 in the city and county of Sacramento; and prohibiting the defendants from setting up in defense any informality in the levy or assessment of the tax; and making certified copies of the delinquent tax list, or the original or duplicate assessment rolls, evidence of the delinquency of the property assessed, of the amount of taxes due and unpaid, and that all the forms of law in relation to the levy and assessment have been complied with, is constitutional. People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 343.

196. Nor is the act unconstitutional because it compels the delinquent, if sued, to pay costs, and a percentage by way of attorney's fees, in addition to the tax assessed. Ib. 344.

197. Nor is it any constitutional objection to the act that the delinquent tax list for 1859 was not properly published. The liability to pay the tax assessed preceded the publication of the delinquent list, and suit, under the act of 1860, is based upon that liability. Ib.

198. The tax levied in Sacramento county for the wagon road from the eastern boundary line of said county through El Dorado county to Carson Valley, under the act of 1858, and the tax for the agricultural hall, under the act of 1859, are constitutional. Ib. 345.

d. Sec. 14. Separate and common Property of Husband and Wife.

199. The capacity of the wife to hold separate property is created by the constitution; and her title thereto depends upon the mode of acquisition, and vests before the inventory can be filed. Selover v. American Russian Com. Co., 7 Cal. 270.

200. Neither the husband nor his creditor can claim the proceeds or fruits of the separate estate of the wife. A law giving them such fruits is unconstitutional. George v. Ransom, 15 Cal. 323.

201. The term "separate property," in the fourteenth section of article eleven of the constitution, is used in its common law sense, and by that law "separate property" means an estate held, both in its use and its title, for the exclusive benefit of the wife. Ib. 324.

202. The wife cannot mortgage her separate real estate, unless her husband unites in the conveyance in the mode prescribed by our statutes; and these statutes, when operating in futuro, are constitutional. Harrison v. Brown, 16 Cal. 290.

e. Sec. 15. Homestead Law.

203. It is the homestead and other property of the head of the family which is by the constitution to be protected from forced sale. It is the alienation by the owner, if a married man, which the statute declares shall be invalid without the signature of the wife. Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 474.

204. The constitution provides, in the fifteenth section of article eleven, that "the legislature shall protect by law from forced sale a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families." It only requires legislation exempting the property from forced sale. It does not look to legislation in restraint of voluntary alienation. The statute goes beyond the constitutional provision. Neither the constitution or the statute recognize any estate in the wife; on the contrary, it is clear that both were framed upon the idea that it was out of the property of the husband, or at least, common property, that the homestead was to be carved. Bowman v. Norton, 16 Cal. 217.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

- I. In general.
- II. Federal Laws.
- III. Powers of the Legislature.
- IV. Conflict of Statutes.
- V. Approval of Statutes.
- VI. Amendment of Statutes.
- VII. Repeal of Statutes.
- VIII. Adjudications upon various Statutes.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Provisions of a statute which are retroactive in their effect, impairing vested rights, are repugnant to the principles of the common and civil law, and are void. Gonzales v. Huntley, 1 Cal. 33.

2. A statute should be construed to operate upon the future and not upon the past, but with the exception of these cases which come within the purview of prohibitory clauses in State constitutions, or that of the United States, there is no case in which it is not competent for a State legislature to give to a statute a retroactive effect. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 65; Thorne v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 131.

3. Where a statute prescribes unequivocally the rights of a party in the course of a judicial proceeding, the court has no discretion to deprive him of those rights. Stevens v. Ross, 1 Cal. 97.

4. Where a remedy is strictly given by statute, and of a character not recognized by the common law, and no personal notice on the person proceeded against, the statute should be strictly construed. Souter v. Ship Sea Witch, 1 Cal. 163.

5. A statute must be construed so as to give meaning and intent, if possible, to every clause and word. Souter v. Ship Sea Witch, 1 Cal. 164; City of San Francisco v. Hazen, 5 Cal. 171.

6. To hold that a law operates all that part of the day of its passage prior thereto, is as absurd and as much of a fiction as the old doctrine that by relation it should commence running on the first day of parliament. People v. Clark, 1 Cal. 407.

7. If no time be specified when a statute shall be in force, it ought to go into effect from and after its passage—that is, when its existence is perfected. Ib.

8. Courts ought not, on slight implication or vague suspicion, to declare a law unconstitutional, but by every settled rule of construction are bound to suppose that the legislature had some proper motive in view; and if an act by one construction would be unconstitutional for a certain purpose, but by another construction constitutional for certain other purposes, the latter must be adopted. Ex parte Perkins, 2 Cal. 438.

9. The words "may and shall" should be considered in the construction of the law as incontrovertible terms. Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 412.

10. Where a right exists at common law, and a new remedy is given by statute, the latter is cumulative, and either remedy may be pursued; but where the right and the remedy both are given by statute, that remedy can alone be pursued. People v. Craycroft, 2 Cal. 244; People v. Raynes, 3 Cal. 367; Cohen v. Barrett, 5 Cal. 210; Ward v. Severance, 7 Cal. 129; Roberts v. Landecker, 9 Cal. 267; State v. Poulterer, 15 Cal. 526.

11. In construing a statute, the sections must be taken together, and that interpretation should be placed upon the language which will give the particular section utility and effect—make it compatible with common sense and the plainest principles of justice. Burnham v. Hays, 3 Cal. 119.

12. In construing statutes, force and meaning should be given to every part, and courts will not, except when the language is so vague and indefinite as to be wholly destitute of meaning, reject any portion. Chever v. Hays, 3 Cal. 473.

13. Where a law is capable of two constructions, that one must be adopted which will preserve the sense as well of the several parts as of the whole act. City of San Francisco v. Hazen, 5 Cal. 171.

14. The title of an act is no part of the law itself, although it may be referred to in cases of doubt to ascertain the intention of the legislature. Cohen v. Barrett, 5 Cal. 209.

15. In construing statutes and the constitution, the rule is almost universal to adhere to the doctrine of stare decisis. Seale v. Mitchell, 5 Cal. 403.

16. In construing statutes, the words must be interpreted according to their common acceptance. Quigley v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 418; Harris v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 518.

17. It is a familiar rule in construing statutes, that where there are two laws upon the same subject, they must be so construed as to maintain both, if it can be done without destroying the evident intent and meaning of the latter act. Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 42.

18. The intention of the legislature, where it can be ascertained, must govern in the construction of a statute. Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 50; People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 216; Ex parte Ellis, 11 Cal. 223.

19. The rule of law in the construction of remedial statutes requires great liberality, and whenever the meaning is doubtful it must be so construed as to extend the remedy. White v. Steam Tug Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 470.

20. In construing statutes, the rule is that general words are controlled by specific exceptions. Lucas v. Payne, 7 Cal. 96.

21. Where words have a distinct and separate meaning, well recognized, the court is bound to suppose the legislature employs words with reference to their correct signification. People v. Stewart, 7 Cal. 144.

22. When a statute assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, we must presume that all the effects intended by the law makers are stated. Bird v. Denison, 7 Cal. 307; Lee v. Evans, 8 Cal. 435; People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 45; Perkins v. Thornburgh, 10 Cal. 191.

23. Statutes in derogation of common law principles are construed with strictness. People v. Buster, 11 Cal. 221.

24. It is a well settled rule of construction that statutes upon the same matter must be construed together, and that a general provision must be controlled by one that is special. American River Water Co. v. Bear River Water Co., 11 Cal. 338.

25. Where a statute introduces a new offense, without reference to anything else, an indictment describing the offense in the words of the statute is sufficient. People v. Saviers, 14 Cal. 30.

26. Provisions in a statute in regard to the time within which an act is required to be done are generally to be construed as directory; but such a construction is improper where a consequence is attached to a failure to comply with the statute. Shaw v. Randall, 15 Cal. 387.

27. Statutes should be construed according to what appears to be the intention of the legislature, and even though two statutes relating to the same subject be not in terms repugnant or inconsistent, if the latter statute was clearly intended to prescribe the only rule which should govern, it will be construed as repealing the original act. City of Sacramento v. Bird, 15 Cal. 296.

28. The title of an act cannot be used to restrain or control any positive provision of the act; but where the meaning of the body of the act is doubtful, the title may be resorted to as a means of ascertaining the intention of the Legislature. Flynn v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 365.

Federal Laws.—Powers of the Legislature.

II. FEDERAL LAWS.

29. A certificate of exemplification of a judgment rendered in another State, when attested to by the clerk under the seal of the court, and when the judge certifies that the attestation is in due form of law, is sufficient under the act of congress of May 26th, 1790, to sustain an action upon the judgment in another State. Thompson v. Manrow, 1 Cal. 428.

30. Justices of the peace alone have power to try and commit deserted seamen under the act of congress of 1790, and commissioners of the United States courts can only arrest and commit for trial. Ex parte Crandall, 2 Cal. 144.

III. POWERS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

31. The constitution requires that "every law shall embrace but one object, and that shall be expressed in the title." A law is constitutional in this respect where the subjects embraced in the same statute and not expressed by the title have congruity or proper connection. De Witt v. City of San Francisco, 2 Cal. 299.

32. The arrest and commitment for deportation of fugitive slaves under the statute does not determine their slavery. It leaves that to future adjudication. Ex parte Perkins, 2 Cal. 438.

33. A deed void by reason of fraud cannot be made valid by statute so as to affect the rights of third persons. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 542.

34. The legislature may from time to time alter or change the remedy, provided they do not impair the right; but whenever they so far alter the remedy as to impair, destroy, change or render the right scarcely worth preserving, they impair the obligation of the contracts upon which the right is founded. Ib. 552.

35. The power of the legislature to tax trades, professions and occupations, is a matter completely within their control, and unless inhibited by the constitution, eminently belonging to and resting in the sound discretion of the legislature. People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 49.

36. If the legislature should pass a revenue act designedly operating unequally, or if a want of uniformity in its operation was apparent upon its face, it would be the duty of the supreme court to interfere and prevent the commission of so grave an injustice. Ib. 55.

37. The legislature possessed an undoubted right to transfer the criminal business of the court of sessions to the district court. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 380.

38. The provision of the constitution which requires that every law enacted by the legislature shall embrace but one object, which shall be expressed in its title, is merely directory and does not nullify laws passed in violation of it. Washington v. Page, 4 Cal. 389; Pierpont v. Couch, 10 Cal. 316.

39. The legislature may exercise all powers not prohibited to them by the constitution, except perhaps in the single case of acts contrary to natural justice; and even this exception has more foundation in the speculation of moralists than the decisions of wise jurists. People v. Bigler, 5 Cal. 27.

40. The constitution directs that the accused shall be presented by indictment; not the accused by name, but the person himself, leaving the precise form or words to be determined by statute. People v. Kelly, 6 Cal. 212.

41. While the legislature has power to direct in what manner county revenues shall be disposed of, still they cannot divest a right of a party which is complete and vested. Laforge v. Magee, 6 Cal. 651.

42. When the right to determine the extent and effect of a constitutional restriction is either expressly or by necessary implication confided to the legislature, then the judiciary has no right to interfere with the legislative construction, but must take it to be correct. Nouques v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 69.

43. An act of the legislature passed in pursuance of the constitution is as much the will of the people as a constitutional provision itself. The only difference between the two cases is, that they are changeable in different modes. Myers v. English, 9 Cal. 348.

44. It is within the legitimate power of the judiciary to declare the action of the legislature unconstitutional, where that action exceeds the limits of the supreme law, but the courts have no means and no power to avoid the effects of nonaction. Ib. 349.

45. The legislature may use or refer to an act unconstitutional in itself, to indicate its will in respect to a constitutional purpose. People v. Bircham, 12 Cal. 55.

46. The legislature may authorize a municipal corporation to pay claims invalid in law, but equitable and just in themselves. People v. Burr, 13 Cal. 349.

47. Laws may be absolute, dependent upon no contingency, or they may be subject to such conditions as the legislature in its wisdom may impose. They may take effect only upon the happening of events which are future and uncertain, and among others the voluntary act of the parties upon whom they are designed to operate. Ib. 357.

48. The legislature has a right to authorize a local tax for the purpose of internal improvements; it may authorize the local authorities to impose the tax; this authority may be given upon petition or without it, or by or without a submission of the proposition to the people, and it is not essential that the improvement should be within or confined to the locality taxed, and a subscription for stock to be paid for by taxation is a valid contract to pay it. Pattison v. Supervisors of Yuba County, 13 Cal. 189.

49. The legislature can pass such laws as it may judge expedient, subject only to the prohibitions of the constitution. If it overstep those limits and attempt to impair the obligation of contracts, or to pass ex post facto laws, or grant special acts of incorporation for other than municipal purposes, the judiciary will set aside its legislation and protect the rights it has assailed. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 34.

50. The legislature possesses the entire control and management of the financial affairs of the State that it can levy such taxes as it may deem expedient, subject only to the constitutional requirements of equality and uniformity, and devote the proceeds of the taxation to such specific objects as it may think proper. But we deny that after having made an appropriation in view of a contemplated contract to be based thereon, and such contract is made, and funds to meet the appropriation are received into the treasury, it can deprive the party with whom the contract is entered into of such funds by repealing the appropriation. In other words, the control of the legislature over particular funds, when received, may be subject to the obligations of a contract made with reference to them. By such contract the legislature does not derogate from its own power or that of any subsequent legislature. It only acts finally upon a particular subject which is thus placed beyond the reach of future action. It is true, the legislature may not direct any taxation; may repeal all laws relating to the collection of the revenue, and thus prevent the receipt of any funds upon which the appropriation can operate; but this possibility does not affect the right of the parties when such funds are actually received. Ib.

51. The duty of the judiciary is to pronounce upon the validity of the laws passed by the legislature, to construe their language, and enforce the rights acquired thereunder. Its judgment in those matters can only be controlled by its intelligence and conscience. From the nature of its duties, its action must be free from coercion. But it is not independent of the legislature in numerous matters materially affecting its action and usefulness. The legislature fixes the places of its sessions, determines the number of its terms, and in the regulation of proceedings in civil and criminal cases, provides the manner in which suits shall be brought, prosecutions conducted, appeals taken, and all the vast machinery by which rights are asserted and wrongs redressed. Ib. 39.

52. The legislature has no power to take the property of one person and give it to another; nor can private property be taken for public use, unless compensation to the owner precede or accompany the taking. Gillan v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 155.

IV. CONFLICT OF STATUTES.

53. The law of Louisiana requires a co-partnership contract to be in writing; the law of California does not: held, that a verbal contract of copartnership made in ## Conflict of Statutes.—Approval of Statutes.

Louisiana to be executed in California was valid. Young v. Pearson, 1 Cal. 450.

54. The political laws, as the laws of slavery of the ceded or conquered country, give way to the laws of the acquiring country. Ex parte Perkins, 2 Cal. 439.

55. On May 1st, 1851, the legislature "passed" two acts; one to regulate criminal cases, the other to regulate fees in office; both fixing the fees of the clerk in criminal cases, and essentially different: held, that the latter act must govern, as the subject of fees was the sole object of that act, and a mere incident of the criminal act. Dobbins v. Supervisors Yuba County, 5 Cal. 415.

56. The act of May 3d, 1852, providing for the disposal of the 500,000 acres of land granted by Congress to this State, is not in conflict with the act of Congress of 1841, which provides for their location after they have been surveyed. Nims v. Palmer, 6 Cal. 13.

57. From our constitution, if a statute or section of a statute is reenacted, it is totally inconsistent with the idea that the old statute or section still remains in force, or has vitality for any purpose whatever. Billings v. Harvey, 6 Cal. 383.

58. Where an act is passed between the time of the commission of the act and the death of the victim, defining the offense and providing for its punishment, and providing that upon trials for crimes committed previous to its enactment the party should be tried by the laws in force at the time of the commission of the crime, the prisoner must be tried under the law in force when the violation of the law was committed. People v. Gill, 6 Cal. 638; 7 Cal. 357.

59. The law does not favor repeals by implication; where there is an apparent conflict between two acts, it is the duty of the court, if possible, to reconcile them; but if this cannot be done, then the last act must govern. Scofield v. White, 7 Cal. 401; Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 316.

60. The power of congress to regulate commerce is exclusive when exercised. The act of congress of July 29th, 1850, authorizing mortgages upon sea-going vessels to be recorded, and making the record notice to third parties, being in conflict with our statute of frauds, the latter must yield. Mitchell v. Steelman, 8 Cal. 370.

61. Different principles of the law must be harmoniously applied to the circumstances of the particular case. Adams v. Woods, 9 Cal. 29.

62. Rights of property acquired by contract, valid in the place where made, will be protected here. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 276.

63. Under the chattel mortgage act of 1857, a mortgage of shares of stock in an incorporated company is valid without a transfer on the books of the company, as is required by the corporation act of 1853 relative to pledges of stock by delivery of the certificates. The act of 1853 has no effect on the act of 1857. Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 58.

64. Statutes should be construed according to what appears to be the intention of the legislature; and even though two statutes relating to the same subject be not in terms repugnant or inconsistent, if the later statute was clearly intended to prescribe the only rule which should govern, it will be construed as repealing the original act. City of Sacramento v. Bird, 15 Cal. 295.

65. The fifty-fourth section of the act of April 16th, 1850, concerning crimes and punishments, (Wood's Dig. 335) is not repealed by the act of April 19th, 1856, (statutes 1856, 131) amendatory of, and supplementary to the act of 1850. Section two of the act of 1856 does not conflict with section fifty-four of the act of 1850. These sections refer to a different class of offenses. Under the latter, the abduction must be accompanied with a removal into another county, State or territory, or a design to remove the party beyond the limits of the State. Under the former, the abduction need not be accompanied with any such removal or design—the intent to detain and conceal being the gist of the offense. People v. Chu Quong, 15 Cal. 333.

V. APPROVAL OF STATUTES.

66. The hour of the approval of a statute is a fact to be ascertained and proved in all cases where the rights of parties are in any manner to be affected by the time of the approval. People v. Clark, 1 Cal. 407.

67. The court may go beyond the record evidence of a statute, and inquire whether it was passed or approved in accordance with the constitution. Fowler v. Pierce, 2 Cal. 168.

68. In approving the statutes the executive acts as a component part of the making power, and his power of approval ceases on the adjournment of the legislature. Ib.

69. Where an act was presented to the governor for approval on the last day of the session, and purports to have been approved on that day, but was in fact not approved until the next day after the adjournment: held, that the act was void, and that parol evidence was admissible to show when the act was approved. Ib.

70. The constitution provides that if any bill presented to the governor (having passed both houses of the legislature) shall not be returned within ten days after it shall have been presented to him—Sundays excepted—the same shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature by adjournment prevent such return. Price v. Whitman, 8 Cal. 415; overruling People v. Whitman, 6 Cal. 660.

VI. AMENDMENT OF STATUTES.

71. A general statute controlled in some of its provisions by a subsequent special statute is revived by the amendment of the latter intended to give effect to the former; and though the first statute gave jurisdiction to a court which could not constitutionally exercise it, the act becomes effectual by an amendment passed still later, transferring the jurisdiction to the proper body. People v. Phoenix, 6 Cal. 93.

72. The amendment of a statute operates as an absolute repeal of the old statute or section so amended, even if the amendment takes nothing away from the old law, but merely adds a proviso in certain cases. Billings v. Harvey, 6 Cal. 383.

VII. REPEAL OF STATUTES.

73. At a regular term of the district court the court fixed the time of holding an adjourned term in accordance with another statute; a statute was passed in the interval appointing other regular terms, and repealing the previous law authorizing the regular terms: held, that the law authorizing the time of holding adjourned terms was impliedly repealed, and that a term so holden was not legal. Domingues v. Domingues, 4 Cal. 186.

74. The legislature on the same day passed two acts: one to regulate proceedings in criminal cases, the other to regulate fees in office—both fixing the fees of the clerk in criminal cases, and essentially different: held, that the latter act must govern, as the subject of fees was the sole object of that act, and the fixing of fees in the former act being a mere incident, the main purpose of that act being to regulate criminal proceedings. Dobbins v. Supervisors of Yuba County, 5 Cal. 415.

75. A statute may be repealed by implication as well as in direct terms, and it is well settled that where a subsequent act is repugnant to a former one, the last operates without any repealing clause as a repeal of the first; and where two acts passed at different times are not in terms repugnant, yet if it is clearly evident that the last was intended as a revision or substitute of the first, it will repeal the first to the extent in which its provisions are revised or substituted. Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 316.

76. It may be presumed that the law does not favor repeals by implication; that where there is an apparent conflict between two acts it is the duty of the court, if possible, to reconcile them; but if this cannot be done, then the last act must govern. Scofield v. White, 7 Cal. 401.

77. Where a general repealing statute is passed, and on the next day a supplementary act is passed, excepting certain counties from the operation of the repeal to a certain extent: held, that the case was a special one, and there being no doubt of the true intention of the legislature, the supplemental act must be regarded as a part of the repealing act, and must be given the same effect as if passed on the same day. Manlove v. White, 8 Cal. 377.

VIII. ADJUDICATIONS UPON VARIOUS STATUTES.

78. The authority to issue writs of

Adjudications upon various Statutes.

certiorari, given by the statute to the supreme court, is to be regarded only as auxiliary to the complete jurisdiction of the supreme court over proceedings in inferior courts from which appeals lie direct. Warner v. Kelly, 1 Cal. 91.

79. The supreme court is authorized to render such judgment as substantial justice shall require; but by this is intended substantial legal justice, ascertained and determined by fixed rules and positive statutes, and not the abstract and varying notions of equity entertained by each individual. Harris v. Brown, 1 Cal. 98.

80. District courts have no statutory right to allow counsel fees in admiralty cases. Selby v. Bark Alice Tarlton, 1 Cal. 104.

81. District courts have no statutory authority to inquire into the propriety or validity of judgments to the courts of first instance transferred to the district courts, unless, perhaps, where a clear case of fraud should be made out. Belt v. Davis, 1 Cal. 141.

82. Authority is vested in the supreme court by statute to issue writs of mandamus when it is an appropriate remedy; and the constitution warrants that authority when necessary to render the appellate jurisdiction effectual. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 145.

83. To enable persons entitled to the benefits of the mechanic's lien to avail themselves of this extraordinary remedy, all the provisions of the law must be strictly complied with. Walker v. Hauss Hijo, 1 Cal. 185.

84. An action founded upon a statute to recover a penalty, where no penalty is imposed, cannot be sustained. Board of Health v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 1 Cal. 198.

85. In such a case, the action should be brought, if at all, to recover such damages as the plaintiffs can show they have actually sustained by reason of a refusal to comply with the statute. Ib.

86. Where statutes are in force requiring mortgages to be recorded, if a subsequent mortgagee has notice of the existence of a prior, unrecorded mortgage, he takes his lien subject to that of the first mortgage. Woodworth v. Guzman, 1 Cal. 205.

87. Corporations can possess or exercise such corporate powers only as are expressly given by the statute or by their charters, and such as shall be necessary to the exercise of the powers enumerated and given. Dunbar v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 356.

88. The act of the legislature, by which a district judge is empowered to hold court in another district, is constitutional and valid; and a court so held is not improperly organized. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 380.

89. The statute authorizing the granting of a license to keep a gambling house could not be construed as conferring a right to sue for a gaming debt, but as a protection solely against a criminal prosecution. Bryant v. Mead, 1 Cal. 441.

90. Our statute, allowing persons to testify in their own cases, is in derogation of the common law rule, and opens a wide door to perjury, and cannot be too strictly construed by courts. Hotaling v. Cronise, 2 Cal. 63.

91. The act "requiring the treasurer to retain certain moneys," approved January 27th, 1852, does not affect money in the treasury prior to its approval. McDougal v. Roman, 2 Cal. 80.

92. The mechanic's lien law is in derogation of the common law, and must be strictly construed. Bottomly v. Grace Church, 2 Cal. 91.

93. The authority to erect a court house and jail would necessarily embrace the power to purchase the land on which to erect them. De Witt v. City of San Francisco, 2 Cal. 295.

94. The rule which requires seizure of a thing to give jurisdiction in actions in rem, is altered by our statute. Service on a person standing in particular relation to the thing, confers jurisdiction on the court from which the process issues. Averill v. Steamer Hartford, 2 Cal. 309.

95. Where the hospital law was repealed, and a charter granted to the new one, and the officers of the former were directed to deliver to the trustees of the latter "all property, real and personal, held by them in trust for the old institution; and that the latter pay out of the funds in its hands all the debts owing by the old one:" held, that the new corporation was bound to pay all such debts without regard to the sufficiency of the fund derived from the corporation. Johnson v. State Marine Hospital, 2 Cal. 319.

96. A statute is not ex post facto, and impairs no obligation which denies no right, and does not constitute the refusal to return to servitude a crime, but simply provides for the deportation of slaves. Ex parte Perkins, 2 Cal. 440.

97. The constitution provides that all property shall be taxed; but the manner is a matter of legislative control, and the statute must be strictly followed. De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 468.

98. The code provides that there shall be but one form of civil action, but it does not intend to abolish all distinctions between law and equity as to actions. The innovation extends only to the form of action and the pleadings; while the technicalities of pleading have been dispensed with. De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 468; Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 7.

99. An act which divests the creditor of his lien, exempts the property of the judgment debtor from execution, and places it in the hands of trustees, with power to sell if they think proper, and compels the creditor to submit to a delay of twenty years, with no security, impairs the obligation of the contract, and is unconstitutional and void. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 553.

100. The statute of April 12th, 1850, has placed liens for materials and for labor on the same footing, and the proceeds of sale must be distributed in conformity to the same. Moxley v. Sheppard, 3 Cal. 64.

101. The statute of husband and wife confers on the parties before marriage an unlimited right to make whatever stipulation they may agree upon in respect to property; and this is not confined to property in esse, but contemplates property to be acquired, and the rents and profits of the present estate. Snyder v. Webb, 3 Cal. 87.

102. Our statute does not dispense with the interposition of trustees to protect the wife, except with respect to the property specified in the act. In all other respects the common law remains unaltered, and the wife may resort to trustees for all purposes of security. Ib.

103. The law which deprives a married woman of the right to make contracts is not altered by the statute, unless in respect to the property specified by it; and she cannot bring suit in her own name upon a contract which she is not authorized by statute to make. Ib. 88.

104. By the thirteenth section of the act concerning forcible entries, it was the intention of the legislature to make the nonpayment of rent work a forfeiture of the estate of the tenant. But to effect this, the rent must be demanded on the day it becomes due, and at a late hour of the day; and where the record shows no demand there can be no forfeiture. Chipman v. Emeric, 3 Cal. 283.

105. It is not important to interpret the literal meaning of the word "annually," or the word "or" as used in the city charter of 1851, respecting the election of municipal officers; the actual and substantial intention of the legislature is to be sought after. People v. Brenham, 3 Cal. 488.

106. The revenue act of May, 1853, does not violate that provision of the constitution which provides that all laws of a general nature shall be uniform in their operation. By a uniform operation it was intended that laws would, if possible, affect persons and property alike. A perfectly equal tax law is utopian and impossible from the very nature of the subject. People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 55.

107. The statute does not require in the complaint an allegation of possession; an averment that "the premises are unlawfully withheld from the plaintiff" is somewhat general, but not insufficient in a justice's court, except upon demurrer. Cronise v. Carghill, 4 Cal. 122.

108. The suspension by statute of remedies, or any part thereof, existing when the contract was made, is more or less impairing the obligation of the contract, and, therefore, unconstitutional. Thorne v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 131.

109. The code of practice is prospective in its operation; and to give it a retrospect beyond the time of its passage would be in violation of all settled rules of construction. Ib.

110. All the public streets of San Francisco running into the water as laid down on the official map of the city, were, by the operation of the act of March 26th, 1851, extending the city front, extended and carried into the front line of the city, and subject to the free enjoyment of the public, and exempt from execution as against the city. Wood v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 193.

Adjudications upon various Statutes.

111. The statute regulating sheriff's sales of real estate does not design to invest the purchaser with a title until six months after the sale. Duprey v. Duprey, 4 Cal. 196.

112. The act of May 4th, 1852, "defining the time of commencing civil actions in certain cases," only alters a portion of the act of April 22d, 1850—section seventeen. It does not change the period of five years in which suit may be brought on judgments or decrees of courts of the United States, or any State or Territory. Cavender v. Guild, 4 Cal. 253.

113. The act of May 3d, 1853, entitled "an act for the better publication of official and legal notices," is constitutional, although it impliedly repeals other laws. Washington v. Page, 4 Cal. 389.

114. By the act of the twenty-fifth of March, 1854, requiring the sessions of the supreme court to be holden at the capital of the State, it became the duty of the court to ascertain for its own action the locality of the seat of government. People v. Bigler, 5 Cal. 24.

115. If the legislature has no authority to annex any conditions to the removal, or enter into any contract by which the State could be benefited in consequence of the location of the seat of government, then so much of the act as refers to and fixes the condition is conditional. Strike this portion of the section out, and still there would remain the act of the legislature fixing the seat of government at Vallejo. Ib. 27.

116. The act of February 4th, 1851, removing the State capital, is not unconstitutional; but on the other hand, was a proper exercise of legislative power and discretion, with which a court cannot interfere. Ib. 29.

117. That portion of an act prescribing that no injunction shall be issued against the commissioners appointed for the sale of the State's interest within the water line of San Francisco, is invalid. Guy v. Hermance, 5 Cal. 74.

118. By the fifth section of the act concerning notaries public, notes are made protestable; and by the tenth section, the protest of a notary is expressly made evidence of demand and nonpayment of notes, as well as bills. Connolly v. Goodwin, 5 Cal. 221.

119. The act of April 17th, 1850, giving to the husband the entire control of the common property, does not invest him with power to dispose of the same by devise, whereby the rights of the wife may be defeated. Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 256.

120. The third section of the act of 1850, concerning corporations, prohibits them from issuing bills, notes, etc., or other evidences of debt, upon loans or for circulation as money. The act contemplates that corporations will incur debt, and limits their power to incur debts to the amount of the capital stock paid in: held, that they are not prohibited from borrowing money and issuing the usual evidences of debt therefor. Magee v. Mokelumne Hill C. and M. Co., 5 Cal. 259.

121. In permitting persons to go upon public lands occupied by others for the purpose of mining, the legislature has legalized what would otherwise have been a trespass; and the act cannot be extended by implication to a class of cases not specially provided for. Fitzgerald v. Urton, 5 Cal. 309.

122. The act of 1855, changing the time of the election of municipal officers in San Francisco, enumerates the officers to be elected; and the rule "expressio unius est exclusio alterius," applies to the time when said officers are qualified to enter upon their respective offices. People v. Haskell, 5 Cal. 359.

123. The act of May 3d, 1852, "providing for the disposal of the 50,000 acres of land granted by congress to this State," is not in conflict with the act of congress of 1841, which provides for their disposal after they have been surveyed. Nims v. Palmer, 6 Cal. 13.

124. The act of March 27th, 1850, conferring upon the county court the power of incorporating towns, is unconstitutional. People v. Town of Nevada, 6 Cal. 144.

125. Section first of the act of 1855, regulating criminal proceedings, is mandatory, and not directory. People v. Beeler, 6 Cal. 247.

126. Where a statute authorized a board of examiners, consisting of three executive State officers, to perform the duty of auditing certain accounts, which theretofore had been performed by the controller of State, but which is not prescribed by the constitution as the peculiar duty of that officer: held, that the act is valid and binding, the power of the legislature being supreme, except where expressly restricted. Ross v. Whitman, 6 Cal. 365.

127. The incorporation act of 1853 does not substantially alter that of 1850, relative to the hypothecation of stocks. Weston v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 6 Cal. 429.

128. Our statute of wills not only fails to require the probate of wills executed before its passage, but it must, from its terms, be concluded that the legislature actually intended to exclude such wills from the operation of the statute altogether, leaving their validity to depend upon the laws under which they were made, and not disturbing rights which had grown up under the former system. Grimes' Estate v. Norris, 6 Cal. 625.

129. The act of April 19th, 1856, "to repeal the several charters of the city of San Francisco," did not go into effect until the first day of July, 1856. People v. Johnson, 6 Cal. 674.

130. The act prescribing the manner of commencing and maintaining suits by or against counties, passed May, 1854, applies as well to claims existing before its passage as those which arose afterwards. Gilmore v. Contra Costa County, 6 Cal. 677.

131. The amendatory act of 1855 repeals section six of the statute of limitations of 1850, and the five years allowed for the commencement of real actions only begins to run from the date of the passage of the amendatory act. Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 3.

132. The settlers' act of 1856 does not discriminate between an innocent and tortious possession, nor is it a mere attempt to avoid circuitry of action, by providing for an equitable adjustment of the whole subject in one suit. By its terms, it applies to past as well as present cases. It takes from a party that which before was his; for if he refuses to pay for the improvement put on his land against his will by a trespasser, he loses not only the improvements, but the land itself. Such legislation is repugnant to morality and justice, and in violation of the letter and spirit of the constitution. Ib. 9.

133. From the framework of the various statutes concerning estates and public administrators, it must be deduced that the commission of the public administrator, as a public officer, stands in the place of letters of administration,* and that consequently it is unnecessary to issue them in order to give him control over the property of the estates which comes to his hands. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 228.

134. The design and institution of the registration act was to give constructive notice of the facts which appeared upon the face of the record. Chamberlain v. Bell, 7 Cal. 294.

135. The grounds on which statutes of registration are based, are, that the party who fails to record his deed places it in the power of his grantor to commit a fraud upon others, and the law holds him responsible, as assisting the fraud. Bird v. Dennison, 7 Cal. 305.

136. The amendatory act of 1855, concerning conveyances, abolishing joint tenancies except when expressly declared, can only apply to future and not to past conveyances. Dewey v. Lambier, 7 Cal. 348.

137. The act of 1856, authorizing the county recorder of Yuba county to be paid out of the county treasury for certain specified services, contains no words which raise a presumption that he was to be allowed a preference over other creditors. People v. Williams, 8 Cal. 100.

138. The special act of the legislature, approved April 4th, 1857, fixing the compensation of the county clerk of Placer county at $3000, was intended in lieu of all fees for services rendered the county. Mitchell v. Stoner, 9 Cal. 204.

139. The intention of the legislature to create the office of gauger by the act of May 3d, 1852, entitled "an act to provide for the appointment of a gauger for the port of San Francisco," is too clear to admit of doubt. People v. Addison, 10 Cal. 7.

140. The act of the legislature giving the power to the superior court of the city of San Francisco to send its process beyond its territorial limits was constitutional. Hickman v. O'Neal, 10 Cal. 294; overruling Meyer v. Kalkman, 6 Cal. 590.

141. The statute of limitations can only be construed to apply to judgments not in esse at the time of the passage of the act of 1855, or as giving two years from the passage of the act within which to sue upon such as were not already barred by the act of 1850. Scarborough v. Dugan, 10 Cal. 308.

142. The general statute defines the duties of the sheriffs in respect to final process, and these duties are to be construed in pari materia. Wilson v. Broder, 10 Cal. 488.

143. The act to regulate interest on money is in derogation of the common law, and must be strictly construed. Raun v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 19.

144. In an action for the division of the common property of husband and wife after a decree of divorce, the plaintiff, in order to bring herself within the provisions of the act "defining the rights of husband and wife," passed April 17th, 1850, must affirmatively state such facts as give her the right to the property under the act. Dye v. Dye, 11 Cal. 166.

145. The eighth section of the act of 1851, concerning divorces, which provides that "no divorce shall be granted in any action by default of the defendant, nor on the admission or statement of either party," does not prohibit the introduction of confessions in evidence, but simply prevents granting a decree on them alone. Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 93.

146. The act giving jurisdiction over the subject of contested elections to the judge of the county court is constitutional, and district judges are embraced within it. Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 150.

147. The act of April 19th, 1856, permitting nonresident aliens to inherit real and personal estate is constitutional. State of California v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 165.

148. Under the act of April 28th, 1857, authorizing the supervisors of Yuba county to take stock in a railroad company, the stock may be taken in any railroad by which a railway connection shall be formed between Marysville and Benicia, or any point on the Sacramento river at or near Knight's ferry. The company in which the stock is taken need not be constituted for the express and only purpose of such connection, provided the effect of the work is to make the connection. Pattison v. Supervisors of Yuba County, 13 Cal. 189.

149. The act of April 20th, 1858, authorizing the issuance of bonds by the city and county of San Francisco, is valid, and the clause in the act requiring the action of the board of examiners to be submitted to a vote of the people in a contingency, does not make the act any the less a law. The act took effect as a law immediately, and was not dependent on the action of the other body. People v. Burr, 13 Cal. 356.

150. The act of March, 1851, commonly called the San Francisco water lot act, should be favorably construed to the city, and includes all land fixed by the survey referred to in the act. Hyman v. Read, 13 Cal. 451.

151. Neither the general incorporation act nor the act concerning plank roads and turnpikes gives any exclusive privileges to the corporation first established. Others may build a road on or near the same line of travel. Indian Canon Road Co. v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 520.

152. The act of 1858, amendatory to the act of May 1st, 1851, authorizing the "funding of the floating debt of the city of San Francisco, and to provide for the payment of the same," is constitutional. The amendment that the commissioners may purchase stock at five per cent. above par does not affect injuriously the creditors under the act of 1851. Thornton v. Hooper, 14 Cal. 11.

153. The act of 1851 is a law as well as a contract, and those provisions which are mere modes of giving effect to the substantial purposes of the act may be revised and altered. The constitution forbids impairing the obligation of contracts, but does not inhibit legislation respecting them. Ib.

154. If under the act a large surplus accumulates, it may be applied to the purchase of bonds, even if no provision exists in the act for payment before the bonds are due. Ib.

155. The act of the legislature authorizing boards of supervisors to appoint a collector of foreign miners' licenses is not unconstitutional. People v. Squires, 14 Cal. 17.

156. The sheriff being ex officio tax collector of foreign miners' licenses, by an act of the legislature may be deprived of the office of tax collector before the expiration of his term. Ib.

157. The constitution provides in section 15, art. 11, that "the legislature shall protect by law from forced sale a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families." It only requires legislation exempting the property from forced sale. The statute goes beyond the constitutional provision. It not only exempts the homestead from forced sale, but declares that no mortgage, sale or alienation of any kind by the owner, if a married man, be valid without the signature and acknowledgment of the wife, if she be a resident of the State. Neither the constitution or the statute recognizes any estate in the wife; on the contrary, it is clear that both were framed upon the idea that it was out of the property of the husband, or at least common property, that the homestead was to be carved. Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 474.

158. The act of April 27th, 1857, prohibiting gaming, is constitutional. People v. Beatty, 14 Cal. 573.

159. The objection to the State prison contract with Estill, under the act of the twenty-first of March, 1856, that it contained stipulations for the release of claims held by Estill against the State, thereby increasing the amount of the monthly payments, cannot be raised at this late day—three years having elapsed since the execution of the contract, and it having been in part performed on both sides, and thus acquiesced in and affirmed. State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 455.

160. The fact that the contract with Estill was signed by the commissioners with their individual names, and not with the name of the State, does not make it defectively executed. The contract purports in its body to be between the State, acting by the commissioners under the act of March 21st, 1856, of the one part, and Estill of the other, and is signed by the commissioners with the affix of "Board of State Prison Commissioners." This makes it the contract of the State and not of the commissioners. Ib. 456.

161. The act of March, 1856, having authorized the commissioners to execute a lease without prescribing any specific form, or containing any restrictions as to assigning, and the lease being in its terms assignable, and no objections to this form of contract having been made at the time, it is too late to interpose them after the contract has been acted upon on both sides, and thus adopted and approved. The personal liability of the assignor continued after his assignment to McCauley. The security of his bond was not impaired thereby. Ib. 457.

162. It is too late for the State to complain that the contract did not exact of the lessee security against breaches thereof, other than the bond of $200,000 required by the act of March 21st, 1856, or did not reserve to the State the right to reënter and resume possession of the premises and control of the prisoners whenever she deemed proper. Ib. 458.

163. Under the consolidation act of 1858, the treasurer of the city and county of Sacramento is entitled to receive for his official services only $3,000 per annum. He is not entitled to the per centage allowed by the State to county treasurers for money paid by them into the State treasury. This per centage belongs to the city and county of Sacramento. City of Sacramento v. Bird, 15 Cal. 295.

164. Under the chattel mortgage act of 1857, a mortgage of shares of stock in an incorporated company is valid without a transfer on the books of the company, as is required by the corporation act of 1853 relative to pledges of stock by delivery of the certificates. The act of 1858 has no effect on the act of 1857. Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 58.

165. The general language of section one of the limitation act of 1855, that actions in the cases therein named "can only be commenced within two years from the time the cause of action has accrued, or shall accrue," is controlled and limited by the twenty-second section of the limitation act of 1850. Palmer v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 96.

166. The word "return" used in the twenty-second section of the limitation act of 1850, is held by the authorities to apply as well to persons coming from abroad as to the citizens of the country going abroad for a temporary purpose and then returning. But the coming from abroad must not be clandestine, and with an intent to defraud the creditor, by setting the statute in operation and then departing. Ib. 97.

167. The act of April 25th, 1855, for the protection of growing crops and improvements in the mining districts of this State, so far as it purports to give a right of entry upon the mineral lands of this State, in cases where no such right existed anterior to its passage, is invalid. Gillan v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 155.

Adjudications upon various Statutes.

168. This act of 1855 seems to proceed upon the idea of an absolute and unconditional right in the miner to enter upon the possessions of another for mining purposes, and the intention of the act was to limit this supposed right, and not to give a right of entry in cases where no such right previously existed. Ib.

169. The act of April 19th, 1859, providing for the condemnation and appropriation to the use of the State of the interest of certain parties in the State prison grounds, repealed the act of March 21st, 1856; but such repeal did not affect the contract made under the repealed act. The contract was a thing consummated—and after its execution did not depend for its further existence upon the continuation of the act which originally gave it life. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 33.

170. The third section of the act "to provide for the construction of canals, and for draining and reclaiming certain swamp and overflowed lands in Tulare valley," passed on the eleventh of April, 1857, is a grant upon condition precedent, and not as counsel of the respondent contend, upon condition subsequent. This is evident from the clause following the condition, and restricting the right of the grantees to take the odd sections until "after the reclamation of the lands," and the accompanying proviso, that none of those sections shall be subject to private entry. Montgomery v. Kasson, 16 Cal. 193.

171. The act of April 20th, 1858, repealing the act of April 11th, 1857, making this grant, and declaring the rights and privileges thereunder forfeited, is unconstitutional and void. Ib. 194.

172. The act of the legislature of 1858, validating the alcalde grants mentioned in the proviso to the second section of the Van Ness ordinance, is effectual for that purpose, whether the grants were originally valid or not, or whether the title of the city of San Francisco came by grant to the old pueblo, or had its origin by presumption or grant in the act of congress. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 232.

173. The act of March 29th, 1860, providing for the construction of a State capitol in the city of Sacramento, is not unconstitutional, as creating an indebtedness or liability on the part of the State exceeding the limit of $300,000, prescribed in the eighth article of the constitution. The act authorizes the commissioners therein named to contract only to the extent of $100,000. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 253.

174. No analogy exists between this case and Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 65, because there the act of 1856 authorized a contract in a sum not exceeding $300,000, payable in State bonds, and at the time of its passage the State was indebted to the amount limited by the constitution, without a vote of the people. Ib. 254.

175. Nor is the act of 1856 unconstitutional because it provides that the compensation to the owners of the land taken shall be ascertained by three commissioners, and thus deprives the owners of the right to a jury trial. The provisions of the constitution, that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate forever," applies only to civil and criminal cases in which an issue of fact is joined. The proceeding to ascertain the value of property under the act of 1860, and the compensation to be made, is not an action at law. It is an inquisition for the ascertainment of a particular fact as preliminary to future proceedings, and it is only requisite that it be conducted in some equitable and fair mode to be provided by law, either with or without a jury, opportunity being allowed to owners and parties interested in the property to give evidence as to its value, and to be heard thereon. Ib. 254.

176. The act of February 14th, 1855, makes an exception in case the husband be not, and for one year next preceding the execution of the conveyance of the wife, has not been bona fide residing in this State. But the fact that the husband abandons his wife, or suffers her to act as a femme sole and take care of herself, does not give her a right to mortgage either his or her separate property, whatever may be the effect of such acts of the husband in rendering her personally liable for her contracts. Harrison v. Brown, 16 Cal. 290.

177. California, upon her admission into the union, acquired under the eighth section of the act of congress of September 4th, 1841, entitled "an act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands and to grant preëmption rights," a vested and present interest in five hundred thousand acres of land, with a right to select and locate the same, in such manner as her legislature might direct, out of any of the public lands of the United States, except such as were or might be reserved from sale by any law of congress, or the proclamation of the president. Doll v. Meader, 16 Cal. 315.

178. Neither the tenth section of the act of 1841, nor the act of May 23d, 1844, entitled "an act for the relief of citizens of towns upon the lands of the United States under certain circumstances;" nor the act of March 3d, 1853, providing "for the survey of the public lands in California, the granting of preëmption rights therein, and for other purposes," in effect reserve town sites from sale. Ib. 321.

179. The municipal preëmption act of May 23d, 1844, confers a right upon the corporate authorities or county judges, to purchase the land forming a town site, at the minimum government price, for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, before the commencement of the public sale of the body of the land in which the town site is included—and if such right be not exercised, such lands, with the general mass, are offered for sale to the public. Ib. 323.

180. The act of 1860, authorizing suit to be brought for the unpaid taxes of the years 1858 and 1859 in the city and county of Sacramento, and prohibiting the defendants from setting up in defense any informality in the levy or assessment of the tax, and making duly certified copies of the delinquent tax list, or the original or duplicate assessment rolls, evidence of the delinquency of the property assessed, of the amount of taxes due and unpaid, and that all the forms in relation to the levy and assessment have been complied with, is constitutional. People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 341.

181. The act of April 21st, 1860, relative to pilots in the port of San Francisco, did not legislate out of office pilots licensed under acts repealed by the act of April 21st, whose term of office had not expired when this act went into operation. Flynn v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 365.

182. A judgment is a contract within the sixty-seventh section of the act concerning courts of justice and judicial officers. Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 375.

183. The act of 1851, providing for the election of a district attorney in each county, at the general election of that year, and every two years thereafter, etc., and the act of 1855, providing that the board of supervisors in each county shall fill vacancies in the office of district attorney, their appointee to hold until the next general election, the person then elected to hold for the balance of the term of the person whose place he is elected to fill, applies to the city and county of San Francisco, and are not repealed by the ninth nor by the last section of the consolidation act of 1856. The policy of the act of 1851 was to create uniformity in the official terms of district attorneys by filling those terms at fixed periods. People v. Brown, 16 Cal. 443.

184. The object of the ninth section of the San Francisco consolidation act of 1856 was not to repeal the general law of 1855, relative to filling vacancies, but to provide for cases not embraced by the general law—that is, for certain local offices, made elective by the people, peculiar to San Francisco, and for which no provision had been made. Ib.

185. The duty imposed by the forty-ninth section of the revenue act of 1857, for selling goods at public auction, is not a tax on the auctioneer, but a tax on the sale of goods, or the proceeds of the sale—the auctioneer being made the collector of the State for the amount of the tax. State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 523.

186. This duty may be collected by action of debt by the State against the auctioneer; and the penal remedy afforded by the fifty-second section of the act is not an exclusive remedy. Ib.

187. The forty-ninth section of the act makes the auctioneer liable to pay this duty, and the meaning is, that he shall be legally held to pay it. The fact that a bond is required of the auctioneer, conditioned for the performance of his duty, shows that the legislature did not mean to restrict his responsibility to the penal provision of the act, as the bond covers this duty of paying over the money to the State. Ib.

188. The criminal process of the fifty-second section is not a remedy provided by the statute for the payment of the duty imposed, but a mere provision for the punishment of those who violate the law. The remedy spoken of by the authorities, as excluding any other remedy, means the process provided by the legislature, whereby the specific duty may be enforced. But under our act, the remedy is not such; for, after the party has been fined and imprisoned, the duty of paying over to the State the money in the hands of the auctioneer remains. Ib.

CONSUL.

1. An alien friend may sue an American in the consular courts in China established there under the treaty of 1844. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 385.

2. The decision of the consul as to the validity of the assignment is not conclusive in the courts of this State. Ib. 286.

3. An appeal lies from a consular court to the American commissioner. Ib.

4. The general designation in the fourth section of the act of April 16th, 1850, as to conveyances of any notary public, or any consul of the United States, embraces notaries and consuls of every grade; whether principal or inferior notary, or consul general or vice consul. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 552.

5. The certificates of a notary public or United States consul, of acknowledgment of a deed, are prima facie evidence of the official character of the persons by whom they are given. Ib.

CONTEMPT.

1. The modes for punishment for contempt as prescribed by statute must be taken as exclusive of all other modes of punishment, and a court has no power to inflict any other kind of punishment. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 149.

2. It is not usual for courts to interpose by a proceeding for contempt against an attorney for any act independent of his profession, as not connected with his professional employment as an attorney. Ib. 150.

3. The statute having made a distinction in contempts between those committed in the presence and out of the presence of the court, the final order of the court committing for contempt should always show upon its face the facts upon which the exercise of the power is based and the adjudication made. Ib. 155.

4. If an order fining and imprisoning for contempt does not specify on its face wherein the contempt consisted, it will be reversed on certiorari. Ex parte Field, 1 Cal. 187.

5. It is no contempt of a writ of mandamus, directing the respondent to reinstate certain persons as practising attorneys to the rolls of attorneys, that he has again expelled the relator for reasons alleged to have arisen subsequent to the writ. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 189.

6. An attachment for contempt for disobedience of a mandamus will not issue, unless it appear affirmatively that the mandamus was sought to be enforced by some party. Ib.

7. The judgments and orders of courts or judges on the subject of contempts are by our statutes declared to be final and conclusive; and it has been established by judicial decisions, that under the writ of habeas corpus we cannot review the orders of another court in such cases. Ex parte Cohen, 5 Cal. 495.

8. District courts have jurisdiction to punish for contempts of their processes, and to issue writs necessary to this jurisdiction. Ib.

9. They have not the power to issue erroneous writs of contempt; such would be unlawful, and be subject to appeal. Ib.

10. Though courts are exclusive judges of their own contempts, still a party cannot be imprisoned for neglecting or refusing to do what it appears is out of his power to perform. Adams v. Haskell, 6 Cal. 318.

11. An order committing a party for contempt, and ordering that he be imprisoned until he comply with the previous order commanding him to pay into court a certain sum of money, is an excess of jurisdiction and void where the party had made affidavit, which was uncontradicted,

Contempt.—Continuance.

that the money had passed from his possession and control before the proceedings in contempt were commenced. Ib.

12. A commitment for contempt for refusing to obey an order of court, commanding the imprisonment of the party in contempt until he shall comply with the order, should set forth that it is in the power of the party to comply. Ex parte Cohen, 6 Cal. 320.

13. The law regards the substance more than the form; and where the proceeding, though in form a case of contempt, is in substance a private right, the appellate court will compel the court below to issue an attachment to punish a contempt. Merced M. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 133.

14. A party committed for contempt in refusing to answer questions propounded to him as a witness, under an order that he stand committed till he do answer, will be discharged on habeas corpus where it appears that the suit has abated. Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 176.

15. A commitment for contempt for refusing to obey an unlawful order of court can be reviewed and set aside by an appellate court. Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 178, 183; Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 111.

16. In cases where an alleged contempt consists in the disobedience of writs, or orders of the court, or judge at chambers, and in refusing to answer questions as a witness, the contempt can only exist in disobeying legal writs or orders, and in refusing to answer legal questions. Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 182.

17. A commitment for contempt "in refusing to answer certain questions propounded to the witness by the grand jury," is not a compliance with the statute, which requires the act to be specified in the commitment. It does not appear from such commitment whether the questions were legal or not. Ib. 183.

18. When an injunction granted on an ex parte application was modified on motion of defendant, without notice to plaintiff, on defendant's giving bond: held, that subsequent acts of defendant in violation of the original injunction were not in contempt. The remedy of the plaintiff, if there was error in the order modifying the injunction, is by appeal; but he cannot have a mandamus to compel the issuance of attachment for contempt. Fremont v. Merced Min. Co., 9 Cal. 19.

19. Pending a motion for a new trial, the defendants violated the injunction, and the plaintiffs applied for an attachment against them for contempt of court: held, it was error to refuse the writ on the ground that the pending of the motion operated as a suspension of the injunction. Ortman v. Dixon, 9 Cal. 24.

CONTINUANCE.

1. Affidavits for a continuance should show due diligence in endeavoring to procure the attendance of witnesses, and in preparing for trial. People v. Baker, 1 Cal. 404.

2. A refusal to grant a continuance for the absence of witnesses, or counsel, under circumstances showing that the party, or his counsel, was surprised as to the time or place of holding court, is error. Ross v. Austill, 2 Cal. 191.

3. A defendant applied for a continuance to enable him to take the deposition of a witness whose evidence would be of no avail in his defense, and in which he showed no diligence: held, that the application was properly rejected. Hawley v. Stirling, 2 Cal. 473.

4. In an application for a continuance to take testimony by commission, the defendant allowed a month to pass without making the motion; there was not sufficient diligence to entitle the party to his application. Pierson v. Holbrook, 2 Cal. 598.

5. An agreement of counsel for the continuance of a cause, not reduced to writing, will not be regarded by the court. Peralta v. Marica, 3 Cal. 187.

6. The absence of counsel for the defense on account of sickness is a sufficient ground of continuance in a criminal case. People v. Logan, 4 Cal. 189.

7. Under any circumstances, the withdrawal of a juror and the continuance of a cause thereby is no ground for reversing a judgment subsequently obtained. Benedict v. Cozzens, 4 Cal. 382.

8. In criminal cases, on a motion for continuance by defendant, on the ground of the absence of a material witness, based on a sufficient affidavit, the agreement of the district attorney that the witness, if present, would have deposed as averred in defendant's affidavit, is not sufficient to warrant the overruling of the motion. People v. Diaz, 6 Cal. 249.

9. Under our statute, motions for continuance in criminal cases, are subject to review upon appeal. Id.

10. The supreme court will not review an order denying a continuance, except where there has been an abuse of the discretion vested in them by the court below. Frank v. Brady, 8 Cal. 48; Musgrove v. Perkins, 9 Cal. 212; Pilot Rock Creek Canal Co. v. Chapman, 11 Cal. 162.

11. An affidavit for a continuance on the ground of absence of a witness should state that the testimony wanted is not simply cumulative, and cannot be proven by others, and that the application is not made for delay; the character of the diligence used in trying to obtain the attendance of the witness—whether by exhausting the process of the law or otherwise—should also be stated. People v. Thompson, 4 Cal. 240; People v. Quincy, 8 Cal. 89; Pierce v. Payne, 14 Cal. 420.

12. If defendants are surprised by an amendment, and found it necessary to assume a different line of defense in consequence of it, they would have been entitled to a continuance, to prepare for their defense. Polk v. Coffin, 9 Cal. 58.

13. The mistaken advice of counsel to his clients, not to prepare for trial, is no ground for continuance. Musgrove v. Perkins, 9 Cal. 212.

14. A party who is unprepared for trial at the time of the calling of the case, should move for a continuance; and if he fails to do this, he waives his want of preparation and cannot afterwards, when judgment has gone against him, move for a new trial on this ground. Turner v. Morrison, 11 Cal. 21.

15. When a continuance is refused on the ground of absent witnesses, that action will not be renewed unless there has been a motion for a new trial, and the application supported by the affidavits of the absent witnesses—if such affidavits can be obtained; or if not, then it should be shown to the court that they cannot be obtained. Pilot Rock Creek Canal Co. v. Chapman, 11 Cal. 162.

16. Pending a motion for a new trial, taken under advisement for decision in vacation by consent of parties, another term of the court intervenes, when, upon some incidental motion, the cause was continued and the court adjourned: held, that the continuance was only a continuance of the motion for a new trial, and did not affect in the least the power of the court to act on the motion at its convenience. Hutchinson v. Bours, 13 Cal. 52.

17. Where it is admitted, for the purpose of preventing a continuance, that the several witnesses named would, if present, respectively testify as stated in the affidavit, and that their testimony should be considered as actually given on the trial or as offered and overruled by the court as improper; the testimony thus assumed was offered, and for all the purposes of this case must be deemed as actually before the court. Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 358.

18. An affidavit for continuance on the ground that a witness is absent from the State, must aver that the party cannot to his knowledge prove the same facts by any other witness. Pierce v. Payne, 14 Cal. 420.

19. The plaintiff, to avoid the continuance, admitted that a witness would testify to certain facts set up in the affidavit, and the trial proceeded. This affidavit, therefore, became evidence, but not conclusive proof of its contents. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 645.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Ship masters cannot require payment of freight unless ready to deliver the goods, and consignees cannot require a delivery of goods unless ready to pay the freight, and neither party can bring an action to compel the other to perform the correlative act. Frothingham v. Jenkins, 1 Cal. 44.

2. Delivery of goods by a master and payment of freight by the owner are concurrent acts, and neither party is bound to perform his part of the shipping contract unless the other is ready and willing to perform the correlative act. Ib. 44.

3. A contract to pay in cash cannot be fulfilled by a payment in gold dust at its market value, unless the parties agree so to receive; and when gold dust was paid by defendant at fifteen dollars and fifty cents per ounce, under protest—he claiming it was worth sixteen dollars per ounce—the court will not relieve him and decree the repayment of the alleged difference. Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 49.

4. Where the delivery of an article and the payment of the purchase money are by the contract concurrent acts, neither party can maintain an action against the other for a nonperformance, without showing a readiness and willingness to perform his portion of the contract. Cole v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 54.

5. Contracts by which a forfeiture is claimed to have accrued should be construed strictly, and the facts urged in support of the forfeiture ought to be clear and explicit, and not be left to inference and argument. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 71.

6. Where a special contract for the performance of work is proven, but it is also shown that the contract has been deviated from, the judgment will not be reversed on the ground that the court below admitted testimony as to the value of the plaintiff's services. De Boom v. Priestly, 1 Cal. 107.

7. A specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land can be enforced only when the contract is in writing, or where there has been part performance of a verbal contract by the vendee. Hoen v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 121.

8. A contract must be construed so as to give effect, if possible, to all parts of it. Mickle v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 202.

9. Where one party has executed his part of the agreement in the confidence that the other party would do the same, it is obvious that if the latter should refuse, it would be a fraud upon the former to suffer this refusal to work to his prejudice. Tohler v. Folsom, 1 Cal. 211.

10. An attorney has power to bind his client by consenting to elect an order of court delivering the goods instead of a judgment for the price of the invoice, and the client cannot revoke it. Hart v. Spalding, 1 Cal. 214.

11. The union of man and wife without the sanction of the church is regarded as a mere civil contract, and as such falls within the legislative sphere of the ordinary jurisdiction of the court of first instance. Harmon v. Harmon, 1 Cal. 215.

12. A agreed to convey in his individual capacity a ship to B, and tendered him, in the performance of this condition, a deed made by A as the attorney of C, the owner of the vessel: held, it was not a compliance with his agreement. Osborne v. Elliott, 1 Cal. 338.

13. Where the vendor shipped goods to his own order that he might retain a lien on them until the price of the sale of them to the purchaser is paid, and the master of the ship delivers them nevertheless to the purchaser: held, that the vendor can recover of the master his interest in the goods—that is, the price for which they were sold, with interest. Persse v. Cole, 1 Cal. 370.

14. In an action to recover the contract price agreed to be paid for work and materials, the defendant will not be permitted to prove that the work was done in an unworkmanlike manner, unless he has set up that defense in his answer. Kendall v. Vallejo, 1 Cal. 372.

15. In an action to recover the contract price agreed to be paid for work and materials, the question is not whether the work would answer the purpose for which it was intended, but if it was done according to the terms of the contract. Ib.

16. A public officer who stands in the relation of agent of the government, or of the public, is not personally liable upon contract made by him as such officer and within the scope of his legitimate duties. Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 292.

In general.

17. A public administrator is personally liable upon contracts made in relation to estates upon which he administers, unless the idea of such personal liability be excluded by the contract. Ib.

18. But this reason does not apply when neither the government nor the public in any way can be considered or held responsible for a contract made by a person, although a public officer. Ib.

19. The memorandum of an auctioneer is looked upon as a contract between the vendor and vendee, reduced to writing and executed by their mutual agent, who ceases to be such agent after the sale is closed. Craig v. Godfroy, 1 Cal. 415.

20. Where parties who submit a matter to arbitration agree as to who shall pay the arbitrator, if the latter be no party to the agreement, he will not be bound by it, but may look to all the parties for compensation for his services. Young v. Starkey, 1 Cal. 427.

21. The law of Louisiana requires a partnership contract to be in writing; the law of California does not. It is held that a verbal contract of copartnership entered into in Louisiana, to be executed in California, was valid. Young v. Pearson, 1 Cal. 450.

22. It is competent to show that one or both of the contracting parties were agents for other persons, and acted as such agents in making the contract on the one hand, so as to give the benefit of the contract, and on the other, to charge the unnamed principals with the liability. Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 482.

23. Where A and B enter into a written agreement, by which A was to provide lumber, and an invoice thereof at stated prices to be annexed to the agreement, and the lumber then to be shipped, consigned to C for sale, and the proceeds remitted to B, and B agreed of the proceeds to pay A the full amount of the invoice price, without any deduction whatever, and the remaining proceeds were then, after paying charges, to be equally divided between the parties, and the cargo was sold for less than the invoice price: it was held not to be a guarantee by B that the lumber should sell for the invoice price, but yet A was entitled to all the gross proceeds, and the expenses, etc., must fall on B. Gibb v. Probst, 2 Cal. 115.

24. Caveat emptor applies to sales of real estate where there is no fraud or warranty. Salmon v. Hoffman, 2 Cal. 141.

25. A party cannot ask a court of equity to rescind a contract against the wishes of the respondents, when the only obstacle to its completion of fulfillment was caused by his own default, and the other party entirely without blame. Ib. 143.

26. Where testimony is offered in a case to prove compliance with a contract on the part of the plaintiff and fraudulent design to evade it on the part of the defendant, it should go to the jury. Folgar v. Buckelew, 2 Cal. 318.

27. The designation of a contract by an improper term cannot be allowed to take away a substantial right, where all the circumstances attending it are fully detailed. Godeffroy v. Caldwell, 2 Cal. 492.

28. All contracts made in this State prior to the act of April 22d, 1850, must have their effect and construction by the rules of the civil law. Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 569.

29. Where no question is raised as to the validity of the contract or the effect of the statute of frauds, and where the question is as to the kind of delivery which effects a change of property, although the goods cannot be immediately delivered, the delay may be implied as one of the stipulations. Stevens v. Stewart, 3 Cal. 143.

30. A contract by defendant "to deliver to plaintiff as many grapes as he should wish" at a given price, is a mere offer, which the plaintiff had the right to accept or reject, and defendant to retract at any time before acceptance; but when the plaintiff named the quantity which he would take and offered the price thereof, the contract became complete and both parties were bound by it. Keller v. Ybarra, 3 Cal. 148.

31. The allegation that the use and occupation of the lot in question was at the request of the defendant and by the permission of plaintiff, was the allegation of a contract, and this the plaintiff is bound to establish to enable him to recover. Sampson v. Shaeffer, 3 Cal. 202; O'Conner v. Corbitt, 3 Cal. 373.

32. No action will lie for use and occupation when the possession is adverse and tortious, for such possession excludes the idea of a contract, which in all cases of this action must be either express or implied. Sampson v. Shaeffer, 3 Cal. 203.

In general.

33. The remedy by attachment is given by the statute to those contracts for the direct payment of money which are made in or are payable in this State. Dulton v. Shelton, 3 Cal. 207.

34. Plaintiff and defendant took a joint lease for improving certain property; plaintiff, with consent of defendant, made in his own name a contract to make the improvements stipulated by the lease, which he performed and paid or advanced all the expenses out of his own funds. This contract was drawn by the defendant himself: held, that the plaintiff could recover equal contribution of the money advanced by him from the defendant at the current rate of interest. Young v. Pollock, 3 Cal. 211.

35. In an action for money had and received by the consignor, the amount of goods sold on credit by the consignee, having no authority to sell, can be recovered. Johnson v. Totten, 3 Cal. 347.

36. Such sale must be taken in reference to the rights of the plaintiff, to have been made for cash and the vendor is liable to the plaintiff for money had and received. Id.

37. If the plaintiff rely upon his contract made with several parties, they must all be joined in the action, unless there is an entirely new contract substituted, even when the several parties have been treated as separate individuals in the transaction: Mc Gilvery v. Morehead, 3 Cal. 370.

38. The use in a sale note of a given name for the goods sold is a warranty that they bear that name. Flint v. Lyon, 4 Cal. 21.

39. A covenant not to sue, made to a portion only of joint debtors, does not release any of them. Matthey v. Galley, 4 Cal. 63.

40. Where, in a contract, a mistake occasions loss, it must be suffered by him who makes it. Burgoyne v. Middleton, 4 Cal. 66.

41. A joint contract cannot be given in evidence where the pleadings set up a several contract alone. Stearns v. Martin, 4 Cal. 229.

42. Where the contract declared on is joint, and there is no evidence showing that one of the parties sued was party to the contract, he cannot be made liable on the contract. His receipt on account of money for the work done is not enough to fix his liability. This is a mere circumstance, to be left to the jury, on the question of his being a party to the contract. Kritzner v. Warner, 4 Cal. 232.

43. Where the contract was for the delivery of lumber on the payment of the price, the defendant is not required, in an action on breach of contract, to prove that the plaintiff was not ready to pay; the fact that he did not pay and the lumber therefore refused, is sufficient defense. Fruit v. Phelps, 4 Cal. 282.

44. A femme covert cannot contract under the laws of the State so as to render her liable in a suit at law. Rowe v. Kohle, 4 Cal. 285.

45. In an action upon a promise to pay money, if the complaint contains no averment of consideration or indebtedness, except by way of recital, it is insufficient. Shafer v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 4 Cal. 296.

46. The contract sued on required the lumber should be delivered from time to time at such wharf or place as the defendants should designate. The defendants refused not only to designate the place of delivery, but to accept the lumber: it was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to sue for a breach of the contract, although at the time of the refusal of the defendants, plaintiffs may not have been the owners of the lumber to be delivered. Warner v. Wilson, 4 Cal. 314.

47. A contract entered into by a number of individuals, describing themselves in the contract as "directors of the Placer Hotel Company," and signed by them individually, is their individual contract, and not that of the company. Whiting v. Heslep, 4 Cal. 330.

48. In an action on a written contract to deliver a certain quantity of "sound rice," the plaintiffs are bound to show that the rice was "sound;" and failing to do so, they ought not to be allowed to recover on the contract. Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 357.

49. In the case of a sale and delivery of a special cargo, with warranty, the plaintiffs might recover on the contract, and the defendants would be obliged to sue on the warranty, or in the same action, to recover the damages under proper averments in the pleadings. Id.

50. A principal may sue on a contract in writing, in his own name, though made and signed by his agent without disclosing his principal; but in order to maintain the action, the principal must show the agency and the power of the agent to bind him at the time. But the defendant may make the same defenses against the newly discovered principal as he could against the agent. Ib. 358.

51. Where the vendors cannot recover on their written contract, and there has been a partial delivery of the goods sold under it, they may recover the value of the goods so delivered on a quantum val-e-bant. Ib.

52. A covenant "to let the lessor have what land he and his brothers might want for cultivation" cannot be enforced for uncertainty. Chipman v. Aughinbaugh, 5 Cal. 51.

53. A contract made during the Mexican dominion must have its effect and construction according to the laws then prevailing. Hames v. Castro, 5 Cal. 110.

54. By the Mexican law all property acquired during marriage was common property, and the wife could neither be bound as security for her husband, nor liable as a joint contractor, except where it was shown that the contract was to the wife's advantage—that is, accrued to the benefit of her separate estate. Ib.

55. In cases of joint several contracts, an administrator cannot be joined with the survivor, for one is charged de bonis testatoris, and the other de bonis propriis. Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 176; May v. Hanson, 6 Cal. 643.

56. Where a contract stipulated for the delivery of a vessel, but designated no particular place for such delivery: held, that a notice of a readiness to deliver must be treated under the contract as an actual delivery. Albretson v. Hooker, 5 Cal. 178.

57. When courts are called upon to set aside contracts, there must be some substantial reason shown, and a court of chancery particularly will not act when it is kept in the dark as to the reasons and purposes of a transaction for which relief is sought. Scanlan v. Gillan, 5 Cal. 183.

58. A contract should be enforced in every case where the subject of it is something susceptible of substantial enjoyment, provided always, that the circumstances surrounding and connected with the contract, bring it within the equitable rules which entitle it to the relief sought, and where the remedy at law is uncertain and insufficient. Johnson v. Rickett, 5 Cal. 220.

59. To entitle a material man to enforce a lien upon a building for material furnished, it must be alleged and proven not only that the materials have been used in the construction of the building, but they must have been by the express terms of the contract furnished for the particular building on which the lien may be claimed. Houghton v. Blake, 5 Cal. 240.

60. In reference to all transactions in the nature of a contract a corporation must be looked upon and treated as a private person, and its contracts construed in the same manner and with the like effects as those of natural persons. Touchard v. Touchard, 5 Cal. 307.

61. In such an action tender of the unpaid purchase money must be proven, as it is the essence of the contract, and the party must have performed on his part every essential of the agreement. Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 341.

62. It is not alone the influence of liquor which avoids a contract, but it must be shown to exist to such an extent as to seriously impair the reasoning faculties at the time of the contract. Pickett v. Sutter, 5 Cal. 412.

63. Where a person hired continues in employment without any new contract, the fair presumption is that both parties understood that the same salary is to be paid. Nicholson v. Patchin, 5 Cal. 475.

64. That a femme covert has no power to make a contract, is a doctrine of the law, which a court has no power to disturb. Simpers v. Sloan, 5 Cal. 458.

65. A covenant not to sue for five years is no bar to the action, but the defendant must rely on the covenant for his remedy. Howland v. Marvin, 5 Cal. 501.

66. Plaintiff cannot recover against the "corporation of Bradley, Berdan & Co.," upon a written contract entered into between himself and "Bradley & Co.," as this contract was not made by the corporation; but if they were cognizant of the deceit, they could be made liable for work and labor. Morrisson v. Bradley, 5 Cal. 504.

67. The policy of this State has altered the rigidity of the common law, which disabled a corporation from making a contract, except under its corporate seal. Smith v. Eureka Flour Mills, 6 Cal. 6.

In general.

68. Where money is paid by one person in consideration of a contract to be performed by another, and the contract is not performed, the money so paid may be recovered back. Reina v. Cross, 6 Cal. 31.

69. In ordinary cases bail are only bound by the conditions of the bond, but the principle is now familiar, that where parties contract in respect of a law, the law itself becomes a part of the contract, and they are bound thereby. Mattoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 59.

70. There can scarcely be any obligation of honor or honesty moving between parties who contract in the very teeth of the statute prohibiting the act, and who must be supposed to have understood their exact relations to one another. People v. Kent, 6 Cal. 91.

71. A guaranty not under seal, nor expressing consideration made contemporaneously with the contract guaranteed, is a part of that contract, and the expression of the consideration in the contract takes the guaranty out of the statute of frauds. Jones v. Post, 6 Cal. 104.

72. Where a sale or mortgage of personal property was void for want of immediate delivery, subsequent advances after delivery cannot be recovered, when it appears that they were paid under the general contract. The contract being void, all subsequent acts relate to its inception, and are alike tainted with fraud. Chenery v. Palmer, 6 Cal. 122.

73. In an action brought jointly against two defendants on a joint and several obligation, the entry of final judgment on default against one of the defendants is a discharge of the other. Stearns v. Aguirre, 6 Cal. 180.

74. In all cases of joint and several contracts, the plaintiff may elect whether he will sue the defendants severally or jointly; having elected to treat his demand as joint for the purposes of the action, he must be governed by the same rules which would have applied had his contract originally have been joint, and not joint and several, and it is clearly error to enter several judgments against the defendants. Ib. 181.

75. Where a city ordinance authorizes the making of a contract by certain committees on behalf of the city, subject to confirmation by the common council for said city, a confirmation by joint resolution, and not by ordinance, is sufficient. San Francisco Gas Co. v. City of San Francisco, 6 Cal. 191.

76. A contract not to run boats on a certain line of travel, and on failure to comply with such contract to pay $15,000, is an instrument in writing for the payment of money, and assignable by our laws. Cal. Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 261; 8 Cal. 590.

77. At common law, all contracts by which one obliged himself to do an act or omission tending to injure the public, were void, and the general rule is, that contracts in restraint of trade are contrary to public policy. The stringency of this rule has been gradually relaxed as the reason for it—the security of mechanics and tradesmen—ceased. Ib.

78. Such a contract gives no monopoly—giving an exclusive enjoyment of the business only as against a single individual—while all the world besides is left at full liberty to enter upon the same enterprise. Ib. 6 Cal. 262; 8 Cal. 590.

79. It is a well established rule that where in contracts a several interest is alone expressed and referred to, no general terms will allow the meaning to be extended to a joint interest. Johnston v. Wright, 6 Cal. 376.

80. The mere nonperformance alone, within the stipulated time, does not annul a contract ipso facto, unless, indeed, the time is of the very nature and essence of the contract. Holliday v. West, 6 Cal. 527.

81. The obligation of a municipal corporation to keep the streets in repair is necessarily suspended while they are actually undergoing such alterations as for the time render them impassable or dangerous. James v. City of San Francisco, 6 Cal. 530.

82. Any contract on behalf of a county made by the court of sessions, not incident to their judicial functions, is a nullity, as the court has constitutionally none but judicial powers. Phelan v. San Francisco County, 6 Cal. 540.

83. Time is not the essence of a contract for the sale of real estate, unless made so by some express agreement of the parties. Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 571.

84. In actions upon joint and several contracts, an administrator cannot be joined with the survivor, because the one is joined de bonis testatoris, and the other de bonis propriis. May v. Hanson, 6 Cal. 643; Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 176.

In general.

85. Contracts for the sale of land, by the custom of California previous to the conquest, were required to be in writing, and although all the forms prescribed were not strictly followed, still it was necessary that the instrument should contain at least the names of the parties, the thing sold, the date of the transfer, and the price paid. Hayes v. Bona, 7 Cal. 159.

86. We have been willing to extend the greatest liberality to contracts executed before the acquisition of California by the United States, and to uphold them, if possible, where there were any equities existing. Ib. 159.

87. Neglect to sue a contractor for his first breach of contract does not operate so as to release his sureties for subsequent breaches. City of Sacramento v. Kirk, 7 Cal. 420.

88. As the owner of property, a city has a right to make contracts for its sale, lease or improvement; and these contracts, even if informal at the time, may afterwards be ratified by ordinance, provided the vested rights of others are not impaired. Lucas v. City of San Francisco, 7 Cal. 469.

89. Where the right of the plaintiff to recover rests upon an implied contract, all the circumstances of the case must be considered to ascertain what were the expectations of both the parties existing while the relation continued. Murdock v. Murdock, 7 Cal. 514.

90. Where an insolvent, after his discharge, expressly promises his creditor to pay his debt, it can be enforced, the debt being a sufficient consideration to support the new promise. Feeny v. Daly, 8 Cal. 85.

91. As a general rule, a vendor of goods is not a competent witness to impeach a sale made by himself. Howe v. Scannell, 8 Cal. 327.

92. But where evidence is introduced showing a collusion between vendor and vendee to defraud the creditors of the former, the declarations of the vendor are admissible, and a fortiori his sworn statement. Ib.

93. Where the owner of a mining claim contracts verbally with J. for working it, and agrees to pay him out of the proceeds of the mine, and J. goes into possession thereof, and while he is working it the owner sells it to a third party, who takes notice of J.'s contract: held, that his claim is not subject or liable to J.'s contract. Jenkins v. Redding, 8 Cal. 603.

94. Where the defendant employed the plaintiffs to superintend the erection of a building of which he was one of the contractors, they cannot plead that it is against public policy that he should occupy two positions of which the interests were in conflict, in defense of an action brought by him for services as superintendent. Shaw v. Andrews, 9 Cal. 74.

95. A contract is a voluntary and lawful agreement by competent parties for a good consideration to do or not to do a specified thing. Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 83.

96. A part payment made before a contract has expired by limitation is insufficient to take the case out of the statute. Fairbanks v. Dawson, 9 Cal. 92.

97. A substitution of one bidder for another at executor's sale, who failed to comply with the terms of the sale, cannot affect the validity of the sale. The order directing the sale, and the order confirming it, give vitality to the purchase. Halleck v. Guy, 9 Cal. 197.

98. Where a party employed receives a regular, specific monthly salary for his services, the presumption of law is that all services rendered by him for his employer during that period, which are of nearly a similar nature to those of regular duties, are paid for by his salary. To overcome this presumption he must show an express agreement for extra pay, otherwise he cannot recover. Cany v. Halleck, 9 Cal. 201.

99. A kept a ferry across the Sacramento river under a license which had expired. Having lost his boat, he contracted with B to furnish, rig and run another under the license to A, which he was to renew, until the profits should repay B's advances and interest. A neglected to renew his license; B, after waiting four months, applied for and obtained a license in his own name, and ran the ferry. A brought suit against B for an accounting and return of the ferry: held, that A had failed to carry out his agreement, and could not recover. Tartar v. Finch, 9 Cal. 276.

100. Where the contract is executory, the corporation cannot be held bound unless the contract is made in pursuance of the provisions of its charter; but where the contract has been executed and the corporation has enjoyed the benefits of the consideration, an implied assumpsit arises against it. San Francisco Gas Co. v. City of San Francisco, 9 Cal. 472.

101. A conveyance of land on the part of the husband to a trustee, securing the payment of an annuity to the wife upon separation, in consideration of an indemnity by the trustee against all debts of the wife, for maintenance, or other account, is valid, and supported by a sufficient consideration. Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 494.

102. Such a person as a trustee is unknown to the civil law, and contracts are termed onerous; such as contracts of sale, exchange and lease can be made directly between husband and wife, and, of course, between husband and a third party. Ib. 496.

103. The first step in a construction of a deed is to ascertain the understanding and intention of the parties at the time of contracting; and to do this, the whole deed should be taken together, and, if possible, effect should be given to all its parts. Brannan v. Mesick, 10 Cal. 105.

104. It is a general principle of the common law that whoever seeks redress for the violation of a contract resting upon mutual and dependent covenants, to obtain success must himself have performed the obligations on his part. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 254.

105. It is a well settled rule that a judgment rendered in one State and upon which suit is instituted in another, is a contract in the sense of the constitution. Scarborough v. Dugan, 10 Cal. 308.

106. That time is not in some instances of the essence of the contract may be very true; but the idea that in California in 1851, or even later, either the period of the conveyance of land or of the payment of the price was immaterial, or not an important element of the contract, seems to us plainly opposed to common sense. Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 330.

107. In California, where such rapid and sudden fluctuations in the affairs and fortunes of men occurred as in all history is unexampled, and where the work of years was accomplished in months, it is impossible to hold that time, as an element of past contracts, should be measured by the standards which obtain in old and settled States, where everything is comparatively stable and permanent, where capital is abundant, titles ascertained and interest is low. Ib. 331.

108. An injunction bond, though given to all the obligees by name and using no words directly expressing a several obligation, yet necessarily creates a several liability; the design of it being to secure each and all of the obligees from damage or injury. Summers v. Farish, 10 Cal. 351.

109. An agreement to surrender property on the failure of the party of the first part to be sold by them to pay the debts of the firm outstanding, and then to pay the balance over to the party of the second part, is at best only a trust retained upon the property sold; which may be enforced like any other trust. Cayton v. Walker, 10 Cal. 455.

110. In an action for the breach of a contract, the want of an averment of special damages cannot be reached by demurrer. Such averment is only necessary where the right of action depends itself upon the special injury received. For the breach of a contract an action lies, though no actual damages be sustained. McCarty v. Beach, 10 Cal. 464.

111. Courts will give a reasonable interpretation to contracts when the words justify it. Beem v. Kusick, 10 Cal. 540.

112. A court cannot judicially know that any article, much less water, contracted for at twenty-five cents per inch and proved on a certain day or at certain times to be worth a dollar an inch, is always, or is at any other time than that proved, worth the sum proved at the given time. Myers v. South Feather W. Co., 10 Cal. 582.

113. A party having possession of land cannot retain that possession and refuse compliance with their agreement made in consideration of such possession and right to it. Hitchens v. Nougues, 11 Cal. 36.

114. A surety has the right to stand upon the precise terms of his contract. He can be held to no other or different contract. People v. Buster, 11 Cal. 220.

115. There is no necessity that a contract must state the precise consideration of the agreement, especially if the contract be under seal. Farley v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 235.

In general.

116. Where a sale of a vessel is made part cash, and the balance of the purchase money to be paid upon delivery by the vendor to the vendee of a good title and register of the vessel, to recover the balance the vendor must show an offer on his part to comply with the agreement. Fowler v. Fisk, 12 Cal. 112.

117. Where a man agrees, in consideration of a future event or act, to do or not to do a thing, the happening of the event is usually a condition precedent to the enforcement of the obligation. Bensley v. Atwill, 12 Cal. 240.

118. In a court of law effect is to be given to the bargain according to its terms; and courts of law cannot speculate upon the weight attached to one or another of the elements of an obligation. Ib.

119. A contract to cancel the lease of a ditch and surrender possession to the lessor is sufficient evidence of the surrender of such possession, although it does not appear that there was a consideration expressed in such instrument of cancellation or surrender. Burke v. Table Mountain Co., 12 Cal. 407.

120. The term "ratified," when used in reference to a contract, is applicable only to contracts made by a party acting or assuming to act for another. The latter may adopt and ratify the act of the former however unauthorized. To adoption and ratification there must be some relation, actual or presumed, of principal and agent. Ellison v. Jackson W. Co., 12 Cal. 551.

121. Contingent and contemplated contracts cannot be levied upon and sold without being in the possession of the officer at the sale, to be exhibited to the bystanders and assigned to the purchaser, unless a full and accurate description of the particular interest and chose in action, with all its conditions and covenants, and a full explanation of the facts determining the value of the chose, be given by the levy and announced at the sale. Crandall v. Blen, 13 Cal. 23.

122. Where a contract is joint and not joint and several, the entire cause of action is merged in the judgment. Brady v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 33.

123. A judgment against one on a joint contract of several bars the action against the others, even though the latter were dormant partners unknown to the plaintiff when the original action was brought. Ib.

124. Any executed contract which passed the equitable right to a ditch and the use of the water as the property of the grantee, is enough to assure to him the right for which he stipulated as against an adverse claimant. Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 36.

125. Rights of property acquired by contract valid in the place where made, will be protected in this State. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 276.

126. A party seeking to rescind a contract must restore the other party to the condition in which he was before the contract was made. Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 323.

127. If one man contracts with another for land, the latter claiming the title and the right to sell it, and this is done in the presence and at the instigation of a third party who has the title, the third party is estopped from setting up the title as against the purchaser, and all persons in privity with such third person are likewise estopped, unless they are purchasers for valuable consideration without notice. Snodgrass v. Ricketts, 13 Cal. 362.

128. A specific allegation of a contract, in a verified complaint, is not sufficiently controverted by the answer stating that defendant has no knowledge or information respecting the same, and therefore denies the same, and no evidence of the contract would be necessary. Ord v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 13 Cal. 371.

129. Paying part of a note is no consideration for an agreement to extend the time of payment. Liening v. Gould, 13 Cal. 599.

130. A contract by one who lost property by fire or theft to pay a certain sum to any one who will secure the arrest and conviction of the criminal, is not a nude pact, but may be enforced by a person performing the service. Ryer v. Stockwell, 14 Cal. 135.

131. In such cases the offer of a reward or compensation by public advertisement, either to a particular person or class of persons, or to any and all persons, is a conditional promise, and if any one to whom such offer is made shall perform the service before the offer is revoked, such performance is a good consideration and the offer becomes a legal and binding contract. Until performance, the offer may be revoked at pleasure. Ib. 137.

In general.

132. Advertisements of rewards, upon acceptance of their terms and performance of the service, become written contracts. Ib.

133. Interest follows a contract according to the law in existence at the time and place of the contract, or of the performance of it. A subsequent change in the legal rate of interest does not affect the contract. Aguirre v. Packard, 14 Cal. 172.

134. A tax collector has power to contract for publishing the delinquent list of tax payers, so as to bind the county for payment of the price. He is the agent of the county in this respect, and for any reasonable exercise of that agency the county is responsible. Randall v. Yuba County, 14 Cal. 222.

135. Plaintiff contracts to dig a certain ditch for a water company, and agrees to be paid three dollars per rod; one-third of it in money on the completion of each mile, the other two-thirds to be paid in water at the rate of twenty-five cents per square inch, delivered through an orifice under six inches of pressure anywhere along and at the main ditch, the company having the right of paying the two-thirds in cash instead of water if they so elect: held, that said two-thirds, if elected to be paid in cash, need not be paid as the other third on the completion of each mile, and if the payment be made in water it could not be claimed before the completion of the ditch, and the cash cannot be required sooner. Myers v. South Feather River Water Co., 14 Cal. 275.

136. Plaintiff having assigned this contract to L. & Co. as security for a debt due them by plaintiff, they demanded of the company payment of whatever was coming to plaintiff. The company elected to pay and did pay in cash on a statement of so much due in money: held, that even if L. & Co. had no right to receive money instead of water, yet the payment binds plaintiff, for they were acting ostensibly for him or by his authority; that if he denied their authority the payment would not discharge his debt to L. & Co., the assignment would remain in force and the plaintiff would have no cause of action here; that if he affirmed the arrangement made with L. & Co. in part, he must give full effect to it and thus confirm the settlement as the liquidation of a money demand. Ib.

137. In suit by a female against two partners in a ranch for services as servant to the firm under an implied contract, or on a quantum meruit proof that plaintiff is the wife of one defendant, is good under the general issue as showing that there was no implied contract to pay for the services. Angulo v. Sunol, 14 Cal. 402.

138. From domestic services rendered in such case by the wife of one partner, all living in the same house, the law does not imply a contract to pay for the service. Ib.

139. In a suit by a physician against a county on a contract for his services for one year as examining physician of the hospital, the objection that he is not a graduate of a legally constituted medical institute, if good at all, cannot be taken by demurrer, unless the demurrer distinctly present the objection. McDaniel v. Yuba County, 14 Cal. 445.

140. Clear distinction between an office constituted by legislative act and a contract made with a party to render for a stated period certain services, though these services are to be rendered in a certain capacity in the nature of a public office or employment. Ib.

141. If, after such a contract, which compels the physician to perform such services only as the supervisors might require, they put it out of his power to render the services, he is still entitled to his salary. The board could not abrogate the contract by rescinding the order under which plaintiff was appointed, or abolishing the office. Ib.

142. A county is a corporation, and is the proper party plaintiff to object to a contract made by the board of supervisors for building a jail. People v. Myers, 15 Cal. 34.

143. Plaintiff entered into a contract with defendants, by which the latter purchased of the former certain ditches for $14,500, payable $5,000 cash, and $12,000 as follows, to wit: the expenses of keeping said ditches in good order, of employing agents to attend to the same, being first deducted from the proceeds of the sale of water, the balance of the proceeds was to be applied to the liquidation of said $12,000, until the whole was paid, "and to hasten and make certain the timely and early payment of said sum of money, by the sales as aforesaid, said company promise to furnish from their ditch, to be used in the above named ditches, so much water, which, added to the water supplied to said ditches from their other sources, shall be sufficient to effect sales to the amount of $1,000 per month; and when said company shall fail to furnish water as aforesaid, the said company hereby obligate themselves to pay to said Blen interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum on the said monthly deficiency, until met by receipts from sales over and above the said $1,000 per month:" held, that this contract is not an agreement on the part of defendants to pay the balance over the $2,000 only from the proceeds of the ditches named therein; but that it is a guarantee on their part that the mode of payment prescribed shall be effectual to pay the debt within a given time. Blen v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 15 Cal. 99.

144. The last clause in the contract does not give defendants a right to refuse to supply this water, but simply provides a measure of damages for the breach of it. Ib.

145. The company were bound by the contract to furnish and sell the stipulated quantity of water, and apply the proceeds monthly to the payment of plaintiff's claim, and failing to do this, were responsible in damages. Ib.

146. Plaintiff had two stacks of hay, and contracted to sell to defendant one stack, together with enough off the other stack to make sixty tons. The price was to be eighteen dollars per ton; and the hay was to be baled by plaintiff, and piled up in a corral, and then he was to be paid. Plaintiff had sixty-two tons and four hundred and thirty pounds of hay baled and piled up in the corral, the surplus over sixty tons being by mistake of the man employed to bale. The bales were of different weight. Plaintiff then went to the house of defendant, and told him that the hay was baled and piled up in the corral, and that there were two tons and some hundreds of pounds over the sixty bales piled up together, and asked defendant whether he would take the surplus. Defendant said he would be over soon, and see about taking the surplus. Defendant then paid plaintiff two hundred dollars. Plaintiff sues for nine hundred and nineteen dollars, balance due on the hay.

The court instructed the jury that if they believed from the evidence it was the understanding of the parties, that upon the payment of the two hundred dollars by defendant, the right and possession was deemed to have accrued to defendant to take the quantity bought as baled and stacked up in the corral, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, even though the bargain was not concluded as to the excess: held, that the instruction was right; that the question was, whether there had been a delivery, and any agreement of the parties upon the subject was legitimate matter for the jury; that the fact that the hay purchased by defendant was mixed with other hay belonging to plaintiff made no difference; if defendant agreed to accept it in that condition, and to consider it as delivered, the contract for delivery would be fully executed. Smith v. Friend, 15 Cal. 126.

147. Under the mechanic's lien act of 1858, material men, subcontractors, etc., have a lien upon the property described in the act to the extent—if so much be necessary—of the contract price of the principal contractor; but they must give notice of their claims to the owner, or the mere existence of such claims will not prevent the owner from paying the contractor, and thereby discharging himself from the debt. By giving such notice, the owner becomes liable to pay the subcontractor, material men, etc., as on garnishment or assignment; but if the owner pay according to his contract, in ignorance of such claims, the payment is good. McAlpin v. Duncan, 16 Cal. 127.

148. A bill of sale of "all the goods and merchandise and property we own, have or have an interest in, in a store in Nevada, county of Nevada, formerly occupied by Bailey Gatzert, and now in the possession of the sheriff of Nevada county; said goods forwarded by us to Bailey Gatzert, Nevada," contains a sufficient description of the goods. Coghill v. Boring, 15 Cal. 218.

149. To enable a vendor of goods to rescind the sale, he must offer to return the notes given for the goods; but this offer can be made at or any time before the trial. Ib.

150. Where, in a bill of sale of all the cattle of a certain estate, estimated at seven thousand head, a total price being fixed, it was stipulated that the vendee, on arriving in Texas, where the cattle were, might choose to take all the cattle of the estate without counting them, in which event he was to notify the agents of the vendors of his choice, and pay an additional $4,000; but if a count was had, and the cattle exceeded or fell short of the estimated number, the excess or deficiency should be paid for at the rate of eight dollars per head; and no count was ever made, and no notification ever given by the vendee, that he took the cattle without a count: held, that the vendor, on the facts, cannot recover the $4,000; that the only obligation of the vendee, in the first instance, was to receive the cattle and pay for any excess over the estimated number, if counted; that his liability for the $4,000 depended entirely on his choice to take the cattle without a count, and that this choice was a mere privilege, to be exercised or not, at his option. Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 257.

151. An ostensible partner retiring from the firm must give notice of his retirement, or he will be liable to creditors of the continuing firm on contracts made by them after his retirement. Williams v. Bowers, 15 Cal. 321.

152. In this action, the complaint contained two counts; one upon a special contract for the sale and delivery of the goods, the other for a claim upon goods sold and delivered. Answer denied the contract and the other allegations of the complaint; but set up a contract between the parties somewhat different, containing a guarantee as to quality, and alleging that the quality of the goods was not in accordance with the contract, and the breach was relied on as a complete defense. Evidence was introduced upon all the issues made by the pleadings. The court instructed the jury that "if the plaintiffs, on the day the contract matured, presented their account and offered to deliver the goods, they fulfilled the contract on their part; and if the defendants did not, within a reasonable time, and within the custom of the trade, make their objection to the article sold, and offer to rescind the contract, they are bound by it, and plaintiffs should recover." Plaintiffs had verdict and judgment for the price: held, that in a subsequent action by the defendants against plaintiffs, on the breach of the warrantee, for the difference in value between the goods delivered and those contracted for, the former suit is no bar; that the matter in dispute, to wit: this breach of warrantee, was not adjudged; that the instruction of the court took that question from the jury, and directed them to decide the rights of the parties upon other considerations. Earl v. Bull, 15 Cal. 425.

153. The act of March 21st, 1856, creating a board of State prison commissioners, and defining their duties, is constitutional. It does not create a debt or liability against the people of the State, in contravention of the eighth article of the constitution, and the contract made with Estill under the act is valid and binding upon the State. State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 454; People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 28.

154. Under the contract made with Estill for the payment to him of $10,000 per month on his lease of the prison and convicts, that sum per month is appropriated by the act; but these appropriations are to take effect, and the services are to be rendered, in future. Until the services are rendered, there is no debt on the part of the State. The State became indebted only as the services were each month performed. The lessee could not have claimed, at any time after the contract was made, all the monthly installments, as the State never owed him the amount. State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 454.

155. The support of convicts is as much the duty of the State as to provide for the salaries of her officers. It constitutes one of the ordinary sources of the State's expenditures; and a law authorizing a contract for keeping the prisoners at a fixed price—the payment and service being future acts—is not in conflict with the constitution. Ib. 455.

156. The fact that the contract with Estill was signed by the commissioners with their individual names, and not with the name of the State, does not make it defectively executed. The contract purports in its body to be between the State, acting by the commissioners under the act of March 21st, 1856, of the one part, and Estill of the other, and is signed by the commissioners with the affix of "board of State prison commissioners." This makes it the contract of the State and not of the commissioners. Ib. 457.

In general.

157. The State cannot rescind the contract made with Estill for breaches of the covenants of the lease by him and his assignee, so long as she herself is in default. Ib. 458.

158. The objection to the contract with Estill, under the act of the twenty-first of March, 1856, that it contained stipulations for the release of claims held by Estill against the State, thereby increasing the amount of the monthly payments, cannot be raised at this late day—three years having elapsed since the execution of the contract, and it having been in part performed on both sides, and thus acquiesced in and affirmed. Ib.

159. In this case, the State, being in default in making the monthly payments under the contract as they became due, and for months previous to this suit refusing to pay at all; not offering to make restitution of the property received of the lessee, or pay the value of the claims relinquished by him at the execution of the contract, or to pay what the complaint shows to be now due; and it not being possible to restore Estill & McCauley to their original position, they having been in possession of the prison for nearly three years, and having performed valuable services; cannot claim in equity a rescission of the contract. Ib.

160. Upon this point, the rule applicable to contracts of a private character differs from the rule governing contracts made by agents of the government. Such public agents are presumed to contract, not personally, but officially, within the sphere of their duties. Ib.

161. One party cannot violate a contract himself, and then seek to rescind it on the ground that the other party has followed his example. Ib.

162. Nor, when the contract has been in part performed, and the parties cannot be restored to their original position, can the right of rescission exist. Ib.

163. Proof as follows: "I am superintendent of the California State Telegraph Company, and operator in their office at San Francisco. July 2d, plaintiff came to our office, and delivered a message to be transmitted to Jackson, and paid for transmitting it there. The message was: 'Alta Express Co., Jackson—If you have package for me, forward immediately.' Signed 'C. Thurn.' In the margin of the message sent, were the words 'F., July 2d.' Few words passed when the message was delivered; no express agreement that the California State Telegraph Company should forward the message to Sacramento, and employ the Alta California Telegraph Company to transmit it from there to Jackson. He must have known that we could not send it to Jackson, as we had no line there. I think there was something said about sending it by the defendant's line from Sacramento." C. Thurn, the plaintiff, sues the Alta Telegraph Company for the penalty, under the one hundred and fifty-fourth section of the act of 1850, p. 370: held, that under these facts, he is not the person making or offering to make the contract, within the meaning of the act, and cannot recover; that the only contract proven is a contract by the State Telegraph Company to send the message or have it sent; and a contract, on its part, to contract on its own account with the Alta Telegraph Company to send the message. Thurn v. Alta Telegraph Co., 15 Cal. 475.

164. The right to redeem land is no part of the contract of indebtedness. It is a new privilege given by statute. It is a provision made by statute for a future contract, by pursuing which a purchase of land may be made. But as this provision is only a matter out of which rights may grow, the provision may be repealed at any time before a party avails himself of it. Tuolumne Redemption Co. v. Sedgwick, 15 Cal. 522.

165. The legislature may give a particular privilege, or a right to contract on certain terms or in certain circumstances; but it may repeal the provision, or deny the right, as a general rule, as fully and completely as it can give them; or it may alter the terms at its pleasure, subject only to this: that it cannot repeal or alter so as to affect those contracts which have been made during the existence of the act authorizing them. Ib.

166. The statutory regulations as to redemption, are mere provisions of sale, governing the course of the process and its effects. They do not touch the contract of indebtedness, which stands, as it stood before, a valid obligation to pay money, with the sanctions furnished by law for its enforcement. And a sale without any right of redemption is a valid and sufficient remedy for the enforcement of the contract. Ib. 523.

167. A contract entered into by the agents of the State upon a subject within the constitutional control of the legislature, may be affirmed by the State by legislation indirectly referring to the contract, or proceeding upon its assumed validity. Direct legislative action in terms designating and affirming the contract, is not necessary. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 38.

168. The third section of the act "to provide for the construction of canals, and for draining and reclaiming certain swamp and overflowed lands in Tulare Valley," passed April 11th, 1857, is a grant upon condition precedent, and not upon condition subsequent, and passes no estate to the grantee, until performance of the conditions annexed—that is, until the reclamation of the lands. This grant is a contract between the State and the grantees, by which the State grants certain lands, upon condition of work to be performed; the grant to take effect when the work is done. It is a contract by which rights may be acquired absolutely, upon performance of the acts specified as the consideration moving to the State. Montgomery v. Kasson, 16 Cal. 194.

169. The charter of the city of San Francisco of 1851 gave the city power to open streets and alleys, and to alter and improve the same, and this power includes authority to enter into contracts for that purpose, binding upon the city. And this, notwithstanding section two, article five of that charter, providing that the adjacent property shall bear two-thirds of the expense of every improvement. This section simply made the property holders liable to the city for the two-thirds, and the remedy of the city was by assessments on the property, and such assessments, when collected, go into the city treasury, to be used as the city sees fit. Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 263.

170. As to the contracts of corporations, the rule is, that when the question is one of capacity or authority to contract, arising either on a question of regularity of organization, or of power conferred by the charter, a party who has had the benefit of the contract cannot, in an action founded upon it, contest its validity. And this rule applies with equal force to all corporations, public or private. Ib. 264.

171. Contracts of corporations, whether public or private, stand on the same footing with the contracts of natural persons, and depend on the same circumstances for their validity and effect. The doctrine of ratification and estoppel is as applicable to corporations as to individuals, and the former are bound by the acts of their agents in the same manner, and to the same extent, as the latter. Ib. 265.

172. As a rule, the powers of corporations, municipal or others, must be exercised in the mode pointed out by the charter. But even a want of authority is not, in all cases, a sufficient test of the exemption of the corporation from liability in matters of contract. An executory contract, made without authority, cannot be enforced; but where the contract has been executed, and the corporation has received the benefit of it, the law interposes an estoppel, and will not permit the validity of the contract to be questioned. Ib. 273.

173. Plaintiff, by virtue of contracts entered into with an officer of the city of San Francisco, which contracts were executed by such officer in his official capacity, made valuable and permanent improvements to the city, for the exclusive benefit of it and its inhabitants; such improvements were made under the immediate supervision of an officer of the city, and when completed, were approved of and received by him, on behalf of the city; plaintiff, in making the improvements, relied on the validity of the contracts and the obligation of the city to pay as therein provided; the city authorities were fully informed of these facts, took no steps to repudiate the contracts, or to inform plaintiff as to her disposition to pay: held, that plaintiff can recover on the contracts, although there is no evidence that the officer signing them was expressly authorized; that the silence of the city authorities, under the circumstances, was equivalent to a direct sanction of the acts of such officer, and estops the city from denying his authority; that the city having acquiesced in the contracts from the commencement to the completion of the improvements, never questioning the validity of the contracts until she had received all the benefit to be had from their performance, it would be a fraud on plaintiff to permit her now to repudiate them. Ib. 274.

In general.

174. The common council of the city of San Francisco passed an ordinance authorizing the street commissioner to advertise for proposals to grade, plank and sewer a portion of Mission street, in said city, "the same to be paid for by the property holders adjacent * * the proposals to be opened and awarded by the street commissioner, with the committees on streets from both boards of aldermen." This ordinance was published for ten days successively in a daily newspaper of the city, and the advertisement required was made in like manner for the same period. Proposals, based upon certain specifications, were received under the ordinance, and opened by the committees of the two boards and the commissioner, and the work awarded to B. Subsequently, an instrument was executed by B., as contractor, and by the street commissioner, purporting to act in the name of the city, setting forth the acceptance by the city of B.'s proposal, and an agreement by her to pay him for the work at certain designated rates, and an agreement on his part to do the work to the satisfaction of the city and the street commissioner. B. began the work, and afterwards transferred his contract and his interest therein to plaintiff, who completed the work in the best manner, and to the satisfaction of the street commissioner and the city. The work was measured as it progressed, by the city's engineer, who duly certified to the accounts for the same, which accounts were duly audited, and upon them warrants were drawn by the controller, by authority of the city, and delivered to plaintiff. The warrants were presented to the treasurer, and payment demanded and refused, on the ground that there were no funds in the treasury applicable to them. Previous to the demand, assessments had been duly levied by the city upon the property adjacent to the improvements, to meet their expenses, and these assessments had been collected by the collector of street assessments, and by him paid into the city treasury. Plaintiff sues the city, as liable either on the express contract, or upon the warrants, or upon implied contracts, for the services rendered and materials furnished, or for the money received by defendant to his use: held, that as, under the charter, the city had authority to order the improvements in question, the acceptance of the proposals of B. by the street commissioner and the committees of the two boards, converted what were previously mere propositions on the part of the city into contracts, perfect in all their parts, binding alike upon the city and the contractor: held, further, that the city is primarily liable; that she, and not the contractor, must look to the property holders adjacent to the improvements, for the necessary expenses; that the property holders are not parties to the contract; that the city must levy and collect the assessments; that the contractor has no claim upon the property or the property holders, but must look alone to the city; that the clause in the ordinance as to how the improvements shall be paid for, is only a designation of the sources upon which the city relies for payment. Id. 277.

175. As a general rule, a city is only liable upon express contracts authorized by ordinance. The exceptions relate to liabilities from the use of money, or other property which does not belong to her, and to liabilities springing from neglect of duties imposed by her charter, from which parties are enjoined. Even these exceptions are limited in many instances, as where the property or money is received in disregard of positive prohibitions in her charter—as, for instance, upon the issuance of bills of credit. Id. 283.

176. Relator conveyed to Y. one-third of certain real estate, in consideration that Y. should attend to a suit pending in the name of relator for the recovery of the property. Y. employed an attorney to conduct the suit, the attorney of plaintiff being discharged. Relator moved the court below to substitute another attorney in the place of the one employed by Y. Court refused to grant the motion—the only reason urged for the substitution being that Y. had neglected to prosecute the suit; and it not being shown that the agreement between him and relator had been canceled by the parties. Relator applies to this court for mandamus: held, that the writ lies; that the agreement between relator and Y. does not exclude the former from the right to prosecute the suit, and employ such attorney as he chooses; that the exercise of this right will not affect any right Y. may have in the property or suit; that he may intervene, if a proper case be made, or prosecute his rights independently, or wait until a recovery, and then claim his rights under the contract with relator. People v. Norton, 16 Cal. 440.

177. Where a lease of a lot in San Francisco, for ten years, stipulated that the lessee should place "on said premises a building thirty by eighty feet, which has been shipped from the port of New York, to be put up immediately on arrival; or if lost, a similar one is to be ordered, got up, and put up in the shortest possible time," and also, in a final clause, that if no agreement was made between the parties for a renewal of the lease for a further period, "then the valuation of the buildings is to be made by three disinterested persons," etc., and the lessor was to pay to the lessee the amount agreed on; and the lessee erected a building worth about $1,000, which was burned, and then another similar one, and subsequently sub-let the premises to plaintiff, who put up a valuable building, costing $5,000—defendants, who had bought the lot, notifying him, before he erected his building, that they would not pay for it: held, that at the expiration of the term, defendants were not bound to pay plaintiff for his improvements; that the term "buildings," though in the plural, refers to the building mentioned in the fore part of the lease, and not to any buildings the lessee might erect—especially when the conduct of the parties, the nature of the transaction, and the surrounding circumstances are considered. The terms of this lease so construed as to give completeness to the agreement, and to make it a just, fair and equal contract, mutually obligatory in its essential provisions, instead of a one-sided and unreasonable contract. Woodward v. Payne, 16 Cal. 450.

178. A man may as well agree to sell property upon the condition that another will consent to buy, as upon any other condition, or absolutely. The agreement is no less a contract, because it merely provides for, or is in advance of another contract, than if it were incorporated in the ultimate contract: or, in other words, a man may as well bind himself to make a contract, as to bind himself by contract, and the first as well partakes of the nature and essentials of a valid agreement as the last. De Rutte v. Muldrow, 16 Cal. 513.

179. The cases where possession must be surrendered before action can be brought for the purchase money are those where a contract has been made and possession has been taken thereunder, and the vendee seeks to rescind the contract on the ground of defective title, or the inability of the vendor to perform the contract on his part, or of some fraudulent representations inducing its execution. In these cases the vendee must first offer to restore whatever he has received, before he can call upon the vendor to refund the purchase money. McCracken v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 628.

II. VERBAL CONTRACT.

180. A verbal contract for the sale of land was not valid under Mexican law. Hoen v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 122; Hayes v. Bona, 7 Cal. 158; Stafford v. Lick, 10 Cal. 17.

181. Under the Mexican as well as the American law, a verbal contract was of itself insufficient to transfer the title to real estate. Tohler v. Folsom, 1 Cal. 210.

182. Under a verbal contract of sale of real estate, the delivery of the deed is equivalent to a symbolical delivery of and admission in its possession of the property as between vendor and vendee, whatever might be its effect as to third persons. Ib. 212.

183. Where there has been such a part performance of a verbal contract of sale by the plaintiff as to put him into a situation which would operate as a fraud upon him unless the verbal agreement should be enforced, equity will decree a specific performance of the contract. Ib.

184. A parol agreement to rescind a contract under seal is good if such parol agreement is executed; and such agreement may be presumed from the acts of the parties. Green v. Wells, 2 Cal. 585.

185. An executed parol agreement is a good defense against an action upon a specialty. The statute of frauds contains no provision with regard to the dissolution of agreements or contracts under seal for the sale of lands. Beach v. Covillaud, 4 Cal. 315; Whiting v. Heslep, 4 Cal. 330; McDonald v. Mountain Lake W. Co., 4 Cal. 336.

Verbal Contract.—Executory Contract.

186. Where a verbal contract was alleged in the bill, and admitted in the answer without the defendant's insisting upon the statute of frauds, a specific performance was decreed upon the obvious grounds that the admission of the contract took the case out of the mischief against which the statute was intended to guard; and a failure to insist upon the statute was a waiver of its protection. Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 158.

187. Where a verbal contract had been so far performed by one of the parties, relying upon the good faith of the other, that he could have no adequate remedy except by complete performance, courts of equity decreed its execution upon the ground that the refusal to execute the same under such circumstances was a fraud, and that a statute having for its object the prevention of fraud could not be used as an instrument for its perpetration. Ib.

188. Nothing can be regarded as a part performance to take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds which does not place the party in a situation which is a fraud upon him, unless the contract be executed. Ib. 159.

189. If upon the faith of the contract the purchaser should proceed to make valuable improvements, the most palpable fraud would be perpetrated if the vendor were permitted to withdraw from its execution. Ib. 159.

190. The defense arising from a verbal contract for the sale of land accompanied with acts of part performance, taking the contract from the operation of the statute, is permissible, under our system of practice, to an action of ejectment for the recovery of the premises. Ib. 160.

191. Where the answer disclosed the fact that a contract was not in writing, but it also averred acts of part performance, which took the contract out of the operation of the statute, it is not demurrable. Ib.

192. E. contracted with J. W. to construct an extension to a ditch, and after the ditch was completed, was to be paid out of the sales of water. At the time of the execution of the contract, B. held a mortgage upon the ditch. After E. had partly completed his work B.'s mortgage fell due, and he brought an action to foreclose it, and had a receiver appointed to receive the water rents of the ditch. E. refused to go on and complete the work. B. agreed with E. that if he would go on and complete the work he should be paid out of the receipts from the sale of water by the receiver. Under this proviso E. completed the work: held, that this is an undertaking to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another, and is, therefore, within the statute of frauds. Ellison v. Jackson W. Co., 12 Cal. 552.

193. It is essential to the validity of a contract to answer for the debt of another that some note or memorandum thereof be made in writing; that it expresses the consideration; and that it be subscribed by the party to be charged thereby. Ib.

III. EXECUTORY CONTRACT.

194. Where it appears clearly from a charter party that the intention of the owner of a ship and the charterer is that the former shall have no lien on the freight, but shall give a personal credit to the charterer, the former loses his right of lien on the cargo and can look only to the personal responsibility of the charterer for payment of the hire of the vessel. Brown v. Howard, 1 Cal. 424.

195. An agreement to sell merchandise, and that the contract shall be considered as binding until the vessel arrived, was held to be an executory contract and depended on the contingency of the ship's arrival, and the arrival of the ship must be shown as a condition precedent. Middleton v. Ballingall, 1 Cal. 446.

196. A contracted with B, the owner of a ranch, to take the ranch under his charge, and for compensation to receive one-fourth part of all the increase of the cattle, etc., upon the ranch, when parted at the end of five years; it was held that this contract gave no present interest in the live stock, but only to acquire a determinate part, and these could not be completed until the expiration of five years from the execution of the contract. Fitch v. Brockman, 3 Cal. 362.

197. An executory contract between a landlord and tenant, that after the title to the premises is settled by a suit to be prosecuted by the former against third persons, the tenant may purchase, does not destroy the relation of landlord and tenant. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 114.

Executory Contract.—Parol Evidence to explain a Contract.

198. Where the deed of land bought for a married woman is taken in the name of a third person, under an executory agreement on his part to convey to her on the payment of a certain sum, and she goes into possession, she enters under claim of right with a vested equitable interest in the land, which, on payment of the sum agreed, becomes a perfect equity. Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 499.

199. If on an executory contract for the purchase of land made by plaintiff with the agent during the life of the principal, money due by the principal was paid after his death to the agent, who settled the amount with the estate, so that the estate received the benefit of the payment, plaintiff would be entitled in equity to call for the legal title, and could defend in ejectment by the representatives of the principal. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 20.

200. Z., the owner of land, contracts in writing to sell it to K., nothing being said as to the possession. K. is to give three notes, falling due at different periods, for the purchase money. The first two notes become due at very short dates, and after they are paid, Z. is to make a deed to K. with covenants against his own acts. First note is paid before the second falls due; Z. deeds the land to plaintiff, subject to the contract with K., the deed containing covenants of warranty against acts of the grantor. Later, and on the day the second note is due, K. sells the land to McE., one of the defendants. K. took possession under the contract. Shortly after plaintiff demanded of K. payment of the second note, and tendered him a deed from himself (plaintiff) to K., with the covenants mentioned in Z.'s contract. K. said he could do nothing. Plaintiff then formally demanded payment and execution of the mortgage. K. wished to see his attorney. After the third note fell due, plaintiff demanded of McE. payment of the two notes, tendering the deed from Z. to him (plaintiff) and also a deed from himself to McE., offering also a mortgage to be executed by McE. to secure the third note, and demanding possession. McE. refused: held, that under the contract the purchaser was not entitled to possession at once; that payment of the first two notes, or tender, was a condition precedent to his right of possession; that until then the vendor Z., or his assignee, had the legal title, and could maintain ejectment against the vendee. Gaven v. Hagen, 15 Cal. 210.

IV. PAROL EVIDENCE TO EXPLAIN A CONTRACT.

201. Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the terms of a written contract. Lennard v. Vischer, 2 Cal. 38; Conner v. Clark, 12 Cal. 170.

202. Parol evidence cannot be admitted to alter or vary the terms of a written contract, nor to explain its terms, if the contract itself seems to express the intention of the parties with sufficient certainty. Johnson v. Carry, 2 Cal. 38.

203. The custom of merchants is not admissible in evidence to vary the plain meaning of a written contract. Corwin v. Patch, 4 Cal. 204.

204. In an action on quantum meruit testimony is inadmissible to prove that the original contract has been changed at the request of the defendant, and the value of the extra work performed. Mowry v. Starbuck, 4 Cal. 275.

205. In the absence of any ambiguity on the face of the contract, parol evidence is inadmissible for the purpose of varying its terms, or of altering the liability created by it. Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 358.

206. Where in a suit brought by a municipal corporation upon a contract made under an ordinance, the defendant offered to prove a parol change in the contract, which the court refused to allow: held, not to be error, as the change in the contract could only be by ordinance. City of Sacramento v. Kirk, 7 Cal. 420.

207. Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the terms of a written contract so as to make it embrace property not described therein. Osborn v. Hendrickson, 7 Cal. 285.

208. Parol evidence of the contents of a written contract between the alleged husband and wife to live together without marriage, is inadmissible, except after due notice to produce the contract and refusal to do so, but it is admissible simply to prove the fact that a writing was made in reference to the matter in controversy

Parol Evidence to explain a Contract.—Entirety of Contract.

without stating the contents of the same. Poole v. Gerrard, 9 Cal. 594.

209. Parol evidence is sometimes admissible to explain, but not to contradict or vary the terms of a written contract; then if words be ambiguous, its meaning may be gathered from contemporaneous facts which intrinsic testimony establishes. Brannan v. Mesick, 10 Cal. 106; Jenny Lind Co. v. Bower, 11 Cal. 198.

210. A court of equity will release against mistake as well as fraud in a deed or contract in writing, and parol evidence is admissible to show it if denied in the answer. Wagenblast v. Washburn, 12 Cal. 212.

211. Parol proof of a written contract and assignment thereof in writing, is not admissible so as to charge the assignee without notice to produce the original and accounting for its loss. Grimes v. Fall, 15 Cal. 65.

212. Parol evidence is admissible to establish a new and distinct agreement upon a new consideration, which takes the place of and is a substitute for the old. In the latter case, however, it must appear that the old agreement is rescinded and abandoned, and it is not competent to show by parol the incorporation of new terms and conditions. It is obvious, too, that the new agreement must be valid in itself, and such as may be made the basis of an action. Adler v. Friedman, 16 Cal. 140.

V. ENTIRETY OF CONTRACT.

213. A merchant in Boston shipped by one bill of lading merchandise to his agent at San Francisco. On arrival, part of the goods were delivered, and part of the freight paid; but the agent, unable to pay the balance, offered security for its payment to the master, which he refused: held, that the master had a lien on the entire goods for his freight, and that a part delivery was no waiver of his lien, and that the consignee could not sue for the delivery. Frothingham v. Jenkins, 1 Cal. 44.

214. The master of a ship has a lien on the cargo for the freight, and is not bound to deliver to a consignee any part of the goods specified in a bill of lading, until the whole freight is paid; and an offer to give good security for the payment of the freight is not sufficient to compel him to deliver the goods. Ib.

215. Where the contract of sale was for a greater quantity of an article than the vendor by the evidence was proven to have, and the vendee had received a portion of what he had, but refused to receive the remainder, because it was not delivered in time: held, that the vendor could not maintain an action to recover the price of the entire contract, which he was unable to fulfill, but may recover the stipulated price for the quantity actually delivered, deducting therefrom the damages sustained by the vendee, by reason of the nondelivery. Cole v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 54.

216. Where there has been a contract to erect a building at a specified price, and the contract is deviated from by consent, the plaintiff must recover upon a quantum meruit, and not upon the express contract; but at the trial the measure of compensation must be graduated by the terms of the contract, so far as the work can be traced under it. DeBoom v. Priestly, 1 Cal. 207.

217. Where a person agrees to work for a certain period at a fixed price, and to perform certain services for a fixed amount, he cannot break off at his own pleasure and maintain an action for the work done. Hutchinson v. Whetmore, 2 Cal. 312.

218. Where the contract is not entire, when by the terms payment may be demanded for part performance, an action lies for money due for such part performance. Ib.

219. Where the contracts are entire, the covenants dependent, and the plaintiff had declared his inability to keep it, and afterwards actually abandoned it: held, that these facts formed a defense to his action for a claim under the contract. Green v. Wells, 2 Cal. 585.

220. An acceptance of goods bearing a name different from the one used in the sale note, by a sub-vendee, of part of goods sold, does not conclude the vendee as to the whole contract. Flint v. Lyon, 4 Cal. 21.

221. Where an auctioneer sells a balance of goods, without specifying their quantity, he has a reasonable time to ascertain it; when this is done, and a bill of particulars is made out and delivered to the purchaser, who pays the purchase money, or a portion of it, the contract became executed, and the auctioneer will not afterwards be permitted to allege a mistake or quantity. Burgoyne v. Middleton, 4 Cal. 66.

222. Where one of two innocent parties must suffer, it must be he who trusted most, or he whose misplaced confidence enabled the wrong to be committed. Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 358.

223. Where the contract is entire, a breach of part is a breach of the whole, and discharges the party complaining of it from the performance of any of the conditions on his part, and gives him a complete right of action. Haskell v. McHenry, 4 Cal. 411.

224. Where the entire performance of a special contract has been prevented by one of the parties, or where its terms have been afterwards varied by the agreement of both parties, the action for the amount due for work and labor should be in the form of indebitatus assumpsit, and not upon contract. Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 111; Adams v. Pugh, 7 Cal. 151.

225. In such case the contract may be introduced by either party, as an admission of the standard of value, or as of proof of any other fact necessary to the recovery, and should be allowed to go to the jury whenever it can aid them in attaining a sound conclusion. Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 111.

226. Where a lease contained the usual covenants to pay rent, and reëntury for nonpayment, and provided for the appraisement of improvements erected by the lessee, and payment of their value by the lessor at the expiration of the term, and the lessor reëntered for nonpayment of rent: held, that the lessee must wait till the expiration of his term as fixed by contract, before he can recover for his improvements. Laurence v. Knight, 11 Cal. 303.

227. A contract for the transportation of passengers from San Francisco to New York is an entirety, whether the entire voyage is to be performed in one vessel or not. Ord v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 13 Cal. 371.

228. A breach of such contract at any point, as leaving the passenger on the Isthmus, renders the vessel liable. Ib. 372.

229. In suit to recover for services for half a year, under a contract to work a whole year, plaintiff having quit the employment of defendant, it requires slight evidence of assent or agreement to apportion the contract, and allow the plaintiff to recover. Hogan v. Titlow, 14 Cal. 256.

230. An entire contract is indivisible—the whole must stand or fall together. But a contract, made at the same time for different articles, at different prices, is not an entire contract, unless the taking of the whole is essential from the character of the property, or is made so by the agreement of the parties, or unless it is of such a nature that a failure to obtain a part of the articles would materially affect the objects of the contract, and thus have influenced the sale, had such a failure been anticipated. Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 255.

231. A sale of nine slaves for a gross sum is an entire contract. There being no means afforded for determining the price of each one, the agreement is implied that the whole are to be taken, or none. Ib.

VI. DAMAGES FOR NONPERFORMANCE.

232. Damages on the resale of an article not delivered according to contract do not legally result from the breach of the contract, and if not specially alleged in the pleading cannot be allowed. Cole v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 54.

233. In an action against a common carrier, the rule of damages is the value of the goods at the port of delivery, and not the invoice price or the value at the port of shipment. Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 118.

234. In an action against a common carrier for nonperformance of his contract to carry a passenger, remote and contingent damages cannot be recovered. Yonge v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 1 Cal. 354.

235. Loss of time, value of services, and wages of employees caused by the failure of a party to perform his contract are not remote, but strictly proximate and immediate damages, and ought to be allowed. Kenyon v. Goodall, 3 Cal. 259.

236. If a contract contained a covenant for stipulated damages, and by the same contract parties were constituted partners, it was held that in an action on said contract the legal demand for damages could

---

 Damages for Nonperformance.—Want of Consideration.

---

be joined with the equitable demand for a dissolution. Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 294.

237. The general rule as to the measure of damages in an action for breach of contract is the actual loss sustained; but where, from the nature of the contract, no possible mode is left for ascertaining the damage, we adopt the only measure of damage which remains, and that is the price agreed to be paid. Baldwin v. Bennett, 4 Cal. 393; Coffee v. Meiggs, 9 Cal. 364.

238. The rule of damages against a purchaser for not receiving goods according to contract is the difference between the contract price and the market value at the time of the breach of the contract. Haskell v. McHenry, 4 Cal. 411.

239. In an action for breach of contract and for hindering the plaintiff from completing his part thereof, the true measure of damages is the value of the labor performed by plaintiff, and the profit he could fairly have derived from the labor he was prevented from performing. Cunningham v. Dorsey, 6 Cal. 21.

240. Where A has made payment in advance on a contract to purchase stock of B, which B refuses or fails to deliver, and A thereupon notifies B that he claims the right to rescind the contract, and claims repayment of the money paid, the notice does not affect or impair the right of A to maintain an action for damages on the contract. Jones v. Post, 6 Cal. 104.

241. As to contracts under seal generally, the American rule seems to be that the consideration clause in a deed can be explained by parol proof where the consideration proven is of the same species as that mentioned in the instrument. Bennett v. Solomon, 6 Cal. 138.

242. A complaint alleging that the defendant sold to the plaintiffs a certain share of fruit growing in an orchard, and after the sale executed a guaranty that the share of plaintiffs should be at their disposal, and further alleging a demand for the same, and the refusal of the defendant to deliver, is demurrable, as it should have contained an assignment of the breach of the contract or guaranty. Dabovich v. Emeric, 7 Cal. 212; 12 Cal. 179.

243. Where A had agreed with his tenant who was occupying a wooden building, that if he would give up his lease, A would erect a brick building to cover such portion of the lot as would be satisfactory to the tenant, and would give him possession within three weeks, and a lease of the premises for six months, with the privilege of twelve months, or on failure to do so would pay the tenant five hundred dollars: held, on breach of the contract on the part of A, that the sum named was a penalty, and not liquidated damages. Nash v. Hermosilla, 9 Cal. 588.

244. In an action for nondelivery, the buyer need only aver that he was ready and willing to receive and pay for them, and a refusal to deliver, without averring an actual tender; and the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the article sold. Crosby v. Watkins, 12 Cal. 88.

245. If a man sells his property or contracts with another, on good consideration, that the latter shall pay his debt, for a breach of the obligation the measure of damages would be the amount. The law supposes in such a case that the payment of the debt is equivalent in value to the debtor to so much money in hand. White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 523.

246. In an action of damages for violation of a contract to grind wheat and deliver the flour on demand upon payment of the price agreed upon for grinding, tender of payment is necessary to maintain the action. Vance v. Dingley, 14 Cal. 53.

247. Nominal damages are presumed to follow, as conclusion of law, from proof of the breach of a contract. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11.

 VII. WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

---

248. A certificate in writing in these words: "And I did at the time of the said agreement (to convey land) consent and agree that A should have possession of the lot forthwith," executed long after the agreement, forms no part of the original contract, and wants consideration. No action can be maintained for damages because a third person is in possession. Tewksbury v. Laffan, 1 Cal. 130.

249. Where there is no note or memorandum of the contract in writing, and no part of the purchase money paid, without an acceptance or receipt of the goods the contract is void, and cannot be enforced. Gardet v. Belknap, 1 Cal. 400.

Want of Consideration.

250. Wagers which tend to excite a breach of the peace or are against good morals, or which are against the principles of sound policy, are illegal, and no contract arising therefrom can be enforced. Bryant v. Mead, 1 Cal. 444.

251. A vendee may avail himself of fraud, breach of warranty, or failure of consideration, by way of defense in an action upon contract. Flint v. Lyon, 4 Cal. 20.

252. In order to rescind a contract for the sale of land on the ground that the vendor cannot perform it because he has no title to the land, it is necessary for the vendor to aver and show an outstanding paramount title in another. Riddell v. Blake, 4 Cal. 262.

253. Equity can relieve by granting a rescission of the contract upon the allegation of the insolvency of the grantor and his inability to respond in damages to an action upon the covenant, a paramount outstanding title in another, and a offer to redeliver possession and account for the rents and profits. Norton v. Jackson, 5 Cal. 265.

254. A written contract to pay more than ten per cent. per annum as interest on an indebtedness incurred prior to the contract, is void for want of consideration as to the excess of interest up to the date of the contract. Adams v. Hastings, 6 Cal. 130.

255. Where a purchaser of land does not obtain the title which the deed purported to convey and the covenants embrace, and he goes upon it and retains possession under the deed, and the failure of the title goes to the entire consideration paid or to be paid for the land, then he must seek his remedy by a rescission of the contract, alleging a paramount title in another, and offering to redeliver possession, and account for the rents and profits. Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 402.

256. Where a party contracts to have certain work performed, and states to third parties furnishing labor or materials that he will see these paid for: held, that the promise is without consideration, and is within the statute of frauds. Clay v. Walton, 9 Cal. 333; Ellison v. Jackson W. Co., 12 Cal. 533.

257. Plaintiff having bought certain horses of defendant, as also the "good will" of a mercantile house in the matter of drayage, cannot sue to recover back the purchase money paid on the ground that such "good will" is not vendable. Buckingham v. Waters, 14 Cal. 147.

258. There were pending before the board of U. S. land commissioners three cases—No. 558, Nos. 45 and 812. The claimants in No. 558 entered into a written agreement with V., the claimant, and B., his attorney of record, in cases Nos. 45 and 812, by which the former agreed to pay to V. a certain portion of the proceeds of the sales of that portion of the claim No. 558, known as the Miranda claim, the parties agreeing to appoint an agent to go on and make sales. Contemporaneous with this agreement was another between the same parties, by which V. and B. agreed to withdraw and discontinue claims Nos. 45 and 812 before said board, and also to cause to be withdrawn the depositions of Theodore Miranda and Francisca Miranda, taken before a commissioner in said case, No. 558, and on file therein; and to use their "best endeavors to procure the confirmation of said claim No. 558." B. was the attorney for the Miranda claim, which was for the same land as claim No. 558. To defeat claim No. 558 he acted for the U. S. law agent, in taking said depositions, which were important to the government in defeating claim No. 558, and he attempted to carry out his agreement to withdraw said depositions—though he was not directly retained by the government. V. and B. sue for the specific execution of the agreement: held, that such agreement is against public policy, and cannot be enforced; that B. could not, without a violation of his duty to the government as an attorney, carry out such agreement. Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 397.

259. An attorney, after once acting as such in the prosecution of a suit, and having opportunities for knowing the facts of his client's case, cannot go over and render assistance to the adverse side, and then enforce, in a court of equity, a contract based on such assistance. Ib. 401.

260. There is no difference, in principle, between a contract to keep a witness out of the way, and an agreement to suppress and get from the archives or offices of the government a deposition—a knowledge of which may be important to the government. Ib. 404.

---

 Fraudulent Consideration.—Impairing the obligation of Contracts.

---

261. If any part of the consideration of an agreement be void, as against public policy, the whole contract fails. Ib.

262. Where one of the grantees under the act of 1857 enters into an agreement to sell to defendant five of the sections of land embraced within the act, and covenants that he and his associates will execute a good and sufficient deed to the defendant, upon payment of the several notes given as the consideration; will complete the canals within the five years allowed; and that by means thereof and the operation of the statute, they will have a good and valid title to the premises: held, that defendant cannot resist the payment of the first note merely because the legislature has attempted, by an unconstitutional act, to repeal the contract of the State with the vendor and his associates—the agreement itself providing for a surrender of the unpaid notes, and a return of the moneys paid, in case of future failure of title, and the rights of the grantees of the State being fully known to defendant. Montgomery v. Kason, 16 Cal. 194.

---

 VIII. FRAUDULENT CONSIDERATION.

263. A contract, however fraudulent as to creditors, is good as between the contracting parties. Montgomery v. Hunt, 5 Cal. 368.

264. If any part of an entire consideration of a contract is illegal, the whole contract is void. Taaffe v. Josephson, 7 Cal. 355; Swartz v. Hazlett, 8 Cal. 129.

265. If a purchaser is not only insolvent, and knew the fact, but performed an open and notorious act of insolvency, it was his duty, arising out of his previous dealing with the vendors, to disclose the fact before the sale; and a violation of that duty amounted to a fraud, which avoided the contract. Seligman v. Kalkman, 8 Cal. 214.

266. It is fully established that where a purchase of goods is made with the pre-conceived design of not paying for them, it is such a fraud as will vitiate the sale. Ib.

267. A purchaser must be held to know the true state of his own business; and if he does not, the consequence should not be visited upon the party who had not the means of knowing. Ib.

268. The ownership of goods is not changed when the claim to such ownership is based on a fraudulent contract. Butler v. Collins, 12 Cal. 466.

269. Suit on a note for the purchase of land. Answer sets up that the note was given for the land, fencing and building materials; that plaintiffs falsely represented that there was building material for building a barn; that this material was so insufficient in quantity, that it cost defendant six hundred dollars to buy more: held, that defendant having taken possession under the contract, and retaining it, cannot set up representations, fraudulent or otherwise, as to the fences, they being part of the freehold: held, further, that a special demurrer being put in to the answer, it sets up no defense as to the building material, because neither quantity nor value is given. Plaintiff is responsible, not for what defendant paid for lumber, but for the value of lumber contracted for and not delivered; and this at the time of contracting. Kinney v. Osborne, 14 Cal. 113.

270. Plaintiff and defendant were partners in the purchase of a mining claim. Defendant was the active partner and acquainted with the value of a certain claim, while plaintiff was ignorant. Plaintiff sold his interest in this claim to defendant for greatly less than its value: held, in an action by plaintiff against defendant to set aside this sale, for fraud, and for an account in a sum greater than that paid by defendant for the mining claim, is in effect an offer to place defendant in statu quo, as per rule of law. Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 323.

 IX. IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

271. The legislature may, from time to time, alter or change the remedy, provided they do not impair the right; but whenever they so far alter the remedy as to impair, destroy, change, or render the right scarcely worth pursuing, they impair the obligation of the contract upon which the right is founded. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 552.

---

Impairing the obligation of Contracts.—Specific Performance.

---

272. An act which divests the creditor of his lien, exempts the property of the judgment debtor from execution, and puts it in the hands of trustees with power to sell if they think proper, and compels the creditor to submit to a delay of twenty years with no security, impairs the obligation of the contract, and is unconstitutional and void. Ib. 553.

273. The suspension, by statute, of remedies, or any part thereof, existing when the contract was made, is more or less impairing the obligation of the contract, and therefore is unconstitutional. Thorne v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 131.

274. It is difficult to see how an act to fund a debt of the county is impairing the obligation of the contract; on the contrary, the obligation to pay is fully acknowledged, and the plaintiff's right to secure the whole amount of his debt is unaffected. Hunsacker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 289.

275. The rejection of plaintiff's claim against the city by the board of examiners, only denies him the privilege of funding it, but does not impair the obligation of the contract, or plaintiff's right to prosecute it. San Francisco Gas Co., v. City of San Francisco, 6 Cal. 192.

276. While the legislature has power to direct in what manner county revenues shall be disposed of, still they cannot divest the right of a party which is complete, vested and determined. Lafarge v. Magee, 6 Cal. 651.

277. The legislature is without power to affect past contracts, or to alter or destroy the nature or tenure of estates. Dewey v. Lambier, 7 Cal. 348.

278. The forty-first section of the recording act, requiring conveyances made before the passage of the act to be recorded, is neither in violation of the federal or State constitutions, as it does not impair the obligation of contracts, but simply establishes what shall be constructive notice to third parties. Stafford v. Lick, 7 Cal. 487.

279. The federal and State constitutions provide that no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts. Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 82.

280. The obligation of a contract may be impaired without being entirely destroyed. The last must include the first, but the first does not necessarily include the last. The act can no more destroy, than it can impair, the obligation of a contract. Ib. 84.

281. Whatever provisions of a statute substantially defeat the end contemplated by the parties in making the contract, must impair its obligation, and to ascertain the end contemplated by them, we must look to the law as it existed at the time when the contract was made. Ib.

282. A contract being complete and operative, the legislature cannot, by a subsequent act, impair its obligation by requiring the performance of other conditions not required by the law of the contract itself. Ib.

283. The provision of the constitution which prohibits the passage of any law impairing the obligation of contracts, relates solely to contracts between individuals, and not to contracts between individuals and the State. Myers v. English, 9 Cal. 349.

284. The act of 1851, authorizing the "funding of the floating debt of the city of San Francisco, and to provide for the payment of the same," is a law as well as a contract; and those provisions which are mere modes of giving effect to the substantial purposes of the act, may be revised and altered. The constitution forbids impairing the obligation of contracts, but does not inhibit legislation respecting them. Thornton v. Hooper, 14 Cal. 11.

285. Rights of property once vested under contracts, whether between individuals or between the State and individuals, cannot be frittered away by legislation. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 47.

286. With the contract and the rights of the grantees thereunder, acquired by this part performance of its consideration, the legislature cannot interfere. They are protected by both the federal and the State constitutions. Montgomery v. Kason, 16 Cal. 194.

---

X. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

287. A court of equity is always chary of its power to decree a specific performance, and will withhold the exercise of its jurisdiction in this respect, unless there is such a degree of certainty in the terms of the contract as will enable it at one view to do complete equity. Morrisson v. Rosignol, 5 Cal. 65.

Specific Performance.—Assignment of a Contract.

288. On an action for specific performance against a vendor who refuses to make a title, it is not necessary that a deed should be tendered him for his execution. Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 341.

289. A bill quia timet, and to enforce the specific execution of a contract, lies only where there is no adequate remedy at law; but where damages resulting from the breach of such agreement are susceptible of precise admeasurement, equity will not take jurisdiction, unless there are some peculiar equitable circumstances. White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 523.

XI. ASSIGNMENT OF A CONTRACT.

290. Where a party alleges an assignment to him of a contract made with another, he must aver a positive transfer and the character of it. Stearns v. Martin, 4 Cal. 229.

291. An assignment of a contract as security for a debt, and also in consideration of a covenant not to sue upon the debt, entitles the assignee to sue in his own name. Warner v. Wilson, 4 Cal. 314.

292. A plaintiff, the assignee in good faith for a valuable consideration of an invoice of goods, who demanded the same and tendered the balance of the purchase money in a reasonable time, can recover the value of the goods and need not notify the vendor of the assignment. Morgan v. Lowe, 5 Cal. 326.

293. A contract not to run boats on a certain line of travel, and on failure to comply with such contract to pay $15,000, is an instrument in writing and assignable by our laws. California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 261; 8 Cal. 592.

294. A principal would be responsible for everything that an agent was permitted to do in his own name before the assignment of a contract; provided, the defendant was ignorant of the fact that the contract was made for the benefit of the principal. Osborn v. Hendrickson, 7 Cal. 285; Cal. Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 591.

295. An agreement to pay a certain sum of money to a defendant, if he would withdraw his defense to a suit, is assignable, and such assignment gives a right of action in the name of the assignee. Gray v. Garrison, 9 Cal. 328.

296. Plaintiff made a written contract with the defendants to dig for them a certain mining ditch, to be paid for by the defendants in a specified manner. Plaintiff dug the ditch and subsequently assigned his interest in the contract to L. & Co., to secure them certain payments due, and authorized them to receive the amounts due on the contract until their debt was paid. L. & Co. gave defendants notice of this assignment, and the defendants made several payments thereon: held, that plaintiff had no right to demand payment himself or sue upon the contract, while this assignment was outstanding. Myers v. South Feather Water Co., 10 Cal. 582.

297. Equity upholds assignments, not only of choses in action, but of contingent interests and expectations, and of things which have no actual existence, but vest in possibility; provided they are fairly made and are not against public policy; and a contract for such interest will take effect as an assignment when the subjects to which they refer have ceased to vest in possibility and have ripened into reality. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 123.

298. B. & D. contracted to furnish G. & S.—also defendants—twenty-five thousand gallons of turpentine, to be distilled by the latter. The contract was to end April 1st, 1857. B. & D. were not bound to deliver all the turpentine at once, nor any given quantity per day. Damages for nondelivery of turpentine fixed at $3,750, or fifteen cents per gallon. For accident to distillery, reasonable time to be allowed G. & S. for repairs. Distillery burned last of January, 1857, requiring eighteen days to rebuild. In January and March, 1857, G. & S. respectively assigned their interest in the contract to plaintiff: held, that the benefit of the suspension of the works by the fire inured to B. & D. as well as to G. & S.; that the time for performance of the contract was extended for the eighteen days; that up to April 18th, 1857, G. & S. would be bound to receive turpentine, and even if the assignment before this time did not put it out of their power to comply with their contract, at least the assignee could not sue before the expiration of the extended time. Jackson v. Beers, 14 Cal. 193.

CONTRIBUTION.

1. Plaintiff and defendant took a joint lease for improving certain property; plaintiff, with consent of defendant, made in his own name a contract to make the improvements stipulated by the lease, which he performed and paid or advanced all the expenses out of his own funds. This contract was drawn by the defendant himself: held, that the plaintiff could recover equal contribution of the money advanced by him from the defendant at the current rate of interest. Young v. Pollock, 3 Cal. 211.

2. In an action for contribution between joint obligors, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until after the payment of the debt by the plaintiff. Sherwood v. Dunbar, 6 Cal. 54.

3. Where the plaintiff filed his bill to foreclose a mortgage executed by defendants, who admit the demand, but ask that a certain sum be retained in the hands of the court to answer a judgment against defendants, to the satisfaction of which they claim that the plaintiff is proportionately liable as a former partner of defendants, although he was not served with process in the case: held, that it was error to retain such sum in the hands of the court. Bell v. Walsh, 7 Cal. 87.

4. Before a liability of plaintiff for contribution is fixed, the defendants must satisfy the judgment and establish the claim against the plaintiff by action. Ib.

CONTROLLER.

1. Where the legislature appointed a board of examiners, consisting of three executive State officers, to perform the duty of auditing accounts, which theretofore had been performed by the controller of State, but which is not prescribed by the constitution as the peculiar duty of that officer: held, that the act is valid and binding, the power of the legislature being supreme, except when expressly restricted. Ross v. Whitman, 6 Cal. 365.

2. A mandamus will lie to the controller to compel him to issue a warrant for a proper purpose upon his refusal so to do. People v. Whitman, 6 Cal. 659; Price v. Whitman, 8 Cal. 415; People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 47.

3. In the absence of an unexhausted specific appropriation to meet a warrant of the controller on the State treasurer, a warrant on the treasurer is absolutely void. Butler v. Bates, 7 Cal. 137.

4. By the provisions of the constitution, the manner of electing and the term of the office of controller are the same as that of the governor, and if the controller elect fails to qualify, the incumbent holds on until his successor is elected and qualified. People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 35; doubted in People v. Melony, 15 Cal. 62.

5. A controller may be elected biennially, at the same time and place and in the same manner with the governor and lieutenant governor, and an appointment of a controller by the governor before this biennial general election, whatever its effect otherwise, cannot defeat this constitutional policy, nor deprive the people of their right to fill the office of controller at such election. Ib.

6. And when the act of April 13th, 1854, provides that no warrants shall be drawn, except there be "an unexhausted specific appropriation" to meet the same, it means only that the controller shall not draw a warrant for a specific object when he has already drawn for the full amount of the appropriation made for that object. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 28.

7. The controller and treasurer of State are no more officers of that department than the sheriffs and tax collectors of each county. Ib. 40.

8. The controller of the State is an officer of the executive department, but the greater part of the duties devolved upon him by the law are of a ministerial character. The constitution does not define his duties. It only provides that there shall be such an officer, declares that he shall be subject to impeachment, the mode of his election, and that his compensation shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office. He does not hold his appointment of the governor, is not responsible to him, and acts entirely independent of him. Ib. 55.

Conversion.

CONVERSION.

1. An auctioneer, who, in the regular course of his business, receives and sells stolen goods, and pays over the proceeds of the goods to the felon, without notice that the goods were stolen, is not liable to the true owner, as for a conversion. Rogers v. Huie, 2 Cal. 572; overruling Rogers v. Huie, 1 Cal. 433.

2. Conversion is the gist of the action of trevor, and without conversion, neither possession of the property, negligence or misfortune, will enable the action to be maintained. Rogers v. Huie, 2 Cal. 573.

3. Where the sheriff had an execution against C., and levied and sold the property of F., who sued him for the trespass and conversion; proof that C., the defendant in the execution, had made a settlement with F., raises no presumption that the settlement included the claim of F. upon the sheriff for the trespass, or operated as a satisfaction of it. Fitch v. Brockmon, 2 Cal. 578.

4. After a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, in order to enable the assignee to recover goods belonging to the assignor from consignees holding the same under a claim for advances and commissions, the demand must be made in the name and by the authority of the assignee, accompanied by notice and evidence of such authority. A demand by the assignor, and a refusal by the consignee, will not enable the assignee to maintain his suit for a conversion. Griffin v. Alsop, 4 Cal. 408.

5. Warehousemen who give their receipt for goods on storage are estopped from setting up a want of segregation of the goods receipted for from other goods, in an action against them by the holder of the receipt, for a conversion of the goods by a seizure, in action against a vendor of the plaintiff. Goodwin v. Scannell, 6 Cal. 543.

6. All conversions of money or property by a bailee, are not, "ipso facto, unlawful or felonious under our statute. The word bailee, under our statute, must be construed in a limited sense, as designating 'bailees,' to keep, transport and deliver." People v. Cohen, 7 Cal. 43.

7. An indictment which charges defendant with converting monies, goods and chattels, of the value of four hundred thousand dollars, without any particular specification of the different articles, is bad. Ib. 44.

8. A complaint alleging that the defendant, as the agent or attorney in fact of the plaintiff, had embezzled and converted the money to his own use, and praying that he be adjudged guilty of fraud, is bad, as the allegation is in the disjunctive form. Porter v. Hermann, 7 Cal. 623.

9. The rule is, that when property converted has a fixed value, the measure of damages is that value with legal interest from the time of its conversion; when the value is fluctuating, the plaintiff may recover the highest value at the time of its conversion, or at any time afterwards. Douglass v. Kraft, 9 Cal. 563; Phelps v. Owens, 11 Cal. 25.

10. Where the defendant contracted with a factor, who was in his debt for certain goods, but before he took them away was informed that a portion of them belonged to another; his taking such portion was an unlawful assumption of ownership, and a conversion of his property. Scriber v. Masten, 11 Cal. 306.

11. An action brought by an agent in his own name for a trespass, in taking and converting coin from the possession of the agent, in which action the jury found that the coin belonged to the principal, and gave nominal damages, is no bar to an action by the principal for such coin. Pico v. Webster, 12 Cal. 141.

12. If a confidential agent, trusted by a principal with money used in trade, appropriate the money to the purchase of property for his own use and benefit, and the property can be identified as that so bought, the agent will be held as trustee for the owner of the money. Wells v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 139.

13. Where a broker buys wheat for E. & H., with their funds, and the defendants, warehousemen, deliver the wheat to third persons, who bought from the broker for his own debt, on the ground that they held the storage receipt of defendants to one S., who had loaned money to E. & H. on the wheat, as collateral, and had indorsed the receipt, "deliver to bearer, or E. & H.," the defendants knowing at the time of said delivery that E. & H. claimed the wheat as their property, they are liable to E. & H. for a conversion. Hanna v. Flint, 14 Cal. 75.

14. In a suit by an administrator against defendant, for conversion of the property of the estate, under the hundred and sixteenth section of the statute to regulate the settlement of estates, the proof as to the right or title or possession of plaintiff, and the taking or interference by defendant being conflicting, it is error to instruct the jury that a mere demand on the defendant, and refusal by him to surrender the property, charge him with a conversion. Beckman v. McKay, 14 Cal. 252.

15. If the defendant came into possession innocently or for a lawful purpose, or under a bona fide claim or color of right, or in ignorance of the title, the statute, which is penal in its character, would not be so construed as by mere force of a demand and refusal, or inability of compliance, to bring the defendant within the penalty. Ib. 253.

16. In an action for the seizure and conversion of a bag of gold coin, the complaint, after the usual averments, went on to detail the manner of the seizure, with the incidents occurring on the street at the time, and everything done by defendants, plaintiff and the "crowd," relating to, or constituting the evidence of the wrongful conversion: held, that this narration should have been stricken out, on motion, as irrelevant and redundant matter. Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 414.

17. Plaintiff was walking along the street with a bag of gold coin in his hand; two of defendants, a deputy sheriff and constable, seized him, and by force took the bag of coin from him. Plaintiff sues for the seizure and conversion of the coin. Defendants gave in evidence three judgments and executions, in favor of three of their number, and against Alfred A. Green, brother of plaintiff, and offered to prove that the bag of coin was the property of Alfred, and was seized under these executions, and applied to their satisfaction. The court excluded the proof: held, that such exclusion was erroneous; that plaintiff could claim no exemption from the seizure of coin held, as this was, in his hand, as he might, perhaps, in reference to money upon his person. The coin in the hand was, like a horse held by a bridle, subject to seizure on execution against its owner. Ib.

18. In a suit against an agent for fraudulently appropriating money of plaintiff, defendant cannot, on the trial, object that the person making the demand on him before suit did not exhibit his authority so to do, unless defendant questioned his authority at the time of demand. Baxter v. McKinlay, 16 Cal. 77.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Where a contract is made to convey land at a future time by a quit claim deed, an action cannot be maintained by the vendee against the vendor, on the ground that a third person has intruded upon a portion of the land and the vendee cannot obtain possession. Tewksbury v. Laffan, 1 Cal. 130.

2. A agreed to convey in his individual capacity a ship to B, and tendered him in performance of this condition a deed made by A as the attorney of C, the owner: held, not a compliance with his agreement. Osborne v. Elliott, 1 Cal. 338.

3. Where by an agreement for the sale or purchase of land the price is payable in installments, for which the purchaser executes his notes payable at certain times, and the vendor agrees to convey on payment of the last installment, and suit is brought on the notes after all the installments have become due, the tender of a conveyance by the vendor is a condition precedent to the right to sue, and the purchaser may insist on the want of such tender against an endorsee after maturity. Folsom v. Bartling, 2 Cal. 164.

4. Much of the severity which formerly governed the construction of a conveyance in presenti has been relaxed, the modern doctrine being, so far as possible, to ascertain the intention of the parties by taking the instrument as a whole. Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 311.

5. The law does not enjoin on the defendants, if they wish to avoid a contract for the sale of land, to tender a deed and demand the purchase money. In this State there is no settled rule on this subject, though in England it is the duty of the vendee and not the vendor to tender a deed. Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 574.

6. The condition of California, its illiterate population, together with the fact that there were no escribanos or judges of the first instance residing in San Francisco, warrants the presumption that the law was never regarded which required a conveyance to be made by the escribano. Hayes v. Bona, 7 Cal. 159.

7. Where there is no fraud, and the vendor binds himself to convey a certain title, and afterwards discovers a defect which he can cure, and thus conveys to the purchaser all the latter bargained for, it is obviously just that the vendor should be allowed to do so. Alvarez v. Brannan, 7 Cal. 509.

8. On the election of a new sheriff, the former sheriff must complete the execution of all final process which he had begun to execute before the expiration of his term of office, and may execute all the conveyances required by law to the completion of the final process. People v. Boring, 8 Cal. 411; Anthony v. Wessell, 9 Cal. 104.

9. If a party takes a conveyance without covenants, he is without remedy in case of failure of title; if he takes a conveyance with covenants his remedy, upon failure of title, is confined to them. Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 228.

10. The first step in the construction of a conveyance is to ascertain the understanding and intention of the parties at the time of the contract. Brannan v. Mesick, 10 Cal. 105.

11. A conveyance giving a preference is not fraudulent though the debtor be insolvent, and the creditor be aware at the time that it will have the effect of defeating the collection of the other debts. To avoid the conveyance there must be a real design on the part of the debtor to present the application of his property, in whole or in part, to the satisfaction of his debts. Dana v. Stanfords, 10 Cal. 274; Wellington v. Sedgwick, 12 Cal. 474.

12. If the proof of the execution of a conveyance and of its accidental destruction be full and satisfactory, a court of equity has jurisdiction to decree a reëxecution of the deed, is unquestionable. Cummings v. Coe, 10 Cal. 530.

13. A deed of release, conveyance and partition, providing for the appointment of commissioners to make partition of the land therein described, according to certain terms set forth in the deed, and also by its terms providing that the release shall take effect upon the making the partition and report by the commissioners of a map of the partition, which, together with the deed, is to be handed over to one F., who is to file the same for record in the proper office, is sufficient to estop a party thereto from controverting the deed. Tewksbury v. Provizzo, 12 Cal. 24.

14. A party in taking a conveyance in the name of his associates, must be considered as having acted as their agent, and notice to him was equally notice to them. Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 168.

15. It is scarcely to be presumed that one man will execute to another a deed without the assent of the other. Bensley v. Atwill, 12 Cal. 236.

16. A deed made under and in pursuance of a general power of attorney, which authorized the attorney "to make and execute conveyances," and where the purchase money was received by the principal, cannot be assailed for want of authority to execute it. Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 376.

17. Where several papers concerning the same subject matter are executed by or between the same parties at the same time, they are all to be construed together as one instrument. Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 577.

18. A bill of sale of a mining claim is sufficiently proved when the hand writing of the subscribing witness, who is absent from the State, and the execution by the vendor, are proven; and this, though the subscribing witness was in the State after suit brought and near the time of trial, and plaintiff used no efforts to get the testimony of the witness before he left the State. Jackson v. Feather River Water Co., 14 Cal. 22.

19. If the grantor in a conveyance would be estopped from asserting against his own deed a title subsequently acquired, the mortgagor would be equally estopped from asserting such title against the force of the lien created by his mortgage. If the grantor could not deny that the title passed, the mortgagor could not that the lien was created. Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 626.

20. Although in this country conveyances by feoffment, fine or common recovery are not in use, no greater effort is given to a grant or a conveyance by bargain and sale or lease and release, unaccompanied with covenants of warranty, than at the common law under statute of uses. Ib.

21. By common law there were only two classes of conveyances which were held to operate upon the after acquired title—those by feoffment, by fine or by common recovery, and this from their solemnity and publicity; and those by indenture of lease, from the implied covenants arising upon such indentures. Ib.

22. A deed with a covenant of warranty operates upon future acquired interest, not as in fact passing such interest, but by way of estoppel upon the grantor against its assertion. Ib. 630.

23. The doctrine that the vendor of real property, after an absolute conveyance, retains a lien for the unpaid purchase money, is well established in England, and prevails with some exception in the several States of the Union. Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 192.

24. So the sale of a "bridge" across a certain stream, "together with the toll houses, stables and outhouses of every description," and "all the privileges and appurtenances appertaining or in anywise belonging to said bridge," passes the land upon which the bridge rested and the other buildings were erected. Ib. 195.

25. The rule is, that everything essential to the beneficial use and enjoyment of the property designated is, in the absence of language indicating a different intention on the part of the grantor, to be considered as passing to the grantee. Ib.

26. The doctrine that land may often pass by conveyance as essential to the enjoyment of, or as parcel of buildings, etc., erected thereon, is consistent with the doctrine that the ownership of the land may be in one person, and the ownership of the structures thereon in another—as in these latter cases the buildings are erected by permission of the owner of the land, for the use of the builder, and generally under mutual expectation by the parties of their removal, or of compensation being made for them to the builder, or of the latter ultimately acquiring title to the land. Ib. 197.

27. A conveyance, however fraudulent as to creditors, is valid as between the parties; and no one can impeach it without showing that he has been injured by it. Harris v. Taylor, 15 Cal. 349.

28. Where all the conveyances under which the plaintiff claimed were executed previous to the issuance of the patent by the United States for the land, they passed only the right of the grantors under the grant; but the patent, in recognizing the validity of the grant, necessarily establishes the validity of all properly executed intermediate transfers of the grantee's interest. Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 366.

29. One joint tenant, or tenant in common of land, may convey his interest in a particular portion of the land, described by specific metes and bounds; but the grantee takes subject to the cotenant's right of partition of the whole tract. The grantee's title is good against his grantor, and all persons except his cotenant. Ib. 368.

II. BY HUSBAND AND WIFE.

30. Where a husband and wife each make a separate deed of the homestead, both are invalid. Poole v. Gerrard, 6 Cal. 73.

31. To make a valid sale of the homestead requires the joint deed of the husband and wife. This is the mode pointed out by the statute, and must be strictly pursued. Ib.

32. A deed properly executed and acknowledged by the wife, of her separate property, with the assent of her husband underwritten, not under seal, but properly

By Husband and Wife.—Requisites of a Conveyance.

acknowledged; is sufficient to pass a title. Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 576.

33. A deed by a husband of his separate real estate to a trustee for the benefit of his wife, whether executed in compliance with an antenuptial contract or by way of settlement upon his wife independent of any previous contract, the husband being at the time solvent, is valid. Barker v. Koneman, 13 Cal. 10.

34. The wife cannot convey her separate estate, acquired before the act of 1850, whether legal or equitable, except by the joint deed of herself and husband. Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 497.

35. Generally, a conveyance by a feme covert, not executed according to the forms prescribed by statute, is invalid. Ib. 498.

36. A conveyance by the husband and wife of the homestead does not transfer the homestead rights. Such rights may be released and abandoned; but are, in their nature, incapable of sale and transfer. The exemption from forced sale is the personal right of both husband and wife, and the restraint upon the husband's power of alienation is the personal right of the wife alone, and they cannot be assigned to others. Bowman v. Norton, 16 Cal. 217.

37. The wife cannot mortgage her separate real estate, unless her husband unites in the conveyance in the mode prescribed by our statutes—at least, as to property acquired after the passage of the statutes; and these statutes, when operating in futuro, are constitutional. Harrison v. Brown, 16 Cal. 290.

38. A married woman cannot invest another with power to sell any interest she may possess in real estate, in the absence of statute to that effect, and there is no such statute in this State. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 557.

39. To the efficacy of a conveyance of her real estate by a married woman, it is essential that she join with her husband in its execution, and state, on a private examination at the time, separate and apart from him, and without his hearing, that she executed the same freely, without fear of him, or compulsion, or undue influence from him, and that she does not wish to retract its execution. This private examination—this determination of the will as to the retraction of the execution—are not matters which can be delegated to another. Ib.

III. REQUISITES OF A CONVEYANCE.

40. Contracts for the sale of land by the custom of California were required to be in writing, and although all the forms prescribed were not strictly followed, still it was necessary that the instrument should contain at least the names of the parties, the thing sold, the date of the transfer and the price paid. Harris v. Brown, 1 Cal. 100; Tohler v. Folsom, 1 Cal. 210; Hayes v. Bona, 7 Cal. 159; Stafford v. Lick, 10 Cal. 17.

41. Such importance was attached to the formalities prescribed by the Spanish law for the execution of deeds, that if an instrument was defective in form—as if it lacked the signature of the judge, notary or witnesses—the instrument should be void. Hoen v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 122.

42. It is essential to the validity of a deed that there should be a legal capacity in the grantor to convey and in the grantee to receive; if either be wanting the instrument is invalid. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 285.

43. A deed purporting to convey real estate, executed by an agent or attorney in his own name, instead of the name of his principal, is not binding upon the latter, and does not transfer the title to the property. Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 413.

44. A deed for "one-half of my lot," accompanied by proof that the grantor owned at the time but that lot, though not void for uncertainty, is only a deed for an undivided half, and the grantee becomes a tenant in common. Lick v. O'Donnell, 3 Cal. 63.

45. A certificate of acknowledgment to a conveyance in the words: "Before me, etc., personally appeared A B C, the individual described in, etc.," is bad, and the record of the conveyance on such a certificate imparts no notice to third parties, as it does not show the party to be "known" or "proven" to be the individual. Wolf v. Fogarty, 6 Cal. 225; Kelsey v. Dunlap, 7 Cal. 162.

46. The words "good and sufficient deed" only refer to the form of the conveyance and not the interest intended to be conveyed; or in other words, the defendants obligated themselves to make a conveyance sufficient to pass their title, whatever it might be, to the plaintiffs. Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 573.

47. Where a charter of a corporation points out a particular mode of conveyance for its property, it can only be conveyed in the mode prescribed. Holland v. City of San Francisco, 7 Cal. 375.

48. Although the word sold, used in a conveyance, is positive and in the present tense, yet it must be construed with reference to the whole instrument. Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Cal. 414.

49. Where a sheriff's deed is executed by a deputy in the name of the sheriff, whose term of office had expired at the time of the execution of the deed, the authority of the deputy must be shown to authorize such deed to be read in evidence in an action of ejectment. Cloud v. El Dorado County, 12 Cal. 134.

50. It is undoubtedly essential to the validity of a conveyance that the thing conveyed must be described so as to be capable of identification; but it is not essential that the conveyance should itself contain such a description as to enable the identification to be made without the aid of extrinsic evidence. Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 166.

51. There is no peculiar form for the signing of a deed. It takes effect upon delivery. Any writing which clearly shows that a party has adopted a sealed instrument as his own, intending to be bound by the contents of it, is, if not a formal, at least a sufficient execution to satisfy the same. Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 578.

52. The word "absolute" adds nothing to the force of the preceding terms "fee simple," which of themselves express the highest interest one can possess in land. Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 631.

53. Land will sometimes pass without any specific designation of it as land. Thus the grant of a messuage or a messuage with the appurtenances will pass the dwelling house and adjoining buildings; and also its curtilage, garden and orchard, together with the close in which the house is built. Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 195.

1. Delivery of a Conveyance.

54. Delivery of a conveyance is a question of fact to be determined by the jury, and depends more upon the intention of the parties than upon the mode of fulfilling the intention. Hastings v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 318.

2. Seal to a Conveyance.

55. The objection to the want of a seal to the Mexican conveyance is not tenable. No seal was requisite under the civil law. Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 166.

56. There is no authority which holds that a conveyance of interest in land must necessarily be under seal; and if it were so at common law, it does not follow that it is so required by our statute. Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 577.

57. It is no objection to such bill of sale of a mining claim that it is not under seal, whatever may be the effect of it as evidence. Jackson v. Feather River Water Co., 14 Cal. 22.

IV. EFFECTS OF A CONVEYANCE.

58. A transfer of property cannot defeat a lien which had already accrued upon the property. Hotaling v. Cronise, 2 Cal. 64.

59. Recitals in a deed bind all persons who are parties or privies thereto; but this rule does not extend to that which is mere description, or an averment which is not essential. Osborne v. Endicott, 6 Cal. 153.

60. A party who makes a deed is bound to know its contents, except when obtained by fraud or force; and once knowing its contents, he is bound to remember them at his own peril. Alvarez v. Bran-nan, 7 Cal. 508.

61. A conveyance on condition precedent vests the title in the grantee on the performance of the condition, without any further act on the part of the grantor; and being "an instrument in writing affecting real estate, not within the exception mentioned in the thirty-sixth section of the registration act, its record imparts notice of its contents to all persons. Bran-nan v. Mesick, 10 Cal. 108.

Void Conveyance.—Evidence.

chaser for a valuable consideration. Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 497.

V. VOID CONVEYANCE.

62. A deed of conveyance from an Indian to a white man is a nullity on its face, and no one can derive title from it. Such conveyance is contrary to the policy of Spanish and Mexican, as well as American law, and is strictly forbidden. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 274.

63. Where a deed of conveyance is void upon its face, as being in violation of law, the party claiming it is chargeable with knowledge of the law, and of the invalidity of the deed. He cannot, therefore, derive a color of title which will give him constructive possession of a tract of land beyond his actual occupation. Ib. 280.

64. A conveyance that would come within the statute of frauds if made by an individual, if made by a corporation would be liable to the same construction; and if void in the former case, would be void in the latter; and will not affect the lien of a judgment regularly obtained against the grantor. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 539.

65. Where a parent executes to his infant son a conveyance of property in consideration of services performed, it must be considered as a voluntary conveyance, without legal consideration, as he is not legally bound to pay for his son's services. Such a conveyance is void against the creditors of the parent, if made when his remaining property is insufficient to pay his debts. Swartz v. Hazlett, 8 Cal. 126.

66. The mere fact that a deed to a son was voluntary, would not of itself constitute the conveyance fraudulent as to him. Ib. 128.

67. A conveyance to a man who is dead at the time of its execution is a nullity. Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 376.

68. Conveyances of real and personal property made to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, are subject to the same defect, liable to be avoided at the suit of the creditors, but valid as between the parties, and vest a title which can be transferred perfect to a bona fide pur-

VI. EVIDENCE.

1. Parol evidence to explain a Conveyance.

69. A deed is void on account of patent ambiguity which cannot be cured by parol evidence, where the land intended to be conveyed in the instrument is insufficiently described. Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 312.

70. The law requires that the conveyance of land shall be in writing, but it is not guilty of the solecism of permitting or providing that the land, to which the title passed, may vest in parol, or need not be in writing. Ib. 312.

71. A court of equity will relieve against mistake as well as fraud in a deed or contract in writing; and parol evidence is admissible to show, if it be denied in the answer. Wagenblast v. Washburn, 12 Cal. 212.

72. The admissibility of parol evidence to show that a conveyance or assignment absolute on its face was intended as a mortgage, is no longer an open question in this State. Johnson v. Sherman, 15 Cal. 291.

73. If a conveyance from a son to his father did not express the consideration for which it was given, but acknowledged the payment of a nominal consideration in money, parol evidence would be inadmissible to establish the trust in favor of the son. Russ v. Mebius, 16 Cal. 355.

2. Conveyance as evidence.

74. Our statutes make tax collectors' deeds prima facie evidence of title. Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 250; Ford v. Holton, 5 Cal. 321.

75. A deed defective in the acknowledgment should not be rejected as evidence for that reason, but should be admitted with instructions to the jury as to its effect in giving notice to third persons. Hastings v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 319.

76. Evidence of a demand for a conveyance is not necessary where the party

Notice to third persons.—Trust Conveyance.—Copartnership.

refuses to make title, and at the same time gives the reason for his refusal, which is other than that of requiring a deed to sign. Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 341.

77. Exceptions to the admissibility of a deed in evidence, must be taken advantage of in the court below, and not on appeal for the first time. Posten v. Rasette, 5 Cal. 467; Pearson v. Snodgrass, 5 Cal. 479.

VII. NOTICE TO THIRD PERSONS.

78. At common law, negligence in a prior purchaser or mortgagee, such as leads to imposition upon an innocent party, is regarded as a legal fraud. Call v. Hastings, 3 Cal. 183.

79. The evident intention of the statute providing for the registration and proof of conveyances, is to protect subsequent purchasers, without notice either actual or constructive. Ib.

80. The doctrine of constructive notice has always been regarded as a harsh necessity, and the statute which creates it has always been subject to the most rigid construction. Ib.; Chamberlain v. Bell, 7 Cal. 294.

81. Although a deed be defective in the acknowledgment so as not to entitle it to registration, it is not void, but is still good as between the parties, and as to all the world, except to subsequent purchasers without notice. Hastings v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 319.

82. At common law, the registry of a conveyance is not even prima facie evidence of title, and imparts no notice whatever, and the purchaser is put upon inquiry in every case. Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 315.

83. The twenty-fifth section of the act concerning conveyances, making the record of conveyances notice, is limited by its terms in its operation to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees. Dennis v. Burritt, 6 Cal. 673.

84. To secure the first object, the acknowledgment before the proper officer and in the proper form is necessary; while to give notice of the contents of the deed itself, the acknowledgment is not in the nature of the case so much required. Bird v. Dennison, 7 Cal. 305.

85. A conveyance recorded January

30th, 1850, by a person acting as recorder, by virtue of an election by the people, without authority of law, is not properly recorded. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 114.

VIII. TRUST CONVEYANCE.

86. Where upon the purchase of real property, the conveyance of the legal estate is taken in the name of a third person, and the consideration is paid by another, a trust immediately arises, and the person in whose name the conveyance is taken, is deemed in law to hold as the trustee for the one furnishing the money. Osborne v. Endicott, 6 Cal. 153.

87. In order to create a trust, it is not necessary in all cases that it should appear affirmatively upon the face of the deed, that the money was not furnished by the nominal purchaser. Ib. 154.

88. Where a son conveys real estate to his father—the only consideration being a verbal agreement by the father to make a will and devise to the son certain property, and the father dies without having complied with the agreement—the agreement is void, the conveyance is executed without consideration, express or implied, and a trust results in favor of plaintiff by implication of law, and he may set aside the conveyance and recover the property—it being shown that the transaction was not a gift. Russ v. Mebius, 16 Cal. 355.

89. The doctrine of resulting uses and trusts is founded upon mere implication of law, and, generally, this implication cannot be indulged in favor of the grantor, where it is inconsistent with the presumption arising from the deed. Unless there be evidence of fraud or mistake, the recitals in a deed are conclusive upon the grantee, and no resulting trust can be raised in his favor in opposition to the express terms of the conveyance. Ib. 356.

VII. Dormant Copartners.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. The law of Louisiana requires a partnership contract to be in writing; the law of California does not. It was held that a verbal contract of copartnership entered into in Louisiana, to be executed in California, was valid. Young v. Pearson, 1 Cal. 450.

2. A contracted with the owner of a ranch to take the ranch under his charge, and to take care of it to the best of his ability; and the owner stipulated in recompense for his services, to give him one-fourth part of all the increase of the cattle upon the ranch, when parted at the end of five years. It was held, that the true construction of the contract gave no present interest in the live stock to A, but only to acquire a determinate interest, after the performance of all the stipulations on his part, and that these could not be completed until the expiration of five years from the execution of the contract. Fitch v. Brockman, 4 Cal. 362.

3. Tenants in common, or partners, have a right to acquire their cotenants, or copartners' interest, by purchase under an execution sale, there being nothing in their relations to forbid it. Gunter v. Laffan, 7 Cal. 593.

4. A executed a note and mortgage to B. Subsequently A and B entered into partnership in the livery business. A was to furnish the stable, hay and grain, and board B, and B was to attend the stable, the profits to be equally divided, and the share of A was to be applied in discharge of the note. B received the sum of $396, A's share of the profits of the business, and then, after maturity, assigned the note and mortgage to C. C brought suit against A for the whole amount. A plead payment and set off: held, that A was entitled to the credit of the payment. Mount v. Chapman, 9 Cal. 296.

5. A partnership as between the partners themselves may be defined to be a contract of two or more persons to unite their property, labor and skill, or some of them, in the prosecution of some joint and lawful business, and to share the profits in certain proportions. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 638.

6. A partnership may exist in purchase and sale of lands. But such a partnership can only exist where the contract is reduced to writing. And it is not necessary that the partners should be jointly concerned in the original purchase, where the interests of the partners are afterwards mingled. But the partners must, by the contract, be jointly concerned in the future sale. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 639; Laffan v. Naglee, 9 Cal. 678.

7. It does not matter in whose name the real estate is held; he is only a trustee for the partnership, and for the purpose of disposal and distribution, it is to be treated as personal estate. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 639.

8. Where one of the two holders of the leasehold, holding in partnership, purchases the fee in his own name and with his own money, it enures equally to the benefit of the other, to which he becomes entitled, on payment of his proportion of the purchase money. Laffan v. Naglee, 9 Cal. 682.

9. A and B entered into an agreement, in which it was stipulated that A should advance $12,000 for the purpose of putting up a brick house on property of B, held by lease; and B was to convey to A one-half interest in the leased premises; the balance of the cost of the building was to be borne in equal proportion. When completed, B was to rent the same, and pay over to A one-half of the rents. Buildings were erected at a cost of $48,000—$30,000 paid by A, and $18,000 by B—B conveyed one-half of the premises to A: held, that A and B were partners. Ib.

10. The interest of one partner in the partnership chattels is the subject of levy and sale of the sheriff on an execution against one of the partners. Waldman v. Broder, 10 Cal. 380; Jones v. Thompson, 12 Cal. 198.

11. Where C., T., S. P., J. P. and W. were partners in the ownership of a saw-mill, and carrying on the mill business, and subsequently they executed an instrument, C., T. and W. of the first part, and S. P. and J. H. P. of the second part, which ran as follows: "The party of the first part have bargained, sold, and by these presents do convey unto the party of the second part all their right, title and interest in and to a certain saw-mill," etc., and this was followed with certain stipulations as to the manner of payment of the consideration money, with a condition that if the party of the second part fail to comply, then the property to be delivered up to the party of the first part, to be used and disposed of to pay the consideration: held, that the conveyance of the property is not in any degree dependent upon the performance of the conditions. The transfer is in presenti. Cayton v. Walker, 10 Cal. 455.

In general.

12. Such an agreement as that here set out is a bar to an action by bill of one of the partners against the others for an account and dissolution and sale of the partnership property. Ib. 456.

13. When plaintiff did not contribute anything as partner, or claim to be such, and apparently, both by words and acts, abandoned the concern and all participation therein, he cannot claim to be a partner in the profits of the adventure, when he could not have been held responsible to defendants for losses. Ib.

14. Where mining claims were held in possession by the partners and associates of the plaintiff, they, as such partners, were tenants in common, and it is well settled that the possession of one partner, or tenant in common, is the possession of all. Waring v. Crow, 11 Cal. 371.

15. Where the tenant in common, or partner, goes away, and remains absent from the premises, leaving his associates in possession, it creates no presumption of abandonment; nor does his refusal to pay or delay in paying the expenses of the business or the assessments create of itself a forfeiture. Ib.

16. The mere passive acquiescence of the other partners, or tenants in common, in a sale of the interest of the plaintiff by a party having no title, cannot confer any upon the vendee. Ib. 372.

17. In an action for damages for the diversion of water from the plaintiff's ditch, the deposition of one of the partners in the ditch was taken by the plaintiff; and subsequently, and before the trial, the witness conveyed by deed his interest in the ditch to plaintiff: held, that such deed of conveyance did not pass the witness' right to the damages, and hence he was an incompetent witness. Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 46.

18. The failure of one partner in a ditch to pay his proportion of the expenses of the concern, does not forfeit his right in the common property. Ib. 47.

19. The sheriff can only seize and sell the interest and right of the judgment partner therein, subject to the prior rights and liens of the other partners and the joint creditors therein. Jones v. Thompson, 12 Cal. 198.

20. J. filed his bill in the district court against T., alleging a partnership between them, and praying for an account of the partnership property. Subsequently, J. filed a petition in the same court, setting forth the bill, and also that L. T. B. and H. B. had obtained judgment against T., the defendant, and that execution had issued on the judgment, and was levied on the partnership property of the plaintiff and defendant, and that the sheriff was about to sell the property. The petition prayed that L. T. B. and H. B. might be made parties, and that an injunction might issue against L. T. B. and H. B. and the sheriff: held, that on the appeal of the case to this court, it does not lie in the mouth of J. and T. to say that L. T. B. and H. B. are not parties to the suit and have no right of appeal. Ib.

21. In such case, the decree should not order a private sale of the firm property. Ib. 200.

22. Plaintiffs and one C., partners in the mercantile business, purchased of defendant goods on credit, which were shortly afterwards sold by plaintiff and his co-partner at a sacrifice, and the proceeds immediately invested in a homestead in the name of C., who was the brother-in-law of plaintiff. Defendant subsequently caused plaintiffs to be arrested upon the charge of cheating, from which arrest they were discharged. Afterwards, defendant caused plaintiff and C. to be arrested on a charge of concealing property with intent to defraud and delay their creditors. The charge was dismissed as to plaintiff, and C. was sent up to the criminal court to answer. Plaintiff thereupon brought his action against defendant for malicious prosecution: held, that if plaintiff was entitled to any damage, he could recover only the actual damage which he sustained by the arrest. Sears v. Hathaway, 12 Cal. 278.

In general.

23. If in any case one partner can assign to another partner his interest in a firm claim, and then become a witness for him, he cannot when the claim is for goods sold and delivered, because this is an unliquidated demand within the code. Cravens v. Dewey, 13 Cal. 42.

24. Plaintiff and defendant were partners in the purchase of mining claims. Defendant was the active partner, and acquainted with the value of a certain claim owned by the firm, plaintiff being ignorant of its value. Plaintiff sold his interest in this claim to defendant for greatly less than its value: held, that in a suit by plaintiff against defendant to set aside this sale for fraud, and for an account, etc., an averment that defendant is indebted to plaintiff on the account in a sum greater than that paid by defendant for the mining claim, is in effect an offer to place defendant in statu quo as per rule of law. Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 325.

25. If a party fails to pay taxes, permits the premises to be sold, and buys them in, he can derive no benefit from the sale; except that, in equity, the amount paid would probably be considered an advance to the judgment debtor, and this though the premises were bid in by one of two partners, while the possession, under the sheriff's sale, was by both partners. The duty to pay the tax was several as well as joint. Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 619.

26. Where a broker buys wheat for E. and H. with their funds, and an agreement is made between the three that the broker shall dispose of the wheat, and that the profits shall be equally divided, the broker is neither partner nor joint owner of the wheat. Hanna v. Flint, 14 Cal. 75.

27. M. and B., the plaintiff, were partners in a ranch and hotel. The ranch was public land, taken up under the State law in the name of M. M. sells one-half to B., taking a mortgage back, B. agreeing to pay certain firm debts. This sale and agreement were afterwards canceled, and B. sold M. one-half the ranch. Defendant, Myers, agrees to buy of B. his half of the ranch; goes into possession, but afterwards refuses to buy, and buys the half from O., who bought the whole of M. At the time of this last purchase O. and M. knew of B.'s title: held, that a bill in equity by B. against M., O. and Myers for an account of the partnership between M. and B., and for a decree establishing plaintiff's right to the ranch, does not lie; that his remedy at law for his half of the ranch against M. or any one claiming under him, with notice of his title, is clear; and that M. would be estopped from disputing the title. Brush v. Maydwell, 14 Cal. 209.

28. In such case, the claim of plaintiff to the ranch does not depend at all on the settlement of the partnership. The sale by M. to plaintiff divested the ranch of its character as partnership property, and the reconveyance by plaintiff to M. of one-half made them tenants in common. As A makes no defense to the bill, it is good as against him for an account. Ib.

29. The defendant in such case cannot afterwards in equity enjoin the collection of this judgment, and set off against it a claim against one of the partners, on the ground that in fact this partner was the sole owner of the property, and alone entitled to damages. The judgment is conclusive as to the joint ownership. Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 229.

30. Equity will not set off the claim of an individual creditor of one joint owner of a judgment against the judgment; and if the judgment be partnership assets, the individual creditor has no claim to any part of it until adjustment of the firm accounts. Ib. 230.

31. Among the powers most ordinarily exercised by partners is the jus disponendi, or the power which each partner has, individually, of disposing of the joint stock or merchandise. When the assignment is bona fide, the power of one partner to transfer the whole as well as a part of the partnership effects cannot be doubted. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 289.

32. Where the trustees of an assignment employ the partner assigning to aid them in winding up the concern, and pay him, and allow his wife some furniture, etc., it is not proof of fraud in the assignment, there being no evidence that these benefits were promised at the time of the assignment. Ib.

In general.—Evidence of Copartnership.—Dissolution of Copartnership.

33. Each corporator is a principal debtor, and not a mere surety for the corporation, and in relation to the creditors of the corporation stand on the same footing as if it were an ordinary partnership. Mokelumne Hill Canal Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 267.

34. Voluntary associations for mutual relief in sickness or distress, by funds raised by initiation fees, fines, dues, etc., are partnerships, and may be dissolved by a court of equity if they improperly exclude a member. Gorman v. Russell, 14 Cal. 535.

35. If such an association exclude a member from its meetings because he refuses to take an oath to be administered by the president, which oath was not required by the constitution and by-laws, and is foreign to the object of the association, it is ground for a dissolution. Ib. 536.

36. In ejectment for an interest in a mining claim, the answer being a general denial, defendant cannot defeat the action by showing the claim to be partnership property. Any rights defendants may have in the premises, growing out of the partnership, must be asserted in equity; particularly as the legal title in this case is in the plaintiff. Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 302.

37. In an action against a sheriff for seizing and selling certain personal property, alleged to belong to plaintiff, under an execution against one Teal, it being averred in the answer that the property belonged to the said Teal: held, that evidence tending to prove that it was the partnership property of Teal and plaintiff was proper; and that if they were partners, and as such owned the property, plaintiff could not recover. Hughes v. Boring, 16 Cal. 82.

II. EVIDENCE OF COPARTNERSHIP.

38. It is error to admit evidence to prove copartnership by general reputation. Sinclair v. Wood, 3 Cal. 100.

39. Partnership must be proved like any other fact, and cannot be established by mere surmise or innuendo. Hudson v. Simon, 6 Cal. 455.

40. In an action against a partnership and in order to prove that one of the defendants was a partner, it is incompetent to ask a witness, whether from what he saw while working for the firm, and from the acts of the particular defendant during that time, he was a partner. Turner v. McIlhaney, 8 Cal. 579.

41. Common report can only be admissible to prove a partnership first in corroboration, and second to prove knowledge of it on the part of the plaintiff. Ib.

42. Parties may form a universal partnership, but the same would not be held to exist unless the intention was clearly expressed. The evidence to establish such a partnership after the death of one of the alleged partners, should be clear and full and not subject to doubt. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 639.

43. As the relation sustained by the tenant purchasing the fee to his cotenant or partners is one of confidence, the proof that the latter had waived his right must be clear, and the burthen of proof rests upon the tenant purchasing. Laffan v. Naglee, 9 Cal. 682.

44. Where three persons are sued on a promissory note given by one of the parties in the name of all as partners, and the evidence fails to show the partnership or the authority of the party making the note to bind all, and one of the parties is nonsuited, and judgment taken against the other two: held, that there is no error in such judgment. Stoddard v. Van Dyke, 12 Cal. 438.

III. DISSOLUTION OF A COPARTNERSHIP.

45. Where on the settlement of a partnership a mistake occurs, and both parties were ignorant or had equal knowledge of or equal opportunities of knowing the mistake, and there had been no fraud or concealment, equity will not correct the mistake. Belt v. Mehen, 2 Cal. 159.

46. A contract contained a covenant for stipulated damages, and by the same contract the parties were constituted partners: it was held, that in an action on said contract, that the legal demand for damages could be joined with the equitable demand for a dissolution. Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 294.

47. If damages accrue in an action on the dissolution of a copartnership, they can be settled by the court if liquidated,

Dissolution of a Copartnership.—Notice required.—Liability of a Copartnership.

and if not, an issue can be framed to have them ascertained. Ib.

48. A consignment of merchandise was made to defendants as partners; after the dissolution of the partnership, two sales of a portion of the merchandise were made; one by each partner, who severally received the money: it was held, that the partnership continued for the purpose of fulfilling engagements, and that the defendants were jointly liable. Johnson v. Totten, 3 Cal. 346.

49. A bill being filed for the purpose of securing the assets of the partnership and having them distributed to the creditors, a court of chancery will carry it out without regard to any attempt on the part of the partners to evade or defeat it. Adams v. Haskell, 6 Cal. 116.

50. In a case where one partner has filed his bill, and a dissolution has been judicially declared, and a receiver ordered to make a pro rata distribution of the assets among the creditors, they are not prevented from resorting to adverse proceedings and thereby gaining a preference. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 199; Adams v. Woods, 9 Cal. 25.

51. Creditors of a partnership have no interest in a partnership suit or proceeding for account and dissolution, until after a decree of dissolution, and that in the mean time they may pursue their remedies at law, and thereby secure a preference or lien upon the partnership assets. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 156; Naglee v. Minturn, 8 Cal. 544.

52. In a suit for a dissolution of partnership, the appointment of a receiver is only a means to attain the end contemplated by the plaintiff, and so is the employment of counsel by the receiver. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 316.

53. It is a very dangerous practice to go behind stated accounts, especially as between partners who alone understood their complicated affairs, and the mode in which their books are kept. If all partnership books were well and carefully kept upon the same system, then the practice of opening up accounts would not be so doubtful. Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 361.

1. Notice required.

54. The question of notice of the dissolution of a partnership is a fact for the jury under the charge of the court. Rabe v. Wells, 3 Cal. 151.

55. To affect the rights of one dealing with a partnership firm, actual notice of its dissolution must be brought home to him. Johnson v. Totten, 3 Cal. 347.

56. Where proof has been given that a newspaper containing notice of a dissolution of a partnership between the defendants was taken by the plaintiffs at the time, it is not error to admit in evidence other papers not taken by them, by way of establishing the publication of the notice, and raising the presumption of their actual knowledge of the fact. Treadwell v. Wells, 4 Cal. 262.

57. The publication of dissolution in a paper taken by the plaintiffs, is a fact from which the jury may infer actual notice. The court has no right to charge the jury in regard to conclusions of fact. Ib. 263.

58. An ostensible partner retiring from the firm must give notice of his retirement, or he will be liable to creditors of the continuing firm on contracts made by them after his retirement. Williams v. Bowers, 15 Cal. 321.

IV. LIABILITY OF A COPARTNERSHIP.

59. Where a foreign miner, subject to a license tax, was employed by one of a partnership to work in the mines, which were the partnership's property: held, that the employer and not the partnership was liable for the tax. Meyer v. Larkin, 3 Cal. 405.

60. When a partner makes a note in the name of a copartnership, it will render all the partners liable to a bona fide holder, although it has no relation to the partnership business, and the other partners were wholly ignorant of the transaction, and were even intentionally defrauded by the copartner. Rich v. Davis, 4 Cal. 22; 6 Cal. 141.

61. It is not error to instruct a jury that if sufficient time had elapsed between the dealings of the plaintiffs with the old firm and their subsequent transactions with the new firm to put a reasonable man on inquiry, they might be treated as new dealers. Treadwell v. Wells, 4 Cal. 263.

62. One partner cannot bind his co-

Liability of a Copartnership.—Actions.

partner by a submission of partnership matters to arbitration; it does not follow that such submission would not be good as against himself. Jones v. Bailey, 5 Cal. 346.

63. The authority to sign a name to partnership articles is not authority to sign a promissory note, where the money was used in carrying on the joint operations. Washburn v. Alden, 5 Cal. 464.

64. Where a mining company, not incorporated, forms a trading partnership with an individual under a firm name, each member of the company is a member of the firm. Rich v. Davis, 6 Cal. 163.

65. The obligation of the assignee of a bond for a title is not affected by the fact that the land was partnership property of the assignor and assignee, where it was not so held out to the world, and where the partnership was unknown to the creditors. Connelly v. Peck, 6 Cal. 353.

66. A power of attorney authorizing the agent "to settle all partnership debts, accounts and demands, and all other accounts and demands now subsisting, or which may hereafter subsist between me and any other person or persons whatever," and to execute releases for such purposes, does not confer upon the attorney a power to release a covenant of guarantee made to the principal and others jointly for the payment of rent and purchase money of property sold by them as tenants in common. Johnson v. Wright, 6 Cal. 375.

67. In such a case the debt guaranteed is not a partnership debt, nor does it fall within the provision of the power referring to demands subsisting "between me and any other person or persons," which is confined to demands in which the principal had a several and sole interest. Ib.

68. Where an order was drawn on a firm, not negotiable, and an endorsement of the amount due was made by one of the firm so as to render it negotiable, it operated as a release of the firm by the holder, and as an acceptance by the partner endorsing. Garwood v. Simpson, 8 Cal. 108.

69. Where an individual doing business under the firm name of "D. W. & Co." incurred obligations for professional services to the plaintiff, an attorney, and pending the litigation of his matters formed a partnership with two others under the same firm name, and one of the new members of the firm thus formed subsequently dismissed the suit in the firm name, and when payment for the services was demanded did not deny the liability of the firm, but refused the payment and disputed the amount charged: held, that the firm was estopped from denying their liability. Burritt v. Dickson, 8 Cal. 115.

70. The debt of a partnership must be discharged from the joint property before any portion of it can be supplied to the individual debts of the partners. Chase v. Steel, 9 Cal. 66.

71. The fact that a partner's interest is mortgaged for his individual debt, for the purchase money of his share in the partnership, is immaterial. He can only mortgage that which he has, viz.: a share subject to partnership debts. Ib.

72. Partnership property is bound for partnership debts when the firm is in existence; and it continues to be bound for those debts after the sale of one partner, especially when he assumed as a part of the transaction of purchase the payment of those debts. Conroy v. Woods, 13 Cal. 631.

73. The lien of partnership creditors is paramount to the lien of individual creditors. Ib.

74. In such case of conflict between the individual and firm creditors, equity has jurisdiction. Ib. 634.

V. ACTIONS.

1. By a Copartnership.

75. Where the tax collector levied on the property of the partnership for the tax due by the foreigner thus employed, and sold the whole claim, and dispossessed the plaintiff (one of the partners): held, that he was guilty of a trespass, for which this action was properly brought. Meyer v. Larkin, 3 Cal. 405.

76. Where the plaintiff sued Asa Hull & Co., the words "& Co." might well be treated as surplusage, and the action proceed as against Hull alone. No injury could occur from this course, as Hull, if he has copartners in the transaction, can force them to contribute their portion. Mulliken v. Hull, 5 Cal. 246.

By a Copartnership.—Against a Copartnership.—Among Copartners.

77. Where one partner sues for an injury to the partnership property, and makes his copartner a defendant for want of his consent to join as plaintiff, the recovery must be entire for the whole injury. Nightingale v. Scannell, 6 Cal. 509.

78. In such a case, the partner recovering is liable to account to his copartner defendant; and the latter being immediately interested in the event of the suit is not, therefore, a competent witness for the plaintiff. Ib.

79. Where a partnership exists between two persons in the purchase of goods, and they subsequently bring suit to recover their value from a trespasser who has seized them: held, that one partner is competent to execute a release in the name of himself and copartner. Perlberg v. Gorham, 10 Cal. 125.

80. Where two persons sue as partners in possession for a trespass on firm property, the judgment in their favor is firm assets. The fact is, joint title as partners to the damages is in issue and adjudicated. Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 228.

2. Against a Copartnership.

81. In an action against partners, judgment can only be had against those served with process. Ingraham v. Gildemeester, 2 Cal. 89.

82. Where a complaint in an action on a promissory note executed by two defendants averred that the defendants were partners, and that the note was executed by them, and the answer simply denied that the defendants were partners, and did not deny that they executed the note: held, that the averment of partnership was immaterial, and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the pleadings. Whitwell v. Thomas, 9 Cal. 500.

83. Where the defendant's partners employed defendant on an agreement that a portion of his wages should be retained by plaintiff until a certain sum had accumulated, when plaintiff should be admitted as a partner; and defendants subsequently, but before the sum had accumulated, dissolved partnership: held, that the defendants, by their own acts, having violated the special contract by dissolving their copartnership, the plaintiff was at liberty to sue on the special contract for damages, or declare for the value of his work and labor. Adams v. Pugh, 7 Cal. 151.

3. Among Copartners.

84. The provision of the code which permits an arrest of a debtor in certain cases does not apply in the case of one partner suing to recover money received by another. Soulé v. Hayward, 1 Cal. 346.

85. A being the owner of an invoice of goods in the city of New York, sold one-half interest therein to B, with an arrangement that the latter should proceed to San Francisco, and there dispose of the same on joint account: held, that this constituted a partnership between them, and that B was not subject to arrest in an action by A to recover a part of the proceeds of the sales. Ib.

86. A complaint was filed to compel a copartnership account, and contained sufficient to call upon the defendants for an account as to a particular branch of their business, but was in other respects artificially drawn and insufficient, and a demurrer was filed to the whole complaint; it was held that the demurrer must be overruled. Young v. Pearson, 1 Cal. 448.

87. In an action by one partner for a dissolution of the partnership, and an account, etc., alleging that dividends of profits were to be made at stated periods, the court may decree the payment of the sum due for such dividends before final distribution of the assets. O'Conner v. Stark, 2 Cal. 155.

88. One partner cannot sustain an action against his copartner for the delivery of personal property belonging to the partnership. Buckley v. Carlisle, 2 Cal. 420.

89. A copartnership contract contained a covenant also for damages; it was held, that one partner could not sue the other for damages without seeking an account and dissolution. Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 294.

90. Partners cannot sue one another at law for any of the business or undertakings of the partnership. This can only be done in chancery, by asking a dissolution and an account. Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 294; Nugent v. Locke, 4 Cal. 320;

Among Copartners.—Surviving Copartner.

Wilson v. Lassen, 5 Cal. 116; Barnstead v. Empire Mining Co., 5 Cal. 299.

91. A and B were in partnership; B took forcible possession of the property, and sold it to C and D. It was afterwards held that A cannot maintain an action for the partnership property and profits against B, C and D. Mason v. Tipton, 4 Cal. 276.

92. It is no defense to a note given by one partner to another for his interest in land held jointly by both, that the payee of the note had deceived his partner, the maker, in the division of the partnership stock, and was indebted therefor in an amount equal to or greater than the sum due on the note. Case v. Maxey, 6 Cal. 277.

93. Where the plaintiffs and defendants entered into a partnership, by the terms of which the plaintiffs were to advance a certain sum of money and materials for a saw mill, which they did, and the defendants removed the materials furnished by plaintiffs, and appropriated the same, including the money, to their own use: held, that the plaintiffs had a right to sue therefor at law, and for damages caused by defendants' violation of the partnership agreement. Crosby v. McDermitt, 7 Cal. 148.

94. A decree adjudging that a partnership existed between two of the parties to the action, and that another partnership existed between one of them and another party to the action, each partnership embracing all business and property, both real and personal, of the parties, and deciding that the one partnership is subject to the other, and directing an account to be taken, there being other parties to an action representing the interest of one of the partners in each partnership, is interlocutory, and not final. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 635.

95. Such a decree does not ascertain the specific sum due to any of the partners, nor direct the disposition of the partnership property. It does not settle the present condition of the partners, but only the original terms of their partnership. Ib.

96. Where two shareholders in a company sold to the company goods to a large amount, and afterwards, during the existence of the company, sold their stock to A, and assigned their account for such goods to B, who sued such company on said account by attachment: held, that such action could not be maintained, there having been no final settlement of the partnership accounts, no balance struck, and no express promise on the part of the individual members to pay their ascertained proportion. Bullard v. Kinney, 10 Cal. 63.

97. The superior court of San Francisco had jurisdiction of a suit to settle the accounts of a partnership formed for the purchase of mining claims, where both parties resided in said city, but could not, by its decree, affect the title to or any interest on the claims themselves. Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 325.

VI. SURVIVING COPARTNER.

98. Where the surviving partners were entitled to the possession and management of the partnership effects, the only interest that the heirs could have in the partnership assets was the net interest of their ancestor, after the partnership debts were all paid. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 637.

99. A surviving partner being entitled to the possession and control of the partnership effects, can proceed directly in the district court to obtain the control, and to have a partition of the real estate belonging to the partnership, but standing in the name of his deceased partner. Ib.

100. This being the true character of partnership real estate, the surviving partner has an equitable lien upon it for his indemnity against the debts of the firm, and for the balance due him. Ib. 639.

101. A surviving partner has, under the statute of May, 1850, regulating the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, section one hundred and ninety-eight, the exclusive right of possession, and the absolute power of disposition of the assets of the partnership. People v. Hill, 16 Cal. 118.

102. A surviving partner has a right to vote, at an election for officers of a corporation formed under the general incorporation act of this State, of 1853, the stock in his hands as assets of the partnership—the business of the firm being unsettled. Ib.

Dormant Copartners.—Coroner.—Corporation.

103. The fact that a portion of the stock voted by such surviving partner stood upon the books of the corporation, at the time of the election, in the name of the deceased partner alone, does not affect the right to vote, if in fact the stock belonged to the partnership. Ib. 119.

104. The proviso in the fifty-second section of the act to regulate the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, as amended by the act of April 23d, 1855, extends to all the classes of persons designated in the section, and is not limited to persons embraced within the tenth class; and a surviving partner, though a brother, where the partnership existed at the time of the death of the intestate, cannot be administrator of the estate. Cornell v. Gallagher, 16 Cal. 367.

VII. DORMANT COPARTNERS.

105. Where one of the mining company acted as salesman of the firm, it cannot be pretended that he was a dormant partner, whose acts would not bind the firm. Rich v. Davis, 6 Cal. 163.

106. There may be a dormant partnership, in the purchase and sale of real estate, as between the partners themselves; but as between the partners and third persons, the law in regard to dormant partners will not apply. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 639.

CORONER.

1. Where an elizor was appointed, and the pleadings did not show that there was no sheriff or coroner, or that these officers were disqualified: held, that the appointment being made by a judge having competent jurisdiction, the presumption of law is that he faithfully performed his duty. Turner v. Billagram, 2 Cal. 522.

2. In the event of the disqualification of the sheriff and coroner, a district court has the right to appoint an elizor. Even if such authority was not conferred by statute, the court, by virtue of its original jurisdiction, has the power to appoint a special officer to execute its process. Wilson v. Roach, 4 Cal. 367.

3. Strictly speaking, there can be no vacancy in the office of sheriff, caused by the death, removal, or resignation of the incumbent; for, upon the happening of such an event, the coroner, by operation of law, becomes sheriff. People v. Phaenix, 6 Cal. 93.

4. The coroner only holds the office of sheriff, ex officio, until the appointment of a new sheriff by the board of supervisors. Ib.

5. In trespass against a sheriff, the court below, on plaintiff's motion, may order a special jury to try the case, instead of the regular panel. The sheriff being interested, ought not to summon a jury; and there being no coroner, an elizor may be appointed to summon the jury. Pacheco v. Hunsacker, 14 Cal. 124.

6. Defendant, as coroner and acting sheriff, levied on, and advertised for sale, all the right, title and interest of T. in certain horses and cattle in the hands of a receiver, appointed in a suit between J. and T., as partners: held, that plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction restraining the sale, unless the injury would be irreparable, and that this must appear by a clear showing of plaintiff's right to the property, and defendant's insolvency. Moore v. Ord, 15 Cal. 206.

In general.—Certificate of Incorporation.—Acts of the Corporation.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Corporations can possess or exercise such corporate powers only as are expressly given by statutes, or by the charters, and such as shall be necessary to the exercise of the powers enumerated and given. Dunbar v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 356; Correas v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 452.

2. Two corporations cannot hold as joint tenants, but may as tenants in common. Dewitt v. City of San Francisco, 2 Cal. 297.

3. Corporations are bound to follow strictly the letter of their charter, and can exercise no power unless granted to them or absolutely necessary to carry out the power so granted. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 538.

4. The word person, in its legal signification, is a generic term, and was intended to include artificial as well as natural persons. Douglass v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 4 Cal. 306.

5. In reference to all transactions in the nature of a contract, a corporation must be looked upon and treated as a private person and its contracts construed in the same manner and with the like effect as those of natural persons. Touchard v. Touchard, 5 Cal. 307.

6. Counties are quasi corporations and can sue and be sued. Price v. Sacramento County, 6 Cal. 255.

7. The incorporation act of 1853 does not substantially alter the incorporation law of 1850. Weston v. Bear River and Auburn W. & M. Co., 6 Cal. 429.

8. If a charter confers upon a corporation a given power, and at the same time prescribes the mode of its exercise, the provisions must be held as dependent and must be construed accordingly. Holland v. City of San Francisco, 7 Cal. 375.

9. Neither the general incorporation act, nor the act concerning plank roads and turnpikes, gives any exclusive privileges to the corporation first established. Others may build a road on or near the same line of travel. Indian Canon Road Co. v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 520.

10. Charters of corporations are special grants of power emanating from the paramount authority. The corporation owing its existence to the law, is precisely what the law makes it. City of Oakland v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 545.

II. CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION.

11. The existence of a corporation formed under a general statute requiring certain acts to be done before the corporation can be considered in esse, or its transactions be valid, must be proved by showing at least a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute. Mokelumne Hill C. & M. Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 426.

12. The omission of such acts as are declared necessary steps in the process of incorporation, will be fatal even collaterally, when the fact of incorporation can be questioned. Ib.

13. But as to such other acts required of the persons seeking to become incorporated, but not made prerequisites to the assumption of corporate powers, the corporation is responsible only to the government in a direct action of forfeiture. Ib.

14. That a duplicate certificate is not filed in the office of the secretary of State, is matter between the corporation and the State, and not necessary to be shown on the issue of corporation or no corporation, in suits against third persons. Ib. 427.

15. Under our laws, corporations have a legal existence from the date of filing the certificate of incorporation in the county clerk's office. Ib.

III. ACTS OF THE CORPORATION.

1. Powers.

16. A conveyance that would come within the statute of frauds if made by an individual, if made by a corporation would be liable to the same construction, and if void in the former case would be void in the latter, and will not affect the lien of a judgment regularly obtained against the grantor. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 539.

17. The clear object of the restriction of issuing bills, notes, etc., by any corporation, is to prevent them by any device from carrying on the business of banking, or in other words, to prevent the formation of moneyed corporations; but it does not prevent them from issuing bills or evidences of indebtedness for moneys borrowed by them. Magee v. Mokelumne Hill C. & M. Co., 5 Cal. 259.

18. A corporation may bind itself by a note and mortgage made by its president and secretary, and signed by them in their official capacity as such. Rowe v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 444.

19. In suits for the possession of land by ditch companies, incorporated under the act of April 14th, 1853, by the fourth section of which they are authorized "to purchase, hold, sell and convey such real and personal estate as the purposes of the corporation shall require," the defendants cannot question the necessity of such land for the purposes of the corporation. This is matter between the government and the corporation. Natoma W. & M. Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 552.

2. Liability.

20. Where the charter of a hospital was repealed and a charter granted to the new one, and the officers of the former were directed to deliver to the trustees of the latter "all the property, real and personal, held by them in trust and for the old institution, and that the latter should pay out of the funds in its hands all the debts owing by the old one: held, that the new corporation was bound to pay all such debts, without regard to the sufficiency of the fund derived from the corporation. Johnson v. State Marine Hospital, 2 Cal. 319.

21. The policy of this State has altered the rigidity of the common law, which disabled a corporation from making a contract except under its corporate seal. Smith v. Eureka Flour Mills, 6 Cal. 6.

22. Under the laws of this State, the power of corporations to create debts is treated as an incident to the express powers, and not as in itself one of the express powers. Ib. 7.

23. All corporations by the general act have power to make by-laws for the "organization of the company," the "management of its property," the "regulation of its affairs, and for carrying on all kinds of business within the objects and purposes of the company," in which there is no reason to exclude the right of making promissory notes. Ib.

24. Where the promissory note of a corporation, executed by its officers, provides that only the assets of the corporation, and none of the property of stockholders, shall be liable, the corporation cannot raise the objection as affecting its own liability. Ib.

25. An incorporated company is not bound by the acts or admissions of its members, unless acting by its express authority. Shay v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 6 Cal. 74.

26. A corporate act is not essential in all cases to fasten a liability, and if it were necessary, the law would sometimes presume, in order to uphold fair dealing and prevent gross injustice, the existence of such act, and estop the corporation from denying it. San Francisco Gas Co. v. City of San Francisco, 9 Cal. 472.

27. Where a contract is executory, the corporation cannot be held bound unless the contract is made in pursuance of the provisions of its charter; but where the contract has been executed and the corporation has enjoyed the benefit of the consideration, an implied assumpsit arises against it. Ib.

28. Where a draft is drawn by the president and secretary of a corporation upon its treasurer, no notice of presentation and nonpayment is necessary to hold the corporation. The draft, in such case, is only an order of the corporation upon itself. Dennis v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 370.

29. It does not follow because an agent purchases property which is not absolutely necessary for the purposes of the corporation, that the latter can, after receiving the property, avoid the payment of the purchase money. Shaver v. Bear River and Auburn W. & M. Co., 10 Cal. 400.

30. Where the president of a corporation has the alleged power to make a contract for the corporation, though his authority be doubtful, yet the subsequent acts of the company may amount to a ratification. Ib. 401.

IV. CORPORATORS.

1. Their Rights.

31. A joint stock mining association was formed in New York for the purpose of mining in California, which company was to continue several years, with a prohibition against dissolution within one year after the arrival of the company in California, except on certain conditions, which had not been complied with: held, that a portion of the company could not dissolve the company at their will and pleasure, but it being found impracticable to keep the company together, the court decreed a dissolution and a distribution of the effects of the company. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 70.

32. The stock being divided into money shares and labor shares, the holders of the latter, who had contributed no capital towards the outfit of the company, had performed no labor beneficial to the company, and had their expenses to California paid out of the funds contributed by the holders of the money shares alone, and had abandoned the association, which fact, by the articles, worked a forfeiture of the labor shares: held, that the assets of the company should be distributed among the holders of the money shares alone, and that the court relieve them from the forfeiture. Ib.

33. When in a joint stock association certain parties contribute money, and hold therefor money shares, and that money is paid to defray the expenses of certain operators to California, who contribute no money, but who, after laboring for the corporation one year, shall receive certain labor shares, and the corporation is dissolved by reason of its impracticability, before operation: held, that the assets should be distributed among the money shares alone. Ib.

34. The right of a member of an incorporated company to sue the corporation is undoubted. Barnstead v. Empire Mining Co., 5 Cal. 299.

35. Where there is nothing in the constitution of a joint stock company which regulates the remedies of the shareholders as between themselves, the general law of partnership must govern them. Bullard v. Kinney, 10 Cal. 63.

36. A surviving partner has a right to vote at an election for officers of a corporation formed under the general incorporation act of this State of 1853, the stock in his hands as assets of the partnership—business of the firm being unsettled. People v. Hill, 16 Cal. 118.

37. The fact that a portion of the stock voted by such surviving partner stood upon the books of the corporation at the time of the election, in the name of the deceased partner alone, does not affect the right to vote, if in fact the stock belonged to the partnership. Ib.

38. Semble upon principle, that the real owner of stock in such corporations is entitled to represent it at the meetings of the corporation, and the mere fact that he does not appear as the owner upon the books of the company, should not absolutely exclude him from the privilege of so doing. Ib.

39. The New York cases, establishing a different doctrine, are based upon a statute making the books of the corporation the only evidence as to ownership of the stock. Ib.

40. In suit by a stockholder against a corporation and its officers, praying for their removal, and for an account and settlement of the affairs of the corporation, the decree, after a full hearing on the merits, was in accordance with the prayer, and also appointed a receiver to take charge of the property of the corporation, until the further order of the court; collect money due or to become due it; sell certain stock, and pay certain proceeds in accordance with the decree, etc.: held, that this provision in the decree does not destroy its effect as a final decree, and that an appeal lies therefrom. Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 148.

41. The aid of courts can be invoked only as against such officers as are intrusted by law with the management of the affairs of the corporation and as against these, the remedy is at law, and not in equity. Ib.

42. The power of removing the private or ministerial officers of a private corporation belongs to the corporation alone. Courts cannot remove such officers. Ib.

43. In suit by a stockholder in a private corporation, against the corporation and four of the trustees, who owned stock sufficient to enable them to control the business of the company, for an account and settlement of its affairs, alleging fraud and mismanagement on the part of the trustees, the court below, by its decree, deprived one of said trustees of his salary as superintendent of the business of the corporation: held, that this was error; that although such superintendent was also superintendent and treasurer of the corporation, contrary to a positive provision of the by-laws; and although, in the management of the business of these officers, no attention had been paid to the by-laws and regulations of the corporation, yet as no fraud was shown, and as the superintendent had faithfully performed his duties as such, he was entitled to his salary. Ib. 149.

---

Corporators.—Their Rights.—Their Liability.—When may be a Witness.

---

44. If in such case any loss was sustained by the corporation from disregard of its by-laws and regulations, the amount of such loss would seem to be the measure of relief. Ib.

45. Hence, in this case, it was error in the court below to appoint a receiver and decree a sale of the property and a settlement of the affairs of the corporation. Such decree necessarily results in the dissolution of the corporation, and would be doing indirectly what the court has no power to do directly. Ib. 150.

46. To charge the officers of a corporation with a loss sustained by a stockholder, in a diminution of the value of the stock, alleged to have been caused by their mismanagement, it shall appear very clearly that the loss was occasioned by their gross negligence or willful misconduct. Ib.

47. A court of equity has no jurisdiction over corporations, for the purpose of restraining their operations or winding up their concerns. Such court may compel the officers of the corporation to account for any breach of trust; but the jurisdiction for this purpose is over the officers personally, and not over the corporation. Ib.

48. Where four of the trustees of a private corporation, owning sufficient stock to control its business, conduct the business in a grossly negligent manner, systematically disregarding the by-laws, keeping no account of receipts and expenditures, failing to pay their own assessments, without any excuse: held, that a stockholder may sue in equity for an account, making the corporation and said trustees alone parties—no objection being taken that all the stockholders were not parties—and the trustees will be compelled to make good any loss occasioned. Ib. 151.

2. Their Liability.

49. Each corporator is a principal debtor, and not a mere surety for the corporation; and in relation to the creditors of the corporation, stands on the same footing as if it were an ordinary partnership. Mokelumne Hill C. and M. Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 266.

50. Under the constitution and laws of this State, each member of a private incorporated company is answerable personally for his proportion of the debts and liabilities of the company. Ib.

3. When may be a Witness.

51. In an action against a corporation, a witness who was a member of the corporation when the liabilities were incurred on which the action is brought, but who had sold out before the commencement of the action, is incompetent for interest. McAuley v. York Mining Co., 6 Cal. 81.

52. A member of the incorporation at the commencement of a suit brought by it, cannot become a witness for it on the trial by selling out his shares of stock after suit brought. He is personally liable for his proportion of the costs; and his competency as a witness can only be restored by actual payment of the entire costs of the case—those due and those to become due. Mokelumne Hill C. and M. Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 266.

53. A party who permits himself to stand on the books of a water company, incorporated under the statutes of this State, as a stockholder, and holds the office of secretary—to which no person but a stockholder is eligible—is not a competent witness for the company in an action against it for overflowing plaintiffs' mining claim. He is liable for the debts of the company, and therefore interested. Wolf v. St. Louis Independent Water Co., 15 Cal. 320.

Actions by and against Corporations.

54. The fact that the stock was held in his name in trust for another—the transfer having been made simply to enable him to become an officer of the company—does not relieve him from responsibility. The trust in such case is only implied; and the seventeenth section of the corporation act of 1853 applies only to the trustee of an express trust. Ib.

V. ACTIONS.

1. By a Corporation.

55. The position of a priest who appears to have charge of church property coupled with an interest, seems to be nearly analogous to that of a sole corporation in England; and his power to sue is an inseparable incident to such corporation. Santillan v. Moses, 1 Cal. 93.

56. The allegation that plaintiff was a corporation under the laws of this State, is sufficient to establish the right to sue under the first section of the act concerning corporations. California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 261.

2. Against a Corporation.

57. The code imposes upon the defendant, if a corporation, by its officers and agents, the duty of acquiring the requisite knowledge or information respecting the matters alleged in the complaint, to enable them to answer in the proper form. San Francisco Gas Co. v. City of San Francisco, 9 Cal. 467.

58. The code made no distinction between the rules of pleading applicable to natural persons and those applicable to artificial persons. Ib.

59. Where a decree rendered in a suit against a corporation contained a direction for the sale of the interest of individuals not parties to the suit, and from such decree the corporation alone appealed: held, that the corporation could not take advantage of the error in the decree in embracing individuals. Dennis v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 370.

60. In an action to restrain the issuing of bonds by a corporation, the persons to whom the bonds are to be issued are necessary parties to such action. Hutchinson v. Burr, 12 Cal. 103; Patterson v. Supervisors of Yuba County, 12 Cal. 106.

61. Where on suit against defendants as members of a quartz company, one defendant pleads that he was not a member of the company, and the finding of the court is that the allegations of the complaint are true, and that said defendant was a member of the company as to plaintiff Parke, the finding supports a judgment for plaintiff. Parke v. Hinds, 14 Cal. 417.

62. The rule requiring all persons materially interested to be made parties to a suit is dispensed with, when it is impracticable or very inconvenient, as in cases of joint associations composed of numerous individuals. Gorman v. Russell, 14 Cal. 539.

3. Service of Process.

63. In an action against a corporation, the summons must be served on one of the officers or agents named in the practice act. Aiken v. Quartz Rock Mariposa G. M. Co., 6 Cal. 186.

64. Where, in an action against a corporation, the return of the sheriff showed that he had served the summons in the action "upon James Street, one of the proprietors of the company:" held, that it was not sufficient evidence of service to give the court jurisdiction; it not appearing that Street was president, or head of the corporation, or secretary, cashier or managing agent thereof. O'Brien v. Shaw's Flat & Tuolumne Canal Co., 10 Cal. 343.

65. A sheriff's return on the summons against a corporation, that he served the same on the president and secretary of the company, is prima facie evidence that the persons named in the return were such officers. Rowe v. Table Mountain W. Co., 10 Cal. 444; Wilson v. Spring Hill Quartz M. Co., 10 Cal. 445.

VI. DISSOLUTION OF A CORPORATION.

66. Voluntary associations for mutual relief in sickness or distress by funds raised by initiation fees, fines, dues, etc., are partnerships, and may be dissolved by a court of equity, if they improperly exclude a member. Gorman v. Russell, 14 Cal. 535.

67. If an association excludes a member from its meetings because he refuses to take an oath, to be administered by the president, which oath was not required by the constitution and by-laws, and is foreign to the objects of the association, it is ground for a dissolution. Ib. 538.

---

 VII. STOCK.

68. Under the twelfth section of the act concerning corporations, passed April 22d, 1850, no transfer of stock is good against third parties, unless the transfer be made on the books of the company. Weston v. Bear River & Auburn W. & M. Co., 5 Cal. 189.

69. Where a femme sole became the owner of shares of stock in a company, and afterwards marries, and after marriage the husband and wife execute an endorsement on the certificate of stock, purporting to sell the same to A, without any privy examination of the wife, and there being at the time no inventory of the separate property of the wife on record: held, that such sale was void, as against a subsequent purchaser, under an instrument duly signed and acknowledged. Selover v. American Russian Com. Co., 7 Cal. 273.

70. Where A received an assignment of stock in a corporation, and the stock was subsequently attached under a judgment against a vendor, and afterwards the stock was regularly transferred to A, who then obtained an assignment of the judgment under which the stock was attached: held, that the assignment of the judgment at once merged the lien in the higher right; and that A, as regarded third parties, became the absolute owner of the stock. Strout v. Natoma W. & M. Co., 9 Cal. 80.

71. A railroad company cannot refuse to enter the transfer of stock in said company on their books on the ground that the assignor of the stock is indebted to the company, unless the company had a lien upon the stock at the date of its transfer. People v. Crockett, 9 Cal. 114.

1. When hypothecated.

72. A party who purchases at sheriff's sale stocks of an incorporation, knowing that the certificates of such stock have been previously hypothecated, is chargeable with notice of the fact, and takes subject to the claim of the pledgees. Weston v. Bear River & Auburn W. & M. Co., 6 Cal. 429.

73. Where shares of stock in a corporation have been regularly transferred as security for a loan, the mortgagee is the only proper garnishee in a suit against the mortgagor, and attachment on his interest in the corporation. Edwards v. Beugnot, 7 Cal. 165.

74. A person who has been a stockholder in an incorporated company, but ceased to be such holder before suit was brought, is a competent witness in an action in the name of such company. Tuolumne County W. Co. v. Columbia & Stanislaus W. Co., 10 Cal. 195.

75. Where from an instrument transferring shares of stock as security for a note, and from other circumstances, the transaction is clearly a loan, a clause of foreclosure on nonpayment, or a provision that the mortgagee may take the property for the debt, does not make the instrument any the less a mortgage. Smith v. '49 & '56 Quartz M. Co., 14 Cal. 246.

76. Where stock is transferred to secure a debt, and is still in the hands of the transferee, and plaintiff avers that the stock is worth more than the debt, and that defendant has received from dividends more than enough to pay it, equity has jurisdiction to compel an account, prevent a transfer, and direct a retransfer and delivery of the stock. Ib. 247.

77. The clause in such instrument "I hereby sell, transfer and set over * * all my right, title and interest to the said * * stock, provided I fail to pay * * the above sum * * on the day the same becomes due and payable," does not make it a conditional sale, there being no money given or agreed to be given for the stock, and no agreement to take it at any price at the time of the contract. Ib.

78. A mortgagee of stock in such case does not get an absolute title to the stock by the mere default of payment of the mortgage debt. Ib.

Dividends.—Costs in general.

79. Under the chattel mortgage act of 1857, a mortgage of shares of stock in an incorporated company is valid without a transfer on the books of the company, as is required by the corporation act of 1853 relative to pledges of stock by delivery of the certificates. The act of 1853 has no effect on the act of 1857. Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 58.

80. At one time, seven shares of stock in a company are pledged by defendant to plaintiff as security for a note of defendant then executed. At another time, twenty more shares are pledged as security for another note of defendant then executed. In suit on the notes, and for sale of the stock, etc., the judgment was for the amount of the notes, and directed a sale of all the shares of stock: held, that the judgment was wrong so far as it ordered a sale of the stock in gross, and an application of the proceeds to the entire indebtedness. Mahoney v. Caperton, 15 Cal. 315.

2. Dividends.

81. Plaintiff assigns to defendant, September 22d, two shares of stock in a mining company, stating in the assignment, "I authorize the transfer to him, (defendant) with all the dividends made after the morning of the twenty-third of September." Both parties expected a dividend on Monday, the twenty-second. The trustees did not, in fact, declare dividends until between noon and one o'clock on Tuesday: held, that the dividends belonged to plaintiff; and that parol evidence was admissible to explain the transaction, and point out its meaning. Brewster v. Lathrop, 15 Cal. 22.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

COSTS.

- I. In general.
- II. On Appeal.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. In an action brought for the distribution of the effects of a corporation, and it being for the interest of all parties that the company should be legally dissolved: held, that costs and a counsel fee on each side should be paid out of the fund. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 75.

2. An attorney only has a lien upon a judgment recovered by him for his client for the costs given by statute, and not for a quantum meruit compensation. Ex parte Kyle, 1 Cal. 332; Mansfield v. Dorland, 2 Cal. 509; Russell v. Conway, 11 Cal. 103.

3. Where a new trial was to be had on payment of costs: held, that the receipt of costs did not waive the right to appeal from the order granting a new trial. Tyson v. Wells, 1 Cal. 378.

4. Where an arbitrator refuses to deliver an award made by him, until his fees are paid, and a promise to pay him is made, and he delivers the award, it takes the case out of the statute of frauds, and the promise is supported by a consideration. Young v. Starkey, 1 Cal. 427.

5. Where parties who submit a matter to arbitration agree as to who shall pay the arbitrator; if the latter be no party to the agreement, he will not be bound by it, but may look to all the parties for compensation for his services. Ib.

6. Judgment may be affirmed as to a mandamus, but reversed as to costs. McDougal v. Roman, 2 Cal. 80.

7. A mandamus is not the proper remedy, when an inferior court refuses to enter a judgment for costs. The party should appeal or sue for his costs. Peralta v. Adams, 2 Cal. 595.

8. The court has power in the exercise of its discretion to allow the amendment of a bill of costs and the affidavit accompanying it. Burnham v. Hays, 3 Cal. 118.

9. Where the original bill of costs is filed within the time prescribed by statute, an amendment allowed after the time relates back to the time of filing the original, of which it forms merely a part. Ib.

10. The affidavit of an attorney of a party to the correctness of a bill of costs is good under the statute. Ib. 119.

11. If the original affidavit to a bill of costs is a nullity, the defendant should take proper steps to have it set aside, or appeal from the judgment, on the ground that the costs had been waived by operation of the statute; but having himself moved a retaxation of costs, it was proper for the court, in its discretion, to allow such amendments as were just and necessary. Ib.

In general.

12. Where a case is remitted from the supreme court to a district court, the clerk of the district court may issue an execution for the costs accrued thereon, without the order of the district court. City of Marysville v. Buchanan, 3 Cal. 213.

13. The notices and affidavits filed on an application to retax costs were not embodied in a bill of exceptions or statement: held, that the judgment must be affirmed upon the presumption that the court below decided properly upon all the evidence before it. Gates v. Buckingham, 4 Cal. 286.

14. Costs by way of indemnity ought not to be taxed in case of a nonsuit. Rice v. Leonard, 5 Cal. 61.

15. One of the conditions upon which an appeal is allowed from a justice's court, is the payment of the costs of the action. McDermott v. Douglass, 5 Cal. 89; Bray v. Redman, 6 Cal. 287.

16. A defendant in replevin who recovers judgment, the jury failing to find the value of the property to exceed two hundred dollars, is nevertheless entitled to his costs, when the plaintiff's complaint states its value at a sum exceeding that amount. Edgar v. Gray, 5 Cal. 267.

17. Where costs are imposed as a condition for reopening a case after the adjournment of the term, the acceptance of the costs by the opposite party will not be construed into a consent to have the cause reinstated. Carpentier v. Hart, 5 Cal. 407.

18. A mistake in the computation of interest or taxation of costs cannot be attacked for the first time in an appellate court. The party complaining must move in the court below to correct the computation or retax the costs, and thus obtain the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction upon the disputed items, before resort can be had to a higher tribunal. Guy v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 417.

19. A mortgage contained a stipulation for all costs of foreclosure, including counsel fees not exceeding five per cent. of the amount due: held, that the limitation of five per cent. is intended to apply to counsel fees alone; and that the complainant would be entitled to recover the whole of its costs by operation of the statute, and independent of any stipulation. Gronfier v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 492.

20. In foreclosing a mortgage containing a stipulation that the mortgagee should be entitled to all costs, including counsel fees not exceeding five per cent. of the amount due, it is not necessary to aver in the complaint that five per cent. was reasonable counsel fees, as the counsel fees thus stipulated to be paid were not the cause of action, but like costs, a mere incident to it, and might be fixed by the court, at its discretion, not exceeding five per cent. Carriere v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 435.

21. In an action to abate a nuisance, damages are only an incident to the action, and the failure to recover them does not affect the question of costs. Hudson v. Doyle, 6 Cal. 102.

22. Executors and administrators are individually responsible for costs recovered against them in every case; but they shall be allowed them in their administration accounts, except when it appears that the action has been persecuted or resisted without just cause. Hicox v. Graham, 6 Cal. 169.

23. An execution for costs becomes a lien from the date of the levy. Low v. Adams, 6 Cal. 281.

24. The plaintiff can only be allowed costs when he recovers two hundred dollars in action for money or damages. Costs are incident to the judgment, and cannot be given by the jury in way of damages. Shay v. Tuolumne Water Co., 6 Cal. 286.

25. The payment or tender of the fees to a justice does not strictly constitute a condition of appeal, but a condition precedent to sending up the papers; but this condition may be waived by the justice. Bray v. Redman, 6 Cal. 287; People v. Harris, 9 Cal. 573.

26. Where a party brought separate actions, first at law on the notes, and then at equity for a foreclosure, before the adoption of this rule uniting them in one action: held, that he be allowed both his legal equitable remedies, on payment of the costs of the latter suit. Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 404.

27. An offer to pay a justice his costs

In general.—On Appeal.

on appeal, so soon as the appeal papers are ready to transmit to the county court, is not a sufficient tender, under the statute. The fees must be tendered unconditionally. People v. Harris, 9 Cal. 572.

28. In an action to try the right to the use of water, and for damages for diverting it, where the amount for which judgment is given is less than two hundred dollars, it will carry costs. Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224.

29. A person claiming an interest in mortgaged premises subsequent to the mortgage, is a proper party to the foreclosure suit, but cannot be subjected to the costs of the foreclosure beyond those occasioned by his own separate defense. Luning v. Brady, 10 Cal. 267.

30. The allowance of costs in actions of equity rests in the discretion of the court of original jurisdiction. Harvey v. Chilton, 11 Cal. 120.

31. Costs of a suit form no part of the matter in dispute, and an appeal does not lie to the supreme court where the amount involved is less than two hundred dollars, although the costs added thereto may increase it beyond that sum. Dumphy v. Guindon, 13 Cal. 30; overruling Gordon v. Ross, 2 Cal. 157.

32. Defendant moved for a new trial, which was granted on the payment of costs as a condition precedent, and failed to except to this order, and then appealed: held, that he could only appeal from annexing the condition to the granting of his motion. Rice v. Gashirie, 13 Cal. 54.

33. Where the judgment below is reversed on appeal, and a new trial had, the costs of the first trial are part of the final bill of costs. Visher v. Webster, 13 Cal. 60.

34. Where a first attachment against an insolvent is set aside as fraudulent, in a suit brought by a subsequent attaching creditor, to which various other attaching creditors, prior and subsequent, are parties, the prior attachments become liens, in the nature of a legal estate vested in the sheriff for the benefit of the creditors. Plaintiff's costs, disbursements and counsel fees, however, should first be deducted from the fund, before distribution. Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 444.

35. A party is not bound to tender costs before the nonsuit. The provision as to costs is simply that by the nonsuit plaintiff becomes subject to costs. Hancock Ditch Co. v. Bradford, 13 Cal. 637.

36. A member of the corporation at the commencement of a suit brought by it cannot become a witness for it on the trial by selling out his shares of stock after suit brought. He is personally liable for his proportion of the costs, and his competency as a witness can only be restored by actual payment of the entire costs of the case—those due and those to become due. Mokelumne Hill Canal and M. Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 268.

37. An act providing for the collection of delinquent taxes is not unconstitutional because it compels the delinquent, if sued, to pay costs and a percentage, by way of attorney's fees, in addition to the tax assessed. People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 344.

38. Under the practice act, as it stood in 1854, a party who failed to file with the clerk a memorandum of costs within the time limited waived his right to costs, whether they were clerk's and sheriff's fees or other costs; and in the absence of such memorandum the clerk had no power to include costs in the judgment. Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 418.

39. After a judgment is entered and the record completed, the clerk has no power to fill up the blank left for costs. His authority terminates with the entry of the judgment, and the court alone, on motion to amend, is competent to relieve where costs are omitted. Id. 419.

II. ON APPEAL.

40. Where a judgment was affirmed in part and reversed in part, the respondent was allowed his costs in the court below, but was required to pay the costs of the appeal. Cole v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 54.

41. The clerk of the supreme court in entering up the judgment adds the words "with costs," and annexes to the remittitur a copy of the bill of costs filed; these words are a sufficient awarding of costs for the clerk below to issue an execution. City of Marysville v. Buchanan, 3 Cal. 23.

42. The judgment of the supreme court on appeal and costs consequent thereon is final, and the district court has no authority to prevent immediate execution of the judgment of this court, so remitted. Id.

On Appeal.—Counter Claim.

43. One of the conditions upon which an appeal is allowed from a justice's court, is the payment of the costs of the action, and where this is not done the justice need not certify the appeal. McDermott v. Douglass, 5 Cal. 89; Bray v. Redman, 6 Cal. 287.

44. In an action for a dissolution of a copartnership, on appeal the appellate court modified the decree, and under the circumstances of the case the costs of the appeal were equally divided between the plaintiff and the defendant. Crosby v. McDermitt, 7 Cal. 148.

45. Where a judgment of the court was incorrect in part, the appellate court ordered the court below to modify its judgment accordingly, and the appellants recovered the costs of their appeal. Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 512.

46. If any one or more of the parties desire a modification of the judgment as to costs, the proper application should have been made within the ten days allowed for filing a petition for a rehearing. Gray v. Gray, 11 Cal. 341.

47. Where a case is remanded for further proceedings and costs awarded in this court, in general terms, the costs on appeal only are included, leaving the costs of the former trial to abide the event of the suit. Ib.

48. The costs upon the appeal are properly the costs of the supreme court, and the costs of making up the appeal in the court below, including the costs of making out the transcript. Ib.

49. If no motion be made in the court below to correct a clerical error disclosed by the pleadings, the error will be corrected in the supreme court at appellant's cost. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 491.

50. Where a judgment is against two, one only of whom appeals, and the appeal is dismissed with twenty per cent. damages, the damages with the costs do not become part of the original judgment, and the redemptioner is not bound to pay them when he redeems from a sale under the judgment. The clerk below can issue execution for these damages and costs. McMillan v. Vischer, 14 Cal. 241.

51. Where costs, on appeal to the supreme court, are not entered on the judgment docket in the court below, they do not become a lien until the levy of an execution. Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 420.

52. Where in ejectment the facts found by the court authorized a judgment for possession but not for damages, the judgment, being for possession and damages, was affirmed in the supreme court, upon respondent's remitting the damages and paying the cost of appeal. Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 433.

COUNTER CLAIM.

1. A counter claim should be as distinctly stated as the plaintiff's demand. When promissory notes are set up as a counter claim they should be fully set up, so that the judgment would be a bar to a future recovery upon the same notes. Bernard v. Mullott, 1 Cal. 368.

2. The captain of a vessel drew on the owner for six hundred dollars to defray the expenses of the first mate, who was ill. In an action against the owner by the captain for wages, the owner endeavored to set off the draft: held, that this could not be done without producing the draft or showing payment of it. Waterman v. Vanderbilt, 3 Cal. 382.

3. When parties are sued as factors, it is not necessary for them to set forth in their answer their claim for disbursements, commissions, etc., by way of set off. Lubert v. Chauviteau, 3 Cal. 463.

Counter Claim.

4. A joint claim by two persons cannot be pleaded as a counter claim by one defendant, but he may amend, and allege that the whole interest therein had been transferred to him. Stearns v. Martin, 4 Cal. 229.

5. In case of a sale and delivery of a special cargo with warranty, and a breach of the warranty, the plaintiffs might recover on the contract, and the defendants would be obliged to sue on the warranty, or in the same action, to recover the damages under proper averments in the pleadings. Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 357.

6. Plaintiffs filed a bill to foreclose a mortgage executed by defendants, who admit the demand, but ask that a certain sum be retained in the hands of the court to answer a judgment against defendants, to the satisfaction of which they claim that the plaintiff is proportionately liable as a former partner of defendants, although he was not served with process in the case: held, that it was error to retain such sum in the hands of the court. Bell v. Walsh, 7 Cal. 87.

7. The doctrine of set-off is said to have been borrowed from the doctrine of compensation in the civil law, and resembles it in many respects. Naglee v. Palmer, 7 Cal. 546.

8. The mere existence of cross demands will not justify a set-off in a court of chancery; there must be some peculiar circumstance based upon equitable grounds to warrant the court in interfering. Ib. 547.

9. Every man of good business sense would much prefer setting off his claim against that of another, rather than first pay the money out of his own pocket and then risk getting it again from the pocket of his adversary. Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 405.

10. A debtor has a right to purchase cross demands against a partnership, and to set them up as a defense to the debt due by him to the partnership. Naglee v. Minturn, 8 Cal. 544.

11. Under a plea of general issue, evidence of a counter claim is not admissible but should be especially pleaded. Hicks v. Green, 9 Cal. 75.

12. A court of equity, upon bill filed, will compel an equitable set-off, when the parties have mutual demands against each other which are so situated that it is impossible for the party claiming a set-off to obtain satisfaction of his claim by an ordinary suit at law or in equity. Russell v. Conway, 11 Cal. 101.

13. Demands being joint and several are not, strictly speaking, due in the same right; yet if the legal and equitable liabilities or claims of many become vested in or may be urged against one, they may be set off against separate demands, and vice versa. Ib. 102.

14. Where judgment obtained in different courts are to be set off, the moving party must go into the court in which the judgment against himself was recovered. Ib. 103.

15. Plaintiff has a right to take a nonsuit at any time before the jury retires, there being no counter claim. Hancock Ditch Co. v. Bradford, 13 Cal. 637.

16. Where two persons sue as partners in possession for a trespass on firm property, the judgment in their favor is from assets, and the defendant in such case cannot afterward, in equity, enjoin the collection of this judgment, and set off against it a claim against one of the partners, on the ground that in fact this partner was the sole owner of the property and alone entitled to the damages. The judgment is conclusive as to the joint ownership. Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 227.

17. Equity will not set off the claim of an individual creditor of one joint owner of a judgment against the judgment; and if the judgment be partnership assets, the individual creditor has no claim to any part of it until adjustment of the firm accounts. Ib. 230.

18. In an action of damages laid at two hundred dollars, defendants plead a general denial and offset of one hundred and twenty-five dollars: held, that the supreme court has no jurisdiction, the amount in dispute being less than two hundred dollars, and that the fact that an offset was plead did not alter the case. Simmons v. Brainard, 14 Cal. 278.

19. Plaintiff has judgment against defendant for six hundred dollars. Defendant has judgment in the same court, but in a different action, against plaintiff for one hundred and ten dollars costs. Plaintiff moves to set off defendant's judgment, and apply the same as a credit upon plaintiff's judgment. Motion denied, and plaintiff appeals from the order denying the motion: held, that the supreme court has no jurisdiction—the judgment sought to be set off being for less than two hundred dollars. Crandall v. Blen, 15 Cal. 408.

20. In an action for the price of goods sold and delivered, there being a warranty as to the quality of the goods, the breach of the warranty may be relied on in defense, by way of recoupment, to mitigate the amount recovered; but it is not available as a complete defense to the action. Earl v. Bull, 15 Cal. 425.

COUNTY.

- I. In general.
- II. Revenue.
- III. Indebtedness.
- IV. Actions by or against a County.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Where the southern line of a creek was the dividing line between the city of Oakland and the remainder of Contra Costa county, both the city and county have jurisdiction to build a bridge over the creek. Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 5 Cal. 428.

2. As a city may by legislative enactment spring from the body of a county, there is no reason in law why it may not be resolved back into its original elements, or why the power which called this political being into existence may not again destroy. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 103; People v. Mullins, 10 Cal. 21; People v. Beatty, 14 Cal. 572.

3. The legislature can delegate the power to the voters of a county to select a county seat therein. Upham v. Supervisors of Sutter County, 8 Cal. 382.

4. There is no difference between a municipal corporation and a county in the political and geographical divisions of the State. They are both the subjects of its political dominion. Pattison v. Supervisors of Yuba County, 13 Cal. 184.

5. The right to try particular cases in particular counties is a mere privilege, which may be waived. It is not a matter of abatement in the writ. The privilege must be claimed by motion to change the venue, at the proper time and place. Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 324; overruling Vallejo v. Randall, 3 Cal. 462.

6. Where a suit for real estate is brought in the wrong county, a motion to change the venue, and not demurrer, is the proper remedy; and in such case, there is no discretion in the court, the change being matter of right. Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 324.

II. REVENUE.

7. A board of supervisors has no power to set apart a portion of the revenue of the county as a fund for current expenses. Laforge v. Magee, 6 Cal. 285.

8. While the legislature has power to direct in what manner county revenues shall be disposed of, still they cannot divest a right of a party which is complete, vested and determined. Ib. 651.

9. The levy upon county revenues in the hands of the treasurer is illegal and void. These revenues are authorized by law, and appropriated to distinct purposes, and are not the subject of seizure upon execution. Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 7 Cal. 58.

10. Where the sheriff, as ex officio tax collector, received taxes, and afterwards, on being sued therefor, denied the right of the county to recover the same from him because the same had been illegally levied by the court of sessions: held, that although the court of sessions had no power to levy taxes, yet the defendant, being the agent or trustee of the county, was estopped from denying the right of the county to recover. Placer County v. Astin, 8 Cal. 305.

III. INDEBTEDNESS.

11. The appointment by the county judges of two counties of commissioners to ascertain and settle the proportionate amount of indebtedness to be assumed by each, under a law authorizing such an appointment on the division of said counties, is the proper exercise of functions incident to their judicial position. Tuol-

Indebtedness.—Actions by or against a County.

umne County v. Stanislaus County, 6 Cal. 442.

12. Where the right of a holder of county scrip to the payment thereof had become fixed by presentation, there being money for such payment then in the treasury, a subsequent act of the legislature cannot intervene to divest rights already acquired. Laforge v. Magee, 6 Cal. 650.

13. A county may assign and transfer a warrant drawn in its favor by another county on its treasurer, so as to invest the holder with the right to demand payment thereon. There is no restriction on the power of a county to exchange its credits for its debts, or for money, if it so desires, and can find any one to contract with it on these terms. Beals v. Evans, 10 Cal. 460.

14. County warrants acquire no greater validity in the hands of third parties than they originally possessed in the hands of the first holder, no matter for what consideration they may have been transferred, or in what faith they may have been taken. If illegal when issued, they are illegal for all time. People v. El Dorado County, 11 Cal. 175.

15. The eighth article of the constitution, prohibiting the State from creating debts over $300,000, or loaning its credit, only applies to the State as a corporation, as a political sovereign, represented by her law-making power; and does not prevent the State authorizing counties or municipal corporations to create debts, when the debt of the State itself is up to the constitutional limit. Pattison v. Supervisors of Yuba County, 13 Cal. 183.

16. The legislature may authorize a county to pay claims invalid in law, but equitable and just in themselves. People v. Burr, 13 Cal. 351.

17. Where a county is already in possession of a set of weights and measures according to law, it cannot be held liable for a new set purchased by the deputy sealer of weights and measures. Levy v. Supervisors Yuba County, 14 Cal. 636.

18. A tax collector has power to contract for publishing the delinquent list of tax payers, so as to bind the county for payment of the price. He is the agent of the county in this respect, and for any reasonable exercise of that agency the county is responsible. Randall v. Yuba County, 14 Cal. 222.

19. And where he did so contract with plaintiffs, who publish the list and sue the county for the price, the fact that the tax collector had assented to a contract previously made—or attempted to be made—by the supervisors with another party for publishing the list, is not enough to affect plaintiffs, if they had no notice of it; and evidence of such assent was properly ruled out. Ib.

20. An objection that an account presented to the supervisors of a county was not “authenticated” as required by the statute, cannot be taken in the supreme court for the first time. Ib.

21. In a suit by a physician against a county on a contract for his services for one year as examining physician of the hospital, the objection that he is not a graduate of a legally constituted medical institute, if good at all, cannot be taken by demurrer, unless the demurrer distinctly present the objection. McDaniel v. Yuba County, 14 Cal. 445.

IV. ACTIONS BY OR AGAINST A COUNTY.

22. A county government is a portion of the State government, and as there is no remedy against the State there can be none against the county.* Hunsacker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 290.

23. A county is not a person in any sense; it is not a corporation. It cannot sue or be sued except where specially permitted by statute, and such permission can be withdrawn or denied at any time the legislature may think proper. Ib.

24. Counties are quasi corporations, and can sue and be sued. The right to sue a county is not limited by the act of May 11th, 1854, to cases of tort, malfeasance, &c., but is given to every case of account after presentation to and rejection by the board of supervisors. Price v. Sacramento County, 6 Cal. 255; Tuolumne County v. Stanislaus County, 6 Cal. 442; Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 6 Cal. 677; 8 Cal. 57; Placer County v. Astin, 8 Cal. 305.

25. The act providing the manner of commencing and maintaining suits by or against counties, passed May 11th, 1854,

* The act of May 11th, 1854, permits counties to sue and to be sued.

Actions by or against a County.—Jurisdiction.

is retrospective. Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 6 Cal. 677.

26. The statute providing that no person shall sue a county for any demand, unless the claim has first been presented to the board of supervisors, and been by them rejected, applies as well to actions arising out of tort as upon contract. McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 124.

27. The private property of an inhabitant of a county is not liable to seizure and sale on execution for the satisfaction of a judgment recovered against a county. Emeric v. Gilman, 10 Cal. 408.

28. No execution can issue upon a judgment rendered against a county. When a judgment is rendered against a county it is the duty of the supervisors to apply such funds in the treasury of the county as are not otherwise appropriated to its payment. Ib. 410.

29. Where the compensation for land taken by a county for public use, as for a road, does not precede or accompany the taking, the entire action of the county authorities is void. Johnson v. Alameda County, 14 Cal. 107.

30. A suit in such case against the county for the compensation does not lie. Ib.

31. The people of a county are not a corporation, nor can they sue or be sued. Smith v. Myers, 15 Cal. 34.

32. A county is a corporation, and is the proper party plaintiff to object to a contract made by the board of supervisors for building a jail. Ib.

COUNTY COURT.

I. Jurisdiction.

II. Appeals.

1. From Justices' Courts.
2. To the Supreme Court.

I. JURISDICTION.

1. The district courts have constitutional jurisdiction in cases of nuisance. The grant of such to the county court by statute cannot take away the constitutional jurisdiction of the district court. Fitzgerald v. Urton, 4 Cal. 238.

2. An act conferring jurisdiction on the county courts in actions for which courts of general jurisdiction have always supplied a remedy as "special cases," is unconstitutional and void. Parsons v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 5 Cal. 44.

3. Causes may be transferred from one county court to another according to statute. Reyes v. Sanford, 5 Cal. 117.

4. A county court has no jurisdiction to enforce a mechanic's lien where the amount in controversy exceeds two hundred dollars. Brock v. Bruce, 5 Cal. 280.

5. The power of the county court to treble damages by way of penalty in actions of forcible entry results, by necessary implication, from its power to try de novo. O'Callaghan v. Booth, 6 Cal. 66.

6. The ninth section of article six of the constitution cannot be construed to confer exclusive original jurisdiction in all special cases upon the county courts. Ib. 67.

7. The legislature, in conferring jurisdiction in insolvency cases on both the district and the county courts, acted in the exercise of a legitimate power, and these courts have concurrent jurisdiction. Harper v. Freelon, 6 Cal. 76.

8. The act of March 27th, 1850, conferring upon the county court the power of incorporating towns, is unconstitutional. People v. Town of Nevada, 6 Cal. 144.

9. Where parties stipulate to arbitrate, and that the award be entered as a judgment of the county court: held, that it was void in toto, if it exceeded two hundred dollars, as the court had no jurisdiction. Williams v. Walton, 9 Cal. 145.

10. The act giving jurisdiction over the subject of contested elections to the county court is constitutional, and district judges are embraced within it. Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 150.

11. County courts, under the statute, have jurisdiction in proceeding by mandamus, and the statute is constitutional. People v. Day, 15 Cal. 92.

12. Aside from previous decisions of this court, the true construction of our constitution is that the legislature has power to confer on county courts jurisdiction in such specially enumerated and defined cases as in its discretion should be confided to those tribunals. Ib.

Appeal.

13. Where a special term of the county court was held on the first day of May, upon notice to that effect given on the twenty-fourth of April preceding, the proceedings of the court were irregular, if not void; the statute (Wood's Dig. 381) requiring a notice of not less than ten nor more than twenty days. People v. Riley, 16 Cal. 187.

II. APPEALS.

1. From Justices' Courts.

14. County courts try cases anew on appeal by reason of their appellate jurisdiction, and not their original jurisdiction. Townsend v. Brooks, 5 Cal. 53.

15. The county court on appeal should proceed to try the case on its merits anew, and not dismiss the same if defendant had no notice of trial in the justice's court. Coyle v. Baldwin, 5 Cal. 75.

16. An objection that the county court had no jurisdiction because there was no appeal bond given should be raised in the county court and not in the supreme court for the first time. Howard v. Harmon, 5 Cal. 78.

17. One of the conditions upon which an appeal is allowed from a justice's court is the payment of the costs of the action. McDermott v. Douglass, 5 Cal. 89; Bray v. Redman, 6 Cal. 287.

18. A notice of appeal to a county court, stating that defendant appealed from the whole judgment, is a sufficient notice within the statute. Price v. Van Caneghan, 5 Cal. 124.

19. The payment or tender of fees to a justice does not strictly constitute a condition of appeal, but a condition precedent to sending up the papers; but this condition may be waived by the justice. Bray v. Redman, 6 Cal. 287; People v. Harris, 9 Cal. 573.

20. On appeal from a justice's court to a county court on questions of law alone, if a new trial be ordered, it should take place in the county court. People v. Freelon, 8 Cal. 518.

21. When a new trial is ordered in a county court on an appeal from a justice's court, the county court should try the cause, as it has all the judicial machinery for such trial, and there can be no good reason for sending the case back to the justice. Ib. 519.

22. Where a party appealed from a justice's court to a county court, and the justice neglected to send up with the record the notice of appeal: held, that it was error to refuse to allow appellant the opportunity of moving to compel the justice to send it up, by peremptorily dismissing the appeal. Sherman v. Rolberg, 9 Cal. 18.

23. The county court has the sole appellate jurisdiction in all cases, civil and criminal, arising in justices' courts, subject to such restrictions as the legislature may impose, by making the decisions of the justice final in such cases as may be determined by law. People v. Fowler, 9 Cal. 88.

24. An appeal does not lie to the county court from a justice's court upon the facts of the case, if there has been a default in the court below. People v. County Court of El Dorado County, 10 Cal. 20; Funkenstein v. Elgutter, 11 Cal. 328.

25. A refusal by the county court on appeal from a justice to permit an amendment of the complaint is matter of discretion, and there being no affidavit of materiality, nor any showing of the importance of the amendment, the supreme court will not interfere. Canfield v. Bates, 13 Cal. 608.

26. On appeal from a justice's court in forcible entry and detainer, the execution of the appeal bond within ten days is not a condition to the jurisdiction of the county court. Rabe v. Hamilton, 15 Cal. 32.

27. In forcible entry and detainer tried in the county court, on appeal from a justice's court, plaintiff having obtained a verdict for one hundred and fifty dollars damages, moved that they be trebled. Motion denied and judgment entered for one hundred and fifty dollars with restitution of the premises. Plaintiff applies to the supreme court for mandamus to compel the court below to render judgment for treble damages: held, that the application must be denied, as plaintiff has an adequate remedy by appeal; pending which, plaintiff can enforce so much of the judgment as awards restitution. The judgment can be corrected in this court, if proper, by trebling the damages. Early v. Mannix, 15 Cal. 150.

Appeal from the County Court to the Supreme Court.—County Judge.

28. On appeal from a justice's to a county court—the record not showing that notice of appeal had been served on the adverse party—appellant may prove by his affidavit that such notice was in fact served. Mendioca v. Orr, 16 Cal. 368.

2. To the Supreme Court.

29. The statute not having conferred upon the supreme court an appellate jurisdiction over judgments of the county courts, that constitutional power cannot be exercised until the mode is prescribed by statute.* Warner v. Hall, 1 Cal. 91; White v. Lighthall, 1 Cal. 347; Adams v. Town, 3 Cal. 248.

30. No appeal was allowed by law from a county court to the supreme court prior to the first day of July, 1854. Middleton v. Gould, 5 Cal. 191.

31. A county court can grant a new trial, as the appellate power of the supreme court over the county court could not be properly and efficiently executed, unless the power to grant a new trial existed in the county court. Dickinson v. Van Horn, 9 Cal. 211.

32. The supreme court has jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from the judgment of a county court on questions of fraud made on the petition of an insolvent for a discharge from his debts. Fisk v. His Creditors, 12 Cal. 281.

COUNTY JUDGE.

1. A county judge has no right to declare a convention of justices assembled to elect associate justices of the court of sessions adjourned. People v. Campbell, 2 Cal. 137.

2. The county judge and two associates compose the court of sessions, and the presence of all three is necessary to the transaction of any business. People v.

Ah Chung, 5 Cal. 105; People v. Barbour, 9 Cal. 234.

3. The legislature cannot confer upon a county judge the power of designating the place and manner of holding an election, as it is a ministerial and not a judicial act, and an election thus held will be void. Dickey v. Hurlbut, 5 Cal. 344.

4. An election which was ordered by the board of supervisors to fill a vacancy in the office of county judge, occasioned by the resignation of the incumbent without proclamation of the governor, is invalid, and the office being vacant can be properly filled by appointment of the governor. People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 28; People v. Martin, 12 Cal. 411.

5. The grant of authority to the county judge to award injunctions in cases brought in the district court is a mere power to issue mesne process auxiliary to the proper jurisdiction of the district court and is not trenching upon it. The county judge does not try or decide the case, nor does any court of which he is judge take jurisdiction of it; he only issues a mesne process. Thompson v. Williams, 6 Cal. 89; Crandall v. Woods, 6 Cal. 451.

6. A county judge has authority to award injunctions in cases brought in the district court; it is a mere power to issue mesne process auxiliary to the proper jurisdiction of the district court, and is not trenching upon it. Thompson v. Williams, 6 Cal. 89; Crandall v. Woods, 6 Cal. 451.

7. The appointment by the county judges of two counties of commissioners to ascertain and settle the proportionate amount of indebtedness to be assumed by each, under a law authorizing such an appointment on the division of said counties, is the proper exercise of functions incident to their judicial position. Tuolumne County v. Stanislaus County, 6 Cal. 442.

8. A district court may issue a certiorari to a county judge to review his excess of jurisdiction in granting a ferry license. Chard v. Harrison, 8 Cal. 116.

9. The exercise of power to grant a ferry license is not judicial, and cannot exist in a county judge. His excess of authority can be properly reviewed on certiorari. Ib.

10. It is not competent for the legislature to change the period of the tenure of the office of judge of county courts, any more than to change those of supreme and district judges. People v. Templeton, 12 Cal. 401; People v. Rosborough, 14 Cal. 187.

*This jurisdiction is conferred by the statute of May 15th, 1854.

11. The office of county judge is not a county office within the meaning of the "act to regulate elections," passed March 23d, 1850, consequently the supervisors cannot order a special election to fill a vacancy in that office. People v. Martin, 12 Cal. 411.

12. The appointee of the governor to the office of county judge will hold over a person elected to the same office at a special election ordered by the board of supervisors of the county. Ib.

13. Under the statute the county judge may grant an injunction in cases in the district court, but he cannot appoint a receiver, at least, not as a thing distinct from the injunction. Ruthrauff v. Kresz, 13 Cal. 639.

14. By the constitution county judges, when elected, hold their offices for the full period of four years. People v. Templeton, 12 Cal. 401; People v. Rosborough, 14 Cal. 187.

15. Where the convention of justices of the peace for electing two associate justices of the court of sessions was presided over by the then acting county judge, his official acts at such convention were legal and valid—although it was afterwards determined that another person had been legally elected to that office; and a court of sessions, composed of said other person as county judge, and of the two associates elected by such convention, was legally organized. People v. Wyman, 15 Cal. 74.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

1. An act organizing a new county and fixing a special day for the first election of county officers, and providing that they shall hold office for two years and until their successors are elected and qualified, must be construed in connection with the general law requiring such officers to be elected on the same day throughout the State. People v. Church, 6 Cal. 78.

2. The officers first elected hold till the first general election for county officers throughout the State, after the expiration of the term of two years fixed by the special act, and an election held before that time is void. Ib.

3. Where an act organizing a county provides for the term of office of the officers first elected, but makes no provisions as to their successors, the duration of the term of the latter is governed by the general law. People v. Colton, 6 Cal. 85.

4. In counties where the offices of county clerk and county recorder are united, the officer performs the functions of auditor or as recorder and not as clerk, and when these offices are separated the recorder becomes auditor. People v. Darrach, 9 Cal. 325.

5. It is in the power of the legislature, in organizing or after organizing a new county, to prescribe the time of elections for county officers, and also the period of the commencement of their terms. People v. Templeton, 12 Cal. 401.

COURTS.

1. Every court has, while engaged in the performance of its lawful functions, as an incident to its judicial character, the authority to preserve order, decency and silence in its presence, and in such case may apprehend and punish an offender without further examination or proof. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 153.

2. Where an assessment is laid upon land in the city of San Francisco, it is not within the province of a court to interfere and order a sale of the land by a decree rendered in an injunction suit, instituted by the owner of the land for the purpose of preventing a sale under an ordinance of the city. Weber v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 456.

3. The agreement of parties cannot divest courts of their proper jurisdiction. Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 78.

4. A court may go behind the record evidence of a statute and inquire whether it was passed or approved in accordance with the constitution. Fowler v. Pierce, 2 Cal. 168.

Courts.

5. The time and place of holding courts should not be left in doubt. Ross v. Austill, 2 Cal. 191.

6. If a court, instead of having a verdict corrected by the jury, attempt to correct it by the judgment and go beyond the verdict, it is error. Ib.

7. Great latitude is given to the courts by our statute in amending and altering pleadings. Pollock v. Hunt, 2 Cal. 194; Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 283; Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 412.

8. A court sitting as a jury must find separately the facts and conclusions of law. A verdict insufficient in this particular will be reversed. Brown v. Graves, 3 Cal. 111; Russel v. Armador, 2 Cal. 305.

9. A court has no right to charge the jury in regard to conclusions of fact. Treadwell v. Wells, 4 Cal. 263.

10. Courts are bound to take notice of the political and social condition of the country which they judicially rule. Irwin v. Philips, 5 Cal. 146; Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 325; Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 494.

11. The legislature cannot confer on one court the functions and powers which the constitution has conferred on another. Zander v. Coe, 5 Cal. 234.

12. Legislative functions cannot be exercised by the judiciary; nor can the legislature delegate such power to a court which is inhibited from the performance of any other than judicial acts. People v. Town of Nevada, 6 Cal. 144.

13. In all inferior courts, of the like kind, the law requires that they must strictly follow the rules which create and govern them; and that which in a court of general jurisdiction would be a mere irregularity, absolutely deprives the former of all jurisdiction. Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 64; Haynes v. Meeks, 10 Cal. 118.

14. Every court empowered to punish for contempt, is not the sole and final judge in all cases of alleged contempt. Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 178.

15. Courts are not bound to take official notice of the rules adopted for the regulation of the various departments of the federal government, or those established by the board of land commissioners or surveyor general of the United States for California. Hensley v. Tarpey, 7 Cal. 289.

16. Courts have no power to interfere with the judgments and decrees of other courts of concurrent jurisdiction. Anthony v. Dunlap, 8 Cal. 27; Rickett v. Johnson, 8 Cal. 35; Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. 71; Chipman v. Hibbard, 8 Cal. 271; Phelan v. Smith, 8 Cal. 521; Gorham v. Toomey, 9 Cal. 77; Uhlfelder v. Levy, 9 Cal. 614.

17. A state court cannot enjoin the proceedings of a federal court. Phelan v. Smith, 8 Cal. 521.

18. A court is bound to take judicial notice of the general laws in force in this State, at the cession of California, which remained unrepealed, until the common law was adopted in April, 1850. Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 494.

19. An exception to the general rule that one court cannot enjoin the proceedings of another court of coördinate jurisdiction, arises when the court in which the action or proceeding should be had is unable, by reason of its jurisdiction, to afford the relief sought; as when several fraudulent judgments are confessed in several courts, a creditor may bring one action in any one of these courts to enjoin them all. Uhlfelder v. Levy, 9 Cal. 614.

20. Courts can ascertain and fix the boundaries which are designated, but cannot give boundaries to a specific quantity which has none and lies in a larger tract. Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal. 418; Moore v. Wilkinson, 13 Cal. 486.

21. Courts have a large discretion over the conduct of proceedings before them, and may limit counsel to reasonable time. But in capital cases this should be done, if at all, only in very extraordinary and peculiar instances. People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 584.

22. Courts grant divorces in cases of cruelty, not to punish an offense already committed, but to relieve the complaining party of apprehended danger; and the divorce may follow even in the absence of any actual violence. Morris v. Morris, 14 Cal. 79.

23. The court in which a void judgment is rendered, can, on motion, at any time, arrest all process issued by its clerk thereon. Chipman v. Bowman, 14 Cal. 158.

24. Courts take judicial notice of the official character of justices of the peace in their own States, and an affidavit in which the official character of the justice before whom it is taken, does not appear, is good. Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 57.

25. Courts should, of their own motion, dismiss a case based upon a consideration which contravenes public policy, whether the parties to the suit take the objection or not. Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 405.

26. San Francisco having been constituted, by a public, political act of the former government, a pueblo, courts must take judicial notice of its existence, powers and rights, and among these last, its general boundary and jurisdiction. Greenleaf (p. 8, sec. 6) states the rule thus: "Courts also take notice of the territorial extent of the jurisdiction and sovereignty, exercised de facto by their own government; and of the local divisions of the country, as into states, provinces, cities, towns, local parishes, or the like, so far as political government is concerned or affected; and of the relative positions of such local divisions, but not of their precise boundaries, farther than they may be described in public statutes." Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 231.

27. Courts are bound to take notice of matters of public history affecting the whole people. So of the laws and general acts of a public character, of judicial and political officers. Of such would be those acts creating and regulating pueblos; and this rule applies as well to the acts and officers of the former government as to those of its successor. Ib.

COVENANT.

1. In an action for the purchase money of land conveyed by deed, without covenant, want of title in the vendor is no defense, unless the vendee has been evicted. Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 44.

2. The law will not imply covenants of seizen in a conveyance of land by deed. Ib.

3. The lien which springs out of a title bond predicated upon the covenants for the purchase money, attaches upon the land, unless expressly reserved; and if such reservation be made, it lies upon the purchaser to show it. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 287.

4. Where contracts are entire and the covenants dependent, and the plaintiff had declared his inability to keep it, and afterwards actually abandoned it: held, that these facts formed a defense to his action for a claim under the contract. Green v. Wells, 2 Cal. 585.

5. In a suit for the recovery of the purchase money of land, founded on a contract in which the plaintiff covenanted to deliver a warranty deed for the land, the defendant, in his answer, denied that the plaintiff was the lawful owner, or that he had any title to the land: held, that to have enabled him to rescind the contract, the defendant was bound to aver and to show a paramount title in another, and that failing in this, his defense to the action was defective. Thayer v. White, 3 Cal. 229.

6. A covenant not to sue, made to a portion only of joint debtors, does not release any of them. Matthey v. Galley, 4 Cal. 64.

7. An assignment of a contract as a security for a debt, and also in consideration of a covenant not to sue upon a debt, entitles the assignee to sue on the contract in his own name. Warner v. Wilson, 4 Cal. 313.

8. When a lease contains a covenant against assignment, and the restriction is once removed, it operates as a removal of the restriction forever. Chipman v. Aughenbaugh, 5 Cal. 51.

9. A covenant "to let the lessor have what land he and his brothers might want for cultivation," cannot be enforced for uncertainty. Ib.

10. A covenant for a lease to be renewed indefinitely, at the option of the lessee, is in effect the creation of a perpetuity, and is against the policy of the law. Morrison v. Rossignol, 5 Cal. 65.

11. Where land is sold with covenant of warrantee, accompanied with a delivery of possession, for which the purchaser gives a note for the purchase money, the promise to pay and the warrantee are independent covenants, and the enforcement of the one is not dependent upon the performance of the other. Norton v. Jackson, 5 Cal. 264.

12. A covenant not to sue for five years is no bar to the action; but the defendant must rely upon the covenant for his remedy. Howland v. Marvin, 5 Cal. 501.

Creditor's Bill.—Crimes and Criminal Law.

13. If a party takes a conveyance without covenants, he is without remedy in case of failure of title. If he takes a conveyance with covenants, his remedy upon failure of title is confined to them. Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 228.

14. A covenant in a lease to the lessee, "his heirs and assigns," for a term of eight years, that if the lessor shall sell or dispose of the demised premises the lessee is to be entitled to the refusal of the same, is a covenant running with the land. Laffan v. Naglee, 9 Cal. 676.

15. Every covenant in the lease relating to the thing demised attaches to the land and runs with it. Ib.

16. In real estate the covenant of warranty runs with the land, and the vendor is liable directly to the person evicted, and is not a competent witness for plaintiff. Blackwell v. Atkinson, 14 Cal. 472.

CREDITOR.

See DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

CREDITOR'S BILL.

1. A bill filed by a creditor, asking relief against fraudulent transfers and concealment of his property by the debtor, is a substantial ground of equity jurisdiction. Swift v. Arents, 4 Cal. 391.

2. Every sale of property is good between the parties, and cannot be attacked for fraud, except by a creditor who has recovered judgment and taken out execution against the vendor, which has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, with the single statutory exception of an attaching creditor, and he must show affirmatively that his attachment has been properly issued under the statute before he can attack the sale. Heyneman v. Dan- nenberg, 6 Cal. 380; Thornburgh v. Hand, 7 Cal. 565.

3. To maintain a creditor's bill in chancery, in order to reach equitable assets which are alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed, it is not sufficient simply to aver that the conveyance was fraudulent, but facts and circumstances must be set forth which will reasonably sustain the theory of the bill. Kinder v. Macy, 7 Cal. 207.

I. CRIMES.

1. Assault.

1. Where a defendant was indicted for an assault with intent to commit murder, and the jury found a verdict of guilty of "an assault with intent to do bodily injury:" held, that the verdict only found the prisoner guilty of an assault, and not of a felony. People v. Vanard, 6 Cal. 562.

2. The weapon or instrument with which the assault is committed constitutes the gist of the felony as distinguishing the act from an ordinary assault, and should therefore be alleged and found. Ib. 563.

3. In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, where the prosecuting witness was asked if he did not, previous to the assault, buy a pistol to use on the defendant, to which he assented, it was competent for the State to prove by him that he bought it in self-defense, from what he was informed by a third person that the defendant had said. People v. Shea, 8 Cal. 539.

4. The drawing of a pistol on another, accompanied by a threat to use it unless the other immediately leave the spot, is an assault, although the pistol is not pointed at the person threatened. People v. McMakin, 8 Cal. 548; People v. Honshell, 10 Cal. 87.

5. Where the defendant was indicted for the crime of an "assault with a deadly weapon with the intent to inflict great bodily injury," and the jury found him "guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon:" held, that it was error to sentence the prisoner to two years confinement in the State prison. People v. Wilson, 9 Cal. 260.

See ASSAULT.

2. Assault and Battery.

6. The recorder of San Francisco has the right to punish for the crime of assault and battery as fixed by the act of April 18th, 1850. People v. Ah King, 4 Cal. 307.

7. An assault and battery is not a case of fraud, in the sense that that term is employed in the constitution, nor can it be so made by the legislature. Ex parte Prader, 6 Cal. 240.

8. A party cannot be imprisoned, under a judgment for injury to person in a civil action, for assault and battery; a judgment for damages, in such a case, is as much a debt as though recovered in an action of assumpsit. Ib.

See ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

3. Bribery.

9. Defendant, a judge of the court of sessions, was charged with receiving money as a bribe not to forfeit a recognizance; there was no allegation that there was any proceeding commenced upon the recognizance, nor was there any; and the statute against bribery confines the offense to acting "more favorable to one side than another in any suit, matter, or cause pending or brought before him." Neither charge was sufficiently set out to warrant a conviction. People v. Purley, 2 Cal. 566.

4. Burglary.

10. An indictment for burglary, charging with intent to steal certain goods, must specify the value of the goods intended to be stolen, as burglary under our statute can only be committed with intent to commit a felony. People v. Murray, 8 Cal. 520.

11. On trial for burglary, the court instructed the jury that, if they found from the evidence that defendant entered a certain warehouse in the night-time, and took therefrom sundry goods and chattels, he was guilty as charged: held, that the instruction was wrong, because that it ignores the felonious intent of the entry, and the character of it. People v. Jenkins, 16 Cal. 431.

See BURGLARY.

5. Conversion.

12. All conversions of money or property by a bailee are not "ipso facto unlawful or felonious" under our statute. The word bailee, under our statute, must be construed in a limited sense as designating bailees to keep, transport and deliver. People v. Cohen, 8 Cal. 43; People v. Winkler, 9 Cal. 236; People v. Peterson, 9 Cal. 315.

Homicide.

See CONVERSION.

6. Homicide.

13. The defendant was convicted of manslaughter upon an indictment charging the crime of murder. The verdict was, on his motion, set aside: held, that on the second trial for murder upon the same or a different indictment, the defendant can be convicted of manslaughter only, as the former verdict of manslaughter is an acquittal of the crime of murder. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 376; People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 278.

14. In a criminal case, it is wholly immaterial for what purpose a shot gun is loaded, with which the homicide was committed, if it was loaded, and a party takes the gun so loaded to protect himself against the deceased. People v. Milgate, 5 Cal. 128.

15. If a jury find that the prisoner made a felonious assault upon the deceased with an unlawful weapon, inflicting a mortal wound which produced instant death, and that there was some evidence tending to prove that such wound was given in the heat of blood, in sudden and mutual combat, but that the proof of such fact did not preponderate over the proof against it, though it raised some doubt in their minds that the matter of extenuation would not be sufficiently made out, the judgment of the court would be against the prisoner for the higher offense. Ib. 129.

16. Murder is a conclusion of law drawn from certain facts. People v. Aro, 6 Cal. 209.

17. On a trial under an indictment for murder, a verdict of "guilty" imports a conviction on every material allegation in the indictment, and is therefore a conviction for murder. People v. March, 6 Cal. 546.

18. The crime of murder is committed at the time when the fatal blow is struck. People v. Gill, 6 Cal. 638.

19. On a trial for murder, weakness of mind, fear and excitement of the defendant, produced by the violence of the deceased, will not justify the homicide. People v. Hurley, 8 Cal. 390.

20. Words of reproach, how grievous soever, are not provocation sufficient to free the party killing from the guilt of murder; nor are indecent, provoking actions or gestures expressive of contempt or reproach, without an assault upon the person. People v. Butler, 8 Cal. 441.

21. If A goes to the house of B, who has taken possession of his land and built a house thereon, for the purpose of forcibly putting him out and tearing down the house, it is an unlawful act; and if A kills B in pursuing that purpose, it is murder or manslaughter according to the facts of the case. People v. Payne, 8 Cal. 343; People v. McMahon, 8 Cal. 548; People v. Honshell, 10 Cal. 87.

22. The facts necessary to constitute murder are that a wound was inflicted with a felonious intent; that it was mortal; and that death ensued from the effects of the wound within a year and a day. People v. Stevenson, 9 Cal. 275.

23. Evidence of the dying declarations of a deceased person are admissible on a trial for murder, and it is placed upon the substantial ground of necessity. People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 36.

24. Fighting a duel with fatal result is not murder within our statutes, but a special offense under the act of 1855; and over such offenses the courts of sessions have jurisdiction. People v. Bartlett, 14 Cal. 653.

25. Indictment for murder. Plea, self-defense. Testimony conflicting as to facts occurring at the time of homicide. M., a witness for prosecution, testified that he was present, August 24th, at a difficulty between defendant and deceased, in the course of which defendant discharged a double barreled shot gun at deceased, who fell forward; that immediately thereafter witness approached deceased, and saw lying on the ground, about six feet forward of him, a pistol, which witness had previously seen in deceased's possession. Witness then detailed the circumstances immediately connected with the difficulty, in which he himself, armed with a pistol, took part with the deceased against defendant; and then stated that the pistol

he saw lying on the ground, deceased borrowed from C. some time before August 24th; that C. had given the pistol to deceased, who said he would clean it; and that he (witness) had often, since then, and before August 24th, seen the pistol in deceased's possession. Defendant's counsel then asked witness this question: "At the time C. gave the pistol to Sweeney (deceased) was anything said by S. with reference to using the pistol against the defendant?" Objected to and ruled out as irrelevant and incompetent, unless evidence was produced tending to show that the thing said had come to the knowledge of defendant: held, that the court erred; that the evidence was admissible; that the declaration of deceased made at the time of procuring the weapon was part of the res gestæ, and illustrative of the transaction; that it showed the purpose for which the weapon was procured; and that this purpose was an item of proof upon the question, which of the two parties first assaulted—this being the point to which the testimony was offered. People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 480.

26. The mere fact that one man threatens to kill another does not justify the latter in killing the former. The threats must be shown to have been communicated to the accused, before they are admissible as evidence for him for any purpose—and then the effect and bearing of the testimony should be explained by the judge to the jury, before the case is finally submitted to them. Ib.

27. But where a recounter occurs between two persons, one of whom is killed, and the witnesses as to the difficulty differ, or the circumstances are equivocal as to which one of the two commenced the affray, then the fact that one of the parties had previously procured a weapon for the avowed purpose of using it against the other—the weapon being found at the place of the affray—is a circumstance tending to show that the purpose was fulfilled, and hence is proper for the consideration of the jury. Ib. 481.

28. Generally, when the fact of a homicide is shown, defendant must show by a preponderance of testimony that the killing was justifiable; but this rule is subject to the qualification that where the testimony of the prosecution leaves a doubt as to the character of the homicide —as whether justifiable or not—then the benefit of the doubt is given to the prisoner. Ib.

29. On an indictment for murder, the verdict must state whether it be murder in the first or second degree. If, on the return of the verdict, it does not specify the degree, the court should order the jury to retire, and return a specific finding of the degree. People v. Marquis, 14 Cal. 38.

30. Defendant killed deceased while he was in the act of injuring a mining claim. On the trial, defendant offered to show that he was the owner, and in the lawful possession of said claim at the time of the killing. The court refused testimony to this point: held, that defendant had a right to prove his ownership of the claim, for the purpose of showing his mental condition, the motives which prompted his action, and determining the character of the offense; that the ownership was part of the res gestæ, and should have been admitted, subject to instruction of the court as to its legal effect, though when admitted, it may not have amounted to a justification. People v. Costello, 15 Cal. 353.

See MANSLAUGHTER, MURDER.

7. Kidnapping.

31. The fifty-fourth section of the act of April 16th, 1850, concerning crimes and punishments, is not repealed by the act of April 19th, 1856, (Statutes 1856, 131) amendatory of, and supplementary to the act of 1850. Section two of the act of 1856 does not conflict with section fifty-four of the act of 1850. These sections refer to a different class of offenses. Under the latter, the abduction must be accompanied with a removal into another county, State or territory, or a design to remove the party beyond the limits of the State. Under the former, the abduction need not be accompanied with any such removal or design—the intent to detain and conceal being the gist of the offense. People v. Chu Quong, 15 Cal. 333.

Larceny.—Perjury.

8. Larceny.

32. A party cannot be convicted of larceny for taking his own property. People v. McKinley, 9 Cal. 250.

33. Defendant was indicted for stealing a steer. The court charged the jury, in effect, that though defendant killed the steer, believing it to be his own, yet when he appropriated it to his own use and benefit, it was evidence of a felonious intent, and the jury will so find: held, that charge was erroneous, because it assumes as a fact that defendant did appropriate the steer, which was for the jury, and thus makes the mere fact of appropriation conclusive proof of guilt. People v. Carabin, 14 Cal. 440.

34. To convict a defendant of larceny upon the testimony of an accomplice, together with corroborating evidence, the corroborating evidence must connect the defendant with the offense charged. It is not sufficient that it corroborate the accomplice as to the fact that a larceny was committed. People v. Eckert, 16 Cal. 112.

35. McB., the accomplice, swore to the larceny by the defendant. The court instructed the jury, "that though the witness McB. was impeached, if his testimony was corroborated by the testimony of witnesses unimpeached, they were bound to believe his testimony:" held, that the instruction was wrong, as taking from the jury their right to judge of the credibility of all the statements of the witness. Ib.

36. Defendant owed B., and to secure the debt, made a bill of sale to him of a wagon and team, and delivered possession. Bill of sale absolute on its face; but there was an agreement between defendant and B., that B. should keep the property until the profits thereof had paid him about $1,000, or until he had been otherwise paid, when the property was to be delivered back to defendant. After this, L., a teamster of B., was directed by him to drive a horse and mule of the team in a wagon to a mill in the neighborhood. L. drove the team to Sacramento, instead of the mill. Creditors of defendant there levy on the wagon and animals. Defendant is indicted for larceny; and, after proof on the trial seeking to connect him with driving the team to Sacramento, and its seizure there, he offered to go into a statement of accounts between himself and B., to show that the debt to B. had been paid before L. took the property. Ruled out, on the ground that this matter "must be settled in another court:" held, that the court erred; that the facts sought to be introduced were competent, as tending to explain the transaction, and show the intent with which defendant took the property, or as showing whose property it was, or the general or particular title to it; that all the facts connected with the title and the taking should go to the jury, who can try the question whether the indebtedness had been paid. People v. Stone, 16 Cal. 371.

37. Larceny is compounded of the taking and carrying away, and the felonious intent. Whatever has a legal tendency to show the intent is proper evidence. Ib.

38. A man may steal his own property, if by taking it his intent be to charge a bailee with the property, and thus impose a loss upon him. Ib.

See LARCENY, STOLEN GOODS.

9. Perjury.

39. An indictment for perjury, charging that the accused in a certain proceeding, describing it, "did willfully, corruptly, and falsely swear," etc., but not alleging that the perjury was committed "feloniously," is sufficient. People v. Parsons, 6 Cal. 488; People v. Oliviera, 7 Cal. 404.

40. A conviction for perjury cannot be sustained without the false oath be material to the issue, and therefore prejudicial to some one; otherwise, however willful, it cannot be perjury. People v. McDermott, 8 Cal. 290.

41. Demurrer to an indictment for perjury being sustained, the district attorney took no exception, but moved for and obtained an order submitting the case to another grand jury. Subsequently the people appealed from the order sustaining the demurrer: held, that the failure to except and taking this order was an acquiescence in the judgment on demurrer, and a waiver of any right to appeal. People v. Wooster, 16 Cal. 435.

See PERJURY.

10. Rape.

42. On a trial for rape, where the prosecutrix is the only witness, evidence that she had committed acts of lewdness with other men is admissible, as tending to disprove the allegation of force, and total absence of assent on her part. People v. Benson, 6 Cal. 222.

See RAPE.

11. Trespass.

43. The owner of property, in the possession of the same, has a right to use so much force as is necessary to prevent a forcible trespass. People v. Payne, 8 Cal. 343; People v. Honshell, 10 Cal. 87.

See TRESPASS.

II. CRIMINAL LAW.

1. *Jurisdiction of the Courts.*a. Supreme Court.

44. The supreme court has no appellate jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanor or crimes of a less degree than felony. People v. Applegate, 5 Cal. 295; People v. Shear, 7 Cal. 140; People v. Vick, 7 Cal. 166; People v. Cornell, 16 Cal. 188.

b. Court of Sessions.

45. The court of sessions has no appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases. In all cases where an appeal lies from a justice's court it must be taken to the county court. People v. Fowler, 9 Cal. 87.

c. Justices' Courts.

46. Those portions of the law which confer criminal jurisdiction upon justices' courts are in strict conformity with the constitution. People v. Fowler, 9 Cal. 87.

d. Recorders' Courts.

47. The recorder of the city of San Francisco has the right to award the punishment for the crime of assault and battery affixed by the statute of crimes and punishments of April 18th, 1850. People v. Ah King, 4 Cal. 307.

2. *Pleadings.*a. Affidavit for Arrest.

48. The preliminary evidence upon an application for a warrant of arrest may be either by the affidavit of some person cognizant of the facts, or by his examination under oath, taken by the officer to satisfy the person to whom the application is made that there is reason to believe that a crime has been committed, and the probability of suspecting the party against whom the warrant is issued. People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 11.

49. An affidavit may set forth in positive terms, as within the knowledge of deponent, the commission of the offense charged therein, and proceed upon information as to the names only of the persons who are guilty of the perpetration of them. Ib.

50. An affidavit, in pursuance of which a warrant is issued, is defective which contains allegations upon information merely; and if it states no facts within the knowledge of the affiant it can be of little weight in any legal proceeding. Ib.

See ARREST.

b. The Indictment.

51. The criminal code has abolished the subtle distinctions and nice technicalities usually observed in an indictment. People v. Thompson, 4 Cal. 240.

52. The insufficiency of an indictment must be taken advantage of by demurrer. People v. Josephs, 7 Cal. 130; People v. Apple, 7 Cal. 290.

53. The definition of a crime being given by the statute, an indictment charging the offense in the words of the statute, and fully complying with the criminal code, gives the defendant all the information necessary to enable him to answer the charge. People v. Parsons, 6 Cal. 488.

See INDICTMENT.

c. The Commitment.

54. If in pursuance of preliminary proof charging a particular offense a warrant be issued and the accused brought before a magistrate, and upon examination it be found that he has been guilty of some felonious act, though different from that charged, the examining officer should commit him for trial for that act. People v. Smith, 7 Cal. 11.

55. If an order of commitment be sufficient in substance it will be held good on habeas corpus, although it contain more than is necessary to be stated therein. The unnecessary matter will be regarded as surplusage. Ib.

56. On finding a commitment illegal, if it appear that the party is guilty of an offense, the court will not discharge him without allowing time for his arrest by proper authority. Ex parte Crandall, 2 Cal. 145.

See COMMITMENT.

d. Presentment.

57. Where the allegations in the body of the presentment do not sustain the charge, and where the facts as detailed do not lead to the inference assumed, and it is not said that the defendant acted willfully and corruptly, it cannot be sustained. People v. Purley, 2 Cal. 566.

e. Acquittal.

58. Where a defendant is convicted of a crime less than that set forth in the indictment, and obtains a new trial, that conviction can be pleaded in bar of a conviction for a greater offense at the second trial. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 376; People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 278.

See ACQUITTAL.

3. Statement on Appeal.

59. On a motion for a new trial in a criminal case, on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence, it is usual to set out in the statement on which the motion is made all the material portions of the testimony; and as a general rule, this court will not review on appeal an order refusing a new trial on that ground, unless such testimony is contained in the record. People v. York, 9 Cal. 422.

60. In criminal cases the prisoner, on motion for a new trial, may bring up any ruling of the court which denies him the benefit of a statutory privilege, as a right to a written charge to the jury. People v. Ah Tong, 12 Cal. 348.

61. In criminal cases, the statute requiring a statement or bill of exceptions to be made within ten days after trial is directory; and the defendant is not precluded of his rights by failure of the judge to settle or sign the statement within the time. People v. Woppner, 14 Cal. 437; People v. Lee, 14 Cal. 511.

See APPEAL, STATEMENT.

4. Trial.

62. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is necessary to establish a fact against a prisoner; but preponderating proof, necessary to satisfy a jury of the fact, is sufficient to establish a fact in his favor. People v. Milgate, 5 Cal. 129.

63. A temporary suspension of the trial of a criminal case, to dispose of a motion in another cause, is not an error, or even an irregularity, where the prisoner's rights do not appear to have been injuriously affected. People v. Lafuente, 6 Cal. 202.

64. Where a defendant was indicted and convicted of murder, and on appeal a new trial was ordered, on the ground of objection to a juror; whereupon, on motion of the prosecution, the indictment was set aside on account of irregularities in the summoning and empanneling the grand jury, and subsequently a new indictment was found by another grand jury, under which the prisoner was convicted: held, that the second trial and conviction did not put the prisoner "twice in jeopardy for the same offense," as it is apparent that the prisoner was not jeopardized by the first trial, which had been held to be erroneous. People v. March, 6 Cal. 546.

65. Where an act is passed between the time of the commission of the act and the death of the victim, defining the offense and providing for its punishment, and providing that upon trials for crimes committed previous to its enactment the party shall be tried by the laws in force at the time of the commission of the crime, the prisoner must be tried under the law in force when the violation of the law was committed. People v. Gill, 6 Cal. 638; 7 Cal. 357.

66. A defendant in a joint indictment has the right to demand a separate trial, or to waive this right and be tried jointly. People v. McCalla, 8 Cal. 303.

67. Prosecuting attorneys should do their duty faithfully, but no more. They should never act as employed counsel, nor take advantage of temporary public excitement against the prisoner, or of any prejudice against him arising from any cause whatever. People v. Butler, 8 Cal. 440.

68. To justify an interference with the verdict of a jury in a criminal action, there must be an absence of evidence against the prisoner, or a decided preponderance of evidence in his favor. People v. Ah Hoy, 10 Cal. 301.

69. Courts have a large discretion over the conduct of proceedings before them, and may limit counsel to reasonable time. But in capital cases this should be done, if it all, only in very extraordinary and peculiar circumstances. People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 584.

70. Where defendant is held to answer before the finding of the indictment, an objection to the mode of drawing the names of grand jurors must be taken on their being empaneled. People v. Beatty, 15 Cal. 571; People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 479.

71. The statutory provision that exception to the grand jury must be made at a particular time is constitutional. The legislature have the right to prescribe rules of practice in criminal or civil cases; and among such rules are provisions as to the time and mode of excepting to irregularities of proceeding. People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 479.

72. It is better for the court below to adhere strictly to the provisions of the statute in respect to the mode of trial in criminal cases, than risk a reversal of the judgment by a deviation from the specific modes of procedure prescribed, even when the deviation does not seem to it material. Ib.

73. It is irregular for one of the justices composing the court of sessions, on a criminal trial, to retire before the termination of the trial, and another justice, not present during the previous stages of it, to come in and participate in the proceedings. The members of the court who act as such when the case is developed, should continue to act until the close. Whether such irregularity is sufficient to reverse a conviction otherwise regular, not here decided; but the practice is dangerous and disapproved of. People v. Eckert, 16 Cal. 113.

5. Recognizance.

74. The respondents were bail in a recognizance conditioned for the appearance of M. to answer at court upon an indictment found against him on the nineteenth of April, 1852. M. appeared at the proper time, and moved to quash the indictment, which was granted. Another indictment was found at the same term of the court, upon which M. was called and made default. Suit was brought on the bail bond, and judgment rendered thereon: held, that the bail were not liable thereon, and relief was granted from the judgment. People v. Lafarge, 1 Cal. 133.

75. Where the defendants were sureties for the appearance of one H., charged with the crime of receiving two mules alleged to be stolen, and the indictment was found against H. for "receiving stolen goods:" held, that it does not follow from this general description of the indictment that it was for the same crime mentioned in the recognizance. People v. Hunter, 10 Cal. 503.

See RECOGNIZANCE.

6. *Jury.*a. Challenge.

76. A prisoner in a criminal prosecution who has not exhausted his peremptory challenges, has the right to challenge peremptorily one of the jurors after the twelve are accepted, but before they are sworn. People v. Kohle, 4 Cal. 199.

77. For the purpose of asserting the innocence or maintaining the defense of the prisoner, there is no system under which it is absolutely necessary that the right of challenge should be exercised at any precise point of time before the jurors are sworn. Ib.

78. No regular panel of jurors having been drawn or summoned, the court ordered thirty-six jurors to be summoned, which was done, and twenty-seven of them appearing, the court caused their names to be placed in a box of which twelve were drawn to constitute a trial panel: held, not to be ground for challenge to the whole panel. People v. Stuart, 4 Cal. 225.

79. A challenge for cause is warranted where the juror on his voir dire states that it would require proof to change the opinion then existing in his mind. People v. Gehr, 8 Cal. 362.

See CHALLENGE.

b. Instructions.

80. In every criminal case the instructions given and refused should be so marked and signed by the judge, or they will not be considered on questions of error. People v. Lockwood, 6 Cal. 205.

81. In a criminal trial it is error for the court to charge the jury orally without the consent of the parties. People v. Beeler, 6 Cal. 247; People v. Demint, 8 Cal. 424; People v. Ah Fong, 12 Cal. 347.

82. On a trial for murder it is not error to instruct the jury, that if the killing was the result of deliberation, no matter for how short a period, it would be murder in the first degree under our statute, where the evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding the fact that the killing was deliberate and premeditated. People v. Moore, 8 Cal. 93.

83. In criminal cases the principles of law invoked by the defendant should be stated to the jury in clear and explicit terms. People v. Ramirez, 13 Cal. 172.

84. In criminal cases it is fatal error to give oral instructions to the jury without consent of defendant, whether in the first instance or after the jury has returned into court for further instructions. People v. Woppner, 14 Cal. 437.

85. Whether an instruction giving the general rule—without the qualification—be proper or not, depends on the facts in proof, and the charge would be right or wrong according to the circumstances of the given case. People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 482.

86. It is not error in the court, in a criminal case, to charge the jury to give such weight to the defendant's confession as they deem it entitled to, "judging from the circumstances under which it was given, and the motives which would naturally actuate the party in giving it;" and that they might, in their discretion, believe a part and disbelieve another part of such confession. People v. Wyman, 15 Cal. 74.

See INSTRUCTIONS.

87. A juror is competent though he may have formed and expressed an opinion from reports, yet who thought he could sit on a jury without bias if evidence would change his opinion, and that he would be governed by the evidence adduced. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 384.

88. To exclude a juror on the ground of implied bias under the criminal code of this State, he must have formed or expressed an unqualified opinion or belief that the prisoner is guilty of the offense charged, and upon this question it is for the court to determine both the law and the fact. Ib.

89. On the trial of an indictment for grand larceny, punishable with imprisonment or death at the discretion of the jury, a juror was asked by the prosecuting attorney whether he had any conscientious scruples against the infliction of capital punishment, to which he answered that he would hang a man for murder but would not hang him for stealing: held, that the juror was incompetent. People v. Tanner, 2 Cal. 258.

Jurors.—Absence of the Prisoner.—Continuance.

90. If one or more jurors in a criminal trial separate without leave of the court, so that such juror might have been improperly influenced by others, the verdict will be set aside. People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 276.

91. The defendant in a criminal trial has the right to question a juror whether he has formed or expressed an opinion relative to the guilt or innocence of the accused without first challenging him for cause, and it is error to compel the prisoner so to do. Ib. 277.

92. In cases of grand larceny it was the intention of the legislature that the jury should assess the punishment when they thought that the defendant deserved the punishment of death, and if they do not agree to such a punishment, that they should find a general verdict. People v. Littlefield, 5 Cal. 356.

93. Where a juror in a trial for murder stated on his voir dire that he had expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, and that such opinion when expressed was unqualified: held, that he was properly challenged by the prisoner, and should have been rejected. People v. Williams, 6 Cal. 207; People v. Cottle, 6 Cal. 227.

94. The declaration of a juror before trial, that "the people ought to take the prisoner out of jail and hang him," renders him incompetent to try the case, and where a verdict of guilty has been found by such juror, the court should grant a new trial. People v. Plummer, 9 Cal. 312.

95. A verdict in a criminal case cannot be impeached by an affidavit of one of the jurors, tending to show that it was not a fair expression of the opinion of the jury. People v. Wyman, 15 Cal. 75.

96. In criminal cases jurors may be sworn in chief as they are accepted, or the administration of the oath may be delayed until the panel is completed. In either case the defendant must exercise his right of peremptory challenge before the juror is sworn. People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 130.

97. In criminal cases the test under our statute of the exclusion of a juror for implied bias is, that he has formed or expressed an unqualified opinion or belief in the guilt or innocence of the accused. To exclude the juror, he must have a settled conviction of the guilt or innocence of the party, or must have expressed such conviction. Ib. 131.

See JUROR, JURY.

7. Absence of the Prisoner.

98. If the prisoner object that he was not present at the time of trial, or the rendition of the verdict, or the passage of the sentence, he must prove his absence. People v. Stewart, 4 Cal. 226.

99. The statute allows the plea of not guilty to be entered on the minutes of the court in the absence of a prisoner. People v. Thompson, 4 Cal. 240.

100. In cases of felony, the prisoner must be present during the whole of his trial, and where depositions are read to a jury during his absence, a new trial will be ordered. People v. Kohler, 5 Cal. 72.

101. If a defendant in a criminal action is out of the State a portion of the time, it must be so averred in the indictment. Prima facie, the lapse of time is a good defense; and where the statutory exception is relied on, it must be set up. People v. Miller, 12 Cal. 295.

8. Continuance.

102. Affidavits upon which a motion is founded to continue a criminal cause from one term to another, should show that the prisoner has used due diligence in endeavoring to procure the attendance of his witnesses, and in preparing for trial. People v. Baker, 1 Cal. 404.

103. The absence of counsel for the defense on account of sickness is a sufficient ground of continuance in a criminal case. People v. Logan, 4 Cal. 189.

104. At common law applications for continuances in criminal cases were addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and the refusal could not be assigned as error. This rule has been modified by our statutes, which authorizes us to review these orders upon appeal. People v. Dias, 6 Cal. 249.

105. In criminal cases on motion for continuance by defendant, on the ground of the absence of a material witness, based

9. Change of Venue.

106. Affidavits on a motion to change the venue of a criminal action must state the facts and circumstances from which the conclusion is deducted, that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county in which the indictment is found. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 383.

107. Upon an application in a criminal case to change the place of trial, on the ground that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the prisoner was indicted, it is insufficient to state in the affidavit that a jury cannot be had in a certain portion of the county, who would give the prisoner a fair and impartial trial. People v. Baker, 1 Cal. 404.

108. Where one hundred citizens united in employing counsel to prosecute a defendant: held, to be a sufficient ground to change the venue. People v. Lee, 5 Cal. 354.

109. The supreme court have complete appellate power over the right to grant a change of venue; it is not to be supposed that it will trust implicitly in the discretion of inferior courts. People v. Lee, 5 Cal. 354; People v. Fisher, 6 Cal. 155.

110. It is not error in the court, on a trial for murder, to postpone the consideration of a motion on the part of the defendant, for a change of venue, until an attempt is made to empanel a jury. People v. Plummer, 9 Cal. 309.

10. Character.

111. Evidence of good character, as a defense in criminal cases, should be restricted to the trait of character which is in issue. People v. Josephs, 7 Cal. 130.

112. The answer of a witness that the prisoner was a gambler, cannot be considered as an injury to the prisoner, at a time when gambling was licensed by law. People v. Butler, 8 Cal. 440.

113. The reputation of the deceased cannot be given in evidence, unless, at the least, the circumstances of the case raise a doubt in regard to the question, whether the prisoner acted in self-defense. People v. Murray, 10 Cal. 310.

11. Accessory.

114. Under our statute, an accessory is treated as a principal, and as if the person charged as such had committed the offense, and both may be charged in the same indictment. People v. Davidson, 5 Cal. 134.

115. By statute the distinction existing at common law between principals of the first and second degree is abolished; and the distinction between them and accusations before the fact is also abolished, so far as possible. People v. Cryder, 6 Cal. 23; People v. Bearss, 10 Cal. 69.

See ACCESSORY.

12. Accomplice.

116. Where an accomplice or defendant in a criminal action elects to be tried separately, he is a competent witness for the other defendants, charged with the same offense, the credibility of his testimony being left to the jury. People v. Labra, 5 Cal. 185.

See ACCOMPLICE.

13. Confession.

117. Where the admission or confession of a party is resorted to as evidence, it is error to exclude any portion of it made at the same time as the part which is related. People v. Navis, 3 Cal. 106.

118. Confession of a defendant indicted for larceny, made to the prosecutor and owner of property stolen, upon inducements held out to him, that if defendant would disclose his confederates, he would use his influence to get defendant acquitted, are not admissible in evidence against him. People v. Smith, 15 Cal. 410.

foundation for the distinction between confessions induced by persons who have no authority or control over the prisoner, and those induced by persons having such authority, as constables, prosecutors, and the like. Ib.

See CONFESSION.

14. Malice.

120. A homicide being admitted, the law raises the presumption of malice, which it is necessary for the prisoner to rebut by proof. People v. Milgate, 5 Cal. 129; People v. March, 6 Cal. 547.

See MALICE, MANSLAUGHTER, MURDER.

15. Sentence.

121. When judgment of death has been rendered against a prisoner by the court of first instance, it was reversed by the supreme court, as well on the ground that it has no jurisdiction to pass sentence of death, as that numerous errors and irregularities appeared to have occurred at the trial and in the proceedings. People v. Daniels, 1 Cal. 107.

122. It is no error for a court in a criminal case to set a day for pronouncing sentence in the absence of the prisoner. It is only requisite that he should be present when the sentence is pronounced. People v. Galvin, 9 Cal. 116.

123. After sentencing the prisoner, but before signing final judgment, the court had the prisoner brought before it and amended the sentence by shortening the time: it was held not to be error. People v. Thompson, 4 Cal. 240.

CROPS.

1. If by the construction of a railroad through the enclosure of a farmer, it is made necessary to construct fences on either side of the road to protect his crops, the cost of such fences must be included in the compensation to be paid by the railroad company. Sacramento Valley R. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 6 Cal. 75.

2. Growing crops are not goods or chattels, within the meaning of the statute of frauds, and will pass by deed or conveyance, from the very necessity of the case, as they are not susceptible of manual delivery until harvested and reduced to actual possession. Bours v. Webster, 6 Cal. 664.

3. The declarations of the master of a steamboat whilst running the steamer, respecting fire communicating from the chimney of the boat to the crops of grain on the banks of the river, by which the crop was consumed, are admissible to establish the liability of the owners on an action against them to recover damages for the destruction of the crop. Gerke v. Cal. Steam Nav. Co., 9 Cal. 255.

4. Where B. put in a crop on land leased of D., the lease providing that D. was to have one-half the crop, after expenses paid, and subsequently D., by another contract, sold to B. all his right, title and interest in the crop, which was then growing: held, that the fact that D. was on the premises and occupied a house there, shows no possession of the crop as against B. under the contract. Visher v. Webster, 13 Cal. 61.

5. Action against a sheriff for seizing plaintiff's wheat as the property of one Andeque. Evidence tending to show that the wheat was grown on the land of plaintiff and in his possession; that A. was on the land only to raise and harvest the crop; that the grain was cut and stacked on the premises; that plaintiff was entitled to one-third by the contract between him and A.; that A. sold to plaintiff and delivered possession, and then abandoned the premises, plaintiff residing thereon. A. took no further control of premises or crops, and plaintiff assumed entire dominion over both: held, that plaintiff was not bound to abandon the premises, or carry the grain beyond them, to protect his title against creditors of A.; that there was no error in refusing to instruct the jury that there was no evidence that the sale from A. to plaintiff was accompanied by an immediate delivery of the property, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession thereof. Pacheco v. Hunsacker, 14 Cal. 124.

6. Hay cut on land in possession of B. lies in three fields, of about one hundred and fifty acres, in swaths, cocks, windrows and stacks. Plaintiffs mowed it, and boarded with B. B. mortgages the hay to plaintiffs for work, and they cease to board with B., whose dwelling is separated from these fields by a fence. Plaintiffs proceed to gather and stack the hay, until the levy of an execution on it eight days afterwards, by defendant, as B.'s property: held, that even conceding removal from the premises to be essential to a complete delivery of the hay, still plaintiffs were entitled to reasonable time to do it; and that the court erred in assuming as matter of law that eight days were too long. Chaffin v. Doub, 14 Cal. 386.

7. The fact that fire was communicated from the engine of defendant's cars to plaintiff's grain, with proof that this result was not probable, from the ordinary working of the engine, is prima facie proof of negligence, sufficient to go to the jury. Hull v. Sacramento Valley R. R. Co., 14 Cal. 388.

8. Valuable and permanent improvements, such as houses, orchards, vineyards, etc., should undoubtedly be protected, as also growing crops of every description; for these are as useful and necessary as the gold produced by the working of the mines. Smith v. Doe, 15 Cal. 100; Gillan v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 156.

9. Plaintiff had two stacks of hay, and contracted to sell to defendant one stack, together with enough off of the other stack to make sixty tons. The price was to be eighteen dollars per ton; and the hay was to be baled by the plaintiff, and piled up in a corral, and then he was to be paid. Plaintiff had sixty-two tons and four hundred and thirty pounds of hay baled, and piled up in the corral, the surplus over sixty tons being by mistake of the man employed to bale. The bales were of different weight. Plaintiff then went to the house of defendant, and told him that the hay was baled and piled up in the corral, and that there were two tons and some hundreds of pounds over the sixty bales piled up together, and asked the defendant whether he would take the surplus. Defendant said he would be over soon, and see about taking the surplus. Defendant then paid plaintiff two hundred dollars. Plaintiff sues for nine hundred and nineteen dollars, balance due on the hay. The court instructed the jury, that if they believed from the evidence it was the understanding of the parties, that upon the payment of the two hundred dollars by defendant, the right and possession was deemed to have accrued to defendant to take the quantity bought as baled and stacked up in the corral, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, even though the bargain was not concluded as to the excess: held, that the instruction was right; that the question was, whether there had been a delivery, and any agreement of the parties upon the subject was legitimate matter for the jury; that the fact that the hay purchased by the defendant was mixed with other hay belonging to plaintiff made no difference, if defendant agreed to accept it in that condition, and to consider it as delivered—the contract for delivery would be fully executed. Smith v. Friend, 15 Cal. 126.

10. On the above facts, defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that "if plaintiff sold to defendant sixty tons out of sixty-two tons and four hundred and thirty pounds of hay, the same being in bales of different and unequal weights, and containing different quantities, and all being in the same pile, there was no delivery without division had." The instruction was refused: held, that the refusal was not error, because the instruction assumed that there could not have been a delivery, whatever may have been the understanding of the parties, until the exact quantity contracted for was segregated and set apart for defendant. Ib.

11. A landlord has no right to enter for a breach of covenant in the lease, and forcibly eject the tenant, the lease reserving no right of entry for such breach. If the landlord does so enter and eject the tenant, the tenant may recover damages for the vegetables and grape vines growing on the land, and planted by the tenant, for sale, he not being permitted to enter and gather them. Fox v. Brissac, 15 Cal. 226.

12. The act of April 25th, 1855, for the protection of growing crops and improvements in the mining districts of this State, so far as it purports to give a right of entry upon the mineral lands of this State in cases where no such right existed anterior to its passage, is invalid. Gillan v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 155.

CRUELTY.

1. We construe the expression "extreme cruelty," as used in our statute, to mean the same thing as the sævitia or cruelty of the English ecclesiastical court; and the offense may be defined, in general terms, to be any conduct in one of the married parties which furnishes reasonable apprehension that the continuance of the cohabitation would be attended with bodily harm to the other. Morris v. Morris, 14 Cal. 79.

2. Courts grant divorces in cases of cruelty, not to punish an offense already committed, but to relieve the complaining party of apprehended danger. And the divorce may follow even in the absence of any actual violence. Ib.

3. If there has been actual violence, it must be attended with danger to life, limb or health, or be such as to cause reasonable apprehension of future danger. Ib. 80.

4. Divorce for extreme cruelty is not generally granted when such cruelty is caused by the misconduct of the wife who applies. Johnson v. Johnson, 14 Cal. 460.

5. A wife divorced from her husband for extreme cruelty on his part, is entitled to the custody of their female child of tender years—the wife being blameless. The father has a right to see the child at all convenient times. Wand v. Wand, 14 Cal. 514.

CUSTOM.

1. Custom is sometimes allowed not only to control, limit, modify and interpret the general rules of law, but even to establish a rule in direct and palpable contravention of the positive written law. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 64; Tevis v. Pitcher, 10 Cal. 477.

2. Custom and usage, when once settled, are equivalent to law, though they may be comparatively of recent date. Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 326.

3. Whether such custom existed or not, when a custom is about to be proven, is a question for the jury to decide. Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 500.

4. Evidence may be offered to prove a custom that only two witnesses were necessary to the validity of a will. Ib.

5. Actual possession of a portion of a mining claim, according to the custom of miners in a given locality on the Yuba river, extends, by construction, to the limits of the claim held in accordance with such custom. Hicks v. Bell, 3 Cal. 224.

6. Checks payable at sight and bills of exchange are on the same footing, excepting the differences which may arise from the custom of merchants. Minturn v. Fisher, 4 Cal. 36.

7. The custom of merchants is not admissible in evidence to vary the plain meaning of a written contract. Corwin v. Patch, 4 Cal. 204.

8. By the customs of California under the Mexican rule, which have the force of law, two witnesses were sufficient to a will. Castro v. Castro, 6 Cal. 160; Tevis v. Pitcher, 10 Cal. 477.

9. The condition of California, its illiterate population, together with the fact that there were no escribanos or judges of the first instance residing in San Francisco, warrants the presumption that the law relative to conveyance never was regarded as authoritative, and that evidence of a custom of conveyance existing for many years, by which these requisitions of the law seem to be disregarded, is admissible. Hayes v. Bona, 7 Cal. 159.

10. Contracts for the sale of land, by the custom of the country, were required to be in writing, and although all the forms prescribed were not strictly followed, still it was necessary that the instrument should contain at least the names of the parties, the thing sold, the date of the transfer and the price paid. Hayes v. Bona, 7 Cal. 159; Stafford v. Lick, 10 Cal. 17.

11. Parol evidence is admissible to prove that it is the custom of a mining locality to run boundary lines by the magnetic meridian, and that was the understanding of the parties. Jenny Lind Co. v. Bowers, 11 Cal. 198.

12. Where a party's rights to a mining claim are fixed by the rules of property, which are a part of the general law of the land, they cannot be divested by any mere neighborhood custom or regulation. Waring v. Crow, 11 Cal. 372.

Custom.—Damages in general.—For Breach of Contract.

13. In an action against a railroad company for running over a horse and killing him, the plaintiff has the right to prove the custom of the country "to permit domestic animals to roam at large upon the unenclosed commons," where the defense is negligence on the part of the plaintiff in thus allowing the horse to run at large. Waters v. Moss, 12 Cal. 538.

14. If by law, or usage having the force of law, a California grant was matter of record, then it would seem to follow that the record is proof of the grant, especially where, as in this case, the record is itself an exemplification of the grant, and contemporaneously signed by the same officers issuing the grant. Gregory v. McPherson, 13 Cal. 573.

15. Where the only question of fact in the case was whether the quartz rock—parted or not from its original connection—was a portion of the same quartz lode or claim taken up by defendant, it was not important whether the rock was upon or beneath the surface, or what its condition, provided it were a part of such lode or claim; and the custom of miners is entitled to great, if not controlling weight. Brown v. '49 and '56 Quartz Mining Co., 15 Cal. 161.

16. Under certain circumstances, proof of the custom in other districts may be proper—at least, this court is not satisfied to the contrary. But in this case the admission of such testimony, if error, was immaterial, as the case was tried by the court, and the judgment placed on independent ground, upon which it can stand. Ib.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Where there is proof of damages, the amount is simply within the province of the jury. The appellate court will not undertake to examine the proofs, or declare that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. Bartlett v. Hogden, 3 Cal. 58; Drake v. Palmer, 4 Cal. 11.

II. FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

2. Damages on the resale of an article not delivered according to contract do not legally result from the breach of the contract, and if not specially alleged in the pleading cannot be allowed. Cole v. Swanton, 1 Cal. 54.

3. Loss of time, value of services, and wages of employees, caused by the failure of a party to perform his contract, are not remote, but strictly proximate and immediate damages, and ought to be allowed. Kenyon v. Goodall, 3 Cal. 259.

4. A copartnership contract contained a covenant also for damages: it was held, that one partner could not sue the other for the damages without seeking an account and dissolution. Stone v. Fouse, 3 Cal. 294.

5. If damages accrue in an action on the dissolution of a partnership, they can be settled by the court if liquidated, and if not, an issue can be framed to have them ascertained. Ib.

6. A contract contained a covenant for stipulated damages, and by the same contract the parties were made partners: it was held, that in an action on said contract the legal demand for damages could be joined with the equitable demand for a dissolution. Ib.

For Breach of Contract.

7. In a suit for damages for the failure of the defendants to deliver goods according to contract, the true rule of damages is the difference between the price agreed upon between the parties and the market value of the goods at the time of the breach of the contract. Tobin v. Post, 3 Cal. 375; Haskell v. McHenry, 4 Cal. 111; Crosby v. Watkins, 12 Cal. 88.

8. The measure of damages in an action on a breach of contract is the actual loss sustained; but where, from the nature of the contract, no possible mode is left to ascertain the damages, the only measure which remains is the price agreed to be paid. Baldwin v. Bennett, 4 Cal. 393; Coffee v. Meiggs, 9 Cal. 364.

9. The second of a foreign bill of exchange drawn here, payable at sight, was presented to the drawee, and payment being refused, it was duly protested; afterwards and before suit was brought the first of exchange was paid to the holder, with interest and cost of protest: held, that the drawer was released from the payment of damages for the dishonor of the second of exchange. Page v. Warner, 4 Cal. 396.

10. Where a check had been lost, and paid by a banker on forged endorsement: held, that on a refusal of the banker to deliver the check to the owner or pay the same, the damages is the full value of the amount for which it was drawn. Survey v. Wells, 5 Cal. 126.

11. The theory of the law is not that the party recovers the particular note or chose in action, as is commonly imagined, but that he recovers damages for the non-performance of the contract; and in case of failure to pay money due, the true damages is the amount of money owing and the interest which was agreed upon. Guy v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 417.

12. In an action for breach of contract and for hindering the plaintiff from completing his part thereof, the true measure of damages is the value of the labor performed by plaintiff, and the profit he could fairly have derived from the labor he was prevented from performing. Cunningham v. Dorsey, 6 Cal. 20.

13. In an action on a guarantee, though it is error in terms to charge the jury, if they find for plaintiff, to assess as damages the amount of the penalty fixed in the guarantee; yet, if the plaintiff's damages, if any, must exceed the penalty, the direction must be regarded as limiting the verdict, and the defendant is not injured by the instruction. Jones v. Post, 6 Cal. 105.

14. Where the sum of $15,000 was paid by the plaintiff as the consideration for a contract not to run a steamer, and the same amount was agreed to be paid back by him on failure to keep the contract: held, that the sum thus agreed to be paid was intended by the parties as liquidated damages. California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 262; Fisk v. Fowler, 10 Cal. 517.

15. The rule is, that when property converted has a fixed value, the measure of damages is that value, with legal interest from the time of its conversion. When the value is fluctuating, the plaintiff may recover the highest value at the time of its conversion or at any time afterwards. Douglass v. Kraft, 9 Cal. 563.

16. Where A agreed with his tenant, who was occupying a wooden building, that if he would give up his lease, A would erect a brick building to cover such portion of the lot as would be satisfactory to the tenant, and would give him possession within three weeks, and a lease of the premises for six months, with the privilege of twelve months, or on failure so to do, would pay the tenant five hundred dollars damages: held, as breach of the contract on the part of A, that the sum named was a penalty, and not liquidated damages. Nash v. Hermosilla, 9 Cal. 588.

17. The measure of damages for non-delivery of fruit would be the highest market value of the fruit on the trees at the orchard as contracted for, if there was any market value for it there, and as it was; if not, then if the plaintiffs were prepared to gather it and carry it to the market, the market value there, less the cost of gathering and carriage, would be the criterion of recovery. Dabovich v. Emeric, 12 Cal. 181.

18. Where A contracts with a telegraph company to transmit a telegraphic dispatch to have his agent to secure a debt due him from a third party by attachment, and this service is so negligently performed that other creditors of the common debtor obtain the first attachment, and exhaust the assets of the debtor, which would not have been the case had the telegraph company performed its contract within a reasonable time, the company is liable, not only for the cost of the dispatch, but for the amount of A's claim, which constitute the natural and proximate damages resulting from the breach of contract. Parks v. Alta California Telegraph Co., 13 Cal. 426.

19. Where damages resulting from a breach of an agreement are susceptible of precise admeasurement, equity will not take jurisdiction unless there are some peculiar equitable circumstances. White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 524.

20. If a man sells his property or contracts with another, on good consideration, that the latter shall pay his debt, for a breach of the obligation the measure of damages would be the amount. Ib.

21. In an action for damages for violation of a contract to grind wheat and deliver the flour on demand, upon payment of the price agreed on for grinding, tender of the price is necessary to maintain the action. Vance v. Dingley, 14 Cal. 53.

22. B. & D. contracted to furnish G. & S., also defendants, twenty-five thousand gallons turpentine, to be distilled by the latter. The contract was to end April 1st, 1857. B. & D. were not bound to deliver all the turpentine at once, nor any given quantity per day. Damages for nondelivery of turpentine fixed at $3,750, or fifteen cents per gallon. For accident to the distillery, reasonable time to be allowed G. & S. for repairs. Distillery burned last of January, 1857, requiring eighteen days to rebuild. In January and March, 1857, G. & S. respectively assigned their interest in the contract to plaintiff: held, that the benefit of the suspension of the works by the fire inured to B. & D. as well as G. & S.; that the time of performance of the contract was extended for the eighteen days; that up to April 18th, 1857, G. & S. would be bound to receive turpentine, and even if the assignment before this time did not put it out of their power to comply with their contract, at least the assignee could not sue before the expiration of the extended time. Jackson v. Beers, 14 Cal. 191.

23. Nominal damages are presumed to follow as a conclusion of law from proof of the breach of a contract. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11.

24. Plaintiff entered into a contract with defendants by which the latter purchased of the former certain ditches for $14,500, payable $5,000 cash, and $12,000 as follows: to wit: The expenses of keeping said ditches in good order, of employing agents to attend to the same, being first deducted from the proceeds of the sale of water, the balance was to be applied to liquidation of the said $12,000, until the whole was paid, "and to hasten and make certain the timely and early payment of said sum of money by the sales as aforesaid, said company promise to furnish from their ditch, to be used in the above named ditches, so much water, which added to the water supplied to said ditches from their other sources, shall be sufficient to effect sales to the amount of $1,000 per month; and when said company shall fail to furnish water as aforesaid, the said company hereby obligate themselves to pay to said Blen interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum on the said monthly deficiency, until met by receipts from sales over and above the said $1,000 per month:" held, that this contract is not an agreement on the part of defendants to pay the balance over the $2,000 only from the proceeds of the ditches named therein, but that it is a guarantee on their part that the mode of payment prescribed shall be effectual to pay the debt within a given time. The last clause in the contract does not give defendants a right to refuse to supply this water, but simply provides a measure of damages for the breach of it. Blen v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 15 Cal. 99.

25. Where a contract from its terms is incapable of apportionment, the measure of damages in such cases is the sum fixed by the contract itself. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 38.

a. Against Common Carriers.

26. In an action against a common carrier, the rule of damages is the value of the goods at the port of delivery, and not the invoice price or the value at the port of shipment. Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 118; Hart v. Spalding, 1 Cal. 214.

27. Evidence showing that the plaintiff was a good bookkeeper was proper to be submitted to the jury to enable them to form an estimate of the damages which the plaintiff had probably sustained, and they should consider the probabilities of his procuring a situation and his retaining it. Yonge v. Pacific Mail Steamship Co., 1 Cal. 354.

28. Where an action is brought for damages against a common carrier for the nonperformance of his contract to convey plaintiff's servant, the plaintiff must show that he is entitled to a claim for his services. Ib.

29. In an action against a common carrier for nonperformance of his contract to carry a passenger, remote and contingent damages cannot be recovered. Ib.

30. Where the streets of a city are diverted from their ordinary and legitimate uses by special license to a private person for his own benefit—as to run a railroad there in the pursuit of a business which involves constant risk and danger—he is bound in the exercise of such rights to use extraordinary care. In this a private railroad differs from a public one. Wilson v. Cunningham, 3 Cal. 243.

31. In an action against a ferryman to recover for injuries sustained in driving off from his boat, it is not incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that he exercised ordinary care to avoid the injury, but the proof of the want of such care on the part of the plaintiff lies on the defendant. May v. Hanson, 5 Cal. 365.

32. In an action for damages brought by a passenger against a stage company for injuries to plaintiff caused by the carelessness of the driver in overturning the coach: held, that the fact that the driver was informed before the accident that a passenger was to be left at plaintiff's destination, and that after the accident the agent of defendant informed the driver that plaintiff was to stop there, was sufficient to establish prima facie the allegation in the complaint of a contract safely to carry, etc. Thorne v. Cal. Stage Co., 6 Cal. 233.

33. When it appears that the coach was driven by the agent of the owner, the rule is that the principal is liable only for simple negligence, and that exemplary damages cannot be imposed upon him. Wardrobe v. Cal. Stage Co., 7 Cal. 120.

34. Common carriers using steam must provide all reasonable precaution to protect the property of others, and they must also be properly used. Carelessness in either particular, resulting to the injury of an innocent party, will make the company liable. They are bound to temper their care according to the circumstances of the danger. Gerke v. Cal. Steam Nav. Co., 9 Cal. 256.

35. In actions against common carriers, damages for pain are recoverable. Fairchild v. Cal. Stage Co., 13 Cal. 601.

36. Where in an action against a steamer for setting fire to plaintiff's fence, the jury was instructed among other things to find specially as to the negligence of the captain or crew of the steamer, and they found generally for plaintiff four hundred dollars damages, and also that the steamer's spark-catcher was not sufficient to prevent the sparks from communicating with the shore and endangering property, the verdict was held good in the absence of any objection at the time of its rendition that it was not responsive to the special direction. Algier v. Steamer Maria, 14 Cal. 170.

37. The fact that fire was communicated from the engine of defendants' cars to plaintiff's grain, with proof that this result was not probable from the ordinary working of the engine, is prima facie evidence of negligence, sufficient to go to the jury. Hull v. Sacramento Valley R. R. Co., 14 Cal. 388.

III. IN EJECTMENT FOR USE AND OCCUPATION.

38. Under our code plaintiff may recover real property, and damages for withholding it, and rents and profits all in one action. Sullivan v. Davis, 4 Cal. 292.

39. A claim for possession of real property, with damages for its detention, cannot be joined in the same complaint, under any system of pleading, with a claim for consequential damages arising from a change of a road by which a tavern keeper may have been injured in his business. Bowles v. Sacramento Turnpike & Plank Road Co., 5 Cal. 225.

40. In an action of ejectment where no proof is introduced to show damages, it is no error to refuse to allow the defendant to prove the value of the improvements made by him on his property. Ford v. Holton, 5 Cal. 321.

In Ejectment for Use and Occupation.—In Trespass.

41. When the prayer for damages for more than two hundred dollars is inserted in a complaint in a justice's court, in an action for the recovery of possession of a mining claim, it should be disregarded or stricken out, and the plaintiff allowed to try his right to the claim. Van Etten v. Jilson, 6 Cal. 19; Grass Valley Q. M. Co. v. Stackhouse, 6 Cal. 414.

42. Where the defendant in ejectment occupied and improved the land bona fide under color of title, the improvements erected by him constitute an equitable set-off, to the extent of their value, to the damages recovered by the plaintiff for the withholding of possession. Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 511.

43. Where claimants to land had prior to the issuance of a patent published a notice that they had become the owners of the grant, specifying its boundaries and warning off trespassers, it might possibly operate as a protection against any demand for damages until the approved survey was made. Moore v. Wilkinson, 13 Cal. 489.

44. Where in ejectment against several defendants the judgment for damages is several instead of joint, the damages may be remitted and the judgment for the land stand. Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 120.

45. In ejectment the value of improvements, even when defendant holds under color of title adversely to plaintiff, can only be allowed as a set-off to damages. Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 466.

46. Damages which a plaintiff can recover in an action of ejectment for the use and occupation of the premises are such as arise subsequent to the accruing of his right of possession, and when his right depends upon a sheriff's deed, he cannot recover in this form of action for the use and occupation for the six months intervening the sale and the execution of the deed. Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 468; Clark v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 637.

47. Where the complaint in ejectment avers the ownership and right of plaintiff, and the possession and withholding by defendant in general terms, without stating any time when plaintiff's title accrued or existed, and without making any allegation as to damages for rents and profits, but simply praying judgment therefor in a given sum, and the complaint is demurred to as not stating facts sufficient, and a general judgment for possession and $2,250 damages is given: held, that damages cannot be recovered for any period preceding the commencement of the action; but that this point, to wit: that the complaint does not support the judgment for damages, cannot be raised for the first time, on petition, for rehearing in the supreme court—the defendant on the first hearing in this court having put his objection to the general judgment for damages on the ground of error in the charge of the court below to the jury, and of error in the admission of evidence as to the rents and profits, the point of his objection being that a recovery for rents and profits beyond three years was barred by the statute, and this court having decided against him because the point was not properly made by the record. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 248.

48. In this case the judgment for damages must stand, as this court has no means of determining the manner in which the damages were made up by the jury, or whether any damages for the period preceding the commencement of the action were found. Ib.

49. Where damages are claimed for use and occupation prior to the commencement of the action, the complaint must state the title of plaintiff as existing at some prior date (to be designated) and as continuing up to the commencement of the action, and the entry of defendant at some date subsequent to that of the alleged title. Ib.

50. Where in ejectment the facts found by the court authorized a judgment for possession but not for damages, the judgment being for possession and damages was affirmed in the supreme court upon respondents remitting the damages and paying costs of appeal. Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 434.

IV. IN TRESPASS.

51. An action cannot be commenced against A to recover damages for a trespass to real estate committed by B. Stevenson v. Lick, 1 Cal. 129.

52. A municipal corporation is not liable in damages for the destruction of a building in pursuance of the directions of its officers, as in the case of a conflagration, where no statute exists creating such liability. Dunbar v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 356.

53. In a complaint for trespass the plaintiff claimed five hundred dollars, the alleged value of the property destroyed, and five hundred dollars damages; defendant demurred on the ground that two causes of action were improperly joined, and the court below sustained the demurrer. Tendesen v. Marshall, 3 Cal. 440.

54. Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction in actions to recover damages for injury to a mining claim, or for its detention, when the amount involved is over two hundred dollars. Van Etten v. Jilson, 6 Cal. 19.

55. In an action to abate a nuisance, damages are only an incident to an action, and the failure to recover two hundred dollars does not affect the question of costs. Hudson v. Doyle, 6 Cal. 102.

56. In an action for damages for cutting down growing trees, the measure of damages is not the value of the trees as firewood, but the injury done to the land by destroying them, considering the purposes for which such trees were used or designed, and not according to the speculative or fancied ideas of the jury. Chipman v. Hibberd, 6 Cal. 162.

57. Damages assessed for the value of land taken for a railroad should be paid to the true owner, if he recovers possession before the damages are paid by the company; although at the time of the damage a trespasser was in possession, who had filed his claim to the damages. Rooney v. Sacramento Valley R. R. Co., 6 Cal. 640.

58. Where parties have located mining claims upon the bank of a creek or stream, and are using the bed of said stream for the purpose of working their claims, any subsequent erection, dam or embankment, which will turn the water back upon said claims, or hinder them from being worked with flumes or other necessary means or appliances, is an encroachment upon the rights of said parties, and they are entitled to recover for the damages consequent on such obstruction. Sims v. Smith, 7 Cal. 150.

59. A writ of injunction will lie to restrain trespass or entering upon a mining claim and removing auriferous quartz from it, where the injury threatens to be continuous and irreparable. It comports more with justice to both parties to restrain the trespass than to leave the plaintiff to his remedy for damages at law. Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 327.

60. Where parties employed architects, reputed to be skilled in their profession, to construct at a designated point on a creek a dam or embankment of certain specified dimensions, capable of resisting all floods and freshets of the stream for the period of two years, and to deliver it completed by a given time; and before the embankment was completed it was broken by a sudden freshet and a large body of water, confined by it, rushed down the channel of the stream, carrying away and destroying in its course the store of plaintiffs with their stock of merchandise. The employers exercised no supervision, gave no directions, furnished no materials, nor had they accepted the work. Plaintiff having brought suit to recover the damage sustained by them against the employers and contractors: held, that the latter alone were liable. Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 489.

61. In an action against a sheriff for wrongfully seizing and selling property under an execution, and where there was no wantonness or oppression on the part of such officer in the seizure, the measure of damages is the value of the property at the time it was seized and legal interest on such amount from the time of seizure up to the time of the rendition of the verdict. Phelps v. Owens, 11 Cal. 24.

62. In an action for damages for the diversion of water from the plaintiff's ditch, the deposition of one of the owners of the ditch was taken by plaintiff, and subsequently and before the trial the witness conveyed, by deed, his interest in the ditch to plaintiff: held, that such deed of conveyance did not pass the witness' right to the damages, and hence he was an incompetent witness. Kimball v. Gearheart, 12 Cal. 47.

63. In an action for injuries to a mining claim, a claim for damages to the plaintiff by the reason of the breaking away of the defendant's dam, and the consequent washing away of the pay dirt of the plaintiff, may properly be joined with a claim for damages in the preventing plaintiff from working his claim. Fraler v. Sears' Union Water Co., 12 Cal. 557.

64. The want of reasonable care on the part of another, who is injured by the breaking of a dam, cannot be set up in defense to an action for damages for injuries thus suffered. Ib. 559.

In Trespass.—In Tort.

65. In an action of damages for diverting the water of a river from plaintiff's mill, an averment in the complaint of possession of the land and mill is sufficient against a trespasser, without averring riparian ownership or prior appropriation of the water. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn Water & M. Co., 13 Cal. 230.

66. Action for damages against defendants, averring that they, "with force and arms, broke and entered upon the premises of plaintiff and damaged them by causing them to be overflowed and covered with earth, gravel, tailings, etc., deposited thereon by the action of running water:" held, that under our system of pleadings, the words "with force and arms broke and entered" do not confine the proof to the direct and immediate damage as in the old action of trespass; that the facts being clearly set out in the complaint, the addition of these words was surplusage. Darst v. Rush, 14 Cal. 84.

67. In an action for damages against a constable for illegal seizure of plaintiff's property, the judgment was for six hundred and fifty dollars, the sum claimed in the complaint, the value of the property being therein fixed at four hundred and fifty dollars and the damages at two hundred dollars. The court found the damages at six hundred and fifty dollars. There was no statement on new trial or appeal: held, that the finding of the court is conclusive, and that the judgment must stand. Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 201.

68. In actions for taking and detaining personal property, no circumstances of aggravation being shown, the measure of damages is the value of the property with interest. Dorsey v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 555.

69. If circumstances of aggravation be shown in order to increase the damages, then defendant may show all circumstances connected with his acts and explanatory of his motives and intentions. Ib.

70. In such actions the rule of damages depends on the presence or absence of circumstances of aggravation in the trespass—as fraud, malice or oppression. Ib. 556.

71. Where the trespass is committed from wanton or malicious motives or a reckless disregard of the rights of others, or under circumstances of great hardship and oppression, the rule of mere compensation is not enforced, and the measure and amount of damages are matters for the jury alone, and they may award punitive or exemplary damages. Ib. 558.

72. The rule of compensation, as distinguished from the rule of exemplary damages, applies even though the writ under which the officer committed the trespass was void—there being no circumstances of aggravation. Ib.

73. In an action to recover damages for the diversion of the water of a stream from plaintiff's mills, an averment as to the precise quantity of water required for the use of the mills, and to which plaintiff claimed to be entitled, is an immaterial averment, and a recovery of damages would not establish plaintiff's right to the exact quantity of water claimed so as to be res judicata in a subsequent suit. McDonald v. Bear River and Auburn W. and M. Co., 15 Cal. 149.

74. In such action for damages no issue could be taken upon the averment as to the particular quantity of water diverted. Ib.

75. In an action against a water company incorporated under the laws of this State for overflowing plaintiff's claim, the fact that plaintiffs could have prevented the damage by pulling off a board from defendant's flume, and permitting the water to discharge above plaintiff's claim, is no defense, because they were not obliged to avoid the injuries complained of by committing a trespass. Wolf v. St. Louis Independent Water Co., 15 Cal. 320.

V. IN TORT.

76. Where the master ejects the servant from his premises, the latter refusing to leave after being discharged and notified, the former should use no more force than is actually necessary to accomplish the object, in which case only nominal damages can be recovered. De Briar v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 450.

77. Vindictive damages may be given in a civil action for a personal injury, though the act be punishable by a criminal prosecution. Wilson v. Middleton, 2 Cal. 56.

In Forcible Entry and Detainer.—In Collision.—In Slander.

78. If the mortgagee acts in bad faith towards the owner, or is guilty of gross negligence, such as will greatly injure the owner, he is liable to such damages as a jury may assess. Benham v. Rowe, 2 Cal. 408.

79. A claim for damages for a personal tort cannot be united with a demand properly cognizable in a court of equity in the same action. Mayo v. Madden, 4 Cal. 28.

80. Intoxication of the plaintiff is no defense to an action for damages for injuries caused by falling through an uncovered hole in the sidewalk of a public street. Robinson v. Pioche, 5 Cal. 461.

81. A master is bound to use reasonable care and diligence to prevent accident or injury to his servant in the course of his employment, and if he fails so to do, he will be held responsible for damages. Hallower v. Henley, 6 Cal. 210.

VI. IN FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

82. A entered upon unoccupied land, marked it out so that its boundaries might be easily traced, and commenced to build a house upon it, when he was ousted by B: held, that in an action of forcible entry and detainer, A could recover the land from B, but without a fine or treble damages. Stark v. Barnes, 4 Cal. 412.

83. When treble damages are given by a statute the demand for such damages must be expressly inserted in the declaration, which must either recite the statute or conclude to the damage of the plaintiff against the form of the statute. Chipman v. Emeric, 5 Cal. 240.

84. The complaint in an action for forcible entry and detainer need not pray for treble damages to warrant the court in trebling them. O'Callaghan v. Booth, 6 Cal. 66; Hart v. Moon, 6 Cal. 162.

85. In forcible entry and detainer tried in the county court on appeal from a justice's court, plaintiff having obtained a verdict for one hundred and fifty dollars damages, moved that they be trebled. Motion denied and judgment entered for one hundred and fifty dollars, with restitution of the premises. Plaintiff applies to the supreme court for mandamus to compel the court below to render judgment for treble damages: held, that the application must be denied, as plaintiff has an adequate remedy by appeal; pending which, plaintiff can enforce so much of the judgment as awards restitution. The judgment can be corrected in this court, if proper, by trebling the damages. Early v. Mannix, 15 Cal. 150.

VII. IN COLLISION.

86. An action to recover damages for collision cannot be sustained where the injury complained of has resulted from the negligence of both parties. Kelly v. Cunningham, 1 Cal. 366.

87. A vessel in the harbor of San Francisco, moored on the usual track of bay and river steamers, should set a light and keep a watch in a dark night, or it cannot recover damages for any injury sustained by being run into by a steamer, where there was neither gross negligence nor intentional wrong on the part of the steamer. Innis v. Steamer Senator, 1 Cal. 459.

88. In an action to recover damages for collision, there being no indebtedness arising upon contract, an attachment cannot issue. Griswold v. Sharpe, 2 Cal. 24.

89. Where a vessel is properly in charge of a licensed pilot, the owner is not liable for damages which may ensue from the negligence or misconduct of the pilot; but the owner is not exempt from liability for injuries committed by taking an improper berth in the harbor, although it may have been selected by the pilot. Ib.

90. Plaintiff claimed damages for injuries done to himself, his horse and wagon, in a collision with the railroad cars, charging the defendant with negligence: held, that where the streets of a city are diverted from their ordinary and legitimate uses by special license to a private person for his own benefit, and in the pursuit of a business which involves constant risk and danger, he is bound, in the exercise of such right, to use extraordinary care. Wilson v. Cunningham, 3 Cal. 243.

VIII. IN SLANDER.

91. In an action for slander, where words are charged to have been spoken of and concerning a defendant as a clerk or tradesman, which it is alleged is his profession, it is unnecessary to allege special damages. Butler v. Howe, 7 Cal. 89.

---

---

IX. IN MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

92. In an action for a malicious prosecution, wherein an attachment was issued, the jury gave $15,000 damages, and where no misconduct was shown on the part of the jury, and it was not charged that the verdict was given under the influence of passion or prejudice, the court could not disturb the verdict, unless it clearly appear that injustice has been done. Weaver v. Page, 6 Cal. 685.

93. Malice cannot be presumed in a prosecution where the defendant has incurred all the moral guilt of the charge, although he may have evaded the penalty of the law; and the plaintiff is only entitled to the damage which he actually sustained. Sears v. Hathaway, 12 Cal. 279.

X. BREACH OF STATUTORY REQUIREMENT.

94. Where a statute required the owners or consignees of a vessel entering the harbor to give a several bond to the State, in a penalty of two hundred dollars, for every passenger and member of the crew aboard, but no penalty was given by the statute for a neglect to give the bond, the action must be brought to recover such damages as the plaintiffs can show they have actually sustained by reason of a refusal to give such bond. Board of Health v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 1 Cal. 198.

---

XI. AGAINST OFFICERS.

1. The Sheriff.

95. It is not necessary in an action against a sheriff to recover damages (in addition to the two hundred dollars imposed by law as a penalty) for a failure to execute and return process, that two suits should have been brought. Damages and the penalty may be recovered in one suit. Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 642.

2. County Clerk.

96. For all damages resulting from a refusal of a clerk of the district court to issue an execution, the plaintiff has in ordinary course of law a plain and adequate remedy by an action on the bond of the officer, and it is well settled that the writ of mandate will not issue in such cases. Goodwin v. Glazer, 10 Cal. 333.

---

3. Notary Public.

97. Where a notary public, in taking and certifying an acknowledgment to a mortgage, neglected to make a proper certificate: held, that such notary was guilty of gross and culpable negligence, and is responsible to the party injured for the damages resulting from such negligence. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 246.

98. Where a mortgaged debt has been lost by gross negligence of the notary, the measure of the damages is the amount of the debt and interest to be secured by the mortgage. Ib.

---

XII. UPON A STATUTORY UNDERTAKING.

99. Where real property is attached and the possession of the owner not disturbed, it is difficult to say how any more than nominal damages can be recovered for the injury caused by the attachment. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 411.

100. Damages caused by the depreciation of real estate under an attachment, and the injury caused to the credit and reputation of the defendant by reason of the attachment, are too remote to submit to the consideration of a jury in an action on the undertaking on attachment. Ib.

101. The court may order a reference to ascertain the damages sustained by an injunction issued without cause. Russell v. Elliott, 2 Cal. 246.

Upon an Undertaking.—As costs.—Nominal Damages.

102. If an attachment bond is void, the obligee cannot sue on the bond for damages sustained by the attachment. Benedict v. Bray, 2 Cal. 255.

103. Generally, the recovery of counsel fees as part of the damages is not allowed—as where the loss is consequential; but where the loss is direct—as in the case of an improper commencement and prosecution of a writ or other process in a suit, it should be allowed. Ah Thae v. Quan Wan, 3 Cal. 217; overruling Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 412.

104. In an action upon an injunction bond to recover damages for the wrongful issuing of the writ, the amount paid as counsel fees to procure the dissolution of the injunction is properly allowable as part of the damages. Ah Thae v. Quan Wan, 3 Cal. 218; Summers v. Farish, 10 Cal. 353; Heyman v. Landers, 12 Cal. 111; overruling Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 412.

105. In an action on an injunction bond the judgment of dissolution is conclusive, and the only question is the amount of damages sustained. Gelston v. Whitesides, 3 Cal. 311.

106. In an action for damages on an injunction bond, the defendants can plead that the business which they enjoined was a public nuisance. Cunningham v. Breed, 4 Cal. 385.

107. Where a plaintiff in replevin gives the statutory undertaking and takes possession of the property in suit, and is afterwards nonsuited and judgment entered against him for the return of the property and for costs: held, that his sureties are liable for damages sustained by defendant by reason of a failure to return the goods, but not for damages for the original taking and detention, the value of the goods not having been found by the jury. Ginaca v. Atwood, 8 Cal. 448.

108. In an action on a replevin bond, the defendant's liability is limited to the damage sustained by a failure to return the property. Hunt v. Robinson, 15 Cal. 277.

109. In an action on an injunction bond, no demand for payment of unliquidated damages need be made on the parties for whom the sureties stipulated. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11.

XIII. DAMAGES AS COSTS.

110. In an action for damages where the jury found a verdict for plaintiff for fifty dollars and costs: held, that judgment could not be entered for costs in favor of plaintiff. Shay v. Tuolumne Water Co., 6 Cal. 286.

111. Costs are incident to the judgment and cannot be given by the jury by way of damages. Ib.

112. Where a judgment is against two, one only of whom appeals, and the appeal is dismissed with twenty per cent. damages, the damages with the costs do not become part of the original judgment, and the redemptioner is not bound to pay them when he redeems from a sale under a judgment. McMillan v. Vischer, 14 Cal. 241.

a. For a frivolous appeal.

113. Where the record discloses on the part of the appellant facts to satisfy the court that the appeal was taken merely for delay, damages were awarded on dismissing the appeal: (a.) In five per cent. Pinkham v. Wemple, 12 Cal. 449. (b.) In ten per cent. Buckley v. Morse, 2 Cal. 149; Pacheco v. Bernal, 2 Cal. 150; Russell v. Williams, 2 Cal. 158; Bates v. Vischer, 2 Cal. 357; Taylor v. McKinley, 3 Cal. 104; Bliss v. Wyman, 7 Cal. 258; Winans v. Hardenburgh, 8 Cal. 293; Harvey v. Fisk, 9 Cal. 94; McCann v. Lewis, 9 Cal. 247; Primm v. Gray, 10 Cal. 523; Heston v. Martin, 11 Cal. 42; Hutchinson v. Ryan, 11 Cal. 142; Haswell v. Parsons, 15 Cal. 267. (c.) In fifteen per cent. Reyes v. Sandford, 5 Cal. 117; Parke v. Williams, 7 Cal. 250; Dewitt v. Porter, 13 Cal. 172. (d.) In twenty per cent. Nickerson v. Cal. Stage Co., 10 Cal. 522.

XIV. NOMINAL DAMAGES.

114. Where property, the subject of the suit, is delivered and accepted pending the suit, before verdict, the damages should be merely nominal. Conroy v. Flint, 5 Cal. 328.

Nominal Damages.—Excessive Damages.—Interest as Damages.

115. Where property is sued for and plaintiff accepts the goods, he has made his election to take the goods in lieu of their value, and he can only recover the interest upon their highest value at any time between detention and delivery, except where some special damage is specifically averred in the declaration. Ib. 329.

116. Damages which are professedly laid for the benefit of the public cannot be recovered in an action brought by a passenger of a stage coach against the owners thereof for injuries sustained by reason of the upsetting of the coach. Wardrobe v. Cal. Stage Co., 7 Cal. 120.

117. In cases of simple negligence, the rule governing the measure of damages is to allow the actual damages and not smart money. Moody v. McDonald, 4 Cal. 299.

118. The only damage the law allows for the detention of money under its process is the legal interest. Heyman v. Landers, 12 Cal. 111.

119. Nominal damages are presumed to follow as a conclusion of law from proof of the breach of a contract. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11.

XV. REMOTE AND CONTINGENT DAMAGES.

120. Contemplated and contingent profits cannot be allowed as damages. Cortner v. Barling, 2 Cal. 73.

121. Damages which are too remote and speculative, and involve too many contingencies, cannot form part of a judgment. Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 78.

XVI. EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

122. Courts reluctantly interfere with the finding of a jury in an action for unliquidated damages, for reason that the damages are excessive; and the verdict ought never to be set aside for such a cause unless beyond a doubt the verdict be unjust and oppressive, or obtained through some undue advantage, mistake or in violation of law. Payne v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 1 Cal. 36.

123. Courts will not interfere with the verdicts of a jury where the question upon which they have passed is one solely of unliquidated damages, unless the verdict be beyond doubt unjust and oppressive, especially if the judgment creditor remit one-half thereof. George v. Law, 1 Cal. 364.

124. A verdict will be set aside where the damages are unjustifiably outrageous. McDaniel v. Baca, 2 Cal. 338.

125. Where damages are laid at a certain sum in a declaration, the judgment will be reversed if the jury render a verdict for a greater sum. Palmer v. Reynolds, 3 Cal. 396.

126. It is the proper exercise of the discretion of a court to grant a new trial on the ground of excessive damages, when the verdict is grossly inconsistent in its relations to the facts. Potter v. Seale, 5 Cal. 411.

127. In an action for a malicious prosecution wherein an attachment was issued, the jury gave $15,000 damages, and where no misconduct was shown on the part of the jury, and it was not charged that the verdict was given under the influence of passion or prejudice, the court could not disturb the verdict, unless it clearly appear that injustice has been done. Weaver v. Page, 6 Cal. 685.

128. Where judgment for damages is for more than the amount claimed in the complaint, the excess may be remitted and the judgment stand. Pierce v. Ryan, 14 Cal. 420.

XVII. INTEREST AS DAMAGES.

129. Interest is, as a general rule, not recoverable, except by virtue of statutory regulations, yet a small rate may be allowed in some cases by way of damages. Davis v. Greely, 1 Cal. 422.

XVIII. APPORTIONMENT OF DAMAGES.

130. Where a part owner sues ex delicto and the objection of defect of parties is not set up in the answer, the damages should be apportioned at the trial. Whitney v. Stark, 8 Cal. 516.

Death.

DEATH.

1. Where an appeal was taken and perfected after the death of the appellant: held, that there was no authority for prosecuting the cause in the name of the deceased, but that all proceedings should have been stayed until the executor or administrator could by suggestion have been made a party. Sanchez v. Roach, 5 Cal. 248.

2. Hearsay information of death derived from the immediate family of the deceased, is sufficient prima facie to establish the fact, and is properly admitted. Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 200.

3. The allegation of the death of plaintiff's ancestor in a verified complaint, is not sufficiently controverted by the averment in the answer "that defendant had not sufficient knowledge to form a belief, and therefore neither admits nor denies." Ib.

4. In the case of an absent person from whom no tidings are received, the presumption of life ceases at the end of seven years. To shorten this time there must be evidence of some specific peril to his life. Ashbury v. Sanders, 8 Cal. 64.

5. The fact that a fugitive from justice had not been heard of for sixteen months, and that he was a passenger on a particular vessel bound for a specified port, and that neither the vessel nor crew had ever been heard from, is not sufficient to raise a legal presumption of his death. Ib. 65.

6. The ex-sheriff who made the sale of land on execution died after his term of office ceased, and before executing a conveyance; the law failed to provide for the completion of the execution in such a case: held, that the only remedy left to the purchaser is to apply to the court for the appointment of a commissioner or master to execute the conveyance. People v. Boring, 8 Cal. 411.

7. Where a plaintiff in an action to foreclose a mortgage against a party who has died since the service of the summons and before judgment, asks for a decree of sale of the mortgaged premises, and if the same is not sufficient to discharge the debt, then for a judgment over against the estate, the administrator is a necessary party to the suit. Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 126.

8. A deed made after the death of a party, though made to him and "his heirs," the word "heir" is not a word of purchase, carrying title to the heirs, but only qualifying the title of the grantee. A deed to a dead man is a nullity. Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 376.

9. Possession of land at the time of the death of a party gives prima facie title to his heirs or representatives. Gregory v. McPherson, 13 Cal. 572.

10. Where plaintiffs obtained a decree in a foreclosure suit against husband and wife, the mortgage being executed by them and the decree being in the usual form for the amount due, sale of the premises, application of the proceeds and execution against the property of the husband for any deficiency; and after the entry of the decree the husband died: held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an order of sale upon the decree, notwithstanding the death of the husband, but not to execution for any deficiency. Cowell v. Buckelew, 14 Cal. 641.

11. Death of the principal revokes the authority of the agent, and a deed of land made by him after such death does not bind the representatives of the principal. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 16.

12. But if the agent has a power coupled with an interest—that is, a power which conveys to the agent an interest in the property, then the execution of the power after death of the principal is good. Ib. 19.

13. If on an executory contract for the purchase of land, made by plaintiff with the agent during the lifetime of the principal, money due the principal was paid after his death to the agent, who settled the amount with the estate so that the estate received the benefit of the payment, plaintiff would be entitled in equity to call for the legal title, and could defend in ejectment by the representatives of the principal. Ib.

14. The declarations, on a question of boundary, of a deceased person who was in a situation to be acquainted with the matter, and who was at the time free from any interest therein, are admissible, whether the boundary be one of a general or public interest, or be one between the estates of private proprietors; and their admissibility cannot be affected by the fact that they are reduced to writing, and were made under oath in a judicial proceeding. Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 280.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

1. A party cannot occupy the double position of debtor and creditor, and where the plaintiff was himself a subscriber to a paper for contribution to a third party, upon which his claim was founded, his liability and that of the defendant were of the same character, and would not constitute the defendant a debtor of the plaintiff. Smith v. Truebody, 2 Cal. 347.

2. To enable the plaintiff in equity to subject the assets of an absent debtor to the payment of his claim, he must show that he is without a remedy at law. Lupton v. Lupton, 3 Cal. 121.

3. Plaintiff consigned goods to A, who sold them and received the proceeds. A was a partner of a firm, which being in want of funds proposed to B, another partner, to loan the plaintiff's money, which was assented to, and the money advanced. The firm was sued for the money, and it was held, that there was no privity between the plaintiff and defendants on which to establish the relation of debtor and creditor. Evans v. Bidleman, 3 Cal. 437.

4. A sale of personal property to be valid against creditors must be accompanied by an actual and continued change of possession. Fitzgerald v. Gorham, 4 Cal. 290; Stewart v. Scannell, 8 Cal. 83; Whitney v. Stark, 8 Cal. 516; Vance v. Boynton, 8 Cal. 560.

5. Any creditor of an insolvent debtor has the right to be made a party for the purpose of opposing the discharge or obtaining his proportion of the assets, whether he be named in the assignment or not. Lambert v. Slade, 4 Cal. 337.

6. A bill filed by a creditor asking relief against fraudulent transfers and concealment of his property by the debtor, is a substantial ground of equity jurisdiction. Swift v. Arents, 4 Cal. 391.

7. Corporations are by law prohibited from issuing bills or notes upon loans or for circulation as money—that is, they shall not lend their credit; but no sound reason can be given why they should not borrow money and give evidence of indebtedness therefor. Magee v. Mokelumne Hill Canal and Mining Co., 5 Cal. 259.

8. Where the defendant being indebted to the plaintiffs, a banking firm, made a payment on account in the bank, to one of plaintiffs' clerks, and on a subsequent day agreed to lend the clerk the amount thus paid, who took the money and used it, and the amount thus paid was never credited to the defendant on the books of the plaintiff: held, that the amount paid by defendant in the usual way of business was a legal payment, and that defendant lost all control over it. Rhodes v. Hinckley, 6 Cal. 284.

9. Where a simple contract creditor filed a bill against the assignee of his debtor, not attacking the assignment, and merely praying for a distribution; and the plaintiff subsequently filed a supplemental bill, setting forth that in the meantime he had become a judgment creditor, and attacking the assignment for fraud since discovered, and praying that it be set aside, and that the moneys in the hands of the assignee be appropriated to plaintiff's judgment: held, that it is no objection to the supplemental bill that it prays for a different relief, and fails to bring in all the other creditors who are alleged by the defendant to be entitled to a rateable distribution. Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 486.

10. The sale of the equity of redemption of mortgaged premises, and assignment of the rents thereof until foreclosure and sale to a creditor, cannot operate as a fraud upon the mortgagee, whose rights are secured, and may be enforced by foreclosure. Dewey v. Latson, 6 Cal. 616.

11. Creditors of a partnership have no interest in a partnership suit or proceeding for account and dissolution, and in the meantime they may pursue their remedies at law, and thereby secure a preference or lien upon the partnership assets. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 199; Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 156; Naglee v. Minturn, 8 Cal. 544.

12. Debts and credits are considered property in the statute. A judgment is a debt of record, and the parties to it are called the judgment creditor and debtor. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 203.

13. Where the defendant, in consideration of the extension by plaintiffs of a note held by them against A, executed a guaranty that the same should be paid within a specified time, with increased interest, by the checks of the defendant and from the proceeds of sales of his own property, and provided that a failure of defendant to comply with his guaranty should operate as a determination of the extension granted to A: held, that under the proviso the plaintiffs must first exhaust their remedy against A on the original demand, and that then they could compel the guarantor to make good the deficiency. Donahue v. Gift, 7 Cal. 242.

14. An order drawn by a creditor on his debtor is prima facie evidence of an assignment of the debt pro tanto, and if accepted will bind all parties. McEwen v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 260.

15. Where an account is verbally assigned to a creditor, with the understanding that in case he collect it he will credit his claim with a portion thereof, and return the balance to the assignor, but if nothing is received, no sum is to be credited, the assignment is void, and the assignee cannot sue thereon in his own name. Ritter v. Stevenson, 7 Cal. 389.

16. Testimony showing a fraudulent design in a vendor of goods is admissible under the allegations of an answer charging that the sale was made to defraud creditors, although it does not connect the purchaser with the fraud, or show that he was cognizant of such fraudulent design. Landecker v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 392.

17. A petition in insolvency must, under the statute, state the name of each creditor, if known, and if unknown, such fact must be stated. McAllister v. Strode, 7 Cal. 431.

18. To estop a party from claiming goods as against the creditor of a third person, it must appear that he stated to the creditors himself that he had sold the article to the third party; and that the creditor parted with some right or advantage on the faith of the information. Goodale v. Scannell, 8 Cal. 29.

19. A debtor of a partnership is justified in payment to the sheriff on an execution held by a creditor of the firm; and a debtor has a right to purchase cross demands against the partnership and to set them up as a defense to the debt due by him to the partnership. Naglee v. Minturn, 8 Cal. 544.

20. A creditor has a right to the substance of the contract as he has made it. It is his privilege to judge for himself whether it is to his interest for the agreement to be discharged in a particular way stipulated, or in a different mode, and neither the court nor the legislature can change it in any substantial particular. People v. Bond, 10 Cal. 571.

21. A conveyance giving a preference, is not fraudulent, though the debtor be insolvent, and the creditor be aware at the time that it will have the effect of defeating the collection of other debts. Dana v. Standfords, 10 Cal. 275.

22. There is no rule of law which prevents a debtor in insolvent circumstances from applying his property to the sole payment of one creditor rather than another. Randall v. Buffington, 10 Cal. 494.

23. A simple contract creditor of a common debtor cannot intervene in a foreclosure suit. Horn v. Volcano W. Co., 13 Cal. 69.

24. As against subsequent creditors a conveyance, even if voluntary, is not void, unless fraudulent in fact: that is, unless made with the view to future debts; though evidence of an intent to defraud existing creditors is deemed sufficient prima facie evidence of fraud against subsequent creditors. Ib. 71.

25. A trust of assets or property for creditors of itself suggests specific and well defined duties, and imposes specific and well defined obligations upon the trustees. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 287.

26. Where one having a claim to collect agreed with another to take his claim against the common debtor and treat it as his own in any suit brought for the debt, costs and expenses to be shared pro rata, and he prosecuted both claims, and bought the property in, he is not liable for money had and received. Herrick v. Hodges, 13 Cal. 433.

27. The lien of firm creditors is paramount to the lien of individual creditors. Conroy v. Woods, 13 Cal. 632.

28. The fact that an individual creditor obtains judgment, issues execution and levies on firm property, gives him no right to the property as against firm creditors who have not yet obtained judgment. Ib. 633.

29. In this State, each member of an incorporated company is answerable personally for his proportion of the debts and liabilities of the company. Each corporator is a principal debtor, and not a mere surety for the corporation, and in relation to the creditors of the corporation stands on the same footing as if it were an ordinary partnership. Mokelumne Hill C. & M. Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 266.

30. If the debtor at the time of or previous to payment neglects to designate to which of several debts he applies his payments, his right to control the application is gone, and the creditor may exercise it at any time before suit. Haynes v. Waite, 14 Cal. 448.

31. If, when a creditor takes a bill before maturity as collateral security for an antecedent debt, there be any change in the legal rights of the parties in relation to such debt, the creditor becomes a holder for value, and the bill is not subject to the equities between the original parties. Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 454.

32. Neither the husband nor the creditor can claim the proceeds or fruits of the separate estate of the wife. A law giving them such fruits is unconstitutional. George v. Ransom, 14 Cal. 660; 15 Cal. 323.

33. A tax is a personal debt, or in the nature of a personal debt due from the property holder, and not a mere charge upon the property created by and depending upon the regularity of the proceedings given by statute; and the legislature may prescribe a mode of correcting an informal assessment. People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 342.

34. Plaintiff sues defendants for partition of certain property. The court orders a sale of the property, and distribution of the proceeds. After the sale, G. files a petition, stating that he is creditor of one F. M. Harris, (not plaintiff) and has an attachment lien on the interest of said F. M. Harris in the property sold; that said property in fact belonged to F. M. Harris, and that any conveyances of the same from him to plaintiff were merely colorable for the use and benefit of F. M. Harris, and made to hinder, delay and defraud his creditors. G. asked the court to pay him the share of the proceeds of the partition sale coming to plaintiff. Court refused: held, that there was no error; that the petition of G. being an attempt to defeat a conveyance to plaintiff on the ground of fraud, is insufficient in this, that there is no allegation of the insolvency of F. M. Harris, and that the charges of fraud are too general, and do not state the specific facts constituting the fraud. Harris v. Taylor, 16 Cal. 349.

35. A conveyance in such case, however fraudulent as to creditors, may be good between the parties, and creditors cannot impeach it without showing that they have been injured by it. They must show that by the conveyance they have been deprived of their remedy at law, and are compelled to resort to equity. If the debtor have other property which may be reached by ordinary legal remedies, equity will not interfere. It must be affirmatively shown that such remedies have been exhausted, or that a resort to them would be fruitless. Ib.

DECISIONS.

1. When a case has been once taken to an appellate court, and its judgment obtained on the points of law involved, such judgment, however erroneous, becomes the law of the case, and cannot, on a second appeal, be altered or changed. Dewey v. Gray, 2 Cal. 377; Clary v. Hoagland, 6 Cal. 687; Gunter v. Laffan, 7 Cal. 592; California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 8 Cal. 592; Cahoon v. Levy, 10 Cal. 216; Davidson v. Dallas, 15 Cal. 82.

2. The legislature cannot require the supreme court to give the reasons of its decisions in writing. The constitutional duty of the court is discharged by the rendition of its decisions. Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 25.

3. A decision of the court is its judgment; the opinion is the reasons given for that judgment. Ib. 27.

4. A decision is entered of record immediately upon its rendition, and can only be changed through a regular application to the court, upon a petition for a rehearing or a modification. Ib.

DECLARATIONS OF DECEASED PERSON.

1. Evidence of the dying declarations of a deceased person are admissible on a trial for murder, upon the substantial ground of necessity. People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 36.

2. The verbal declarations of the deceased are admissible in evidence where the written declarations, signed by deceased, have been first introduced or their absence accounted for. Having done this, it is proper to admit proof of the fact that the deceased had, at different times, made the same statement. Ib. 37.

3. The declarations, on a question of boundary, of a deceased person, who was in a situation to be acquainted with the matter, and who was at the time free from any interest therein, are admissible, whether the boundary be one of a general or public interest, or be one between the estates of private proprietors. And their admissibility cannot be affected by the fact that they are reduced to writing, and were made under oath in a judicial proceeding. Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 280.

DECREE.

See JUDGMENT.

DEDICATION.

1. A dedication of land to the public use, as a street or highway, may be made by deed or other overt act, or may be presumed from lapse of time or acquiescence of the party. City of San Francisco v. Scott, 4 Cal. 116.

2. Where there is no abandonment or dedication of the land, the use for a limited time by the public cannot fairly raise the presumption of a dedication. Ib.

3. It requires stronger proof of dedication in the cases of roads in the country than that of streets or lanes in a town or city. Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 647.

4. To constitute a dedication of land for the purposes of a rural highway, no particular formality is necessary. The intention on the part of the owner to so dedicate is the vital question. Ib.

5. This intention may be manifested with or without writing, by any act of the owner; as throwing open his land to public travel, platting it and selling lots bounded by streets designated on the plat, or acquiescence in the use of land as a highway; and hence time is not an essential ingredient in the act of dedication. Ib.

6. Time, though often a material ingredient in the evidence, is not an indispensable ingredient in the act of dedication. If the soil be accepted and used by the public in the manner intended by the owner, the dedication is complete, precluding the owner and all claiming in his right from asserting any ownership inconsistent with such use. Ib.

7. Dedication is a conclusion of fact, to be drawn by the jury from the circumstances of each particular case; the whole question, as against the owner of the soil, being whether there is sufficient evidence of an intention on his part to dedicate the land to the public use as a highway. Ib. 648.

8. The idea of a dedication to the public of a use of land for a public road must rest on the clear assent of the owner in some way to such dedication. Ib. 649.

9. Where a portion of land claimed under a Mexican grant, being uninclosed and waste, has been used as a road for public travel for a series of years, and pending proceedings by the claimant for confirmation of his grant, the land being for the most part in the actual possession of settlers, and the claimant being aware that the land was so used and not objecting to it: held, that this does not constitute a dedication of the land used as a road to public use; that the land being in litigation between the government and claimant, both as to the right and boundaries, the claimant had a right to wait under the statute until after a patent issued, without prejudice to his right of action by lapse of time; that he was not bound to fence in the whole land to rebut the presumption of dedication of a smaller part. Ib. 650.

10. An order of the board of supervisors of a county that all roads now traveled by wagons and pack mules within the limits of the county "be and the same are hereby declared public highways," though not valid as transferring the title of the land to the public, still may be good evidence, in connection with other proof, to show a control on the part of the county over a road as a public highway, and a knowledge of such control on the part of the owners of the land, and thus to furnish a circumstance from which a dedication may be inferred. Ib.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. The first step in the construction of a deed is to ascertain the understanding and intention of the parties contracting, and the situation of the parties and the subject matter at the time of contracting should be considered; the whole deed should be taken together, and if possible, effect should be given to all its parts, although the immediate object of inquiry be the meaning of an isolated clause. Brannan v. Mesick, 10 Cal. 106.

2. It is not necessary that a water right must be conveyed by deed, so as to pass the legal title from grantor to grantee. Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 36.

3. Whether the conditions of a deed are complied with or not is matter between the grantor and grantee, with which third persons have nothing to do. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 115.

4. The deed to a house is held to include the land on which it is, and it would be absurd to hold that a deed to a mill, only of use because of the water which moves it, does not include the right to the waters, especially when the phrase et cetera, to which Lord Coke attaches such extension of meaning, is used. McDonald v. Bear River Auburn W. and M. Co., 13 Cal. 236.

5. A complaint in ejectment should not set out the mesne conveyances through which plaintiffs deraign title. These are matters of evidence, not of pleading, and should be stricken from the complaint on motion. Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 572.

II. OF A MARRIED WOMAN.

6. Defective deeds and acknowledgements of married women cannot be reformed in chancery. Selover v. American Russian Comm. Co., 7 Cal. 275; Barrett v. Tewksbury, 9 Cal. 15.

7. A deed properly executed and acknowledged by the wife of her separate property, with the assent of her husband underwritten—not under seal, but properly acknowledged—is sufficient to pass title. Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 574.

8. A deed which recites the title of the wife and then declares that the husband unites in the conveyance, in pursuance of the statute, is sufficient. A substantial compliance with the statute is all that is required. Ib. 577.

9. The wife cannot convey her separate estate, acquired before the act of 1850, whether legal or equitable, except by the joint deed of herself and husband. Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 497.

10. A deed to a married woman is prima facie valid. Ib. 500.

III. SUFFICIENCY OF A DEED.

11. It is essential to the validity of a deed that there should be a legal capacity in the grantor to convey and in the grantee to receive, and if either be wanting the instrument is invalid. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 274.

12. A deed purporting to convey real estate, executed by an agent or attorney in his own name instead of the name of his principal, is not binding upon the latter and does not transfer the title to the property. Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 414.

13. An ordinary quit claim deed is sufficient to enable the grantee to maintain ejectment, if the grantor could have done so. Sullivan v. Davis, 4 Cal. 292.

14. An instrument setting forth that A "has this day sold" a piece of land to B, for a sum of money then paid and a further consideration agreed to be paid, and further providing that, on payment of said further agreed consideration, the said A "binds himself, his heirs, etc., to make a general warranty deed of said land, free and clear from all persons claiming through or under him:" held, to be an executory contract for a deed, and not a present conveyance. Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Cal. 414.

15. A power to sell and convey property is special and must be strictly pursued, and the agent can only transfer the property by deed for a valid consideration. Depont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 367.

16. A deed made under and in pursuance of a general power of attorney, which authorizes the attorney "to make and execute conveyances," and where the purchase money was received by the principal, cannot be assailed for the want of authority to execute it. Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 376.

17. There is no peculiar form for the signing of a deed. Any writing which clearly shows that a party has adopted a sealed instrument as his own, intended to be bound by the contents of it, is, if not formal, at least a sufficient execution to satisfy the statute. Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 578.

1. Description.

18. A deed for "one-half of my lot," accompanied by proof that the grantor owned at the time but one lot in the place, is not void for uncertainty in the description. Lick v. O'Connell, 3 Cal. 63.

19. Such a deed only conveys an undivided half of the said lot, and the grantee can only take as tenant, in common with the grantor. Ib.

20. A deed of "the following described property, situate, lying and being in the city of Sacramento and State of California, consisting of two thousand two hundred town lots, be the same more or less, said lots being bounded according to the original plot or plan of said city," is void, on account of a patent ambiguity which cannot be cured by parol evidence. Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 312.

21. The assertion of quantity in a deed must yield to a description by metes and bounds, or by name or number. Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 164.

22. A power of attorney to sell land must contain some description of the property to be sold, unless it be shown aliunde that the land in controversy is the only land owned by the principal at the time. Stafford v. Lick, 13 Cal. 242.

23. Land outside of a city or incorporated town must be described by metes and bounds—the number of acres as nearly as possible, and the locality and township must be given. Lachman v. Clark, 14 Cal. 133.

24. A deed to a defendant being admitted as prima facie evidence, the question as to the identity and description of the premises is a matter of subsequent proof. McCartney v. Fitz Henry, 16 Cal. 186.

2. Consideration.

25. As to instruments under seal generally, the American rule seems to be that the consideration clause in a deed can be explained by parol proof; at least, where

---

 Consideration.—Delivery.—Void Deed.

---

the consideration proven is of the same species as that mentioned in the instrument. Bennett v. Solomon, 6 Cal. 137.

26. Where the deed contains a covenant that, in case the grantees therein named shall pay a certain sum of money before a certain day, "then this instrument is to take effect as a full and complete conveyance in fee of all and singular the lands, tenements, hereditaments, appurtenances and real estate in the State of California belonging to and in which the said party of the first part, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns is or are in any way entitled or interested:" held, that the payment of the purchase money was a condition precedent to the vesting of the legal estate; that it was the event which cast the title and not the deed; and the rational intention gathered from the terms of the instrument is, that the grantor only bound himself to convey upon the payment of the purchase money. Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 311.

27. Where in an action on a promissory note the defense set up is that the defendant executed said note as the consideration for a deed from plaintiff, who had an interest therein, the defendant, if he would avoid payment, must offer to surrender the deed to be canceled, so that both parties could have been remitted to their original rights. Tissot v. Throckmorton, 6 Cal. 473.

28. The defendants are not bound to tender a deed and demand the purchase money back in order to avoid a contract. In this State there is no rule on the subject, but in England it is the duty of the vendee to tender a deed. Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 573.

29. Where the court below, sitting as a jury, found that a sale was not made in good faith, and was without consideration, but failed to find as a fact a fraudulent intent, and entered judgment accordingly in favor of a subsequent purchaser: held, to be error. Gillan v. Metcalf, 7 Cal. 137.

30. There is no conclusion of fraud springing from the want of consideration in a deed which will enable a stranger to attack it, though it is a circumstance among others from which fraud may be inferred. Id. 139.

31. Where a parent executes to his infant son a deed in consideration of services performed, it must be considered as a voluntary conveyance without legal consideration, as he is not legally bound to pay for his son's services. Such a deed is, therefore, void against the creditors of the parent, if made when his remaining property is insufficient to pay his debts. Swartz v. Hazlett, 8 Cal. 120.

32. Where a purchaser of land does not obtain the title which the deed purported to convey and the covenants embrace, and he goes into and retains possession under the deed, and the failure of the title goes to the entire consideration paid or to be paid for the land, then he must seek his remedy by a rescission of the contract, alleging a paramount title in another, and offering to redeliver possession and account for the rents and profits. Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 404.

33. An action for a false and fraudulent representation as to the naked title in the vendor of real estate cannot be maintained by the purchaser who has taken possession of the premises sold under a deed with express covenants. Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 225.

34. A nominal consideration stated, and the operative words of transfer, grant, bargain, sell and convey, do not change the character or object of the deed. Barker v. Koneman, 13 Cal. 11.

3. Delivery.

35. Delivery of a deed is a question of fact, to be determined by the jury, and depends more upon the intention of the parties than upon the mode of fulfilling the intention. Hastings v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 318.

36. Where a deed is offered in evidence which purports on its face to be a deed of bargain and sale for an alleged consideration, executed and acknowledged by the defendant, and on the same day recorded, it is some evidence to go to the jury of the delivery of such deed. Bensley v. Atwill, 12 Cal. 236.

IV. VOID DEED.

37. A party cannot by the Mexican law acquire possession beyond the metes and bounds of his actual occupancy, unless he claims to hold under what is termed a "just title;" and a deed void on its face is not a just title. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 272.

38. A deed from an Indian to a white person is a nullity on its face, and no one can derive title under it. Such a conveyance is contrary to the policy of Spanish and Mexican as well as American law, and is strictly forbidden. Ib. 278.

39. Where a deed is void upon its face as being in violation of law, the party claiming under it is chargeable with knowledge of the law and of the invalidity of the deed. Ib. 280.

40. A deed made to a man who is dead at the time of its execution is a nullity. Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 376.

41. Death of a principal revokes the authority of the grant; and a deed of land made by him after such death does not bind the representatives of the principal. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 16.

V. FRAUDULENT CONSIDERATION.

42. Where defendant sold a lot to plaintiff, by deed of bargain and sale, for $6,000, and plaintiff, supposing himself to be the owner thereof, paid taxes thereon, and afterwards discovered that his grantor had previously conveyed the lot; and the court finds as a fact that defendant knew of his prior conveyance, and that the money was fraudulently obtained—the procurement by defendant of a full title to the lot, and a tender of a conveyance of the same to plaintiff, will not bar the plaintiff's recovery of the purchase money and interest. Alvarez v. Brannan, 7 Cal. 508.

43. Where husband and wife execute a conveyance of their homestead, which the husband delivers to the purchaser before the purchase money thereof is paid, which is afterwards fraudulently attached in a suit brought by the real, though not the ostensible purchaser against the husband alone: held, that equity will compel a cancellation of the deed so obtained. Still v. Saunders, 8 Cal. 286.

44. An equitable action to set aside a fraudulent deed of real estate, when the effect would be to restore the possession to the defrauded party, is an act for the recovery of real estate, and governed by the statute of limitations applicable to such actions. City of Oakland v. Carpenter, 13 Cal. 552.

---

VI. DEMAND FOR A DEED.

45. A refusal in writing to execute a conveyance is evidence proving a demand of such conveyance. Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 341.

VII. COVENANTS IN A DEED.

46. The words "good and sufficient deed," in a covenant, refer only to the form of the conveyance, and not to the interest intended to be conveyed therein, differing from words of covenant and warranty. Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 573.

47. A covenant of nonclaim in a deed amounts to the ordinary covenant of warranty, and operates equally as an estoppel. Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 473.

48. But this covenant is confined to the estate granted, and where that is "the right, title and interest" of the grantor, instead of the land itself, the covenant does not estop him from setting up an after-acquired interest. Ib.

VIII. ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF A DEED.

49. A certificate of acknowledgment of a deed in the words, "Before me," etc., "personally appeared A. B., to be the individual described in, and who executed," etc., is bad, in omitting the word "known," or "proven," and the record of the conveyance on such a certificate imparts no notice to third parties. Wolf v. Fogarty, 6 Cal. 225; Henderson v. Grewell, 8 Cal. 584; Kelsey v. Dunlap, 7 Cal. 162.

50. A certificate of acknowledgment to a deed should state the fact of acknowledgment therein. Bryan v. Ramirez, 8 Cal. 466.

51. Where the officer taking an acknowledgment to a deed, certifies that the parties "were known to him," and omits the word "personally," it is still valid.

---

Hopkins v. Delany, 8 Cal. 87; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 512.

52. The certificate of the acknowledgment of a married woman to a deed must state that the contents of the deed were explained to her; otherwise it is defective, and will not pass her interest in the estate. Pease v. Barbier, 10 Cal. 440.

53. Where to a certificate of proof by a subscribing witness of the execution of a deed, the witness adds his signature, and the officer adds the usual part to an affidavit, such addition do not vitiate the certificate, if without them it shows a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute. The signature of the witness and the jurat may be rejected as surplusage. Whitney v. Arnold, 10 Cal. 532.

54. In acknowledgments to deeds, substantial conformity with the statute is sufficient. Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 83.

55. The certificate of acknowledgment of a notary public to a deed is not an act in pais, which he may exercise by virtue of his office at any time while in office. Bours v. Zachariah, 11 Cal. 292.

---

 IX. NOTICE OF REGISTRATION.

56. Although a deed be defective in the acknowledgment, so as not to entitle it to registration, it is not void, but is still good as between the parties, and as to all the world, except subsequent purchasers without notice. Hastings v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 319.

57. A deed defective in the acknowledgment should not be rejected as evidence for that reason, but should be admitted with instructions to the jury as to its effect in giving notice to third persons. Ib.

58. Where the plaintiff in ejectment claimed under a subsequent deed from the grantor in the above instrument, and the defendants held under the grantees named therein: held, that the record of said instrument in the county recorder's office, made June 20th, 1850, imparted no notice to the plaintiff, who purchased, July 9th, 1855, the registration of executory contracts, not being authorized or made notice by statute. Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 315.

59. Where the defendant bought the property in question and recorded his deed, but by mistake the number and description of the lots were omitted in the record, and plaintiff subsequently bought the same lots of the same grantor, and afterwards the common grantor of both procured the record of defendant's deed to be amended by interlineation of the description: held, that the plaintiff had no notice of the previous conveyance of the property. Chamberlain v. Bell, 7 Cal. 294.

60. Where commissioners in pursuance of a contract of a portion of the parties executing a partition deed, allotted to one G., who was not a party to the deed in partition, and release one hundred acres, and where the defendant claimed through the parties executing such contract, and both contract and deed were upon record at the time of the defendant's purchase: held, that the defendant in contemplation of law had notice of such contract of his predecessors and vendors, and that he is bound by it. Tewksbury v. Provizzo, 12 Cal. 25.

61. A deed recorded January 30th, 1850, by a person acting as recorder, by virtue of an election by the people without authority of law, is not properly recorded. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 115.

62. All the title which a vendor of land has at the time of his deed passes to the vendee, as against volunteers or donees, even though the deed, under which the vendor holds, be unrecorded. Snodgrass v. Ricketts, 13 Cal. 362.

63. The omission, in the record of a deed, to make the copy of a seal, or some mark to indicate the seal, does not vitiate the record; it is sufficient if it appear from the record, that the instrument copied is under seal; as for instance, where the deed purports to be under seal, and to be signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of the notary before whom it was acknowledged. Smith v. Dall, 13 Cal. 512.

---

 X. EVIDENCE OF A DEED.

64. Secondary evidence of the contents of a deed or grant is admissible where the possession of the original is traced to the possession of a party not in the State. Gordon v. Searing, 8 Cal. 50.

65. The evidence of the circumstances under which a deed was executed is admissible beyond question. It is not to contradict or vary the terms of the instrument, that the evidence is received, but to apply them to the subject matter. Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 162.

Evidence of a Deed.

66. To make a copy of an unrecorded deed evidence, the loss of the original being shown, the testimony of the subscribing witness to the deed, if such there be, should be had, at least, to the fact of the execution of the paper, unless they are shown to be without the jurisdiction of the court. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 115.

67. Evidence of circumstances and relations is admitted, not for the purpose of contradicting or varying the deed, but to establish an equity superior to its terms. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 125.

68. An affidavit by a party to the suit, that the original deed "is not in his possession or under his control," is sufficient to admit in evidence a certified copy only from the recorder's office, the deed having been properly acknowledged and recorded and the grantee being a third person. Skinker v. Flohr, 13 Cal. 638.

69. Where a deed of land in Yuba county, California, describes the grantor, W. Johnson, as "of the Island of Hawaii, Sandwich Islands," and after designating the property in which the interest of the grantor is conveyed as the tract situated in the county of Yuba, and known as "Johnson's ranch," and giving its boundaries, proceeds to state that the ranch was originally granted to Pablo Gutieras by the Mexican government, and has since been confirmed to the party of the first part, by the board of commissioners to ascertain and settle private land claims in California, and then in ejectment on a patent from the United States to William Johnson for this land—the patent being in evidence, and referring to Johnson as claimant, and as the person filing the petition before the land commission for confirmation of his claim under the grant to Pablo Gutieras, but not mentioning the residence of Johnson—this deed is offered in evidence, and objected to on the ground that there was no proof of the identity of the William Johnson of the deed with the William Johnson of the patent: held, that the deed, from the identity of names, and by its reference to the source of title, contains sufficient prima facie evidence as to identity of person to admit it in evidence; that before additional proof of such identity could be required, some circumstances must be shown to create doubts upon the point. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 552.

70. In this case the original deed was produced in court, and the case tried in Yuba county, where Johnson had formerly lived for years, and where his signature could probably have been easily proved or disproved, had there been any suspicion as to its genuineness. Ib. 554.

71. The sale of December 26th, 1853, under ordinance number four hundred and eighty-one, of the city slip property in San Francisco, being void, no title passed to the purchasers at that sale. The title to the property still exists in the city, except where deeds have since been taken under the acts of 1858 or 1860. The property remaining can at any time be taken possession or be disposed of by the city in the same manner as any other property belonging to her, except where her right to assert her title has been barred by the statute of limitations; and that statute does not run in favor of parties who affirm that the title never passed from the city, and sue for the recovery of the purchase money. McCracken v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 638.

72. The deed to plaintiff of the land bought being signed by the mayor of the city and sealed with the corporate seal—the mayor being the legal custodian of the seal, and it being affixed by his authority—is sufficient to entitle the deed to be read in evidence, and a party relying upon it need not go behind the seal for the purpose of showing authority for its execution. The seal is prima facie evidence that it was affixed by proper authority, and the deed is prima facie sufficient to pass the title. Ib.

73. The deed in this case is not a mere nullity. So far as passing the title to the land, or creating any right or interest against the city is concerned, the deed is inoperative and void, and may be attacked collaterally. But the objections to it do not appear on its face, and its invalidity must be shown by the party impeaching it by evidence aliunde. Ib. 640.

74. Prima facie it is a valid and sufficient conveyance, and a party holding under it must be deemed to hold adversely and not in subordination to the real title. Possession under it may ripen into a perfect title, and it cannot fail to prejudice the interests, if not the rights of the lawful owner. Ib.

75. Such being the effect of the deed in this case, plaintiff cannot recover the purchase money without procuring a reconveyance of the property and a surrender of the possession, so as to place the parties in statu quo. Ib.

---

 XI. ESTOPPEL BY A DEED.

76. A deed of release, conveyance and partition, providing for the appointment of commissioners to make partition of the land therein described, according to the terms therein set forth in the deed; and also by its terms providing that the release shall take effect upon the making of the partition and report by the commissioners of a map of the partition, which, together with the deed, is to be handed over to one F., who is to file the same for record in the proper office, is sufficient to estop a party thereto from controverting the deed. Tewksbury v. Provizzo, 12 Cal. 24.

77. The acceptance of a deed does not, in favor of a stranger—that is, one neither party nor privy to the deed—estop the grantee in fee from showing that the grantor had no title at the date of the deed. Schuhman v. Garratt, 16 Cal. 102.

78. Estoppels are mutual, and bind both parties or neither; and as a person neither party nor privy to a deed is not bound to acknowledge a title under it, so the grantee in the deed is not bound by it in favor of such person. Ib.

79. Whether this principle would be affected by the fact that the grantee in such case obtained actual possession under his deed, not determined. Ib.

 XII. WHEN A CLOUD UPON TITLE.

80. Where one has an outstanding deed which improperly clouds the title of the true owner, on the application of the latter, chancery will order such deed to be canceled and annulled. Shattuck v. Carson, 2 Cal. 589.

81. The jurisdiction of a court to enjoin a sale of real estate is coextensive with its jurisdiction to set aside and order to be canceled a deed of such property. It is not necessary for its assertion in the latter case that the deed should be operative, if suffered to remain uncanceled, to pass the title, or that the defense to the deed should rest in extrinsic evidence, liable to loss, or be available only in equity. It is sufficient to call into exercise the jurisdiction of the court, that the deed casts a cloud over the title of the plaintiff. As in such case the court will remove the cloud by directing the cancellation of the deed, so it will interfere to prevent a sale, from which a conveyance creating such a cloud must result. Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 131.

82. L. conveys real property by deed to the wife of M. for $4,000, which sum is recited in the deed as the consideration. Subsequently, M. and wife convey, by their joint deed, the property to plaintiff, for the consideration recited therein of $9,500. This deed was acknowledged by both husband and wife, and of the acknowledgment two certificates were endorsed by the notary, both of which were sufficient in form as to the acknowledgment of the husband, but only one of them was sufficient as to the acknowledgment of the wife—the other was defective. The deed was recorded with the defective certificate, the other being omitted. Later still, defendants H. & H. recovered judgment against M., which was duly docketed, and became, from the time of its docketing, a lien on his property in the county in which was situated the property embraced in the deed from L. to M. and wife. Upon this judgment execution was issued, placed in the hands of the sheriff, who levied it upon the property in said deed, and advertised for sale all the right, title and interest which M. had therein at the time said judgment became a lien, etc. Plaintiff files his bill to enjoin this sale: held, that an injunction lies; that the property acquired under the deed from L. to the wife of M. became community property, and as such was subject to the absolute disposition of the husband, and passed in full title to plaintiff under the deed to him. Held, further, that the fact that the deed from L. was taken in the name of the wife alone, created no inference that the property was her separate property, the deed having been made on a purchase; that the fact of purchase excludes the supposition of acquisition by gift, bequest, devise or descent, and that in the absence of proof that the property was purchased with the separate funds of the wife, the presumption that it is community property is absolute and conclusive; that the husband could sell the property by his sole deed without the concurrence of his wife, and that the fact that the deed was recorded with the defective certificate of her acknowledgment was immaterial, and that her signature was unnecessary and added nothing to the validity or completeness of the transfer to plaintiff. Ib.

83. And a deed from the sheriff upon an execution sale against the vendor of plaintiff, would have the same effect in casting a cloud upon the title as if the deed were made directly by such vendor. Such a deed from the sheriff, put on record, would create doubts as to the validity, as against the judgment creditor, of the previous transfer to plaintiff. Ib.

84. The true test by which the question whether a deed would cast a cloud upon the title of the plaintiff may be determined, is this: Would the owner of the property in an action of ejectment brought by the adverse party, founded upon the deed, be required to offer evidence to defeat a recovery? If such proof would be necessary, the cloud would exist; otherwise, not. Ib.

85. Every deed from the same source through which plaintiff derives his real property must, if valid on its face, necessarily cast a cloud upon the title. Ib.

XIII. A DEED CONSTRUED AS A MORTGAGE.

86. Parol evidence is admissible in equity to show that a deed, absolute upon its face, was intended as a mortgage. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 125, overruling Lee v. Evans, 8 Cal. 124, and Low v. Henry, 9 Cal. 538.

87. A deed of land from A. to F., reciting the consideration at one hundred dollars, and a contract not under seal, not acknowledged nor recorded from F. agreeing to reconvey the land to A. upon payment within a given time of $8,600, with interest at a specified rate, deducting the rents and profits of the land during the period limited for payment, were delivered between the parties at the same time; held, that the deed is not a mortgage in the absence of proof; that the consideration for it was a debt preëxisting or created at the time, and still subsisting between the parties; that the provision in the contract of reconveyance, relative to the payment of interest and the rents and profits, do not necessarily imply the existence of a debt which is essential to a mortgage. People v. Irwin, 14 Cal. 435.

XIV. DEED OF A HOMESTEAD.

88. To make a valid sale of the homestead requires the joint deed of the husband and wife. Separate deeds of the husband and wife are both invalid. Poole v. Gerrard, 6 Cal. 73.

XV. DEED OF SEPARATION.

89. Courts of equity will enforce the stipulations of a deed of separation whenever it affects rights to property or income, and sometimes where the jurisdiction has attached on account of questions relating to property, it will even lend its aid collaterally to enforce the stipulation for a separation. Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 164.

90. A deed of land on the part of the husband to a trustee, securing the payment of an annuity to the wife, in consideration of an indemnity by the trustee against all debts of the wife, for maintenance and other account, is valid and supported by a valid consideration. Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 494.

XVI. TRUST DEED.

91. A deed by a husband of his separate real estate to a trustee, for the benefit of his wife, whether executed in compliance with an ante-nuptial contract, or by way of settlement upon his wife, independent of any previous contract, the husband being at the time free from debts and liabilities, is valid. Barker v. Koneman, 13 Cal. 11.

92. A deed of trust, the trustee not being the creditor, but a third party, given to secure a note, and authorizing the trustee to sell the land at public auction, and execute to the purchaser a good and sufficient deed of the same, upon default in paying the note or interest as it falls due, and out of the proceeds to satisfy the trust generally, and to render the surplus to the grantor, etc., is not a mortgage requiring judicial sale and foreclosure. Kock v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 262.

---

 XVII. SHERIFF'S DEED.

93. A claim of title, by virtue of a sheriff's deed, is insufficient without showing the judgment which authorized the sale. Sullivan v. Davis, 4 Cal. 292.

94. The title to real estate sold at sheriff's sale does not pass until the execution and delivery of the sheriff's deed. Anthony v. Wessel, 9 Cal. 104.

95. A sheriff, who sells land under execution, and gives a certificate of the sale to the purchaser, and subsequently his term of office expires, is the proper person to make the deed. Ib.

96. Where parties claim under a deed executed by the sheriff, upon a sale on execution, they are chargeable with notice of the defects in the judgment upon which the execution issued. Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 497.

97. Where a sheriff's deed is executed by a deputy, in the name of a sheriff whose term of office had expired at the time of the execution of the deed, the authority of the deputy must be shown to authorize such deed to be real as evidence in an action of ejectment. Cloud v. El Dorado County, 12 Cal. 134.

98. On mandamus by the assignee of a sheriff's certificate of sale to compel the execution of a deed, the question whether such certificate is not merged in a deed made to the assignee by the execution debtor after the sale, cannot be tried. The right to the deed is the only matter in controversy. People v. Irwin, 14 Cal. 436.

99. Where a defendant in ejectment brought upon a sheriff's deed, executed upon a purchase made on a sale under a decree of foreclosure, and was also a party to the foreclosure suit, he is concluded by the decree from setting up a title which was in that suit adjudicated against him. Clark v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 637.

100. The damages which a plaintiff can recover in an action of ejectment, for the use and occupation of the premises, are such as arise subsequent to the accruing of his rights of possession, and when his right depends upon a sheriff's deed, he cannot recover in this form of action for the use and occupation for the six months intervening the sale and the execution of the deed. Ib.

---

 XVIII. TAX DEED.

101. To sustain a title upon a tax deed, every prerequisite to the exercise of the power of sale by the officer must be shown to have been accomplished. Ford v. Holton, 5 Cal. 321.

102. To sustain a title by virtue of a tax collector's deed, it has, by the best authorities, been held that every prerequisite to the exercise of the power of sale by the officer must be shown to have been accomplished. Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 250; Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 632.

103. An assessment of property as "a ranch commonly known as 'Clark's Ranch,' situated on the Auburn road, two miles south of Grass Valley, in Nevada county, State of California," is insufficient, and a deed on a sale under it is void. Lachman v. Clark, 14 Cal. 133.

2. If a summons be radically defective it will not support a judgment by default. People v. Woodlief, 2 Cal. 242.

3. A judgment by default will be set aside on the ground of fraud or surprise. Bidleman v. Kewen, 2 Cal. 250.

4. The court below, sitting as a jury, must find separately the facts and conclusions of law, or the verdict will be set aside; but this rule does not apply to a judgment by default against one defendant where there are two, and the other goes to trial. Brown v. Brown, 3 Cal. 111.

5. Where a default is entered and judgment had, and no testimony appearing, the presumption is that the judge informed himself as to the matter of complaint in a proper and regular manner, and such judgment will be affirmed. Crane v. Brannan, 3 Cal. 195.

6. A final judgment by default can properly be rendered upon an unliquidated demand where the defendant has been notified in the summons of the amount for which the plaintiff will take judgment. Hartman v. Williams, 4 Cal. 255.

7. A defendant who has suffered default is not a competent witness to prove that he was authorized by his codefendant to sign his name to a note, as by so doing he would reduce the amount of judgment against himself. Washburn v. Alden, 5 Cal. 465.

8. The want of an allegation of actual ouster in a complaint in ejectment is a defect which cannot be cured by a default taken through the mistake or inadvertence of defendant's counsel. Watson v. Zimmerman, 6 Cal. 47.

9. At common law, default confessed every issuable fact stated in the declaration, and could only be set aside for objections to the declaration which would have been good on general demurrer. Harlan v. Smith, 6 Cal. 174; Rowe v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 444; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 558; McGregor v. Shaw, 11 Cal. 48; Hunt v. City of San Francisco, 11 Cal. 259; Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 119; Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

10. In an action brought jointly against two defendants on a joint and several obligation, the entry of final judgment on default against one of the defendants is a discharge of the other. Stearns v. Aguirre, 6 Cal. 180.

11. Service of summons on a party in possession of the property who does not appear to be one of the officers named, will not entitle the plaintiff to judgment by default. Aiken v. Quartz Rock Mariposa Gold Mining Co., 6 Cal. 186.

12. Where a defendant made default he cannot then raise the objection that the complaint set out an unlawful occupation as the cause of action, unless it appears on the face of the complaint; he should have established it in his defense. Whipley v. Flower, 6 Cal. 632.

13. An order of court setting aside a default and judgment entered during vacation is regular and correct where there has been no service of summons upon the defendants. Pico v. Carrillo, 7 Cal. 32.

14. A judgment by default, where summons has been served on defendant, cannot be attacked collaterally for a mere irregularity of service or for a defective return. Dorente v. Sullivan, 7 Cal. 280.

15. An appearance in the supreme court on a former appeal does not absolve the defendant from the necessity or from the consequences of his neglect to do so, by which a default is taken. Grewell v. Henderson, 7 Cal. 292.

16. Where two defendants are jointly sued and service had on both, the clerk of the court has no authority to enter judgment by default against one, and his act in so doing is without color of law and void, and may be disregarded or set aside. Stearns v. Aguirre, 7 Cal. 449.

17. A judgment against an administrator, though in the form of a common money judgment by default, is valid, its only effect being to establish the validity of the claim. Chase v. Swain, 9 Cal. 136.

18. A judgment by default may as well be taken against an administrator as any other party. Ib. 137.

19. A judgment by default admits the facts alleged in the complaint in a justice's court, and no appeal will lie from such judgment in reference to such facts, there being no issue of fact. People v. County Court of El Dorado County, 10 Cal. 19; Funkenstein v. Elgutter, 11 Cal. 328.

20. A judgment by default may be taken against a corporation when the summons is properly served. Rowe v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 444.

* The code of April 29th, 1851, differs in this provision, by allowing a default to be entered by the clerk, and the judgment is final.

21. A default admits only the facts alleged in the complaint, but none other. Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 558.

22. A defective allegation may be cured by default or verdict, but not the entire absence of any allegation whatever. Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 269; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 559.

23. Where the complaint avers title as administrator, a default admits it. Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 119.

24. A defendant having no defense to an action cannot go into equity and enjoin a judgment by default on the ground that the sheriff's return of service on him is false, and that in fact he had no notice of the proceeding. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 141; Gibbons v. Scott, 15 Cal. 286; Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 202.

25. If a judgment by default be void because entered by the clerk without authority, that fact constitutes no ground for equity to interfere. Chipman v. Bowman, 14 Cal. 158.

26. Where the complaint shows no legal cause of action, a judgment by default can no more be taken than it can be over a demurrer. Abbe v. Marr, 14 Cal. 211.

27. Where an amended complaint in ejectment sets up title acquired after the commencement of the suit, and a judgment by default is regularly entered, the judgment is valid. Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

28. After judgment by default in ejectment a jury trial cannot be awarded, there being no issue. Ib.

29. If a judgment by default be void, because of the absence of the seal of the district court to the summons issued in the action in which the judgment was entered, or because of a defect in the certificate of the sheriff of the service of summons and copy of complaint, or because of irregularities of the clerk in entering the judgment, the district court can quash the execution issued on such judgment, and injunction to restrain the enforcement thereof does not lie. Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 202.

30. If such judgment be not void, but merely irregular, because of the defects named, and the defects can be reached by motion before judgment, or on appeal, then the complaint here, to enjoin the enforcement of the judgment, should aver that plaintiff has paid the claim for the recovery of which the action was brought, or that he has a valid defense to the same. Ib.

31. An affidavit by defendant that he was under the impression when he retained counsel in the case that the time to answer had not expired; that he did not recollect the precise day upon which the summons and complaint were served; and that he was quite ill at the time and did not as carefully note the time as he otherwise would have done, is entirely insufficient to open a judgment by default. Elliot v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 377.

II. APPEAL FROM THE JUDGMENT.

32. An appeal will lie from a judgment by default, for therein may exist errors as well as in a judgment rendered upon issue joined in the pleadings and trial by jury, which error may be corrected on appeal. Stevens v. Ross, 1 Cal. 97.

33. An injunction will not lie to enjoin a judgment by default on account of a defect in the return of the summons; the remedy is by appeal, or by motion to vacate the judgment. Pico v. Sunol, 6 Cal. 295.

34. On appeal, a judgment by default will be reversed, unless the record show service on the defendant, or appearance, though possibly a judgment so obtained could not be impeached collaterally. Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 68.

III. WHEN TAKEN PREMATURELY.

35. A judgment by default rendered before the time for answering expires, will be reversed upon appeal. Burt v. Scrantom, 1 Cal. 417; Parker v. Shephard, 1 Cal. 132.

36. Where a defendant is served with summons in a county other than that in which the action is brought, he has thirty days within which to answer, and a judgment by default rendered before the time for answering expires will be set aside.*

Burt v. Scrantom, 1 Cal. 146.

37. A judgment by default will be reversed in the supreme court, where the record shows that the defendant had not been legally served with process. Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 449.

38. Where a defendant was served with process but was not given the time allowed by statute to appear and answer, it would be a sufficient reason for the court to quash the writ on motion by an amicus curiae, or for extension of the time on defendant's motion, or a good objection on writ of error, arrest of judgment or motion for a new trial; but it cannot be said that the court had no jurisdiction of the person so as to make its judgment a nullity. Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 64.

IV. UPON PUBLICATION OF THE SUMMONS.

39. An appeal taken by defendant immediately after judgment on default, on the ground of insufficiency of the affidavit of publication of summons, the appellate court will not disturb the judgment, the defendant having his remedy in the courts below within six months after judgment. Guy v. Ide, 6 Cal. 101.

40. After the adjournment of the term a court loses all control over its judgments, except when personal service of summons has not been had, in which case a party may, within six months, move to set aside the judgment. Shaw v. McGregor, 8 Cal. 521.

41. The provision of the code authorizing judgment, personal and final, against an absent defendant, for whom the court has appointed an attorney, with privilege to come in and deny within six months, is not in violation of the constitution of the United States or of this State. Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 111.

*The code of April 29th, 1861, allows forty days in a county other than that in the same district.

DEFEASANCE.

1. Where the condition of a bond is to pay the debt of another, the condition operates merely by way of defeasance; and if a defendant chooses to put his obligation in that form he elects to be originally liable. Baker v. Cornwall, 4 Cal. 16.

2. Where an agreement operates by its terms a present and effectual change of ownership in the subject matter, the title is supposed in law to remain divested until it be affirmatively shown that the conditions of defeasance have happened. Myers v. South Feather Water Co., 10 Cal. 583.

3. The approval of a grant by the departmental assembly simply discharges the grant from liability to defeasance by the Mexican government, except for breach of its conditions subsequent. Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal. 409.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Where there are four defendants, and a case made out against one only, a nonsuit should be entered in favor of those defendants against whom no case is made, and the action allowed to proceed against the one alone. Acquital v. Crowell, 1 Cal. 193.

2. If it is intended to charge the defendants with taking possession of one or more parcels of land, distinct from the lot sued for in the complaint, of which one defendant is in possession, the claim against the others should not be included in the same action. Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 258.

3. Where it is clear that two or more defendants are not jointly liable, a joint judgment against both cannot be sustained, although each may be severally liable. Pierce v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 471.

4. It is error to sue two persons as co-defendants who have no joint interest in the subject matter of the suit, and are under no joint liability, and the mistake should be corrected in the court below. Sterling v. Hanson, 1 Cal. 480.

5. The code permits a party defendant whose name is unknown to be sued by any name. Morgan v. Thrift, 2 Cal. 563.

6. The plaintiff in ejectment may sue one or more defendants, and they may answer separately or demand separate verdicts; unless they do so, however, they will be concluded by a general verdict. Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 80.

7. A defendant in a foreclosure suit cannot object that his wife, who joined with him in the execution of the mortgage, is not made a codefendant. Powell v. Ross, 4 Cal. 198.

8. An appeal does not lie from an order of a chancellor making a new party defendant. Beck v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 375.

9. In an action against a married woman, alleged to be a sole trader under the act of 1852, on a contract executed by her as such, it is improper to join her husband with her as defendant, and a complaint so drawn is demurrable. McKune v. Mc Garvey, 6 Cal. 498.

10. In an action against defendants jointly indebted, where one only is served, a several judgment may be entered against him. Hirschfeld v. Franklin, 6 Cal. 609.

11. Where several defendants are declared against jointly, but no joint trespass is proven, the plaintiff can introduce evidence of a several trespass against one of the defendants, and recover against such defendant. McCarron v. McConnell, 7 Cal. 153.

12. The provision of the code that any person may be made defendant who has or claims an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination of the question involved, has no application to the action of ejectment. Garner v. Marshall, 13 Cal. 270.

13. A justice of the peace, after having entered the judgment according to law, has no right to alter it without notice to the defendant. Chester v. Miller, 13 Cal. 561.

14. Two defendants filed a joint plea of the statute of limitations, and the plea being held bad as to one defendant, the court, on the trial, permitted the other defendant to file a separate plea of the statute: held, that this was no such gross abuse of discretion as to enable the supreme court to revise it. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 254.

15. Where, on suit against defendants as members of a quartz company, one defendant pleads that he was not a member of the company, and the finding of the court is that the allegations of the complaint are true, and that said defendant was a member of the company as to plaintiff Parke, the finding supports a judgment for plaintiff. Parke v. Hinds, 14 Cal. 417.

16. Where judgment is entered against "the defendants," some of whom were not sued, though their names appeared as defendants by a mistake of the clerk in entitling the cause, the error may be corrected in the supreme court or the court below, on motion. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11.

17. If a defendant interposes no objection to trying an action of ejectment on a title acquired subsequently to the commencement of the action, and set up in an amended complaint, he cannot object after judgment. Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

18. Plaintiff, January 10th, 1858, in a suit entitled "C. v. M. and others, composing the Wisconsin Quartz Mining Co.," a corporation, attached a quartz mill and ledge belonging to the corporation. June 26th, 1858, the complaint was amended, so as to make the corporation, as such, the party defendant, and judgment was rendered against the company August 14th, 1858, the property sold, and plaintiff the purchaser. October, 1857, W. received from the corporation a chattel mortgage on this property, had decree of foreclosure August 9th, 1858, sale October following—W. the purchaser. Defendants here are in possession, under sheriff's sale on the decree. Plaintiff claims title under his judgment and sale: held, that he cannot recover; that he acquired no lien by his attachment, because the property attached belonged to the corporation, which was not a party to the suit until after the levy and return of the writ; that plaintiff's rights attach only from the date of his judgment, August 14th, 1858, and his lien being subsequent to the lien of W.'s judgment, August 9th, 1858, under which defendants claim, the latter have the better right. Collins v. Montgomery, 16 Cal. 403.

II. AS A WITNESS.

19. A codefendant is not a competent witness upon an issue where his testimony would enure to his own benefit; but would be to show that his codefendant is not jointly liable with him. Sparks v. Kohler, 3 Cal. 301; Johnson v. Henderson, 3 Cal. 369; Buckley v. Manife, 3 Cal. 442; Gates v. Nash, 6 Cal. 195; Lucas v. Payne, 7 Cal. 96; Turner v. McIlhany, 8 Cal. 579.

20. Where a codefendant is called generally as a witness, and he was clearly incompetent on one of the issues, the court should properly reject him, unless the examination is confined to the specific point. Sparks v. Kohler, 3 Cal. 301.

21. A defendant who has suffered default is not a competent witness to prove that he was authorized by his codefendant to sign his name to a note, as by so doing he would reduce the amount of judgment against himself. Washburn v. Alden, 5 Cal. 464.

22. A defendant who has not been served with process is not a competent witness for his codefendants in an action of trespass. Gates v. Nash, 6 Cal. 194.

23. A party who calls on an adverse party to testify, makes him a witness, and waives his incompetency, to be heard for himself, or his codefendant, or coplaintiff. Turner v. McIlhany, 8 Cal. 580.

DELIVERY.

1. Delivery of goods by the master, and payment of freight by the consignee are concurrent acts, and neither party is bound to perform his part of the shipping contract, unless the other is ready to perform the correlative act. Frothingham v. Jenkins, 1 Cal. 42.

2. Delivery of part of the goods mentioned in one bill of lading to the consignee does not defeat a lien on the remainder for the whole freight unpaid. Ib.

3. The master of a ship has a lien on the cargo for the freight, and is not bound to deliver to a consignee any part of the goods specified in a bill of lading, until the whole freight is paid; and an offer to give good security for the payment of the freight is not sufficient to compel a delivery by the master. Ib.

4. It is no answer to the action for non-delivery of the lumber that the plaintiff resold it soon after the purchase; it appearing that the purchaser from the plaintiff had a claim against him for non-delivery. Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 48.

5. On a sale of chattels where no time of payment or delivery are agreed upon, they are concurrent acts, and neither party can maintain an action for nonperformance without showing a readiness and willingness to perform on his part. Cole v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 54.

6. Upon part delivery of goods, and an inability on the part of the vendor to deliver the whole quantity sold, he is nevertheless entitled to recover the stipulated price of the quantity actually delivered, deducting therefrom the damages sustained by the purchaser on account of the nondelivery of the whole. Ib.

7. A mere parol agreement for the conveyance of land made before the adoption of the common law and the reenactment of the statute of frauds in this State, is void, there being neither delivery of possession nor of title deeds, and no payment of the purchase money. Harris v. Brown, 1 Cal. 100.

8. Where the terms of a verbal contract are reduced to writing, but the written paper is neither signed or delivered, the contract will be deemed inchoate and incomplete, and neither party will be bound by it. Hoen v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 121.

9. A contract for the sale of goods for the price of two hundred dollars or over is void, unless a note or memorandum thereof be made in writing and subscribed by the parties to be charged therewith, or unless the buyer shall accept or receive part of such goods, or shall at the time pay part of the purchase money. Bunting v. Beideman, 1 Cal. 182.

10. Under a verbal contract of sale of real estate, the delivery of the title deeds is equivalent to a symbolical delivery of and admission into possession of the property, as between vendor and vendee, whatever might be its effect in conferring actual possession, in case the rights of third persons were concerned. Tohler v. Folsom, 1 Cal. 212.

11. But where there was a verbal contract of sale in presenti, and the title deeds were delivered by the vendor to the vendee, and permission given to the vendee to enter upon and take possession of the land, and the vendee did accordingly take possession and made valuable improvements on the premises: held, that a specific performance of the verbal contract should be secured. Ib.

12. Words alone unaccompanied by acts cannot make out a delivery, to take the cause out of the statute. Gardet v. Belknap, 1 Cal. 402.

13. The consignee named in a bill of lading is to be deemed prima facie the owner of the goods mentioned therein, and upon payment of freight, may maintain an action against any person who assumes a control over them in violation of his right of property for their delivery. Webb v. Winter, 1 Cal. 418.

14. A delivery of an order for goods is only considered as a delivery of the goods themselves, when they are susceptible of an immediate delivery. Stevens v. Stewart, 3 Cal. 143.

15. Where the contract is for goods on a vessel, which are not yet discharged and cannot be delivered, there cannot be a defense of a delivery, which takes the case out of the statute, and a good, legal excuse for nondelivery. Ib.

16. Where the question is as to the kind of delivery which effects a change of property, although the goods cannot be immediately delivered, the delay may be imputed as one of the stipulations; but where the delivery is necessary to make a contract, a symbolical delivery can only be effectual where it can be followed by an actual delivery. Ib.

17. Where the owner of goods made a bona fide sale of them to a purchaser and delivered possession of them to him, and the purchaser immediately appointed the former owner of them his agent, to take charge of them and sell them, and for that purpose delivered the possession of them to him: held, that the sale was fraudulent and void as against the creditors of the original owner. Fitzgerald v. Gorham, 4 Cal. 290.

18. A complaint is insufficient which alleges an indebtedness and sets forth an account, but does not allege the sale or delivery of the articles to the defendant, nor show in what place or in what manner the indebtedness accrued—whether on account of the defendant or that of another. Mershon v. Randall, 4 Cal. 326.

19. Where the vendors cannot recover on their written contract, and there has been a partial delivery of the goods sold, they may recover the value of the goods so delivered on a quantum valebant. Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 358.

20. The omission to allege a delivery of a bond in an action on the bond can be taken advantage of only on demurrer. Garcia v. Satrustigui, 4 Cal. 244.

21. Delivery of a conveyance depends more upon the intention than upon the mode of fulfilling the intention. It is a question of fact to be determined by the jury. Hastings v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 318.

22. Where a contract stipulated for the delivery of a vessel, but designated no particular place for such delivery: held, that a notice of a readiness to deliver must be treated, under the contract, as an actual delivery. Albretson v. Hooker, 5 Cal. 178.

23. Where suits have been commenced before a magistrate against the drawers of prizes in a lottery to forfeit the prizes drawn to the State under the statute, a bill for an injunction against the owner of the lottery to restrain him from disposing of the prizes until the decision of those suits will properly lie in the district court. The prizes are forfeited as soon as drawn and before they are delivered. People v. Kent, 6 Cal. 90.

Delivery.

24. Service of a copy of execution and notice of garnishment upon a third party constitute no lien on property of the debtor in his hands capable of manual delivery. Johnson v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 196.

25. A complaint alleging that defendant sold to plaintiff certain fruit growing in an orchard, and after the sale executed a guaranty that they should be at plaintiff's disposal, and further alleging a demand for the same and the refusal of the defendant to deliver, is demurrable, as it should have contained an assignment of the breach of the contract or guaranty. Dabovich v. Emeric, 7 Cal. 212.

26. Where the plaintiff bought eight hundred sacks of flour on storage in a warehouse, which stood therein as a separate pile, the number of sacks in which was ascertained by counting the outside rows and the number of the pile marked on one of the sacks, and it was thus delivered to the purchaser, who permitted it to remain in the same place, where it was several days after attached as the property of the vendor: held, that the delivery was sufficient and the sale valid. Cartwright v. Phoenix, 7 Cal. 282; Horr v. Barker, 8 Cal. 608; 11 Cal. 403.

27. The mere signing an assignment of a mechanic's lien, without delivery, is insufficient to enable the assignee to maintain an action thereupon. Ritter v. Stevenson, 7 Cal. 389; 11 Cal. 27.

28. A levy on personal property capable of manual delivery must be made by taking the property in custody. If it is allowed to remain in the hands of the debtor, the levy cannot operate so as to defeat subsequent executions. Dutertre v. Driard, 7 Cal. 551.

29. When delivery and change of possession exist, the subsequent purchaser has notice, and if he purchase of the original vendor—then out of possession—there is nothing in the statute to give him relief. Vance v. Boynton, 8 Cal. 560.

30. The question of delivery and change of possession is a mixed question of law and of fact, but as to what shall constitute a delivery is a question of law alone. Ib.

31. The delivery of a warehouse receipt passes the title to the property the same as the delivery of a bill of lading. Horr v. Barker, 8 Cal. 614.

32. F. sold to P. certain goods, the possession of which P. retained for two or three days, when he leased the premises in which the goods were and delivered the goods to F.—his vendor—and one M., who, after carrying on the business in connection with F. for a few days, retired, leaving F. in the exclusive possession of the property: held, that there was not a sufficient delivery of the goods with a continued change of possession. Van Pelt v. Littler, 10 Cal. 394; Richards v. Schroeder, 10 Cal. 434; Hurlburt v. Bogardus, 10 Cal. 519.

33. A grantor, by the execution and acknowledgment of a deed, admits the delivery. Bensley v. Atwill, 12 Cal. 236.

34. There may be a delivery of a fraudulent deed without recording and a recording without a delivery, and the fraud is as complete without the actual delivery as with it, if the fraudulent intent be carried out. Fisk v. His Creditors, 12 Cal. 282.

35. There is no rule requiring a delivery as in formal deeds of an assignment in trust. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 287.

36. No delivery of personal property is necessary as against parties who are neither creditors or subsequent purchasers of such vendors. Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 495.

37. A sale is good as between the parties, whether possession be delivered or not, and only void as to creditors and subsequent purchasers. Visher v. Webster, 13 Cal. 61.

38. The execution of an undertaking, the delivery of it to the clerk, filing it among the papers with the affidavit, and the actual suspension of proceedings, are prima facie sufficient proof of delivery, if delivery is essential, as if the instrument were sealed. Dore v. Covey, 13 Cal. 510.

39. Action against the sheriff for selling plaintiff's wheat as the property of one Andeque. Evidence tending to show that the wheat was grown on the land of plaintiff and in his possession; that A. was on the land only to raise and harvest the crop; that the grain was cut and stacked on the premises; that the plaintiff was entitled to one-third by the contract between him and A., and that A. sold to plaintiff and delivered possession, and then abandoned the premises—plaintiff residing thereon. A. took no further control of the premises or crops, and plaintiff assumed entire dominion of both: held, that plaintiff was not bound to abandon his premises or carry the grain beyond them to protect his title against creditors of A.; that there was no error in refusing to instruct the jury that there was no evidence that the sale from A. to plaintiff was accompanied by an immediate delivery of the property, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession thereof. Pacheco v. Hunsacker, 14 Cal. 124.

40. What constitutes delivery under our statute depends on the character of the article and the circumstances of the case. Chaffin v. Doub, 14 Cal. 386.

41. Hay cut on land in possession of B. lies in three fields of about one hundred and fifty acres, in swaths, cocks, windrows and stacks. Plaintiff mowed it, and boarded with B. B. mortgaged the hay to plaintiffs for work, and they cease to board with B., whose dwelling is separated from these fields by a fence. Plaintiffs proceed to gather and stack the hay, until the levy of an execution on it, eight days afterwards, by defendant, as B.'s property: held, that even conceding removal from the premises to be essential to a complete delivery of the hay, still plaintiffs were entitled to reasonable time to do it, and that the court erred in assuming as matter of law that eight days was too long. Ib.

42. Plaintiff had two stacks of hay, and contracted to sell to defendant one stack, together with enough off of the other stack to make sixty tons. The price was to be eighteen dollars per ton; and the hay was to be baled by plaintiff, and piled up in a corral, and then he was to be paid. Plaintiff had sixty-two tons and four hundred pounds of hay baled and piled up in the corral, the surplus over sixty tons being by mistake of the man employed to bale. The bales were of different weight. The plaintiff then went to the house of defendant and told him that the hay was baled and piled up in the corral, and that there were two tons and some hundreds of pounds over the sixty bales piled up together, and asked defendant whether he would take the surplus. Defendant said he would be over soon and see about taking the surplus. Defendant then paid plaintiff two hundred dollars. Plaintiff sues for nine hundred and nineteen dollars, balance due on the hay. The court instructed the jury that if they believed from the evidence it was the understanding of the parties that upon the payment of the two hundred dollars by defendant the right and possession was deemed to have accrued to defendant to take the quantity bought as baled and stacked up in the corral, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, even though the bargain was not concluded as to the excess: held, that the instruction was right; that the question was, whether there had been a delivery, and any agreement of the parties upon the subject was legitimate matter for the jury; that the fact that the hay purchased by defendant was mixed with other hay belonging to plaintiff made no difference, if defendant agreed to accept it in that condition and consider it as delivered—the contract for delivery would be fully executed. Smith v. Friend, 15 Cal. 126.

43. On the above facts defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that "if plaintiff sold to defendant sixty tons out of sixty-two tons and four hundred and thirty pounds of hay, the same being in bales of different and unequal weights and containing different quantities, and all being in the same pile, there was no delivery without division had." The instruction was refused: held, that the refusal was not error, because the instruction assumed that there could not have been a delivery, whatever may have been the understanding of the parties, until the exact quantity contracted for was segregated and set apart for the defendant. Ib.

44. All the statute requires is that delivery must be made; the vendee must take actual possession; the possession must be open and unequivocal, carrying with it the usual marks and indications of ownership by the vendee. The possession must be continuous—not taken to be surrendered back again—not formal, but substantial. But it need not necessarily continue indefinitely when it is bona fide and openly taken, and is kept for such a length of time as to give general advertisement of the status of the property and the claim to it by the vendee. Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 506.

45. Although an answer denies the delivery of a bond and mortgage, still their possession by plaintiff is evidence of delivery. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 644.

46. Plaintiff also asked this instruction: "That a delivery at the wharf is not sufficient unless notice be previously given to the vendee of their arrival, and that suf-sufficient time be allowed to enable him to receive and remove them:" held, that this proposition is not strictly correct; that if the trees bargained for were put out on the wharf, marked W., with the intention of his taking them, and if this were done by his order, they would vest in him, especially if he was willing to consider this a good delivery; that there is in the testimony here no predicate laid for the doctrine of stoppage in transitu, or that plaintiff claimed the right to stop the trees. Thompson v. Paige, 16 Cal. 79.

4. A count in a complaint for money had and received, which does not allege a demand, is demurrable. Reina v. Cross, 6 Cal. 31.

IV. FOR RENT.

5. A demand for rent at any time during the term when the same might be due, will be sufficient diligence to hold a party who has guaranteed its payment. Evoy v. Tewksbury, 5 Cal. 287.

6. The relation of landlord and tenant existed between plaintiff and defendant on a parol demise from month to month, rent being payable in advance on the first day of each month. November 1st, 1858, defendant being in possession, denied plaintiff's title, and refused to pay rent. December 23d, 1858, plaintiff sued defendant in a justice's court for rent due November 1st and December 1st, 1858, and had judgment, which was paid. January 8th, 1859, plaintiff served on defendant notice to quit, on the ground of forfeiture for nonpayment of rent; defendant refused to quit or surrender the premises; plaintiff brings ejectment; defendant answers, denying, among other things, plaintiff's title and his own relation of tenant: held, that plaintiff is entitled to recover; that the denial of title and the relation of tenant made defendant a trespasser, not entitled to notice to quit; that no special demand for payment of rent was necessary to work a forfeiture; that defendant could not deny title and yet claim the benefit of holding in subordination to it. Smith v. Ogg Shaw, 16 Cal. 89; 92.

V. AGAINST AN AGENT.

7. In an action to recover money received by a person acting as agent, he cannot be arrested without showing some fraudulent conduct on his part, or a demand on him by the principal and a refusal by him to pay. An arrest in such case is prohibited by section fifteen, article first, of the constitution. Ex parte Holdforth, 1 Cal. 440.

8. On an action against an agent for not accounting, etc., a request to account and pay over must be alleged in the complaint, and proved at the trial. Bushnell v. McCauley, 7 Cal. 422.

9. The rule in relation to factors or consignees is well settled, that they are not liable to an action until a demand or instructions to remit. Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 457.

10. Where a defendant contracted with a factor who was in his debt for certain goods, but before he took them away was informed that a portion of them belonged to another, his taking such portion was an unlawful assumption of ownership and a conversion of the property, and no demand was necessary previous to bringing suit. Scriber v. Masten, 11 Cal. 306.

11. In suit against an agent for fraudulently appropriating money of plaintiff, defendant cannot, on the trial, object that the person making the demand on him before suit did not exhibit his authority so to do, unless defendant questioned his authority at the time of demand. Baxter v. McKinlay, 16 Cal. 77.

12. Where plaintiff deposits money with defendant, to be loaned out from time to time, the interest to be collected, and principal and interest held by him for plaintiff until called for, there is a continuous trust, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of defendant until after demand made by plaintiff. Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 176.

tions in the aggregate. Van Norden v. Buckley, 5 Cal. 284.

15. A demand upon the makers of a note was made at maturity, but the notice to the endorsers stated the demand to have been made on a day subsequent to maturity: held, that such notice was insufficient to bind the endorsers. Tevie v. Wood, 5 Cal. 394.

16. The presentment and demand of commercial paper having days of grace must be made within reasonable hours of the last day of grace. For the purpose of fixing the liability of endorsers, the note or bill is payable on demand at any time within those hours. McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 631.

17. In this State the English rule, that where a place of payment is named in a bill of exchange or promissory note it is a substantial contract, is not adopted, and it is not necessary to allege and prove a demand at the place specified. Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 327, overruling Wild v. Van Valkenburgh, 7 Cal. 167.

18. An endorser, after maturity of a promissory note, is entitled to demand and notice of nonpayment before he is liable to pay. Beebe v. Brooks, 12 Cal. 311.

19. The law requires a demand of a promissory note to be made within a reasonable time, and notice of nonpayment must be reasonably given. Ib.

20. Where a note, due January, 1857, was endorsed by the payee to the present holder, November 26th, 1858, and he, November 29th, 1858, demanded payment of the maker, and verbally notified the endorser of such demand, and that he would be held on his endorsement, it is no objection to the notice that it did not state the time of demand. The demand was good if made within a reasonable time, and before the notice otherwise as to notes endorsed before maturity. In such case, the notice must state the time of demand. Thompson v. Williams, 14 Cal. 163.

21. If much time intervenes between demand and notice in transfers after maturity, the question may arise whether the delay has not released the endorser. Ib.

22. A notice by the holder that he "had demanded payment of that note," implies that payment was demanded of the person liable to pay, to wit: the maker; and the declaration that he intended to look for payment to defendant,

VI. ON A PROMISSORY NOTE.

13. By the statute concerning notaries public, notes are made protestable; and the protest of a notary is expressly made evidence of demand and nonpayment of notes as well as bills. Connolly v. Goodwin, 5 Cal. 221.

14. Where payment by the maker to the endorser is relied upon as an excuse for want of demand and notice, it must be payment directly and specifically for the note, and not as security for all transac-

the endorser, implies the fact of nonpayment. Ib. 164.

23. An endorser of a note payable on demand, no demand being made until thirteen months after the endorsement to plaintiff, is prima facie not liable. The delay is unreasonable. Jerome v. Stebins, 14 Cal. 458.

24. In such case, facts to excuse the delay are an essential part of the complaint, and if not averred therein, it is insufficient. Ib.

VII. ON A CLAIM AGAINST AN ESTATE.

25. The failure of the plaintiff to allege in his complaint in an action on a claim against an estate, its presentation to and rejection by the administrator, is an objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Ellisen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 363; Falkner v. Folsom, 6 Cal. 412; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 560.

VIII. OF PROPERTY UNLAWFULLY TAKEN.

26. Where the defendant contracted with a factor, who was in his debt, for certain goods, but before he took them away was informed that a portion of them belonged to another, his taking such portion was an unlawful assumption of ownership and a conversion of the property, and no demand is necessary previous to bringing suit. Scriber v. Masten, 11 Cal. 306.

1. By an Officer of the Law.

27. In an action against a sheriff by A for seizing the property of A on an execution against B: held, that no demand was necessary before bringing suit, if the officer was previously informed of the claim. Ledley v. Hays, 1 Cal. 161.

28. An officer attaching goods under civil process is entitled to notice of the claim of a third party to the goods, and a demand for them, or he is not liable in damages to such party for such seizure and detention. Taylor v. Seymour, 6 Cal. 514; Daumiel v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 44; Killey v. Scannell, 12 Cal. 75.

29. Where the seizure of property is originally acquired by a tort, no demand previous to the institution of suit for its recovery is necessary. Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 495.

DEMURRAGE.

1. Where a vessel is seized and detained by a revenue officer of the United States, the charterer cannot be made liable for demurrage during the period of such detention. Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 483.

2. If under a charter party, a vessel is seized by custom house officers, the question should be settled whether the seizure were legal, and if occasioned by any act or neglect on the part of the master, the owners would be entitled to freight, subject to a deduction for damages for the delay; but they could not recover for demurrage. If the seizure were legal and occasioned by any act or neglect on the part of the freighters—as neglecting to pay duties—then the owners can recover full freight, and perhaps demurrage. Ib. 485.

DEMURRER.

- I. In general.
- II. Admits the facts in the Complaint.
- III. No Demurrer necessary to a defective Bill in Chancery.
- IV. Appeal from a Demurrer.
- V. In Criminal Cases.
- VI. In Quo Warranto.
- VII. Waiver of Demurrer.
- VIII. When a Demurrer is improper.
- IX. Judgment upon Demurrer.
- X. Special Demurrer.
  1. In general.
  2. To Jurisdiction.
  3. Another action pending between the same parties for the same cause.

In general.—In Criminal Cases.—Waiver of Demurrer.

4. That there is a defect of parties.
5. That several causes of action have been improperly united.
6. That the Complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. A demurrer "that the court has no jurisdiction either of the persons of the defendants or of the subject of the action," and "that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action," is sufficiently explicit, under the rule of construction adopted by the courts of this State. Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 393.

2. Unless the alleged defect in the pleading can be included under one or more of the causes of demurrer laid down in the code, a demurrer cannot be sustained. Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 558.

II. ADMITS THE FACTS IN THE COMPLAINT.

3. A demurrer in effect admits the truth of the facts alleged. Selkirk v. Sup. of Sacramento County, 3 Cal. 326; Tuolumne Water Co. v. Chapman, 8 Cal. 397; Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 578.

III. NO DEMURRER NECESSARY TO A DEFECTIVE BILL IN CHANCERY.

4. Where a bill in chancery shows on its face that the plaintiff is not entitled to relief, the defect may be taken advantage of in the appellate court, even though no demurrer be filed. White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 525; Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 143.

IV. APPEAL FROM A DEMURRER.

5. No appeal can now be taken before final judgment from a mere decision on a demurrer. Moraga v. Emeric, 4 Cal. 303.

6. No appeal lies to the supreme court from an order of the court below overrul-ing a demurrer to an indictment. People v. Ah Fong, 12 Cal. 424.

V. IN CRIMINAL CASES.

7. The insufficiency of an indictment should be taken advantage of by demurrer. People v. Josephs, 7 Cal. 130; People v. Apple, 7 Cal. 290.

8. No appeal lies to the supreme court from an order of the court below overruling a demurrer to an indictment. People v. Ah Fong, 12 Cal. 424.

9. Demurrer to an indictment for perjury being sustained, the district attorney took no exception, but moved for and obtained an order submitting the case to another grand jury. Subsequently the people appeal from the order sustaining the demurrer: held, that the failure to except and taking this order was an acquiescence in the judgment on demurrer, and a waiver of any right to appeal. People v. Wooster, 16 Cal. 435.

VI. IN QUO WARRANTO.

10. If the complaint in quo warranto be defective in alleging that defendant is in possession of the office without lawful authority, the defect must be reached by special demurrer. People v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 45.

11. In quo warranto for an alleged usurpation of the office of pilot for the port of San Francisco, the complaint avers that defendants hold, use, exercise, usurp and enjoy the office without a license, and also contains allegations as to the right of relator to the office: held, that these allegations as to relator's right cannot be reached by general demurrer, the complaint being good as against the defendants; that they are not interested in the question as to the rights of relator, but only in the determination of their own right to the office. People v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 364.

VII. WAIVER OF DEMURRER.

12. When a demurrer to a complaint is put in and then overruled, and the defendant answers, the answer is a waiver of the demurrer.* De Boom v. Priestly, 1 Cal. 107; Pierce v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 471; Brooks v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 481.

When a Demurrer is improper.—Judgment upon Demurrer.

13. Where a demurrer is sustained and plaintiff amends by making two counts instead of one, he cannot after the trial complain of error in sustaining the demurrer. He should have gone to trial on the pleadings where the judgment on demurrer left them. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 28.

14. Although it does not appear from the record on appeal that a demurrer to the complaint was formally disposed of, yet if it does appear in the statement that one of the errors relied on is "the ruling of the court on demurrer, and that the same should have been sustained;" and if the appellant went to trial without insisting on a disposition of the demurrer, he cannot object in the supreme court that the demurrer was not formally disposed of. De Leon v. Higuera, 15 Cal. 494.

VIII. WHEN A DEMURRER IS IMPROPER.

15. Objections to a complaint, when they arise from matters of form, are not subject of a demurrer. Otero v. Bullard, 3 Cal. 189.

16. Unless defects are alleged as the grounds of a demurrer, the party cannot avail himself of it. When the grounds of a demurrer are either technical or otherwise unsubstantial, no effect will be given them. Montifiori v. Engels, 3 Cal. 434.

17. Objections to the prayer of a complaint cannot be taken by demurrer. Rolins v. Forbes, 10 Cal. 300.

18. The want of any averment of special damage in a complaint could not be reached by demurrer. McCarty v. Beach, 10 Cal. 464.

19. It is no ground of demurrer to a complaint that the christian name of one of the plaintiffs does not appear. Nelson v. Highland, 13 Cal. 75.

20. Where a suit for real estate is brought in the wrong county, a motion to change the venue, and not demurrer, is the proper remedy. Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 324.

IX. JUDGMENT UPON DEMURRER.

21. A judgment upon demurrer is not always a bar to a subsequent action. It is only so where it determines the merits of the case. Robinson v. Howard, 5 Cal. 429.

22. Where the answer shows that the demurrer was to the validity of the contract which gave rise to the claim, and this averment is found to be true, the judgment upon demurrer is a bar to the suit. Ib.

23. When a final judgment or demurrer to the complaint sustaining the demurrer is reversed, the plaintiff has a right to amend on application to the court below. Phelan v. Supervisors of San Francisco County, 9 Cal. 16.

24. Where a record shows that a demurrer was interposed to the complaint, and was sustained by the court, and afterwards, during the same term, a judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, the court will not presume that the order sustaining the demurrer was set aside by the court before judgment was rendered. Seaver v. Cay, 9 Cal. 565.

25. It is error to render final judgment on demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. Where the complaint is defective the court should sustain the demurrer with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint; and if the plaintiff then declines, judgment final should be given. Gallagher v. Delaney, 10 Cal. 410.

26. Where a demurrer to a complaint is overruled, and an application subsequently made for leave to file an answer, the allowance of the application rests in the discretion of the court subject to review in case of its arbitrary or unreasonable exercise. Thornton v. Borland, 12 Cal. 439.

27. If, after the demurrer to a complaint sustained, defendant does not offer to amend, final judgment against him will not be disturbed. Smith v. Yreka Water Co., 14 Cal. 201.

*These decisions were made when the code permitted appeals from an interlocutory order, which was restricted by the amendment of 1854. See note, p. 98.

Special Demurrer.

X. SPECIAL DEMURRER.

1. In General.

28. A complaint was filed to compel a copartnership account, and contained sufficient to call upon the defendants for an account as to a particular branch of their business, but was in other respects inartificially drawn and insufficient; a demurrer was filed to the whole complaint and overruled. Young v. Pearson, 1 Cal. 448.

29. A demurrer to the whole declaration, when some of the counts are good, should be overruled. Whiting v. Heslep, 4 Cal. 330; Weaver v. Conger, 10 Cal. 237; Phelps v. Owen, 11 Cal. 23; Boles v. Weifenback, 15 Cal. 144.

2. Jurisdiction.

30. Demurrer to the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction lies only where the want of jurisdiction appears affirmatively on the face of the complaint. Otherwise, of courts of limited and special jurisdiction; there, every fact essential to confer jurisdiction must be alleged. Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 433.

3. Another action pending between the same parties for the same cause.

31. When a bill disclosed that the same subject matter had been litigated between the same parties in a prior suit, and that in the said suit the plaintiff in this suit had set up the same equity which he claims by this bill, the bill was held bad on demurrer, and was ordered to be dismissed. Barnett v. Richey, 3 Cal. 327.

4. That there is a defect of parties.

32. A defendant may demur if there is a misjoinder; for the words, "defects of parties" in the code mean a defect in the complaint by reason of too many or too few parties. Rowe v. Chandler, 1 Cal. 174.

33. The objection to a defect of parties should be taken by demurrer, or it must be deemed to have been waived and could not then be raised at the trial. Sampson v. Shaeffer, 3 Cal. 202; Warner v. Wilson, 4 Cal. 313; Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 257; Oliver v. Walsh, 6 Cal. 456; Tissot v. Throckmorton, 6 Cal. 473; McKune v. Mc Garvey, 6 Cal. 498; Andrews v. Mokelumne Hill Co., 7 Cal. 334; Alvarez v. Brannan, 7 Cal. 510; Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 170; Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 557.

34. An allegation in the answer that the debt sued for, if due at all, is due to the plaintiff and another as partners, cannot be treated as a demurrer. Andrews v. Mokelumne Hill Co., 7 Cal. 334.

35. Where a mortgage is given to secure the separate debts of several persons as mortgagees, and the bill against one avers the other mortgagees are no longer interested and are not parties, demurrer for defect does not lie. Tyler v. Yreka Water Co., 14 Cal. 217.

36. If several causes of action are improperly united in the same action, the objection must be taken by answer or demurrer, or it will be deemed to have been waived. Macondray v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 395.

37. A demurrer to a complaint on the ground that it seeks a remedy at law, and also seeks for equitable relief, is bad. Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 125; Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224; Weaver v. Conger, 10 Cal. 237; Rollins v. Forbes, 10 Cal. 300.

38. Where in a complaint the law and equity are inseparably mixed together, it would be demurrable. Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 125.

39. An objection that different causes of action have been improperly joined, is waived by the failure of defendants to demur. Marius v. Bicknell, 10 Cal. 224.

40. The union in one count of a complaint of an allegation, that defendants "have wrongfully built dams and flumes across said Mormon creek * * * so as to turn the water of said creek out of its natural channel," etc., and thus divert it from plaintiff, with an allegation that defendants "have constructed gates, etc., in their said dams and flumes, which they * * * hoist for the purpose of clearing out said dams and flumes of slum, stone and gravel," the accumulation of which renders the water useless to plaintiff, does not make the complaint demurrable, on the ground that it unites several distinct causes of action in one count. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 28.

That the Complaint does not state facts sufficient.

41. The improper joinder of several causes of action can only be taken advantage of by demurrer. Clark v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 638.

6. That the Complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

42. Where a declaration states a condition precedent, and fails to aver a performance, the defect must be urged before verdict on demurrer. Happe v. Stout, 2 Cal. 461.

43. To enable a plaintiff in equity to subject the assets of an absent debtor to the payment of a claim, he must show that he is without a remedy in law, and if the bill discloses such a remedy, it will be dismissed upon demurrer. Lupton v. Lupton, 3 Cal. 121.

44. A declaration setting forth that plaintiff had purchased a quantity of goods from W. & P., "then and there acting as agent of the defendant," is only another form of declaring that he had purchased from the defendant, and is sufficiently certain to prevent any misapprehension of its meaning, and is good on demurrer. Cockran v. Goodman, 3 Cal. 245.

45. In an action to recover damages, by the owner of a licensed ferry, against a party alleged to have run a ferry within the limits prohibited by law, it was held, that the complaint should have alleged that defendant ran his ferry for a fee or reward, or the promise or expectation of it, or that he ran it for other than his own personal use or that of his family, and the omission of those allegations was fatal. Hanson v. Webb, 3 Cal. 237.

46. Where the complaint alleged that in September, 1849, plaintiff settled on a tract of land, "the same being public land of the United States," that subsequently H., a foreigner, built a house and occupied a portion of the tract, and now that H.'s executor is offering the same for sale, and plaintiff prays for an injunction and damages for the occupation: held, that the complaint does state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. O'Conner v. Corbett, 3 Cal. 371.

47. The statute does not require an allegation in the complaint of possession; an averment that the premises are unlawfully withheld from the plaintiff is somewhat general; yet not insufficient in a justice's court, except upon demurrer. Cronise v. Carghill, 4 Cal. 122.

48. An objection that sureties sued on are not promissory notes must be taken advantage of by demurrer; and a demurrer having been filed without pointing out this objection, it must be considered waived. Powell v. Ross, 4 Cal. 198.

49. An omission to allege delivery in a suit on a bond can be taken advantage of only on demurrer, or the defect is cured by a verdict. Garcia v. Satrustegui, 4 Cal. 244.

50. Though a plea would be bad upon demurrer, yet if no objection be taken at the time, and the cause be submitted to a referee, the defect of the plea is not sufficient reason to set aside the report. Ritchie v. Davis, 5 Cal. 454.

51. A complaint for money had and received, which fails to allege a demand, is bad on demurrer. Reina v. Cross, 6 Cal. 31.

52. Where a complaint, though defective, states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the objections to it should have been taken by demurrer. Greenfield v. Steamer Gunnell, 6 Cal. 68.

53. Prima facie, the governor of California, under the Mexican domain, had the power to make a grant of mission lands to an individual, and a demurrer to a complaint setting forth such a grant, on the ground of want of authority in the governor, is not sustainable. Den v. Den, 6 Cal. 82.

54. The failure of the plaintiff to allege in his complaint, in an action upon a claim against an estate, its presentation to and rejection by the administrator, is an objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Ellisen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 393; Falkner v. Folsom, 6 Cal. 412; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 558.

55. The statute providing that no person shall sue a county, unless the claim has been first presented to the board of supervisors, and been by them rejected;

That the Complaint does not state facts sufficient.

this fact must appear in the complaint, or it is demurrable. McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 123.

56. A complaint alleging that the defendant sold to plaintiffs a certain share of fruit growing in an orchard, and after the sale executed a guarantee that the share of the plaintiff should be at his disposal, and further alleging a demand for the same, and refusal to deliver, is demurrable, as it should contain an assignment of the breach of the contract or guarantee. Dabovich v. Emeric, 7 Cal. 212.

57. Where the payment of a promissory note is by agreement of parties made conditional upon the payment by the payee of a certain debt of the payor, such payment is a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to recover on the note, and must be averred in the complaint to have been made, or it is demurrable. Rogers v. Cody, 8 Cal. 324.

58. Where it appears upon the face of a complaint that the suit is barred by the statute of limitation, the defendant may demur. Sublette v. Finney, 9 Cal. 425; Barringer v. Warden, 12 Cal. 314.

59. In an action on an undertaking executed to release property from attachment, the complaint should allege that the property was released upon the delivery of the undertaking, or it is demurrable. Williamson v. Blattan, 9 Cal. 501.

60. Where an answer disclosed the fact that the contract was not in writing; but it also averred acts of part performance, which took the contract out of the operation of the statute, it is not demurrable. Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 160.

61. The averment in a complaint that the plaintiff is the owner of the note and mortgage, is a sufficient answer to a demurrer, on the ground that it does not appear by the complaint that the plaintiff is the holder of the note. Rollins v. Forbes, 10 Cal. 299.

62. A count in the ordinary form of counts of indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, and money paid and expended, is sufficient under our system of practice, and not demurrable. Freeborn v. Glazer, 10 Cal. 338.

63. The ground of demurrer "that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action," is confined to those cases in which no case of action at all, as against the defendants, arises from the complaint. Summers v. Farish, 10 Cal. 350.

64. Any defect apparent upon the face of the complaint, which will defeat the present right to recover in whole or in part, will be a good ground of demurrer. Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 560.

65. Upon plaintiff's statement of his case, the court intimates that, conceding the facts, he cannot recover; and the plaintiff then offers to prove his allegations; whereupon defendant admits they could be proved, and demurs to the evidence: held, that this is not a demurrer to the evidence. It is rather deciding the case on the demurrer, as on demurrer to the complaint, or as on motion for nonsuit. Snodgrass v. Ricketts, 13 Cal. 360.

66. An allegation in the complaint that plaintiffs are the sons of Joaquin Castro, and have been in possession of the rancho since his decease, is, in the absence of a special demurrer, a sufficient allegation of heirship. Castro v. Armesti, 14 Cal. 39.

67. Bill filed by a judgment creditor of J. upon an order of court permitting it against defendants as executors. Bill avers that the will of deceased directed, by written or oral instructions, the executors to sell certain cattle, and retain the proceeds for the use and benefit of J., after first discharging his then debts. That it also declared that he, the testator, had made a secret assignment for J., which the executors would carry into effect according to his instructions when convenient. Bill charges that defendants have not sold the cattle, but have converted them to their own use; held, that a demurrer was properly sustained; that a pleading must be taken most strongly against the pleader; and that there is no law giving effect to an oral instruction of a testator as a will or part of a will; and that the creditor of J. can have no more rights than J. himself. Sparks v. De la Guerra, 14 Cal. 111.

68. In a suit by a physician against a county on a contract for his services for one year as examining physician of the hospital, the objection that he is not a graduate of a legally constituted medical institute, if good at all, cannot be taken by demurrer, unless the demurrer distinctly present the objection. McDaniel v. Yuba County, 14 Cal. 445.

69. If, in justification by the sheriff

That the Complaint does not state facts sufficient.—Deposit.—Deposition.

under an attachment, judgment and execution, it be necessary to aver in the answer that the writs of attachment and execution were returned executed by the sheriff, still the omission of this averment, though it might have been ground of demurrer, was no ground for rejecting all evidence under such justification. Walker v. Woods, 15 Cal. 69.

70. A complaint in ejectment, averring that plaintiff was in actual possession of the premises by inclosure and cultivation; that defendants, on a certain day, entered upon the same, and ousted the plaintiff; and that defendant is still in possession, is not demurrable. Boles v. Weisenback, 15 Cal. 144.

71. Bill avers, in substance, plaintiff to be holder of several notes and mortgages executed to him by defendants, H. and wife, and that defendant, O'D., proposed to plaintiff to buy said notes and mortgages for a certain sum, which plaintiff agreed to take; that O'D. desired, before closing the purchase, to see H. and wife, and learn whether they could be induced or compelled to pay the notes; asked plaintiff for the notes and mortgages to show H. and wife, and that plaintiff delivered them to him, relying on his honesty; that O'D. saw H. and wife, who were illiterate, and by representing himself as the owner of the notes, etc., which he exhibited, by threatening to sue, etc., induced H. and wife to give him an absolute deed in fee simple of the mortgaged premises for one hundred dollars, the premises being worth many thousands of dollars; that O'D. then returned the notes, etc., declined purchasing of plaintiff, and concealed the fact of having a deed from H. and wife; that all this was a fraud on plaintiff; that O'D., in taking said deed, acted as agent and trustee of plaintiff, and for his benefit, and should have taken the deed in his name; that in equity said O'D. ought to declare such trust, and execute a deed of the property to plaintiff; that, on account of a defect in the record of one of the mortgages, it does not impart notice, etc., and that if O'D. should sell the property, as he is trying to do, to an innocent purchaser, such sale would injure plaintiff irreparably. Other parties are made defendants, as claiming some interest subsequent to plaintiff. Complaint prays for injunction against O'D., that trust be declared, that he execute a deed to plaintiff, that H.'s wife execute to plaintiff such further conveyance and assurance and release of equity of redemption as may be just in satisfaction of said mortgages, and that all defendants be barred, foreclosed, etc.; or that the deed by H. and wife to O'D. be declared void and canceled, and he be foreclosed of all equity of redemption thereunder; and if such deed be canceled, that then plaintiff have judgment against H. and wife on said notes; that all the defendants be barred, etc., and premises sold to pay the judgment, etc. O'D. demurs that inconsistent causes of action are united: held, that the demurrer is not well taken; that the allegations of the complaint make out a homogeneous case as against all the defendants, to wit: a right to enforce the mortgages, and to a decree of foreclosure binding subsequent claimants, of whom O'D., by his purchase, is one, with notice of the mortgages. DeLeon v. Higuera, 15 Cal. 494.

mitting magistrate, in order to ascertain whether there is probable cause to suppose that a felony has been committed by the prisoner. People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 14.

2. Taking testimony by depositions is in derogation of the common law, and must not only be done before the proper officer, but every requirement of law must be complied with. McCann v. Beach, 2 Cal. 28; Dye v. Bailey, 2 Cal. 384.

3. There is nothing in the statute that requires exceptions to depositions shall be filed before the time of trial. The objection can be made at any time before the depositions are read in evidence. Dye v. Bailey, 2 Cal. 384; Mills v. Dunlap, 3 Cal. 96.

4. Proof of notice to take a deposition where a written notice was defective was held good, when made by parol, and it conforms substantially to the statute. Ib. 97.

5. The depositions of witnesses taken before a magistrate upon a criminal charge may be used before a grand jury. People v. Stuart, 4 Cal. 225.

6. The reading of evidence taken by deposition, although done after the jury have retired, is as much a part of a trial as any other proceeding. People v. Kohler, 5 Cal. 72.

7. An order to take testimony by deposition should specify the notice to be given to the adverse party. A deposition taken upon an order without such specification, where the opposite party has not had reasonable notice, ought not to be read in evidence. Ellis v. Jazynsky, 5 Cal. 444.

8. Where a deposition is taken ex parte, though after notice, and the witness is therefore not subjected to a cross-examination, the language used by him will be suspiciously regarded, and only a very literal interpretation given to it. Spring v. Hill, 6 Cal. 18.

9. A deposition taken before an examining magistrate, on the preliminary examination of a person charged with the commission of a felony, is not admissible on his trial, because the magistrate is not authorized or required to take it, and because taken before the defendant was held to answer. People v. Garrett, 6 Cal. 204.

10. It is no ground for the exclusion of a deposition that it was noticed to be taken before the county judge, but was taken before the county clerk. Williams v. Chadbourne, 6 Cal. 561.

11. Notice of the time and place having been given, it is a matter of small importance who took the deposition, particularly in view of the inconvenience and delay which would result from a different rule. Ib.

12. A certificate to a deposition must state that the deposition was read to the witness before signing; it must set forth an actual compliance with all the requirements of the statute. The admission of hearsay testimony to a fact admitted by both parties, is not error. Ib.

13. There is no appeal from an order refusing to issue a commission to take testimony by deposition. People v. Stillman, 7 Cal. 118.

14. A deposition of one of the defendants, introduced by plaintiff on trial, may be introduced by the defendants on a new trial. Turner v. McIlhane, 8 Cal. 579.

15. When the deposition of a witness is taken, objections to his competency must be taken at the time, and not reserved till the trial, or they will be deemed waived. Jones v. Love, 9 Cal. 70.

16. Where a rule of the district court requires three days written notice of exceptions to depositions, if they are returned and filed with the clerk that length of time before trial, and such notice is not given on the first trial, the depositions may be admitted on the second trial, though it took place the day after the first trial. The party was in default in not giving the notice before the first trial. Myers v. Casey, 14 Cal. 543.

17. If part of the deposition be liable to the exception of hearsay, this goes only to the rejection of that part, and the objection should be taken at the hearing. Ib. 544.

18. Where such rule of a district court requires the notice as above, unless the exceptions appear on the face of the depositions, the meaning is that the objection, not the objectionable matter, must appear on the face of the complaint. Ib.

19. The deposition of a surveyor who ran the boundary lines of a grant, taken in one action, is admissible in another action between different parties as hearsay evidence upon the location of such lines after his death. Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 278.

Deposition.—Deputy.—Description.

20. There were pending before the board of U. S. land commissioners three cases—No. 558, Nos. 45 and 812. The claimants in 558 entered into a written agreement with V., the claimant, and B. his attorney of record, in cases Nos. 45 and 812, by which the former agreed to pay to V. a certain portion of the proceeds of the sales of that portion of the claim No. 558, known as the Miranda claim, the parties agreeing to appoint an agent to go on and make sales. Contemporaneous with this agreement was another between the same parties, by which V. and B. agreed to withdraw and discontinue claims Nos. 45 and 812 before the said board, and also to cause to be withdrawn the depositions of Theodore Miranda and Francisca Miranda, taken before a commissioner in said case, No. 558, and on file therein; and to use their “best endeavors to procure the confirmation of said claim No. 558.” B. was the attorney for the Miranda claim, which was for the same land as claim No. 558. To defeat claim No. 558, he acted for the U. S. law agent, in taking said depositions, which were important to the government in defeating claim 558, and he attempted to carry out his agreement to withdraw said depositions—though he was not directly retained by the government. V. and B. sue for the specific execution of the agreement. Held, that such agreement is against public policy, and cannot be enforced; that B. could not, without a violation of his duty to the government as an attorney, carry out such agreement. Valentine v. Stewart, 16 Cal. 401.

21. Held, further, that the depositions having become regularly a part of the records of the land commission, and the government being thus entitled to use them, like other archives, the agreement to withdraw them, and thus to interpose obstacles to the exercise of this right of the government, is contrary to public policy and void, and this, whether the depositions were true or false, or whether the government would be benefited or not by their possession. Ib.

22. There is no difference, in principle, between a contract to keep a witness out of the way, and an agreement to suppress and get from the archives or offices of the government a deposition—a knowledge of which may be important to the government. Ib.

DEPUTY.

1. A constable, like any other ministerial officer, has the right to appoint as many deputies as he pleases, and the deputy is not guilty of any trespass in levying by virtue of legal process in his hands. Taylor v. Brown, 4 Cal. 188.

2. Courts cannot know an under officer, and the act and return of a deputy sheriff is a nullity, unless done in the name and by the authority of his principal. Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 449.

3. A map made by a county surveyor, with protractions of certain lines made by his deputy, is admissible in evidence when both officers swear to the correctness of the protractions. Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 126.

4. Where a sheriff's deed is executed by a deputy in the name of the sheriff, whose term of office had expired at the time of the execution of the deed, the authority of the deputy must be shown to authorize such deed to be read in evidence in an action of ejectment. Cloud v. El Dorado County, 2 Cal. 134.

5. Where one writ of attachment was placed in the sheriff's hands on Sunday, and another against the same defendant was placed in the hands of a deputy at a quarter past twelve on Monday morning, the sheriff not knowing the fact, and the first levy was made under the last writ at one o'clock on Monday morning, the sheriff was not guilty of negligence in executing the first writ, no special circumstances being shown. Whitney v. Butterfield, 13 Cal. 340.

I. OF REAL PROPERTY.

1. Correction of a mistake.

1. A court of equity will, against a mortgagor, correct a description of the mortgaged premises as a matter of course, and a person claiming under the mortgagor, and having notice of a prior lien upon the premises, is in no better condition than the mortgagor himself. Woodworth v. Guzman, 1 Cal. 205.

2. A court of equity will relieve against a mistake as well as fraud in the description of property in a deed or contract in writing, and parol evidence is admissible to show the mistake. Wagenblast v. Washburn, 12 Cal. 212.

2. When sufficient.

3. A description of premises in a lease, though imperfect, is sufficiently certain, if the boundaries of the premises can be ascertained with a reasonable degree of certainty, and they have been taken possession of and occupied under the lease. Pierce v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 472.

4. Where a complaint describes land by a certain name, this is as good a description as one by metes and bounds, if it can be rendered sufficiently certain by evidence. Castro v. Gill, 5 Cal. 42.

5. It is essential to the validity of a conveyance that the thing conveyed must be described so as to be capable of identification, but it is not essential that the conveyance should itself contain such a description as to enable the identification to be made without the aid of extrinsic evidence. Castro v. Gill, 5 Cal. 42; Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 166.

6. A description in a sheriff's return on an execution of city lots by numbers, referring to the official city map, is sufficient. Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 186.

7. The language of the act of congress of September 28th, 1859, conveyed to the State a present interest in the lands. The description of "swamp and overflowed lands" is sufficient to give the State a present prima facie right. Owens v. Jackson, 9 Cal. 324.

8. The patent is a matter of evidence and description by metes and bounds, and its office is to make the description of the land definite and conclusive as between the United States and the State. Id.

9. The assertion of quantity in a deed must yield to a description by metes and bounds, or by name and number. Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 165.

10. Where a Mexican grant refers in its description of the premises to the plat or map accompanying the expediente, the plat or map becomes, for the purpose of identifying the land, as much a part of the grant itself as if incorporated therein. Seaward v. Malotte, 15 Cal. 306.

11. Where land is described in a lease as "land lying along the American fork, bounded by said fork, and running down to land owned by Mark Stewart; thence easterly and north-easterly along a slough to the north of A street, and following the bank of said slough around where the high land slopes to said American fork," etc., the true construction of this description fixes the boundary on the slough, and the words "around where the high land slopes," if they have any meaning at all, can only be applied to the bank or high ground adjoining the slough. De Rutte v. Muldrow, 16 Cal. 514.

3. When insufficient.

12. A conveyance of "the following described property, situate, lying and being in the city of Sacramento and State of California, consisting of two thousand two hundred town lots, be the same more or less, said lots being bounded according to the original plat of said city," is void on account of a patent ambiguity which cannot be cured by parol evidence. Merrick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 311.

In a Power of Attorney.—Assessment.—Mortgage.—In Ejectment.

4. When necessary in a Power of Attorney.

13. A power of attorney to sell land must contain some description of the property to be sold, unless it be shown aliunde that the land in controversy is the only land owned by the principal at the time. Stafford v. Lick, 13 Cal. 242.

5. In an Assessment.

14. An assessment of land as balance of land on Rancho Arroyo de San Antonio, ten thousand and ninety acres, at four dollars per acre, forty thousand three hundred and sixty dollars, is sufficient description, it appearing on the roll that the part of the ranch not assessed was comprehended within the plat of a town, certain lots in which were assessed on the same list to the same owner. Patten v. Green, 13 Cal. 328.

15. Lands outside of a city or incorporated town must be described by metes and bounds, the number of acres as nearly as possible, and the locality and township must be given in an assessment. Lachman v. Clark, 14 Cal. 133.

6. In a Mechanic's Lien.

16. The following notice of a mechanic's lien does not contain such a description of the premises as the statute contemplates: "A dwelling place lately erected by me for A., situated on Bryant street, between Second and Third streets, in the city of San Francisco, on lot No. —," though A. owned no other building on that street. Montrose v. Conner, 8 Cal. 347.

17. R. & Co., defendants, had two mechanics' liens upon certain property; one filed October 30th, 1854, the other filed December 8th, 1854, against defendant, V. In 1855, R. & Co. sign an entry on the record of liens, stating that the liens did not fall due till January 15th, 1856. This was done on the supposition that the act of 1855 permitted such extension of credit with safety. Discovering that such act in this respect did not apply to existing liens, R. & Co., November 16th, 1855, brought suit on the liens, obtained judgment, sold the property, bought it in and received a sheriff's deed. Plaintiff, as mortgagee of the property subsequent to the liens, obtained judgment, sold the property, bought it in, received a sheriff's deed, and now files his bill to set aside R. & Co.'s judgment and sale, on the ground of fraud: held, that plaintiffs here cannot object that the premises are not so described in the lien as to pass title under such sale. If, from insufficient description, R. & Co. got no title, plaintiffs have their remedy in ejectment. Gamble v. Voll, 15 Cal. 510.

7. In a Mortgage.

18. Mere indefiniteness of description in a mortgage is no objection to its enforcement as it is written, whatever the effect of the sale under such a description. The mortgagor cannot complain. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 491.

19. That property mortgaged is so indefinitely described as not to pass title by sale or foreclosure, is no objection to the enforcement of the mortgage against the mortgagor. Whitney v. Buckman, 13 Cal. 538.

20. A mortgage describing the land as "the rancho of her property, in the place known by the names of 'laguna de los Palos Colorados,' or 'Santa Clara,' in Contra Costa county," and stating the land to be the half league the mortgagor acquired from the grant to her first husband, Juan Bernal, which grant is before the U. S. land commission for confirmation, is not void for uncertainty in description. De Leon v. Higuera, 15 Cal. 496.

8. In Ejectment.

21. A complaint in ejectment, describing the premises as "lot No. 1, in block No. 23, as per plot of the town of Red Bluff,

In Ejectment.—In Forcible Entry and Detainer.

as laid out by the Red Bluff land corporation in 1853, being on the corner of Main and Sycamore streets, twenty-five feet on Main by one hundred and fifteen feet on Sycamore, and running back to the alley," and specifying the county in which they are situated, by the terms "county of Tehama," in the title of the suit, sufficiently describes the premises. The description by metes and bounds is required only so far as they may be necessary to identify with certainty the property. Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 433.

22. In ejectment on a patent, defendant introduced a witness who stated that he knew where the defendant resided; that he knew where Dry creek was, and where it entered Bear river; that he knew no other Dry creek than the one named, and did not think there was any other creek by that name between the foot-hills and Bear river. He was then requested to state, if he knew, whether the lands occupied by the defendant for the last two years or more, or any part thereof, lay below Dry creek and Bear river, the counsel declaring the object of the inquiry to be to show that the lands were not within the calls of the patent or grant. To this inquiry objection was made and sustained, on the ground that it did not relate to the starting point or monument named in the patent; the court offering at the time to allow the witness to be asked whether the lands were situated below the oak tree marked as the commencement or first monument of the patent: held, that the court below did not err in ruling out the testimony, because the question put to the witness did not, as it should have done—limit the inquiry to that Dry creek at the junction of which the marked oak tree stood—it appearing from a map, incorporated into the patent, that there were two streams emptying into Bear river, within the calls of the patent, each of which was termed Dry creek, and that below one of them, and above the other, the premises in controversy were situated; and it further appearing that the description in the patent commenced at an oak tree marked with an (x) and certain figures and letters, at the junction of Dry creek and Bear river, and the map designated the position of the tree—the starting point—at the mouth of the lower Dry creek. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 558.

23. From the description in the patent, and from the map, the position of this starting point was fixed beyond doubt; and, as the witness stated he knew only of one Dry creek, the inquiry made of him and ruled out would only tend to mislead and confuse the jury, unless that inquiry were limited to the Dry creek at the junction of which the marked oak tree stood; and the ruling of the Court did not tend to exclude legitimate proof that the premises lay below the creek which the patent designated, but to require it to be directed to such creek, and not to the other creek of the same name. Id.

24. The fact that a complaint in ejectment, in addition to giving a description of the premises by metes and bounds, designates them as one half of a certain preëmption claim taken up by Morris, from whom plaintiff traced title, in 1850, and surveyed by the county surveyor, and recorded in conformity with the statute, does not make it essential, to entitle the plaintiffs to a recovery as against the defendant in possession, that they should allege in their complaint and establish on the trial such facts as would bring them within the provisions of the preëmption laws of the United States, or of the possessory act of this State. The designation of the property as a part of a preëmption claim does not preclude the claimants from relying upon any other source of title than the United States or the State. Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 572.

9. In Forcible Entry and Detainer.

25. In an action of forcible entry and detainer, the complaint described the premises as "about ten rods square, situated within and comprising the north-west-erly corner of that certain piece or parcel of land, bounded and described as follows, to wit:" (the complaint then goes on to give the metes and bounds of a tract containing one hundred and forty-six acres). "The said ten rods square being situated from twenty to fifty feet, more or less, south-easterly from the house of defendant, and near the gate aforesaid, and near the junction of the San Bruno turnpike road with the road leading from the city of San Francisco to Hunter's Point." Said gate was where this last road passed through. The proof, among other things, showed this ten rods to be called the north-easterly instead of the north-westerly corner of the tract. The judgment for plaintiff followed the description in the complaint. Defendant appeals: held, that the variance in the description of the premises did not prejudice appellant; that the question was one of identity, and the fact that the corner of the small tract was called the north-easterly instead of the north-westerly corner, was itself insufficient to defeat the action, if the other and more definite marks of description sufficiently indicated and identified the premises. Paul v. Silver, 16 Cal. 75.

Of Property sold on Execution.—Of stolen Property.

II. OF PROPERTY SOLD ON EXECUTION.

26. The nature of the interest to be sold under a decree of sale is sufficiently ascertained by a lease, which is referred to and described in the decree. Gaskill v. Moore, 4 Cal. 235.

27. It is of the essence of every public sale that there be a description sufficient to apprise the bystanders with reasonable accuracy of what is sold or offered. Crandall v. Blen, 13 Cal. 23.

28. Contingent and complicated contracts cannot be levied upon and sold without being in the possession of the officer at the sale, to be exhibited to the bystanders and assigned to the purchaser, unless a full and accurate description of the particular interest and chose in action, with all its conditions and covenants, and a full explanation of the facts determining the value of the chose, be given by the levy and announced at the sale. Id.

1. By an Administrator.

29. In a sale of public property by an administratrix, it would be holding the rule with much strictness to hold that the sale is void upon its face because the petition does not give an exact accurate description of the real estate. Stuart v. Allen, 16 Cal. 503.

III. OF MERCHANDISE SOLD.

30. A bill of sale of "all the goods and merchandise and property we own, have or have an interest in, in a store in Nevada, formerly occupied by Baily Gatzert, and now in possession of the sheriff of Nevada county, said goods forwarded by us to Bailey Gatzert, Nevada," contains a sufficient description of the goods. Coghill v. Boring, 15 Cal. 218.

IV. OF DEBTS IN AN INSOLVENT SCHEDULE.

31. Where an insolvent was liable on a note made by S. to him, and endorsed by him to R., and by him over to M., and describes the same in his schedule: "To R. I am contingently liable for one thousand dollars and interest, as endorser for one S., upon a promissory note made and executed by said S. to said R.:" held, that the description was insufficient, for inaccuracy, and that his discharge in insolvency is no bar to a recovery on the note. McAllister v. Strode, 7 Cal. 431.

32. Where there is a misdescription of a note, and a want of specification of the name of the real owner, or of any averment that his name is unknown in the schedule of an insolvent, the proceedings in insolvency are no bar to a suit on the note, even if the insolvent did not know that the plaintiff was the real creditor. Judson v. Atwill, 9 Cal. 478.

33. A note for five hundred dollars by an insolvent to the order of Alfred McCarty is insufficiently described, where the schedule states: "Alfred McCarty, borrowed money, April, 1855, five hundred dollars;" and a discharge in such case is no bar to a suit on the note. McCarty v. Christie, 13 Cal. 81.

V. OF STOLEN PROPERTY IN AN INDICTMENT.

34. An indictment for larceny describing the property as "a black or brown mare or filly, branded with a small mule shoe on the left shoulder," is sufficiently particular in description. To state the color is not necessary, and putting it in the alternative is not a fatal objection, especially when other terms of description are given, which identify the property. Our statute does not require more exactness than obtained at common law. People v. Smith, 15 Cal. 410.

VI. OF PAPERS NOTICED TO BE PRODUCED AT A TRIAL.

35. Literal accuracy cannot be expected in the description given in the notice of a paper in the possession of the adverse party. Such a description as will apprise a man of ordinary intelligence of the document desired, is sufficient. Burke v. Table Mountain W. Co., 12 Cal. 408.

DESERTERS.

1. Justices of the peace alone have power to try and commit deserted seamen under the acts of congress; and commissioners of the United States courts can only arrest and commit for trial. Ex parte Crandall, 2 Cal. 144.

DESERTION.

1. In an action for divorce, the desertion of the husband entitles the wife to her own domicile for the purposes of maintaining the action. Moffatt v. Moffatt, 5 Cal. 281.

2. Willful desertion of the other by either party for the period of two years is ground for a divorce under the statute; and desertion for a less period is not sufficient to bar a decree. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 256.

3. The refusal of the wife to accompany her husband on a change of residence, followed by actual cessation of matrimonial cohabitation, and unattended by any excusing or explanatory circumstances, is evidence of desertion, and authorizes a divorce. Hardenburgh v. Hardenburgh, 14 Cal. 656.

4. Desertion consists of an actual cessation of matrimonial cohabitation between the parties, coupled with the intent to desert in the mind of the offending party. Ib. 657.

DETINUE.

1. In an action of detinue it is usual to aver a bailment or finding; but the manner in which the defendant became possessed of the property has always been held to be mere matter of inducement. Otero v. Bullard, 3 Cal. 189.

DEVISE.

1. The taking of a legacy by the wife under the will of the husband will not prevent her from contesting the validity of the will, so far as it disposes of the half interest in the common property to others. Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 257.

DIAGRAM.

1. A survey may be detailed from memory by a witness as well as defined by a diagram; and should be excluded unless the witness be a county surveyor, or be introduced to rebut or explain a survey by a county surveyor. Vines v. Whitten, 4 Cal. 230.

2. A map made by a county surveyor, with protractions of certain lines made by his deputy, is admissible in evidence when both officers swear to the correctness of the protractions. Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 126.

3. It is not error to exclude from the jury a diagram, where no drawing is necessary to illustrate the fact asserted. Thrall v. Smiley, 9 Cal. 537.

4. When a private survey is admitted as a diagram, but not as evidence, the court should clearly explain to the jury the precise purpose and effect of its admission. Rose v. Davis, 11 Cal. 141.

5. A survey or map of the United States surveyor of a grant is admissible as evidence to establish boundaries, without proof of the orders or authority under which he acted. Ib. 142.

6. Where a Mexican grant refers in its description of the premises to the plat or map accompanying the expediente, the plat or map becomes, for the purpose of identifying the land, as much a part of the grant itself as if incorporated therein. Seaward v. Malotte, 15 Cal. 306.

7. In ejectment on a patent, defendant introduced a witness who stated that he knew where the defendant resided; that he knew where Dry creek was, and where it entered Bear river; that he knew no other Dry creek than the one named, and did not think there was any other creek by that name between the foot-hills and the mouth of Bear river. He was then requested to state, if he knew, whether the lands occupied by the defendant for the last two years or more, or any part thereof, lay below Dry creek and Bear river, the counsel declaring the object of the inquiry to be to show that the lands were not within the calls of the patent or grant. To this inquiry objection was made and sustained, on the ground that it did not relate to the starting point or monument named in the patent; the court offering at the time to allow the witness to be asked whether the lands were situated below the oak tree marked as the commencement or first monument of the patent: held, that the court below did not err in ruling out the testimony, because the question put to the witness did not, as it should have done, limit the inquiry to that Dry creek at the junction of which the marked oak tree stood, it appearing from a map, incorporated into the patent, that there were two streams emptying into Bear river, within the calls of the patent, each of which was termed Dry creek, and that below one of them, and above the other, the premises in controversy were situated; and it further appearing that the description in the patent commenced at an oak tree marked with a (x) and certain figures and letters, at the junction of Dry creek and Bear river, and the map designated the position of the tree, the starting point, as at the mouth of the lower Dry creek. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 558.

8. From the description in the patent, and from the map, the position of this starting point was fixed beyond doubt; and, as the witness stated he knew only of one Dry creek, the inquiry made of him and ruled out would only tend to mislead and confuse the jury, unless that inquiry were limited to the Dry creek at the junction of which the marked oak tree stood; and the ruling of the court did not tend to exclude legitimate proof that the premises lay below the creek which the patent designated, but to require it to be directed to such creek, and not to the creek of the same name. Ib.

DISCONTINUANCE.

1. The submission of a cause in court to arbitration operates as a discontinuance of the suit; but not if the cause is referred. Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 48.

2. Where several persons are sued as codefendants, on a joint contract, and no evidence is adduced to establish the joint liability of all, the plaintiff may discontinue the suit as against those not shown to be liable, and proceed to judgment against the others. Acquital v. Crowell, 1 Cal. 192.

3. A reference or arbitration in which there is no order of court or agreement filed with the clerk, or entered on the minutes, is a voluntary withdrawal of the case from the jurisdiction of the court, by which the court loses all control over the case, and has no authority to enter judgment upon the finding, except by consent of parties. Heslep v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 4; overruled in Carsley v. Lindsay, 14 Cal. 395.

Discontinuance.—Discovery.—Discretion.

4. The plaintiff commenced an action of forcible entry and detainer against the defendant, in a justice's court. The justice, instead of trying the case, certified it to the district court: held, that the transfer was illegal, and could not defeat the plaintiff's rights by operating a discontinuance. Larue v. Gaskins, 5 Cal. 509.

5. Where there is evidence before a jury, connecting a defendant not served with process with the trespass, a motion to dismiss, as to the defendant, by the other defendants, should be overruled. Gates v. Nash, 6 Cal. 195.

6. A motion to dismiss an appeal, on the ground that the transcript was not filed within the time required by the third rule of this court, is too late after the case has been submitted. Cook v. Klink, 8 Cal. 352.

7. Complaint filed against M. & D. and H. & L., sureties. Complaint amended, and H. & L. only named defendants, and on this complaint, the issue was found and the cause tried: held, that this operated as a discontinuance as to M. & D., and that although the judgment runs as against "said defendants," the verdict and judgment being entitled, B., plaintiff v. M. et al., still the judgment must be referred to the issue, is of no effect against M. & D., and may be modified as a clerical misprision, in the supreme court. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11.

8. Courts should of their own motion dismiss a case based upon a consideration which contravenes public policy, whether the parties to the suit take the objection or not. Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 405.

9. Dismissal of an appeal in the supreme court for want of prosecution, in accordance with the rules of the court, operates as an affirmance of the judgment below, within the statute relative to undertakings on appeal, unless the order of dismissal be vacated during the term. Karth v. Light, 15 Cal. 326; Chamberlain v. Reed, 16 Cal. 207.

10. The cases in which dismissal of an appeal will not operate as a bar to a second appeal, and hence not as an affirmance of the judgment below, are those where the dismissal has been made upon some technical defect in the notice of appeal, or the undertaking, or the like. The bar operates where the dismissal is for want of prosecution, and the order is not vacated during the term, or the dismissal is on the merits. Karth v. Light, 15 Cal. 326; Chamberlain v. Reed, 16 Cal. 207.

DISCOVERY, BILL FOR.

1. After a judgment had been entered, it is too late for defendant to file a bill for a discovery in aid of his defense, on the ground that it is meritorious, and lies entirely within the knowledge of the judgment creditor, if he was cognizant of the facts before the judgment was obtained. Morris v. Denton, 2 Cal. 380.

2. A bill in chancery, in the nature of a "bill of peace," and praying for a discovery against joint and several trespassers on real estate, will not lie in favor of a plaintiff out of possession, claiming title to land. Ritchie v. Dorland, 6 Cal. 37.
See EQUITY.

DISCRETION.

1. The exercise of a sound discretion, in granting a new trial upon a review of the facts alone, will not be disturbed. Drake v. Palmer, 2 Cal. 182; Speck v. Hoyt, 3 Cal. 420; Watson v. Mc Clay, 4 Cal. 288; Hastings v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 10 Cal. 341; Peters v. Foss, 16 Cal. 358.

2. The substitution of papers or pleadings in a case is always within the discretion of the court, and no notice of the motion to apply for it need be given when the notice can be of no use. Benedict v. Cozzens, 4 Cal. 382.

3. The court may impose terms in granting or refusing a new trial. In requiring a remittitur of a portion of a judgment as terms for refusing the motion for a new trial, the court used a sound and admitted discretion. Ib. 383.

4. The administering of the oath as provided by statute to a person who is challenged for not being a qualified voter, is a matter in the discretion of the judges of the election. People v. Gordon, 5 Cal. 236.

Discretion.

5. The supreme court having complete appellate power over the right to grant a change of venue, it is not to be supposed that it will trust implicitly in the discretion of inferior courts. People v. Lee, 5 Cal. 354.

6. In an action against a ferryman, it was no error to allow the plaintiff to introduce the ferry license after a motion for nonsuit, as this is a matter within the discretion of the court. May v. Hanson, 5 Cal. 363.

7. The discretion of the probate court in certifying an issue of fact joined therein for trial to the district court, is subject to review by the supreme court; and in case of gross abuse, would be corrected. Keller v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 434.

8. Where in a chancery cause certain issues of fact are submitted to and determined by a jury, the granting of a new trial is entirely discretionary with the chancellor, and his action is not revisable. Gray v. Eaton, 5 Cal. 448.

9. A court may in its discretion allow plaintiff—after defendants have closed their case, and before the case is submitted—to supply an omission in the testimony occasioned by mistake or inadvertence, nor is such action any ground of reversal, unless it appear that injustice has been done by an abuse of discretion. Priest v. Union Canal Co., 6 Cal. 171; Lisman v. Early, 15 Cal. 199.

10. Courts have a large discretion over conduct of proceedings before them, and may limit counsel to a reasonable time. But in capital cases, this should be done, if at all, only in very extraordinary and peculiar instances. People v. Tock Chew, 6 Cal. 636; People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 584.

11. The order in which evidence shall be admitted is in the discretion of the court before whom the case is tried. Gordon v. Searing, 8 Cal. 50.

12. Where a reference is had to take an account, it is within the discretion of the referees to open the case, after it has been once closed, for the purpose of receiving additional testimony. The exercise of such discretion, except in case of gross abuse, will not be reviewed on appeal. Marziou v. Pioche, 10 Cal. 546.

13. The granting or refusing a continuance rests in the sound discretion of the court. Pilot Creek Canal Co. v. Chapman, 11 Cal. 162.

14. The sufficiency of a notice to the adverse party to produce on trial a certain paper in his possession, is a question of discretion in the court trying the case. Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co., 12 Cal. 407.

15. The allowance to file an answer after demurrer overruled vests in the discretion of the court below, subject to review of course, in case of its arbitrary or unreasonable exercise. Thornton v. Borland, 12 Cal. 439.

16. The terms of new trials are peculiarly within the discretion of the court, with the exercise of which the appellate court will not interfere, except in case of clear abuse. Rice v. Gashirie, 13 Cal. 54.

17. Two defendants filed a joint plea of the statute of limitation, and the plea being held bad as to the defendant, the court, on the trial, permitted the other defendant to file a separate plea of the statute: held, that this was no such gross abuse of discretion as to enable the supreme court to revise it. Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 254.

18. Questions of discretion of the judge below cannot be reviewed in the supreme court, except in cases of gross abuse to the injury of the party. Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

19. A statement on motion for a new trial, regularly settled and signed by the judge, and containing all the grounds of the motion, but without any specification thereof, may be amended by the judge so as to insert a specification of the grounds of the motion after the time for filing a statement has passed, being in the furtherance of justice and a matter of discretion, not of power. Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 396.

20. Lower courts have an enlarged discretion in the conduct of the business before them, and with this discretion the appellate court will not interfere, unless it affirmatively appear that injustice has been done. Broadus v. Nelson, 16 Cal. 80.

21. The allowance of an amendment to pleadings is a matter of discretion, for the abuse of which only can the appellate court interfere. Gillan v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 156.

Distribution.—District Court.

22. Courts of equity are ever ready to grant relief from sales made upon their decrees where there has been irregularity in the proceedings rendering the title defective, as well when the purchaser or parties interested have been misled by a mistake of law as to the operation of the decree, as when they have been misled by a mistake of fact as to the condition of the property or the estate sold; provided, application be made to them in the suits in which such decrees are entered within a reasonable time, and the relief sought will not operate to the prejudice of the just rights of others. The nature and extent of the relief in such cases are matters vesting very much in the sound discretion of the court. Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 470; Boggs v. Hargrave, 16 Cal. 563.

DISTRIBUTION.

1. The stock of an association being divided into money shares and labor shares, the holders of the latter of which had contributed no capital to the outfit of the company, had performed no labor beneficial to the company, and had their expenses to California paid out of the funds contributed by the holders of the money shares: held, that the assets of the company should be distributed among the holders of the money shares alone. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 74.

2. Where a simple contract creditor filed a bill against the assignee of his debtor, not attacking the assignment, and merely praying for a distribution; and the plaintiff subsequently filed a supplemental bill, setting forth that in the meantime he had become a judgment creditor, and attacking the assignment for fraud since discovered, and praying that it be set aside and the moneys in the hands of the assignee be appropriated to plaintiff's judgment: held, that it is no objection to the supplemental bill that it prays for a different relief; and fails to bring in all the other creditors who are alleged by the defense to be entitled to a ratable distribution. Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 486.

DISTRICTS.

1. The legislature has power so to change the assembly districts as to join two counties in one district. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 104.

DISTRICT COURT.

I. Jurisdiction.

1. In general.
2. Not appellate.
3. In Probate matters.
4. Over Proceedings in other District Courts.
5. Over Judgments.

II. Appeal.

1. From the District Court.
2. On Remittitur from Supreme Court.

III. Costs.

IV. Sessions of the Court.

Jurisdiction.

I. JURISDICTION.

1. In general.

1. The district courts have no jurisdiction beyond what has been conferred upon them by the statutes of the State. Selby v. Bark Alice Tarlton, 1 Cal. 104.

2. In adopting the common law, by the act organizing the district courts and by the act prescribing the practice therein, the legislature have defined the limits of the powers and jurisdiction of district courts, and have nowhere conferred upon them the powers of a court of admiralty. *Ib.**

3. The supreme court may issue a writ of certiorari to a district court for the purpose of reviewing summary proceedings in a case where no appeal would lie. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 156.

4. An attorney licensed to practice in the supreme court is, by the rules of the court, authorized by virtue thereof to practice in all the courts of the State; and a district court cannot expel him from that bar. Ib. 190.

5. The act of the legislature, by which a district judge is empowered to hold a district court in another district, is constitutional and valid; and a court held in pursuance of that act by a district judge in a district other than the one for which he has been elected, is not for that reason improperly organized. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 380.

6. The jurisdiction of the district court is confirmed and defined by the constitution; and no statute can deprive it of its powers to take cognizance of any action wherein the amount in controversy exceeds the value of two hundred dollars. Hicks v. Bell, 3 Cal. 224.

7. Where the principal sum sued for is less than two hundred dollars, the district court has no jurisdiction. Arnold v. Van Brunt, 4 Cal. 89.

8. District courts cannot entertain jurisdiction of cases in a justice's court by certiorari where the error complained of might be corrected on appeal to the county court. Gray v. Schupp, 4 Cal. 185.

9. In a suit brought by one of the partners in a mining company against the company to recover his share which had been sold for an alleged nonpayment of an assessment, and also to recover the sum of $2,027, his proportionate share of the gold taken out by said company, the district court had jurisdiction. Schuepler v. Evans, 4 Cal. 212.

10. The district courts have constitutional jurisdiction of cases of nuisance. The grant of such jurisdiction by statute to the county court cannot take away the constitutional jurisdiction of the district court. Fitzgerald v. Urton, 4 Cal. 238.

11. The legislature possessed an undoubted right to transfer the criminal business of the court of sessions to the district court. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 380.

12. Actions in forcible entry and detainer are summary proceedings provided by statute, and do not belong to district courts by virtue of original, nor can they have appellate jurisdiction. Townsend v. Brooks, 5 Cal. 53.

13. Where an action has been commenced in a district court in good faith for a sum exceeding two hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, a judgment may be rendered for an amount less than that sum. Jackson v. Whartenby, 5 Cal. 95.

14. The district court is a court of general original jurisdiction; its process is co-extensive with the State. Reyes v. Sanford, 5 Cal. 117.

15. Causes may be removed from one district court to another, in the manner provided by statute, before answer. Ib.

16. Proceedings in insolvency are not stricti juris either proceedings in law or equity, but a new remedy or proceeding created by statute, the administration of which is vested in the district court, independent of their common law or chancery powers as courts of general jurisdiction. Cohen v. Barrett, 5 Cal. 210.

17. District courts cannot take cognizance of any case where the sum involved does not exceed two hundred dollars. Zander v. Coe, 5 Cal. 232.

18. District courts by the constitution are clothed with original jurisdiction in law and equity where the amount in controversy exceeds two hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. Zander v. Coe, 5 Cal. 232; Sandford v. Head, 5 Cal. 298.

19. District courts of this State are courts of original and common law jurisdiction and are courts of record, and have power to naturalize aliens according to the laws of congress, and are the only State courts which have that power. Ex parte Knowles, 5 Cal. 306.

Jurisdiction.—In Probate matters.

20. In an action for service and a division of the property acquired during coverture, the jurisdiction of the district court is not limited as to the amount. Deuprez v. Deuprez, 5 Cal. 388.

21. District courts have jurisdiction to punish for contempts of their process, and to issue such writs as are necessary to the exercise of their jurisdiction. Ex parte Cohen, 5 Cal. 495.

22. The legislature, in conferring jurisdiction in insolvency on both the district and the county courts, acted in the exercise of a legitimate power, and these courts have concurrent jurisdiction. Harper v. Freelon, 6 Cal. 76.

23. The grant of authority to the county judge to award injunctions in cases brought in the district courts is a mere power to issue mesne process, auxiliary to the proper jurisdiction of the district court, and is not trenching upon it. Thompson v. Williams, 6 Cal. 89; Crandall v. Woods, 6 Cal. 451.

24. A district court may issue a writ of certiorari to a county judge to review the proceedings of his court. Chard v. Harrison, 7 Cal. 116.

25. As soon as proceedings supplementary to execution were instituted before the district court, that court obtained jurisdiction over the case, and had authority to proceed and apply the property of the judgment debtors to the satisfaction of the judgment upon which proceedings were had. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 202.

26. In an application for a mandamus to compel a district judge to sign a bill of exceptions which the relator alleges he refuses to do, and the judge in his answer avers that he has signed a true bill of exceptions, and that the one presented by relator is not a true bill: held, that the vendor is not entitled to a jury to try the issue of the verity of the bill. People v. Judge of the Tenth District Court, 9 Cal. 20.

27. A writ of certiorari will lie in the district court to review the action of the board of supervisors, otherwise their action would be beyond control. People v. El Dorado County, 8 Cal. 61; overruling People v. Hester, 6 Cal. 680.

28. Where suit was brought in the district court on an undertaking on appeal to the supreme court, given in the sum of three hundred dollars conditioned to pay all damages and costs, not exceeding the three hundred dollars which may be awarded by the supreme court, and the damages and costs so awarded were only thirty dollars and fifteen cents: held, that the district court had no jurisdiction. Page v. Ellis, 9 Cal. 250.

29. The jurisdiction of the fourth and twelfth judicial district courts within the limits of the city of San Francisco is equally extensive, and proceedings may be commenced in either court, at the option of the suitor. Slade v. His Creditors, 10 Cal. 485.

30. District courts are courts of general jurisdiction in all matters given them by law, wherever those matters may be locally situated or wherever the parties may reside; but for convenience, parties have a right to a trial of particular cases in particular counties. Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 324.

2. Not appellate.

31. The district court has no appellate jurisdiction constitutionally. People v. Perralta, 3 Cal. 379; Caulfield v. Hudson, 3 Cal. 389; Hernandez v. Simon, 3 Cal. 464; Gray v. Schupp, 4 Cal. 185; Reed v. McCormick, 4 Cal. 342; Townsend v. Brooks, 5 Cal. 52; Zander v. Coe, 5 Cal. 230; People v. Fowler, 9 Cal. 86.

3. In Probate matters.

32. District courts of this State have the same control over the persons of minors as well as their estates that the courts of chancery in England possess. Wilson v. Roach, 4 Cal. 366; Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 129.

33. The issues of fact joined in the probate court and which are sent to the district court for trial are of that class upon which the probate judge is unwilling to pass his judgment, or where from great conflict of evidence a reasonable doubt must exist in his mind as to which side has the right. Keller v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 433.

34. District courts have unlimited jurisdiction over issues of fact sent to be tried out of the probate court. Ib. 434.

35. So much of the act of 1855 as provides for the transfer to the district court of issues of fact already decided in the probate court is unconstitutional and void. Deck's Estate v. Gherke, 6 Cal. 669.

36. A suit for the foreclosure of a mortgage is peculiarly an equity proceeding, and when a district court gains jurisdiction of the case for the purpose of foreclosure, it has the right to give full relief, and for this purpose to decree and execute a sale of the mortgaged premises. But when the claim is presented to the administrator and probate court it is otherwise. Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 129.

37. An action to foreclose a mortgage, given for the purchase money of a homestead by a deceased person, is not a claim in the sense of the statute against the estate of the deceased. Suit can be brought thereupon in the district court, and the administrator is a proper party for the purpose of liquidating the amount of the indebtedness. Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 385.

38. There is no relation of inferiority in the constitution or powers of probate court, as respects the district court. They are unlike, but neither their respective spheres equal. They are both constitutional courts. No appeal lies from one to the other. Pond v. Pond, 10 Cal. 500.

39. Issues of fact are sent from the probate court to the district court, not as from an inferior to a superior tribunal, but for the sake of convenience, because the probate court has not the machinery of jury trial and its incidents. Ib.

40. The district court, by virtue of its common law powers alone, derives its powers to try issues of fact, and that court, as a court of law, has no jurisdiction over probate matters. Ib. 501.

41. Under former decisions of this court, district courts, as courts of chancery, have assumed jurisdiction over probate matters, and as probably rights have vested under their decrees, and the principle asserted is more convenient in practice, it is not permissible now to question the jurisdiction. Deck's Estate v. Gerke, 12 Cal. 436.

42. The district court may take jurisdiction of the settlement of an estate, when there are peculiar circumstances of embarrassment to its administration, and when the assuming jurisdiction would prevent waste, delay and expense, and thus conclude by one action and decree a protracted and vexatious legislation. Ib. 437.

4. Over Proceedings in other District Courts.

43. The several district courts of the State have all the same jurisdiction and stand on the same level, and one cannot attempt by the writ of mandamus to supervise, direct or restrain the action of another, and this power must exist in the supreme court, for without it the judiciary system would be irremediably imperfect. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 149.

44. One district court has no authority to enjoin the proceedings of another district court. Anthony v. Dunlap, 8 Cal. 27; Rickett v. Johnson, 8 Cal. 35; Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. 71; Chipman v. Hibbard, 8 Cal. 271; Gorham v. Toomey, 9 Cal. 77.

45. A district court cannot enjoin the proceedings of a federal court. Phelan v. Smith, 8 Cal. 521.

46. The exception to the general rule, that one district court cannot restrain the proceedings of another district court, is where the court in which the action or proceeding should be had is unable, by reason of its jurisdiction, to afford the relief sought; as where several fraudulent judgments are confessed in several courts, it would not be necessary for the creditor to bring a different suit in each different court. Uhlfelder v. Levy, 9 Cal. 614.

5. Over Judgments.

47. A judgment rendered by a district court after the time appointed for the adjournment of the term is invalid, and will be set aside. Smith v. Chichester, 1 Cal. 409; Coffinberry v. Horrill, 5 Cal. 493; Peabody v. Phelps, 7 Cal. 53; Wicks v. Ludwig, 9 Cal. 175.

48. After the adjournment of the term, no person remains in the district court to set aside the judgment, or grant a new trial, except as provided by statute, unless the right is saved by proper motion. Baldwin v. Kramer, 2 Cal. 583; Morrison v. Dopman, 3 Cal. 257; Suydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 281; Carpentier v. Hart, 5 Cal. 407; Robb v. Robb, 6 Cal. 22; Shaw v. McGregor, 8 Cal. 521.

49. The district court is a superior court of general jurisdiction, and its judgment upon any subject matter within its power is conclusive between the parties in every collateral issue, as long as such judgment is unreversed. Webb v. Hanson, 3 Cal. 105.

50. The district court is not limited by the present act, as to the time within which it may grant relief upon a judgment unjustly or improperly obtained. People v. Lafarge, 3 Cal. 133.

51. It is a wrongful exercise of authority, in the district court, to strike out, on an ex parte motion, a marginal entry of satisfaction, on a judgment rendered two years before. Henly v. Hastings, 3 Cal. 342.

II. APPEAL.

1. From the District Court.

52. No appeal lies from a judgment of a district court, on an appeal from an order of the court of sessions,* upon an application of a ferry license. Webb v. Hunson, 2 Cal. 134.

53. A party desiring to appeal from the district court, in a case wherein the statute has failed to make provision, must bring himself within the constitutional provisions of appeal, else the judgment of the district court is final and conclusive. Webb v. Hanson, 3 Cal. 68: 105.

2. On Remittitur from Supreme Court.

54. Where a case is remitted from the supreme court to a district court, the clerk of the district court may issue an execution for the costs accrued thereon, and the district court has no authority to prevent it. City of Marysville v. Buchanan, 3 Cal. 213.

*This appellate jurisdiction from the court of sessions declared unconstitutional.

III. Costs.

55. A district court has no authority to allow counsel fees, as in admiralty cases, in a cause transferred from the court of first instance into that court by statute. Selby v. Bark Alice Tarlton, 1 Cal. 104.

IV. SESSIONS OF THE COURT.

56. At a regular term of the district court, the court fixed the time of holding an adjourned term in accordance with another statute; a new statute was passed, fixing other regular terms, and repealing the previous law regulating regular terms; it was held that the law authorizing the time of holding adjourned terms was impliedly repealed, and that a term so holden was not legal. Domingues v. Domingues, 4 Cal. 186.

57. Though the legislature are required directly to select the places of holding the district court, it does not follow that the right to select a county seat may not be conferred by law upon the people, as the constitution does not require that the district court shall be held at a county seat. Up-ham v. Supervisors Sutter County, 8 Cal. 382.

DISTRICT JUDGE.

1. The constitution of the State confers the authority of peace officers upon the justices of the supreme court and the district judge. People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 13.

2. An attachment will not be issued against a district judge for noncompliance with a writ of mandamus, by which he was directed to vacate an order expelling the relator from the bar, and reinstate him in his office of attorney, where it did not appear from the papers on which the motion of attachment was founded that any application has been made to the court to vacate the order, as commanded by the writ of mandamus, and where it appears that so far as the action of the judge in vacation is concerned, he has in substance complied with the command of the writ of mandamus; and in such case, it will not be deemed a disobedience of the writ, that the court had again expelled the relator for reasons alleged to have arisen after the issuing of the writ. People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 189.

3. The act of the legislature by which a district judge is empowered to hold a district court is constitutional and valid, and a court held in pursuance of said act by a district judge, in a district other than the one for which he was elected, is not for that reason improperly organized. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 380.

4. The legislature created the tenth judicial district, and not having appointed a judge therefor, the governor, on the first May, 1851, appointed the respondent, who was duly qualified. The relator having been elected judge at the general election in September, received his commission and was duly qualified: held, that he was rightfully entitled to his office. People v. Barbour, 3 Cal. 504.

5. In an application for a mandamus to compel a district judge to sign a bill of exceptions, which the relator alleges he refuses to do, and where the district judge, in his answer, avers that he has signed a true bill of exceptions, and that the one presented by the relator is not a true bill: held, that the relator is not entitled to a jury to try this issue. People v. Judge of the Tenth Judicial District, 9 Cal. 20.

6. An execution issued upon a judgment of the district court rendered in 1850, before the judgment was signed by the district judge, is void, and a sale under such execution passes no title to the purchaser. Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 497.

7. District judges have power to issue writs of certiorari and to hear them on their return at chambers. People v. Supervisors of Marin County, 10 Cal. 346.

8. A person duly elected judge of the district court of this State is entitled to hold office for the period of six years. People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 85; People v. Burbank, 12 Cal. 388.

9. Where an election for the office of district Judge has been held by the qualified electors of such district at the general election in 1853, and the term of the present incumbent does not expire until January, 1861: held, that such election was unauthorized, and the person elected was not entitled to a commission as judge. People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 88.

10. Every act done by a district judge, acting as such under a commission, and in open possession of the office, whether rightfully in office or not, is to all intents and purposes as valid, so far as third persons are concerned, as if he were both judge de facto and de jure. People v. Burbank, 12 Cal. 386.

11. The constitution, though it fixes the period of the term of the office of district judge, does not fix any day for the commencement of the term; and if it did, it would not follow that it applied to judges afterwards elected to new districts. Nor would it result that the judge elected in consequence of a vacancy was necessarily elected to fill a vacancy. Ib. 387.

12. The legislature can direct the time and prescribe the mode of electing district judges, but cannot change the tenure of the office; hence, so much of the act as limited the period of incumbency is void. Ib. 392.

13. The fact that a record is erroneous in stating that the parties waived a jury, cannot be shown by an affidavit of the district judge who tried the cause. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 115.

14. The act giving jurisdiction over the subject of contested elections to the judge of the county court, is constitutional, and judges of the district courts are embraced within it. Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 150.

15. A district judge inducted into office with a commission from the governor showing him to be entitled to it from a certain date, draws the salary annexed to the office from that date. Turner v. Melony, 13 Cal. 623.

16. The certificate of a district judge, made eight years after the trial, that he believed the exceptions taken were correctly noted in the clerk's minutes of the testimony, cannot supply the place of a bill of exceptions. Castro v. Armesti, 14 Cal. 39.

17. A statement on appeal certified by a district judge to be correct according to his recollection is not sufficient. Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 196.

18. Where a district judge cannot be found, the proposed statement or bill in a criminal case may be delivered to the clerk of the court for him, the clerk's office being the proper place for the deposit of papers for the judge in his absence from his chambers. The clerk should minute on the document the date of its receipt and hand it to the judge at the earliest convenient opportunity. People v. Lee, 14 Cal. 512.

19. Questions of discretion in the judge of the district court are not reviewed in the supreme court except in cases of gross abuse, to the injury of the party. Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

20. Where the record shows simply a statement signed by the district judge, without any certificate preceding as to the correctness of the statement, and it does not purport to be a statement on motion for new trial, and no order appears disposing of the motion for new trial: held, that there is no statement on motion for new trial or on appeal. And the grounds of the motion for new trial not being filed within the time required by law, the appeal is from the judgment alone. McCartney v. Fitz Henry, 16 Cal. 185.

DIVIDEND.

1. Plaintiff assigns to defendant, September 22d, two shares of stock in a mining company, stating in the assignment, "I authorize the transfer to him, (defendant) with all the dividends made after the morning of the twenty-third of September." Both parties expected a dividend on Monday, the twenty-second. The trustees did not in fact declare dividends until between noon and one o'clock on Tuesday: held, that the dividends belonged to plaintiff, and that parol evidence was admissible to explain the transaction and point its meaning. Brewster v. Lathrop, 15 Cal. 22.

DIVORCE.

1. By the Mexican law, marriage lawfully contracted in the Mexican church between members thereof cannot be dissolved by the civil tribunals. Without the sanction of the church, marriage is a mere civil contract, and as such falls within the jurisdiction of the court of first instance. Harman v. Harman, 3 Cal. 215.

2. Upon granting a divorce, the act relative to husband and wife directs that the common property shall be equally divided. It is held that one of the direct results, and part and parcel of a decree of divorce, is the partition of the common property and is one of the proper subjects of the action. Kashaw v. Kashaw, 3 Cal. 321.

3. The wife, in an action for a divorce, may make a party of any one claiming an interest in the common property. Ib. 322.

4. Where the husband resided and had his domicil some time in this State, and the wife followed him and arrived here and commenced an action for divorce before six months had elapsed after her arrival: it was held, that the domicil of the husband is the domicil of the wife, and she must be considered as having been a resident of the State continuously since her husband arrived. Ib.

5. In an action for divorce, the desertion of the husband entitles the wife to her own domicil for the purposes of maintaining the action. Moffatt v. Moffatt, 5 Cal. 281.

6. In an action for divorce and a partition of the property acquired during coverture, the district court has jurisdiction alone and in an unlimited amount, and can also provide for the support of the wife and child. Deuprez v. Deuprez, 5 Cal. 388.

7. In an action by the wife for a divorce on the ground of the willful neglect of the husband and his failure to provide her with the necessaries of life for the period of three years, the residence of the husband with the wife within the three years is no answer to the application, where it appears that they were not living together at the commencement of the suit. Washburn v. Washburn, 9 Cal. 476.

8. Willful neglect, whether accompanied with desertion or otherwise, is a distinct ground of divorce. Ib.

Divorce.

9. It must appear affirmatively on the part of the applicant that the husband was the owner of property sufficient to provide for the necessities of life, and neglected so to do. Ib.

10. In an action for divorce, the defendant cannot have a portion of the homestead set apart to him, where it is not shown that the property claimed as a homestead has been at any time during the existence of the marriage the residence of the family. Elmore v. Elmore, 10 Cal. 226.

11. The supreme court possesses appellate jurisdiction from a decree rendered in a suit for divorce from the bonds of matrimony. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 253.

12. The charge of adultery should be stated with reasonable certainty as to time and place, so as to enable the defendant to prepare to meet it on the trial. Ib. 254.

13. The statute has not altered any of the ordinary rules of pleading for cases of divorce, except that nothing can be taken by admission or default. Ib.

14. The doctrine of recrimination or compensatio criminum applicable in suits for divorce, and the several offenses which by the statute constitute grounds of divorce, are pleadable in bar to such suits, the one to the other, within the principle of the doctrine. Ib.

15. Willful desertion of the other by either party for the period of two years is ground for a divorce under the statute; and desertion for a less period is not sufficient to bar a decree. Ib. 256.

16. The true rule which should govern the courts in the exercise of their discretion in this respect is this: that to entitle to a decree for an absolute divorce from the bonds of matrimony, the applicant must be an innocent party; one who has faithfully discharged the obligations of the marriage relations, and seeks relief because really injured or aggrieved by the misconduct of the other; and on the other hand, where there are circumstances showing a disregard of those obligations, though not carried to such a degree as to constitute itself a ground for divorce, the decree should be only for a divorce from bed and board. Ib. 257.

17. The whole issue in divorce cases cannot, even by stipulation, be referred; and when a reference is had, the referee cannot pass upon the testimony. If he make any statement or finding of facts, the court is obliged to disregard it, and base its decree only upon the legal testimony taken. Baker v. Baker, 10 Cal. 527.

18. An order setting aside the findings of a referee in a divorce case, and sending the case back to the referee for further testimony, is interlocutory in its character, and not the subject of appeal. Ib.

19. The statute on divorces does not in terms prohibit the introduction of confessions in evidence; but only provides that the decree shall not be granted on them. Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 93.

20. When all presumptions of collusion are repelled, and from circumstances it appears reasonably certain that the confession made is true, the ground of the rule of exclusion in cases of divorce is obviated, and there can be no reason for refusing consideration to the confession. Ib. 94.

21. Marriage by our law is a civil contract, and may be avoided for material and substantive fraud in its procurement; and ante nuptial pregnancy by a stranger is a fraud going to the very substance of the contract, vitiates it ab initio, and authorizes a divorce. Ib. 102.

22. Extreme cruelty in our divorce act means the same thing as the sævitia or cruelty of the English ecclesiastical court; and may be defined generally to be any conduct in one of the married parties which furnishes reasonable apprehension that the continuance of the cohabitation would be attended with bodily harm to the other. Morris v. Morris, 14 Cal. 79.

23. Courts grant divorces in cases of cruelty, not to punish an offense already committed, but to relieve the complaining party of apprehended danger. And the divorce may follow, even in the absence of any actual violence. Ib.

24. But if there has been actual violence, it must be attended with danger to life, limb or health, or be such as to cause reasonable apprehension of future danger. Ib. 80.

25. Divorce for extreme cruelty is not generally granted when such cruelty is caused by the misconduct of the wife who applies. Johnson v. Johnson, 14 Cal. 460.

26. A wife divorced from her husband for extreme cruelty on his part is entitled to the custody of their female child of tender years—the wife being blameless.

Divorce.—Domicil.

The father has a right to see the child at all convenient times. Wand v. Wand, 14 Cal. 517.

27. The refusal of the wife to accompany her husband on a change of residence, followed by actual cessation of matrimonial cohabitation, and unattended by any excusing or explanatory circumstances, is evidence of desertion, and authorizes a divorce. Hardenbergh v. Hardenbergh, 14 Cal. 656.

28. Desertion consists of an actual cessation of matrimonial cohabitation between the parties, coupled with an intent to desert, in the mind of the offending party. Ib. 657.

29. Where the court dissolves the bonds of matrimony, it has no power to impose any restraint upon a second marriage in the absence of an express statute conferring it. Barber v. Barber, 16 Cal. 378.

DOMICIL.

1. Where the husband resided and had his domicile sometime in this State, and the wife followed him and arrived here and commenced an action for divorce before six months had elapsed after her arrival, it was held that the domicile of the husband is the domicile of the wife, and she must be considered as having been a resident of the State continuously since her husband arrived. Kashaw v. Kashaw, 3 Cal. 322.

2. The homestead is the family residence, and in order to constitute a homestead there must be an actual occupancy, with the intention of dedicating the premises to such purpose. Residence is prima facie evidence of such intention, and imparts notice.* Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 25; Holden v. Pinney, 6 Cal. 235.

3. Residence depends upon intention, as well as fact, and mere inhabitancy for a short period against the intention of acquiring a domicile would not make a resident within the meaning of the law, so as to constitute an elector. People v. Peralta, 4 Cal. 175.

4. Occupancy by the family is presumptive evidence of the appropriation of a place as a homestead, and is consequently notice to all the world.* Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 273.

5. In the case of the successive occupancy of several places as residences, the recovery of either one of them by the wife, as a homestead, would bar her recovery of any other as such.* Ib.

6. The domicile of the husband is the domicile of the wife, in contemplation of law, and it is not necessary that she should be an actual resident in the State. Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 257.

7. In an action for a divorce, the desertion of the husband entitles the wife to her own domicile for the purpose of maintaining the action. Moffatt v. Moffatt, 5 Cal. 281.

8. Where a married man, whose wife had never resided in the State, purchased a lot of land and resided upon it, which he then mortgaged, his wife not joining therein, and subsequently his wife came to this State and resided with him on the mortgaged premises: held, that the character of a homestead was never impressed upon the premises until the actual residence of the family thereon, and therefore the homestead exemption cannot be sustained against the mortgage.* Cary v. Tice, 6 Cal. 629; Rix v. McHenry, 9 Cal. 91.

9. In the application by the wife for a divorce, on the ground of willful neglect of her husband and his failure to provide her with the necessaries of life for the period of three years, the residence of the husband with the wife within the three years is no answer to the application, where it appears they were not living together at the commencement of the suit. Washburn v. Washburn, 9 Cal. 476.

10. In an action of divorce, the defendant cannot have a portion of the homestead set apart to him, where it is not shown that the property claimed as a homestead has been at any time during the existence of the marriage the residence of the family. Elmore v. Elmore, 10 Cal. 226.

* The statutes of 1860, p. 311, require the homestead to be declared such, and the declaration to be recorded.

DONATION.

1. Our statute does not seem to provide for property acquired by gift to the husband and wife jointly, but with that exception there is no substantial difference, unless perhaps the meaning of the term donation, under the Spanish and Mexican law, was more comprehensive than the term in our jurisprudence. Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 471.

2. A gift of fruit would not lose its character as a gift because accompanied with the condition that the donee should gather it; nor would a gift of land be less a donation because the beneficiary was required to measure the specific quantity given and designate it by metes and bounds. Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 474; Noè v. Card, 14 Cal. 598.

3. Concessions may be made, on consideration moving from the donee, which would take from them the character of a donation. But lands given by the king, without price paid for them, and not in remuneration of any services rendered, are certainly donations. Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 475; Noè v. Card, 14 Cal. 610.

4. Under all systems, donations are of three classes; pure, remuneratory and conditional. They are pure when made without condition in the exercise of a spirit of liberality, as charities. They are remuneratory when required by no legal obligation, but are made from a regard for services rendered. They are conditional when accompanied with provisions intended to secure the purposes for which they are made. Noè v. Card, 14 Cal. 610.

DOWER.

1. Our statute has done away with the common law right of dower, and substituted in place a half interest in the common property. Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 256. Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 469.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. To maintain ejectment under the American law, a party may rely upon the strength of his title, or simply on prior actual possession; and under Mexican law a party may have his possessory action, in which possession by the plaintiff and disturbance thereof by the defendant may be the sole questions at issue between the parties; or he may have his petitory action on his claim of undisputed title. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 259.

2. Indebtitatus assumpsit for rent will not lie in favor of a stranger for the purpose of trying his title, or by one of the litigant parties claiming the land; this action depending not upon the validity of plaintiff's title, but upon a contract express or implied. Sampson v. Shaeffer, 3 Cal. 201.

3. In an action of ejectment, the purchaser of a homestead from the husband without the concurrence of the wife is not entitled to recover the excess of its value over $5,000.* Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 26.

4. Ejectment is merely a possessory action, and is confined to cases where the claimant has a possessory title—a right of entry upon the lands; to support it four things are necessary, title, lease, entry and ouster. Payne v. Treadwell, 5 Cal. 311.

5. To enable a party to recover lands under the possessory act of this State, he must have complied with the provisions of the act. Sweetland v. Froe, 6 Cal. 147.

6. The fact that a suit in ejectment has been commenced against a judgment debtor by the real owner of the land, does not entitle the judgment debtor to enjoin the judgment recovered, on the ground that it was for a balance of purchase money of land under covenant for a good title. He can only avail himself of the covenants of his grantor when he has been evicted, unless he offers to surrender the land to his grantor. Jackson v. Norton, 6 Cal. 189.

7. The defense arising from a verbal contract for the sale of land, accompanied with acts of part performance, taking the contract from the operation of the statute, is permissible, under our practice, to an action of ejectment for the recovery of the premises. Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 160.

8. A vendor by a quit claim deed is a competent witness in an action of ejectment by the vendee against a third party to recover possession of the premises. Johnson v. Parks, 10 Cal. 448.

9. In an action of ejectment, a juror who has formed an opinion adverse to the validity of the title under which defendants claimed, is an incompetent juror. White v. Moses, 11 Cal. 69.

10. An action of ejectment, raising the question whether a grant made by the Mexican government passed title to the tract within the limits of the grant, is not a case in which a writ of error lies under the judiciary act. Ferris v. Coover, 11 Cal. 181.

II. COMPLAINT IN EJECTMENT.

11. In a possessory action, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to state that he was lawfully entitled to the possession of the premises, without setting out the evidence of his right. Goodwin v. Stebbins, 2 Cal. 105.

12. The allegation of possession at the time of the ouster complained of is a sufficient allegation of title to sustain the declaration. Hutchinson v. Perley, 4 Cal. 34; Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 250; Garrison v. Sampson, 15 Cal. 95; Boles v. Cohen, 15 Cal. 151; Boles v. Weifenback, 15 Cal. 144.

13. Where a complaint alleges that plaintiff was in possession of, and lawfully entitled to possession at the time of eviction: it was held, that the complaint must be treated as a declaration in ejectment. Ramirez v. Murray, 4 Cal. 293.

14. A claim for the possession of real property cannot be joined with a claim for consequential damages, arising from a change of a road, by which a tavern keeper may have been injured in his business. Bowles v. Sacramento Turnpike and Plank Road Co., 5 Cal. 225.

15. The allegation that the defendant is in possession and unlawfully withholds the premises, is insufficient; it is a conclusion of law drawn from the defendant's possession, the circumstances of which should be stated. Payne v. Treadwell, 5 Cal. 311.

16. In ejectment, it is necessary for the defendant to allege, and if traversed, to prove a seizin, either in himself or his ancestors, through whom he claims. Id. 312.

* This decision is abrogated by the statute of 1860, p. 311, requiring a homestead to be ascertained by declaration recorded in the county recorder's office.

Complaint in Ejectment.

17. In an action of ejectment to recover the possession of a tract of land, the plaintiff must aver either title or possession. The mere taking from the land a portion of the herbage growing thereon is not sufficient to give a right of possession. Steinback v. Fitzpatrick, 12 Cal. 296.

18. In a complaint in ejectment, parties may seek, in addition to a recovery of the premises, an injunction restraining the commission of trespass in the nature of waste, pending the action; but the grounds of equity interposition should be stated subsequently and distinct from those upon which the judgment at law is sought. Natoma W. and M. Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 548.

19. A complaint in ejectment, with general averments in the usual form, is sufficient, without a specific averment of the facts. To set out the facts connected with the title, and the wrongful acts of the defendant, would produce confusion, without benefit. Garrison v. Sampson, 15 Cal. 95.

20. A complaint in ejectment, averring that plaintiff was in the actual possession of the premises by inclosure and cultivation; that defendants, on a certain day, entered upon the same and ousted the plaintiff, and that defendant is still in possession, is sufficient. Boles v. Weisenback, 15 Cal. 144.

21. Complaint in ejectment, averring prior possession in plaintiff, entry and ouster by defendant, and that he is still in possession, sufficient. Boles v. Cohen, 15 Cal. 151.

22. Complaint in ejectment may be for two separate and distinct pieces of land; but the two causes of action must be separately stated, affect all the parties to the action, and not require different places of trial. Ib. 152.

23. Complaint in ejectment need not state the exact time of the alleged ouster, especially when no claim is made for damages, and no recovery had for them; the allegation in this case as to time of ouster being "on or about December 12th, 1857." Collier v. Corbett, 15 Cal. 185.

24. In ejectment, the only facts necessary to be alleged are, that the plaintiff is seized of the premises, or of some estate therein in fee, or for life, or for years, according to the fact, and that the defendant was in their possession at the commencement of the action, and withholds the possession from plaintiff. The seizin is the fact to be alleged. It is a pleadable and issuable fact, to be established by conveyances from a paramount source of title, or by evidence of prior possession. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 243.

25. An allegation that the possession of defendant is "wrongful or unlawful" is not the statement of a fact, but of a conclusion of law. The words are mere surplusage, and though they do not vitiate, they do no good. Ib. 244.

26. A complaint in ejectment, describing the premises as "lot No. 1, in block No. 23, as per plot of the town of Red Bluff, as laid out by the Red Bluff Land Corporation in 1853, being on the corner of Main and Sycamore streets, twenty-five feet on Main by one hundred and fifteen feet on Sycamore, and running back to the alley;" and specifying the county in which they are situated by the terms "in said county," referring to the designation "county of Tehama" in the title of the suit, sufficiently describes the premises. The description by metes and bounds is required only so far as they may be necessary to identify with certainty the property. Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 433.

27. In actions to recover real property, the complaint need not state the residence of either of the parties; the statute provides for the trial in certain counties, and the situation of the premises, not the residence of the parties, determines the county. Ib.

28. A complaint in ejectment should not set out the mesne conveyances through which plaintiffs deraign title. These are matters of evidence, not of pleading, and should be stricken out from the complaint, on motion. Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 571.

29. In this case, the complaint should only have averred that on some day designated plaintiffs were possessed of the land, describing it; that while thus possessed, defendant entered upon the same and ousted them, and has ever since withheld the possession from them, to their damage, specifying such sum as might cover the value of the use and occupation from the date of the ouster. Ib.

30. The fact that a complaint in ejectment, in addition to describing the premises by metes and bounds, also designates them as one-half of a certain preëmption claim taken up by one Morris—from whom plaintiffs traced title—in 1850, and surveyed by the county surveyor, and recorded in conformity with the statute, does not make it essential to plaintiffs' recovery as against a defendant in possession that they should allege in their complaint, and on the trial prove such facts as will bring them within the provisions of the preëmption laws of the United States, or the possessory act of this State. The designation of the property as part of a preëmption claim does not preclude the claimants from relying upon any other source of title than the United States or the State. Ib. 572.

31. Where in ejectment the ouster was alleged to have taken place in June, 1856, while the title of plaintiff was alleged to have accrued only in May, 1859: held, that if this was not a clerical error, it is a defect which cannot be taken advantage of after verdict. Ib. 574.

III. PARTIES TO THE ACTION.

32. If it is intended to charge parties with taking possession of one or more parcels of land distinct from the lot sued for in the complaint, of which the defendant has possession, the claim against them should not be included in the same action. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 258.

33. If it is a joint action of ejectment on the part of the plaintiffs, all must recover or none can.* Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 260; Dewey v. Lambier, 7 Cal. 348.

34. Tenants in common cannot join in an action in ejectment; they must sue separately. Johnson v. Sepulbeda, 5 Cal. 151; Throckmorton v. Burr, 5 Cal. 401; Covillaud v. Tanner, 7 Cal. 40; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 187.

35. A nonresident alien cannot inherit land in this State, and consequently cannot maintain ejectment.† Siemssen v. Boffer, 6 Cal. 252.

36. The code allows any person in possession of real estate to bring an action against any person who claims an estate or interest adverse to him. Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 319; Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 113.

37. Ejectment is a possessory action and must be brought against the occupant. It determines no rights but those of possession at the time, and it matters not who has or claims to have the title of the premises. Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 270.

38. In an action of ejectment to recover an undivided interest in a mining claim, it is not necessary to make parties defendants in such action who are in possession of such claim holding other undivided interests, and who claim no right to that sued for. Waring v. Crow, 11 Cal. 371.

39. In an action of ejectment against two persons, where two of the defendants had previously surrendered the premises to his codefendant, this fact is sufficient to support the finding of the court that the possession was in one and not in the other. Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co., 12 Cal. 408.

40. In ejectment, suit must be brought against the terre-tenant, or party in possession. Klink v. Cohen, 13 Cal. 624.

IV. POSSESSION.

41. The fact that horses and cattle of a person have roamed over and grazed upon a particular tract of land does not of itself alone make out his actual possession of the land. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 260.

42. If the plaintiff was not in possession at the time of the defendant's entry, he cannot maintain ejectment. Ib.

43. When the plaintiff seeks to recover upon the sole ground of prior possession, a clear and unequivocal possession should be proven. Taking possession and driving some surveyor's stakes and clearing away some brush for the purpose of erecting a dwelling house, but performing no other acts of ownership at that or any other time, are insufficient evidences of possession. Woodworth v. Fulton, 1 Cal. 310.

44. Courts will protect the rights of the actual possessor, and if the complaint avers possession by the plaintiff and is not denied by the answer, it will be assumed by the court as a conceded fact. Folsom v. Root, 1 Cal. 376.

*The statute of March 6th, 1857, (Statutes, p. 62) enables one or more tenants in common or joint tenants to sue jointly or separately.

†The act of April 19th, 1856, enlarged the powers of inheritance and extended it to nonresident aliens. See State v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 165.

Possession.

45. Possession is always prima facie evidence of title, and proof of prior possession is enough to maintain ejectment against a mere naked trespasser. Hutchinson v. Perley, 4 Cal. 34; Hicks v. Davis, 4 Cal. 69; Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 78; Plume v. Seward, 4 Cal. 96; McMinn v. Mayes, 4 Cal. 210; Bequette v. Caulfield, 4 Cal. 278; Ramirez v. Murray, 4 Cal. 293; Russell v. Ford, 5 Cal. 250; Grover v. Hawley, 5 Cal. 486; Covillaud v. Tanner, 7 Cal. 39; McCarron v. O'Connell, 7 Cal. 153; Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. 5; Naglee v. Macy, 9 Cal. 427.

46. To constitute a possession sufficient to establish prima facie evidence of title, there must be an actual bona fide occupation or possessio pedis, and not a mere assertion of title. Plume v. Seward, 4 Cal. 96.

47. It is not for the jury to determine whether the fact of prior possession is evidence of title; it is so declared by law. Castro v. Gill, 5 Cal. 42.

48. A party's possession is not always confined to his actual enclosure. Ib.

49. Proof of possession, however short, will entitle a claimant to recover, unless the defendant can account for such possession, or show a prior possession or title in himself or a third person. Potter v. Knowles, 5 Cal. 88.

50. Where two parties rely upon possession merely as proof of title, the presumption of ownership is in favor of the first possessor. Ib.

51. To sustain an action of ejectment in favor of a party relying upon mere prior possession, the defendant in the action is treated as an intruder and wrong doer, who invades without right in the premises. McClintock v. Boyden, 5 Cal. 101.

52. Where the plaintiff claimed title to the premises as part of a preëmption claim located by him, he must prove an enclosure of or marked and visible boundaries embracing the lot in dispute. Larue v. Gaskins, 5 Cal. 166.

53. Prior possession is evidence of title, and this cannot by any system of reasoning be made to yield to mere color of title. Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 250.

54. The occupant of mineral land may rely upon his possession against a mere trespasser, unless he uses the land for grazing or agricultural purposes. Fitzgerald v. Urton, 5 Cal. 309.

55. To enable the plaintiff in ejectment to recover on prior possession, he must allege and prove an actual ouster. Watson v. Zimmerman, 6 Cal. 47.

56. In an action for the recovery of a portion of a tract of land, both parties relying on possession and the defendant proving a prior possession by actual enclosure of the entire tract, it was error to instruct the jury that the defendant's possession was not valid, unless in conformity with the preëmption laws of the United States or the possessory law of this State. Bradshaw v. Treat, 6 Cal. 172.

57. Where a plaintiff in ejectment seeks to recover upon prior possession and does not show a compliance with the statute concerning possessory actions in this State, he can only recover upon proof of actual bona fide occupation. Murphy v. Wallingford, 6 Cal. 649.

58. Where the complaint called upon the defendant to answer not only the character of the possession but the fact of possession of it, a failure to deny the averment is an admission of it. Burke v. Table Mountain W. Co., 12 Cal. 407.

59. Where a party takes possession of a tract of land, and encloses it with a fence consisting of posts seven feet apart, and one board six inches wide, nailed on to the posts, and the same is not sufficient to turn cattle, and the land is not cultivated, such possession is not sufficient to sustain an action of ejectment as against a party in possession of a part of the tract, under a deed to the whole. Baldwin v. Simpson, 12 Cal. 560.

60. A perfect equity united with possession is, under our system, equivalent for all purposes of defense to a legal title. Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 497.

61. The possession of a tenant is not notice of his landlord's title. Smith v. Dall, 13 Cal. 511.

62. Where a complaint for the possession of land avers defendants to be in possession, and the answer does not deny, but affirmatively shows it, then, even if the allegation of possession be not material, and therefore not requiring a denial, the fact of possession becomes a matter of admission or agreement between the parties as an independent fact not in issue by the pleadings but affecting the whole case. Powell v. Oullahan, 14 Cal. 116.

63. The possession of agricultural land is prima facie proof of title against a trespasser; but where it is shown that the party goes on mineral land to mine, there is no presumption that he is a trespasser; and the statutory presumption that it is public land, in the absence of proof of title in the person claiming it as agricultural land, applies. Burdge v. Smith, 14 Cal. 383.

Possession.

64. Mere entry on public land, without enclosing it, does not give a right of action on the possession alone. Wright v. Whitesides, 15 Cal. 47.

65. A party claiming land under the possessory act of 1852, must show compliance with the provisions of the act. He must be a citizen of the United States; must file the affidavit required by section two; and make his improvements within ninety days, etc. Merely residing on a part of the land, tracing lines, putting up stakes for boundaries, etc., is not sufficient. Ib.

66. Merely going on waste, uninclosed public land, and building or occupying a house and corral, and even subsequently cutting hay on part of the land, does not give the party any claim to or possession of the whole tract of one hundred and sixty acres. The case would be different if the party claimed and entered under the possessory act of this State, and pursued the necessary steps prescribed by it; or, probably, if he had made his entry under the preëmption laws of the United States. Garrison v. Sampson, 15 Cal. 95.

67. Where, in such case—there being no claim under the possessory act, or the preëmption laws of the United States—plaintiff claims one hundred and sixty acres by force of his prior possession, and a contract or consent on the part of defendant, whom he let into possession, to hold the premises for him, or subject to his order, the judgment cannot be in favor of plaintiff for the whole tract, but only for the small part on which the house and corral were situated, and of which plaintiff was in the actual occupancy—there being no proof, except defendant's general consent, as above named, that defendant agreed to hold the whole tract for plaintiff. Ib.

68. In ejectment for mineral lands, plaintiff averred possession of a large tract of land, including the mining ground in controversy, and that he occupied the land for agricultural and mining purposes, without stating that any use was made of the particular portion held by defendants. This averment of possession, and also the averment of ouster, were insufficiently denied in the answer; but the answer averred affirmatively that, at the time defendants entered upon the ground in dispute, it was a part of the public domain of the United States, contained large and valuable deposits of gold; that they entered upon and took possession of it for mining purposes, and that they have since held and used it for such purposes only. The court below gave judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings. Held, that these affirmative averments of defendants being proved, plaintiff could not recover without showing such an actual and meritorious possession and occupancy as rendered the interference of the defendants unjust and inequitable; that he could not recover on the pleadings, because the character of his possession did not appear, the complaint not averring that this particular portion of the land was ever used by plaintiff for any purpose whatever. Smith v. Doe, 15 Cal. 104.

69. The allegation of possession is too broad to defeat the rights of a person who has, in good faith, located upon public mineral land for the purpose of mining. Ib.

70. Ejectment for mining ground, the parties being owners of claims on opposite sides of the same hill. Plaintiffs were an ordinary joint stock company, or common partnership, and claimed by purchase and transfer from the original members of the company. The practice of the company was to issue to members certificates of stock, and these certificates constituted the only evidence of membership recognized by the company, transfers being made by an assignment of the certificates, and a notice thereof in the books of the company. On the trial, these certificates with the assignments were read in evidence by plaintiffs, to show their interest in the ground, and their right to maintain the action, defendants objecting to them on the ground of irrelevancy, and that their execution was not proved. The court instructed the jury—1st, that if they found that plaintiffs located their claim as now claimed, before the location of defendants' claim, then they should find for plaintiffs; and 2d, if they found that defendants never located any claim adjoining plaintiffs' claim, then they should find for plaintiffs: held, that the instructions are wrong, as violating the principle that plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title; that defendants, having been in actual possession for a long time, were not required to show anything beyond it until a prior and paramount right was shown in plaintiffs; that it was not essential to defendants' possession that they had ever formally located their claim in accordance with any mining regulations, or that they had or claimed any other mining ground. Pennsylvania Mining Co. v. Owens, 15 Cal. 136.

Possession.—Evidence in Ejectment.

71. There is no necessity, in a complaint in ejectment, in negating the possible rightful character of defendant's possession. Such possession is a pleadable and issuable fact; but if it rest upon any existing right, defendant must show it affirmatively in his defense. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 243.

72. On the trial in ejectment, plaintiff can rest his case, in the first instance, upon proof of his seizing, and of the possession by defendants. From these facts, when established, the law implies a right to the present possession in the plaintiff, and a holding adverse to that right in defendants. Ib. 244.

73. In this State, although the larger portion of the mineral lands belong to the United States, yet defendant cannot defeat an action for mining claims, water privileges and the like, by showing the paramount title of the government. Our courts, in determining controversies between parties thus situated, presume a grant from government to the first appropriator. This presumption, though of no avail against the government, is held absolute in such controversies. Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 572.

74. In controversies respecting public lands, other than mineral lands, the title, as between citizens of the State, where neither party connects himself with the government, is considered vested in the first possessor, and to proceed from him. This possession must be an actual one, and not constructive; and the right it confers must be distinguished from the right given by the possessory act of the State. Ib.

75. A party relying on the possessory act of the State, must show compliance with its provisions, and can then maintain an action for the possession of land occupied for cultivation or grazing, without showing an actual enclosure or actual possession of the whole claim. Ib. 573.

76. Where plaintiff relies not on the possessory act of the State, but on the prior possession of himself, or of parties through whom he claims, such possession must be shown to have been actual in him or them; and by actual possession is meant a subjection to the will and dominion of the claimant, and is usually evidenced by occupation, by a substantial inclosure, by cultivation, or by appropriate use, according to the particular locality and quality of the property. Ib.

1. Abandonment of Possession.

77. Laying off land into town lots, selling the same, and exercising other acts of ownership over them, is no evidence of abandonment; but taken in connection with previous acts of ownership, furnishes additional evidence of possession. Plume v. Seward, 4 Cal. 97.

78. Where a party only shows prior possession, that reliance may fail, if it be shown that he voluntarily abandoned his possession, without the purpose of returning. Bequette v. Caulfield, 4 Cal. 279.

79. The removal of an enclosure of land, for the purpose of replacing it with a better one, so far from being evidence of an intention to abandon the premises, is direct evidence of the contrary. Sweetland v. Hill, 9 Cal. 557.

80. In ejectment it is not reasonable to hold that plaintiffs intended to abandon all rights to any other land, provided the official survey did not conform to the boundaries they indicated. Moore v. Wilkinson, 13 Cal. 489; Moore v. Roff, 13 Cal. 489.

V. EVIDENCE IN EJECTMENT.

81. To maintain ejectment, the plaintiff must establish, first, that he was in actual possession at the time of the intrusion complained of; second, that he is entitled to be reinstated in the possession from which he claims to have been illegally evicted. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 260.

82. The question as to the possession and identity of the land should be left to the jury. Hicks v. Davis, 4 Cal. 69.

83. Possession, coupled with color of title, must prevail, except where a better title is shown in the defendants; and where plaintiff pleads a fee simple, he is compelled to prove the same, but can also rely on prior possession. Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 79.

84. In ejectment, the plaintiff may offer in evidence a deed to the defendant, in order to explain the latter's possession. McMinn v. Mayes, 4 Cal. 210.

85. Where a plaintiff sets up his right to property, by virtue of a conveyance, which was shown by the testimony of a witness to be a mortgage; held, that the defendant, on cross-examination, could show that the mortgage had been satisfied. Chenery v. Palmer, 5 Cal. 132.

86. Under the old system of pleading, a former recovery could be given in evidence under the general issue in ejectment; but this is changed by our code. Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 27.

87. The lines of a quarter section of government land, which are distinctly marked by natural boundaries, and by stakes placed at convenient distances, so that the lines can be easily traced, are sufficient to authorize the occupant to maintain an action for a trespass thereon, under the provision of the act of April 11th, 1850. Taylor v. Woodward, 10 Cal. 91.

88. It has been held that the declarations of a tenant in possession of land, those declarations being made at the time of possession, may sometimes be given in evidence as a part of the res gestæ to qualify the possession, the possession being the transaction which the declarations illustrate. But in order, and prior to the introduction of these declarations, it must be proved that the tenant was in possession at the time the proposed declarations were made. Ellis v. Janes, 10 Cal. 458.

89. In an action of ejectment against several defendants, the plaintiff has the right to prove what part of the land in dispute was occupied by one of the defendants. Ib.

90. A decree of confirmation of a grant by the United States land commissioner and the United States district court cannot be impeached in an action of ejectment between a party claiming under the grant and a third party. Rose v. Davis, 11 Cal. 140.

91. A private survey is no legal evidence of the facts it purports to contain, since, if it were, any man might recover the land of another, by including it in his own boundaries. Ib. 141.

92. In an action of ejectment, where the plaintiff seeks to establish the loss of a deed under which he deraigns title, in order to lay the foundation for secondary evidence, the proof of search by the agent or attorney in fact of the plaintiff, and inquiry by him of the grantor is insufficient, as the plaintiff himself might have the possession or control of the original, and in the absence of other evidence, his affidavit should have been offered. Fallon v. Dougherty, 12 Cal. 105.

93. In an action of ejectment to recover mining claims, an answer to the complaint which avers "that any right that plaintiffs may have ever had to the possession, etc., they forfeited by a noncompliance with the rules, customs and regulations of the miners of the diggings embracing the claims in dispute, prior to the defendant's entry," is insufficient in not setting forth the rules, etc. Dutch Flat Water Co. v. Mooney, 12 Cal. 534.

94. The decrees of the board of land commissioners and of the district court are not indispensable to a recovery in ejectment on a grant, but are admissible and conclusive against the government, and against those holding by its license or permission. Gregory v. McPherson, 13 Cal. 574.

95. An allegation in a verified complaint, that "defendants wrongfully and unlawfully entered upon and dispossessed" plaintiff, is not sufficiently denied by a denial that "defendants wrongfully and unlawfully entered and dispossessed" plaintiff, because such denial admits entry and ouster. Busenius v. Coffee, 14 Cal. 92.

96. Where in ejectment the complaint avers title as administrator, a default admits it. Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 119.

97. The rule at common law, as to the necessity of proof in ejectment of a legal estate, and a right of entry in the plaintiff at the date of the demise laid in the declaration, has no application under our system. Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 468.

Evidence in Ejectment.

98. In ejectment, where the title is of record and wholly documentary, the court may declare the effect of the papers offered by plaintiff, and instruct the jury that plaintiff has made out his title, if they believe the land to be within the boundaries of a grant under which plaintiff claims. McGarvey v. Little, 15 Cal. 31.

99. Where the minutes of the court entered of record show that plaintiff offered in evidence the patent, and certain mesne conveyances to himself, but they do not appear in the statement for new trial, and the papers are not set out in the record, and the court charges as above, this court will not hold that the charge was an abstraction, or that it mistook the facts, when the motion for new trial fails to set forth the grounds relied on, and the statement does not show that the testimony therein was all the testimony offered. Id.

100. Under the allegation of ouster, a holding over by the defendant may be shown. Garrison v. Sampson, 15 Cal. 95.

101. Ejectment for mining ground, the parties being owners of claims on opposite sides of the same hill. Plaintiffs were an ordinary joint stock company, or common partnership, and claimed by purchase and transfer from the original members of the company. The practice of the company was to issue to members certificates of stock, and these certificates constituted the only evidence of membership recognized by the company; transfers being made by an assignment of the certificates, and a notice thereof in the books of the company. On the trial, these certificates with the assignments were read in evidence by plaintiffs, to show their interest in the ground and their right to maintain the action, defendants objecting to them on the ground of irrelevancy, and that their execution was not proved: held, that the certificates, etc., were relevant to show possession in plaintiffs, but that their execution should have been proven. Pennsylvania M. Co. v. Owens, 15 Cal. 136.

102. In ejectment for an interest in a mining claim, the answer being a general denial, defendant cannot defeat the action by showing the claim to be partnership property. Any rights defendant may have in the premises, growing out of the partnership, must be asserted in equity, particularly as the legal title in this case is in plaintiff. Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 302.

103. In ejectment, plaintiff offered to introduce in evidence an executory contract by which S. & Co. agreed to sell to Wooster the land sued for; and, when the purchase money was paid, to make a deed—W. to take possession at once, and to retain it so long as he complied with the contract. Plaintiff stated it to be his intention to show, in connection with the contract, that the defendant claimed under Wooster. The answer averred that Wooster mortgaged the premises to defendant, who foreclosed, and went into possession under the sheriff's deed: held, that the contract, with the other proof, was prima facie relevant to the issue, plaintiff's object being to show that Wooster had forfeited his rights under the contract, and that he, plaintiff, had succeeded to the right and title of S. & Co. Palmer v. McCafferty, 15 Cal. 335.

104. In ejectment, a variance between the alleged seizin and right of possession of plaintiff and the date of conveyance to him is immaterial, if the latter be previous to the commencement of the action. Right of possession in plaintiff, and occupation by defendant at that time, are sufficient. Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 365.

105. The date at which plaintiff's right accrued, or defendant's occupation began, are material only with reference to the claim for mesne profits. Id.

106. In ejectment, the court having admitted in evidence, as sufficiently proven, the mesne conveyances through which plaintiff traced title—the defendants being mere trespassers—charged the jury that “the written evidence of title, together with the admissions of the parties, authorized them to find for plaintiff; since the execution of the papers had been passed upon by the court:” held, to be no objection to this instruction that it does not leave the execution and delivery of the conveyances to the jury; that the sufficiency of their execution was a matter addressed solely to the court; and that—no question being raised during the trial as to their delivery, and no evidence being offered to rebut the presumption of delivery arising from their possession by plaintiff—the instruction amounted only to an announcement of the law as to the effect of the conveyances, and of the admission of the defendants. Ib. 372.

Evidence in Ejectment.

107. In ejectment, the court having admitted in evidence, as sufficiently proven, the mesne conveyances through which the plaintiff traced title—the defendants being mere trespassers—charged the jury that “the written evidence of title, together with the admissions of the parties, authorized them to find for plaintiff; since the execution of the papers had been passed upon by the court:” held, that if it had been objected to this instruction that it took from the jury the question of damages for rents and profits, the objection would have been tenable; but that, no objection being taken, the point must be regarded as waived, although the jury awarded such damages. Ib.

108. Ejectment for land as a homestead. The husband alone had executed a deed to defendant. There was evidence tending to show that the premises were never occupied by plaintiffs with the intention of making them the homestead; and also evidence tending to prove an abandonment of their occupancy, and a residence on other property as that of the family. The court below submitted a series of questions to the jury, for a special verdict; the first of which was: “Did the plaintiffs ever dedicate and set apart the real estate described in the complaint as a homestead, by living upon it with the intention so to dedicate it?” and told the jury if they answered this question in the negative, the answer would constitute their entire verdict; but if they found in the affirmative, they should then proceed to answer the other questions: held, that such direction was proper, as a negative answer to this question was conclusive against a recovery; and that such directions are convenient in practice, and no abuse of discretion. Broadus v. Nelson, 16 Cal. 81.

109. Where the land granted by an alcalde is shown to be within the limits of the four square leagues thus measured, the presumption attaches that it was pueblo land, grantable as such; and that the alcalde grant passed the title to the grantee. This presumption might be repelled by proof of an express assignment of the lands of the pueblo, which did not include the land granted by the alcalde, or by proof that this was land reserved as a fort site, etc., or proof of an anterior or better title to the land by grant from some officer or body authorized to make it. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 231.

110. A plaintiff suing for a lot in San Francisco may rest his case prima facie upon an alcalde grant in the usual form; and no further proof of title will be required than proof that the land granted is situated within the four square leagues, measured from the center of the presidio square, in the manner directed by the ordinances. Ib.

111. Where a party in ejectment relies upon documentary evidence of title and prior possession, if he fail in the former, he may still rely on the latter. The failure to prove the paper title does not impair the just force and effect of the possession. Morton v. Folger, 16 Cal. 283.

112. In ejectment for land within Sutter's fort, in the city of Sacramento, if the petition of Sutter, soliciting eleven leagues in the establishment “named New Helvetia,” and the grant in which is conceded the land referred to in the petition “named New Helvetia,” be in evidence, together with the declarations of Vioget in connection with the accompanying map, fixing the southern boundary of the grant some miles below the American river, and also, together with the proof that the territory lying between the American river and Sutterville, the western line of Leidesdorff's grant and the Sacramento river, embracing “Sutter's Fort,” and the inclosures and settlements around it, was known and recognized by every one throughout the country as New Helvetia; that Sutter had entire and undisputed possession of the same; that no one questioned his right till 1850; and that the premises in dispute were within his inclosures at the fort; the evidence would be prima facie evidence, if not conclusive proof, that the premises were covered by the grant. Ib.

113. In ejectment for land in Sacramento county, claimed under Sutter's grant, the grant by Micheltorna to Leidesdorff, in October, 1841, is competent evidence to show that the tract of country now embraced by that county is included within the boundaries of the grant to Sutter. Cornwall v. Culver, 16 Cal. 429.

1. The Patent as Evidence.

114. The survey and patent are conclusive upon it in actions of ejectment, except when in conflict with the prior rights of third persons, and then their inconclusiveness can be asserted only to the extent essential for the protection of such prior rights. Moore v. Wilkinson, 13 Cal. 486; Moore v. Roff, 13 Cal. 489; Boggs v. Merced M. Co., 14 Cal. 361.

115. In ejectment on a patent issued upon a final decree of confirmation of land claimed under a Mexican grant, defendant cannot set up fraud in the survey, or the procurement of the patent, to defeat the action. If the defendant have vested rights, so as to avail him against the assertion of any claim of the government respecting the premises in controversy, it would only follow that the patent was inoperative to that extent, not that it was void. The rights of the defendant would in that case be effectually protected by the provisions of the fifteenth section of the act of March 3rd, 1851; and the patent would be like a second deed to premises previously granted, and pass as to the property no interest. Boggs v. Merced M. Co., 14 Cal. 363.

116. Where the complaint in ejectment avers that the land sued for is known by the name of "La Jota," heretofore granted to plaintiff by the Mexican government, and the patent issued thereon refers to the grant, the proceedings before the land commission and United States court for confirmation, these recitals in the patent support the averment of title through the grant. Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 467.

117. The action of the officers of government in the location of lands claimed under confirmed Mexican grants cannot be inquired into in an action of ejectment. The patent is conclusive upon these matters and implies a compliance with every prerequisite of the law to its issuance. Ib. 469.

118. A defendant in ejectment under the government of the United States as a mere preëmptioner cannot show that the land described in the grant from the Mexican government and petition to the land commissioners is different from that embraced in the patent. Ib.

See PATENT.

2. Notice to quit.

119. Notice to quit is not necessary where the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist. Kilburn v. Ritchie, 2 Cal. 148.

120. A mere naked trespasser without consideration under a mere permission and which has been revoked, is entitled to notice to quit or demand of possession before suit. Godwin v. Stebbins, 2 Cal. 105.

121. An objection to the sufficiency of a notice to quit should be first raised at nisi prius and not on appeal. Castro v. Gill, 5 Cal. 42.

122. The relation of landlord and tenant existed between plaintiff and defendant on a parol demise from month to month, rent being payable in advance, on the first day of each month. November 1st, 1858 defendant, being in possession, denied plaintiff's title and refused to pay rent. December 23d, 1858, plaintiff sued defendant in a justice's court for rent due November 1st and December 1st, 1858, and had judgment, which was paid. January 8th, 1859, plaintiff served on defendant notice to quit, on the ground of forfeiture for nonpayment of rent; defendant refused to quit or surrender the premises. Plaintiff brings ejectment. Defendant answers; denying, among other things, plaintiff's title, and his own relation of tenant: held, that plaintiff is entitled to recover; that the denial of title and the relation of tenant made defendant a trespasser, not entitled to notice to quit; that no special demand for payment of rent was necessary to work a forfeiture; that defendant could not deny title, and yet claim the benefit of holding in subordination to it. Smith v. Ogg Shaw, 16 Cal. 89; 92.

3. Disclaimer.

123. In ejectment upon a disclaimer of possession or interest in the property, a judgment for plaintiff cannot be entered. When such disclaimer is relied upon the only proper judgment is one of nonsuit. Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 609.

124. Such disclaimer is a proper basis for a judgment for plaintiff only in actions by a party in possession to determine estates or interests asserted adversely to him. Ib.

Title.

VI. TITLE.

125. A possessory action cannot be maintained under the Mexican law by a person who has acquired title subsequent to the intrusion complained of. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 260.

126. The plaintiff not having the real and actual possession of the premises, can adduce no proof of possession other than through the medium of his title, and the defendant is allowed to dispute the validity of his title and retain possession if he fails to show a title under which he could possess. Ib. 272.

127. A party cannot, by the Mexican law, acquire possession beyond the metes and bounds of his actual occupancy, unless he claims to hold under what is termed a just title, and a deed void upon its face is not a just title. Ib. 285.

128. A grant from an American alcalde during the continuance of the Mexican war is not evidence of title sufficient to maintain an ejectment without a definite and positive possession. Woodworth v. Fulton, 1 Cal. 308; Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 414; Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 325; overruled in Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 450; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 199, and Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 616.

129. A grant of a fifty vara lot at the Mission Dolores by a Mexican alcalde in 1842, where the grantee took possession and occupied the lot, is a title under which a party may maintain ejectment. Brown v. O'Connor, 1 Cal. 418.

130. Where the title is inchoate and incomplete one cannot sustain an ejectment, and the court should exclude such title as evidence. Leese v. Clark, 3 Cal. 27.

131. The defendant cannot introduce evidence to show that the title is in a third party, or that the fee of the land in question is in the United States, nor to impeach the validity of the conveyance to plaintiff collaterally as against third persons. Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 79.

132. The statute regulating sheriff's sales of real estate does not design to invest a purchaser with the title until six months after the sale. Duprez v. Moran, 4 Cal. 196.

133. A claim of title by virtue of a sheriff's deed is insufficient without showing the judgment which authorized the sale. Sullivan v. Davis, 4 Cal. 292.

134. An ordinary quitclaim deed is sufficient to enable the grantee to maintain ejectment if the grantor could have done so. Ib.

135. Where a plaintiff sues for a lot in a former pueblo of San Francisco, and deraigns his title from the city, it is prima facie evidence of title. Seale v. Mitchell, 5 Cal. 402.

136. A sale of land in the city of San Francisco by a portion of the board of commissioners of the funded debt does not pass a legal title upon which ejectment can be maintained. Leonard v. Darlington, 6 Cal. 124.

137. The writ of restitution obtained in an action of forcible entry and detainer does not determine either the right of property or the right of possession, and constitutes no defense to an action of ejectment. Mitchell v. Hagood, 6 Cal. 148.

138. In an action of ejectment under a Mexican grant: held, that the State court is bound to regard the decision of the United States supreme court, establishing the rule that a conditional grant from Mexico conveys a good title without performance of the conditions sufficient to maintain ejectment, and admissible to qualify the plaintiff's actual possession. Gunn v. Bates, 6 Cal. 271.

139. The objection that the deeds, through which the plaintiff in ejectment deraigns title, are not properly acknowledged, cannot be maintained by one who has had no priority with the plaintiff's grantors. Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 187.

140. A sale of the municipal land in the city of San Francisco, in 1852, on an execution issued under a judgment against the city rendered in 1851, conveyed a legal title to the land, upon which ejectment can be maintained. Ib. 196; contra, Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 616.

141. An outstanding title in a third person will defeat plaintiff's recovery in ejectment, although defendant does not connect himself with it. Ib. 198.

142. If a mere trespasser upon the prior actual possession of a party could justify his act by showing the true title in a third person, no party to the suit, then a prior possessor might never gain any repose by virtue of his adverse possession, and could never gain a title under the statute of limitations. Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. 5.

Title.

143. A mere trespasser cannot show title in a third party as a general rule, but it is not of universal application. Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. 5; Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 30.

144. When the plaintiff in ejectment does not rely on prior possession, but on his strict title, the defendant in possession having a good prima facie right may set up and show the true title to be in another party. Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. 6.

145. Under our system probably an action can be maintained upon any title, legal or equitable, or upon an instrument, sealed or unsealed, which entitles plaintiff to the possession of the property in dispute as against the defendants. Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 37.

146. A grant being of three leagues within a much larger area, and no survey having been made, gives no title to any specific three leagues of land, which would enable him to defend against ejectment on a patent. Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal. 422.

147. A mere trespasser cannot set up an outstanding title in a third person. Bequette v. Caulfield, 4 Cal. 279; Gregory v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 595.

148. A defendant in ejectment, entering under a deed executed by order of a court of competent jurisdiction, enters under color of title. He is not a naked trespasser, and may set up an outstanding title in a third person. Id.

149. S. and B., in 1854, execute a mortgage on their property to H. Subsequently, they execute another mortgage on the same property to plaintiff. Later, in 1855, S. conveys his interest to V., the deed declaring the interest to be sold subject to the two mortgages. Later, V. sells to defendant W., the deed containing the same recital as the last. In February, 1856, a decree of foreclosure of the first mortgage to H., sale of the property thereunder, defendant W. the purchaser, and in due time a sheriff's deed to him and possession. In June, 1856, foreclosure of the second mortgage to plaintiff, sale thereunder, plaintiff the purchaser; and in March, 1857, sheriff's deed to him: held, that plaintiff cannot maintain ejectment against defendant W. on his sheriff's deed; that defendant, claiming title through foreclosure of the first mortgage, and being in possession, cannot be dispossessed by B. Brown v. Winter, 14 Cal. 33.

150. At common law, a bond for title is in effect a mortgage. The legal title remains in the vendor, and an equity vests in the vendee, to have the title on compliance with the conditions. The legal title, as also the equity, goes to the whole estate, and includes fixtures. The vendor can bring ejectment on breach of condition, or foreclose. Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 73.

151. Where defendants deny ownership in plaintiff, and set up ownership in themselves, it is not error to instruct the jury that the only question for them to determine is as to who has the better right to the premises. Busenius v. Coffee, 14 Cal. 93.

152. In suits for the possession of land by ditch companies incorporated under the act of April 14th, 1853, by the fourth section of which they are authorized to "purchase, hold, sell, and convey such real and personal estate as the purposes of the corporation shall require," the defendant cannot question the necessity of such land for the purposes of the corporation. This is matter between the government and the corporation. Natoma W. & M. Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 552.

153. If, on an executory contract for the purchase of land made by plaintiff with the agent during the life of the principal, money due the principal was paid, after his death, to the agent, who settled the amount with the estate, so that the estate received the benefit of the payment, plaintiff would be entitled, in equity, to call for the legal title, and could defend in ejectment by the representatives of the principal. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 20.

154. One tenant in common may sue a party in possession by adverse claim, and recover the premises, if plaintiff represents the better title. Collier v. Corbett, 15 Cal. 186.

155. A tract of land was held by several tenants in common, and, on partition, a certain portion was set apart and quitclaimed to plaintiff, representing M., who had conveyed to plaintiff as security for endorsements. Another portion of the land was set apart and quitclaimed to H.

Title.—Estoppel as to Title.

The portion thus received by H. was subsequently conveyed to plaintiff, and embraces the land in controversy: held, that plaintiff is not mortgagee of the premises; that even if he held the premises conveyed by H. to him as security for the endorsements of M., it was as trustee of the legal title; that the title had passed from H., and had never been in M., except of an undivided interest before the partition, and was therefore in plaintiff, who could maintain ejectment. Seaward v. Malotte, 15 Cal. 307.

156. The relation of landlord and tenant existed between plaintiff and defendant on a parol demise from month to month, rent being payable in advance on the first day of each month. November 1st, 1858, defendant, being in possession, denied plaintiff's title, and refused to pay rent. December 23d, 1858, plaintiff sued defendant in a justice's court for rent due November 1st and December 1st, 1858, and had judgment, which was paid. January 8th, 1859, plaintiff served on defendant notice to quit, on the ground of forfeiture for nonpayment of rent. Defendant refused to quit or surrender the premises. Plaintiff brings ejectment. Defendant answers; denying, among other things, plaintiff's title, and his own relation of tenant: held, that plaintiff is entitled to recover, and that the denial of title and relation of tenant made defendant a trespasser, not entitled to notice to quit; that no special demand for payment of rent was necessary to work a forfeiture; that defendant could not deny title, and yet claim the benefit of holding in subordination to it. Smith v. Ogg Shaw, 16 Cal. 89; 92.

157. R. & Co., defendants, had two mechanics' liens upon certain property; one filed October 30th, 1854, the other filed December 8th, 1854, against defendant V. In 1855, R. & Co. sign an entry on the record of liens, stating that the liens did not fall due till January 15th, 1856. This was done on the supposition that the act of 1855 permitted such extension of credit with safety. Discovering that such act in this respect did not apply to existing liens, R. & Co., November 16th, 1855, brought suit on the liens, obtained judgment, sold the property, bought it in and received a sheriff's deed. Plaintiff, as mortgagee of the property subsequent to the liens, obtained judgment, sold the property, bought it in, received a sheriff's deed, and now files his bill to set aside R. & Co.'s judgment and sale on the ground of fraud: held, the only ground for the interposition of equity being fraud, and this being ignored by the findings, the bill is dismissed; but the decree will be confined to the disposition of the fraud alone, leaving plaintiff at liberty to pursue his remedy in ejectment, if he have any, without prejudice from this decree. Gamble v. Voll, 15 Cal. 510.

158. The city of San Francisco holds the municipal lands of the pueblo, not legally disposed of as hereinbefore explained; and her title is wholly unaffected by sheriff's sales under execution against her, so far as those sales touch or affect the aforesaid pueblo lands. A defendant in ejectment, holding such lands merely by possession, may set up the invalidity of such sales, or the plaintiff's title derived therefrom, to defeat the plaintiff's action. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 516.

159. The general rule that, in ejectment, the claimant must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of his adversary's, and that his action will be defeated if defendant shows title out of him, and in a third party, has in this State been qualified and limited. Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 572.

1. Estoppel as to Title.

160. If the plaintiff proves no title, the defendant, being in possession, cannot be ousted; but if defendant claims under the plaintiff, and in subordination to his title, he is estopped from questioning it. Hoan v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 120.

161. A person who enters into possession of land under another, cannot question the title of him under whom he holds. Pierce v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 472.

162. A defendant entering into possession under a bond for a deed from the plaintiff, cannot be considered as holding adversely from color of title. Kilburn v. Ritchie, 2 Cal. 148.

163. In an action of ejectment brought by a purchaser at sheriff's sale, under a decree of foreclosure and sale of mortgaged premises, to recover the same

Estoppel as to Title.—Judgment in Ejectment.

against the mortgagor in possession, the mortgagor is estopped from setting up title in another as a defense to the action. Redman v. Bellamy, 4 Cal. 250.

164. In an action of ejectment, where the defendants acquired possession from the tenant of plaintiff, with a full knowledge of the tenancy, they are not in a position to deny plaintiff's title. Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 199.

165. Where the plaintiff and defendant both derive title to land from the same person, the plaintiff is estopped by his purchase from denying the title of their common grantor, for the purpose of establishing title in himself by virtue of location of the land under school land warrants. Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Cal. 416.

166. In an action of ejectment, a tenant cannot deny the title of the vendor of his landlord. McKune v. Montgomery, 9 Cal. 576.

167. Where a defendant in ejectment brought upon a sheriff's deed executed upon a purchase made on a sale under a decree of foreclosure, was also a party to the foreclosure suit, he is concluded by the decree from setting up a title which was in that adjudicated against him. Clark v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 637.

168. In this case, which was ejectment for a lot purchased by plaintiffs of B., it was held that defendant had so recognized the title of B. as to be estopped from now disputing it. Downer v. Ford, 16 Cal. 350.

VII. JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT.

169. The plaintiff in ejectment may sue one or more defendants, and they may answer separately or demand separate verdicts; unless they do so, however, they will be concluded by the general verdict. Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 80.

170. It is error to refuse, in an action of ejectment, a nonsuit as to such defendants as were not in possession of the premises at the commencement of the action. Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 270.

171. In an action of ejectment to recover possession of a large tract of land, where the defendant failed to appear, and the case was submitted to the court, who found that plaintiff had title to the whole tract, and that the defendant was in possession of a part, sixty or seventy acres of the tract, without right: held, that it was proper for the court to enter judgment for the plaintiff for the possession of the whole tract. Vallejo v. Fay, 10 Cal. 378.

172. Where in ejectment against several defendants, the judgment for damages is several instead of joint, the damages may be remitted, and the judgment for the land stand. Curtis v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 120.

173. Under our system, the judgment is only conclusive of two points: the right of possession in the plaintiff and the occupation of the defendant at the commencement of the suit. Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 468.

174. After judgment by default, in ejectment, a jury trial cannot be awarded, there being no issue. Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 26.

175. Where an amended complaint in ejectment sets up title acquired after the commencement of the suit, and a judgment by default is regularly entered, the judgment is valid. Ib.

176. If the defendant interposes no objection to trying the case on such subsequently acquired title, he cannot object after judgment. Ib.

177. In ejectment, the verdict may be joint against several defendants, without specifying their respective lots in a whole tract, where they file a joint answer, which contains no averment as to the particular portion of land occupied by each, no proof being offered on the point, no damages being claimed, and defendant being in possession. McGarvey v. Little, 15 Cal. 31.

178. Where the complaint in ejectment avers the ownership and right of plaintiff and the possession and withholding by defendant in general terms, without stating any time when plaintiff's title accrued or existed, and without making any allegation as to damages for rents and profits, but simply praying judgment therefor in a given sum, and the complaint is demurred to as not stating facts sufficient, and a general judgment for possession, and $2,250 damages is given: held, that damages cannot be recovered for any period preceding the commencement of the action; but that this point, to wit: that the complaint does not support the judgment for damages, cannot be raised for the first time on petition for rehearing in the supreme court—the defendant on the first hearing in this court having put his objection to the general judgment for damages on the ground of error in the charge of the court below to the jury, and of error in the admission of evidence as to the rents and profits; the point of his objection being, that a recovery for rents and profits beyond three years was barred by the statute, and this court having decided against him because the point was not properly presented by the record. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 247.

179. Failure of defendant in ejectment to appear when the cause is called for trial—an answer being in—authorizes the court to try it without a jury. Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 433.

180. Where in ejectment the facts found by the court authorized a judgment for possession, but not for damages, the judgment being for possession and damages was affirmed in the supreme court, upon respondent's remitting the damages and paying the costs of appeal. Ib. 434.

VIII. MESNE PROFITS.

181. Where the value of the premises was agreed upon, the offer of the defendant to prove that he could not rent it was properly refused. Lord v. Sherman, 2 Cal. 502.

182. Under our code, it is competent for the plaintiff to recover real property with damages for withholding it, and the rents and profits, all in the same action and as one cause of action. Sullivan v. Davis, 4 Cal. 292.

183. It is sufficient in our system if it appear that the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the premises at the commencement of the action, and the date of the alleged seizin or possession and ouster is only material when the question of mesne profits is involved. Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 468.

184. Such profits, when claimed in the ejectment suit, are limited to such as accrue subsequent to the ouster alleged—or in other words, the occupation of the defendant. When they are claimed in an independent suit, the record of recovery in the ejectment is as to the title only evidence of the right of possession of the plaintiff at the commencement of the action in which the recovery was had. Ib.

185. The damages which a plaintiff can recover in an action of ejectment for the use and occupation of the premises are such as arise subsequent to the accruing of his right of possession, and when his right depends upon a sheriff's deed he cannot recover in this form of action for the use and occupation for the six months intervening the sale and the execution of the deed. Clark v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 637.

IX. DEFENDANT'S IMPROVEMENTS.

186. In an action of ejectment, where no proof is introduced to show damages, it is no error to prove the value of the improvements made by him on the property. Ford v. Holton, 5 Cal. 321.

187. The provisions of the settler's act of 1856 requiring the party recovering in ejectment to pay the defendant the value of his improvements does not discriminate between an innocent and a tortious possession, and applies to past as well as present cases, and is repugnant to the letter and spirit of the constitution. Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 3.

188. The value of improvements may be set off against the rents and profits thereof in an action of ejectment. Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 202; 511.

189. In ejectment, the value of improvements, even when defendant holds under color of title adversely to plaintiff, can only be allowed as a set-off to damages. Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 466.

ELECTION.

1. The neglect of an officer to perform a mere ministerial act will not defeat an election, where there was actual notice, and no fraud or surprise. Gorham v. Campbell, 2 Cal. 137.

2. On an election of justices of the peace, as associate justices of the court of sessions, the county judge and clerk are ex officio officers of this convention; but they have no authority other than that of presiding over and recording its proceedings, and the dissolution of the convention by the county judge is illegal. Ib.

Election.

3. When the justices of the peace fail to elect from their number associate justices of the court of sessions, on the first Monday in October, the county judge may appoint associates for the then term; but the justices may convene at a subsequent time and elect associates. Ib.

4. The charter of San Francisco, of 1851, provided that the first election for city officers should be held on the fourth Monday of April, 1851, and thereafter annually at the general election for State officers. The general election is in September of each year: held, that the city officers elected in September are entitled to their offices, though no notice of the election was given, or other measures pursued by the council to call an election. People v. Brenham, 3 Cal. 485.

5. A district judge elected at the general election to fill a vacancy can qualify and supersede a judge who has been commissioned by the governor for the unexpired term of his predecessor. The latter commission expires after an election by the people. People v. Mott, 3 Cal. 504.

6. The words the "next election by the people," mean the next after the vacancy occurs, and not the next general election for a full term." Ib. 506.

7. Residence depends upon intention, as well as fact; and mere inhabitancy for a short period against the intention of acquiring a domicile, would not make a resident within the meaning of the law, so as to constitute an elector. People v. Peralta, 4 Cal. 175.

8. Judges of elections have no right to require the production of the certificate of naturalization by voters, as the statute expressly provides a lower standard of evidence as sufficient. People v. Gordon, 5 Cal. 236.

9. When the judges have once administered the oath, and it has once been taken, the right to vote is concluded, and it is error to deny it; the remedy is to prosecute for perjury. Ib.

10. Time and place are of the substance of every election, and the legislature cannot confer upon a county judge the power of designating the place and manner of holding an election; and an election thus held will be void. Dickey v. Hurlburt, 5 Cal. 344.

11. A person who claimed an office held by defendant, testified that his certificate of election was lost or destroyed, and there was no record of the same: held, that secondary evidence of the election and certificate were admissible. People v. Clingan, 5 Cal. 390.

12. Elections to fill vacancies occasioned by the death or resignation of an officer are special elections; and the proclamation of the governor, required by statute, is necessary to the validity of a special election. People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 28; People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 65; People v. Martin, 12 Cal. 410; People v. Rosborough, 14 Cal. 187.

13. An election which was ordered by the board of supervisors, to fill a vacancy in the office of county judge, occasioned by the resignation of the incumbent, without proclamation of the governor, is invalid; and the office being vacant, can be properly filled by the appointment of the governor. People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 68; People v. Martin, 12 Cal. 411.

14. An act organizing a new county, and fixing a special day for the first election of county officers, and providing that they shall hold office for two years, and until their successors are elected and qualified, must be construed in connection with the general law requiring such officers to be elected on the same day throughout the State. People v. Church, 6 Cal. 78.

15. The officers first elected hold till the first general election of county officers throughout the State, after the expiration of the term of the two years fixed by the special act, and an election held before that time is void. Ib.

16. The words extending the incumbent's tenure "until his successor is appointed and qualified," were intended only to prevent a hiatus, or interregnum, occurring between the last day of the incumbent's term and the day on which his successor enters into office, during which time the incumbent is a mere locum tenens. People v. Reid, 6 Cal. 289.

17. The act to establish an insane asylum provides that the resident physician shall hold office for two years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified: held, that on the failure of the legislature to elect at the expiration of the term, the office becomes de jure vacant, and can be filled by the governor. Ib.

Election.

18. Where an act by its own terms was not to go into effect till a certain day named, and one of its sections provides for an election, on a day prior to the time in which the law was to go into effect, the election so held was a nullity, there being no law then in existence authorizing it. People v. Johnston, 6 Cal. 674.

19. The term of office of the resident physician of the insane asylum never runs apart from the officer, and commences running only from the date of his election, the act fixing only the duration of his term, but not the exact time of its commencement. People v. Langdon, 8 Cal. 13.

20. The fact that any person holds a lucrative office under the government, creates an incapacity in that person to be elected to any office in this State, during that time, by our constitution. People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 43; Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 154.

21. A certificate of election is not necessary to enable a party claiming to have been elected to bring his action by quo warranto. Magee v. Supervisors Calaveras County, 10 Cal. 377.

22. A certificate of election is only prima facie evidence of title to the office, not conclusive. Nor is it the only evidence by which the title may be established. It is the fact of election which gives title to the office, and this fact may be established, not only without, but against the evidence of the certificate. Ib.

23. An election cannot take place under the constitution without statutory regulation. All the efficacy given to the act of casting a ballot is derived from the law-making power and through legislative enactments, and the legislature must provide for and regulate the conduct of an election or there can be none. People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 67.

24. The object of the proclamation of the governor for an election to fill a vacancy is to give notice to the electors that such an election will be held. Ib.

25. A person duly elected district judge is entitled to hold office for the period of six years. People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 85; People v. Burbank, 12 Cal. 388.

26. It is unreasonable to suppose the legislature would authorize an election several years in advance of the time when the office was to be filled. People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 88.

27. Where an election for the office of district judge was held by the qualified electors of such district at the general election in 1858, and the term of the present incumbent of that office does not expire until January, 1861: held, that such election was unauthorized and the person elected is not entitled to a commission to such office. Ib.

28. At the general election held in Yuba county in September, 1855, W. was elected county treasurer of that county for two years from the date of his election and until his successor was chosen and qualified. On the twenty-eighth of April, 1857, a special act was passed, extending the term of this officer to the first Monday in January, 1858. On the seventh of May, 1857, W. resigned and S. P. W. was appointed by the board of supervisors in his stead. At the general election in September, 1857, F. received the majority of votes for that office for the unexpired term of W. and claimed the office: held, that the appointees held for the balance of the extended term, and there was no vacancy to be filled at the election in September, 1857. People v. Wells, 11 Cal. 338.

29. The failure of the officers conducting an election in a given district to be sworn as the election laws provide will not invalidate the entire election, without reference to its influence on the general result. Whipley v. McKune, 12 Cal. 357.

30. The rule is well settled, that the mere receiving and counting of votes improperly given does not invalidate an election. Ib.

31. The fact that the ballot box was temporarily out of the possession of the officers of the election will not invalidate the election, especially where no fraud, collusion or suspicious circumstance is shown. Ib. 361.

32. The returns of an election are prima facie evidence of the fact they import, and the returned candidate, after being commissioned, is prima facie entitled to his office. Ib. 362.

33. The legislature can direct the time and prescribe the mode of an election, but cannot change the tenure of an office prescribed by the constitution. People v. Burbank, 12 Cal. 392; People v. Templeton, 12 Cal. 401.

34. The office of county judge is not a "county office," within the meaning of the statute so as to authorize the supervisors to order a special election to fill its vacancy. People v. Martin, 12 Cal. 411.

35. A deed recorded January 30th, 1850, by a person acting as recorder by virtue of an election by the people, without authority of law, is not properly recorded. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 115.

36. The act giving jurisdiction over the subject of contested elections to the judge of the county court is constitutional, and district judges are embraced within it. Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 150.

37. Contested elections is one of the special cases for which the constitution has provided that the county judge may take cognizance of by legislative direction. Ib. 152.

38. The fact that the candidate receiving the highest number of votes at an election by the people is ineligible, does not give the office to the next highest on the list. Ib. 153.

39. A mandamus does not lie to compel the supervisors of a county to order a special election to fill vacancies in the office of assessor and sheriff. People v. Supervisors of Santa Barbara County, 14 Cal. 102.

40. When an act organizing a county provides for the election of a county judge, and limits the period of tenure to two years, the act is void pro tanto, but the election held under the act is good and entitles the incumbent to the office for four years. People v. Rosborough, 14 Cal. 187.

41. An election to fill a vacancy for county judge is a special election, and the governor's proclamation is essential to its validity. Ib.

42. The decision of the board of delegates of the fire department of the city of San Francisco, in the case of a contested election for chief engineer, is a judicial decision, and subject to a review by the courts on certiorari. The extent of such review is simply to inquire whether the board has exceeded its jurisdiction. People v. Board of Delegates of the San Francisco Fire Department, 14 Cal. 502.

43. When the contest before the board of delegates was on the sole ground of illegal votes, the board had no power to declare the election void. It should have decided for one or the other of the contestants and issued a certificate accordingly. Ib. 503.

44. Where the board, instead of so deciding, declared the election void, and ordered a new one, the contestants not objecting, the matter of the contested election must be considered finally dismissed, and the board ought to declare the result of the first election according to the returns then made, and issue a certificate of office. Ib. 504.

45. The mere fact that a man is a soldier in the United States army does not disqualify him from voting in this State. But he cannot vote unless he has been a citizen of the State and of the county in which he votes for the constitutional period. People v. Riley, 15 Cal. 49.

46. And a mere residence or sojourn in the county as a soldier does not make him a citizen, or prove him to be such. The rule, as fixed by the constitution, is, that the fact of such sojourn or residence as a soldier neither creates nor destroys citizenship—leaving the political status of the soldier where it was before. Ib. 50.

47. Where the right of a United States soldier to vote is contested, the burden of proof is upon the contestant. Ib. 50.

48. A controller must be elected biennially, at the same time and place and in the same manner with the governor and lieutenant governor; and an appointment of a controller by the governor before this biennial general election, whatever it effects otherwise, cannot defeat this constitutional policy, nor deprive the people of their right to fill the office of controller at such election. Nor will the election by the people had before the election fixed for filling the office of governor, etc., defeat this policy. People v. Melony, 15 Cal. 62.

49. It is a part of the constitutional policy of this State, that all elective officers connected with the executive department of the government shall be elected at the same time and place, and in the same manner. Ib.

50. In a proceeding by an elector to contest the right to an office of a party returned as elected thereto at a general election, the defendant first moved to dismiss the proceeding; his motion being overruled, he declined to answer the statement filed by the contestant, and the court, without proof by either party, annulled the election: held, that this was error, and that the proceeding should have been dismissed. Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 119.

Election.—Doctrine of Election.

51. The public is interested in a contest of this character ; it is not a matter solely between the parties to the record, and the popular will is not to be set aside upon the mere failure of a party to respond to charges alleged against his right by an individual elector. It is not sufficient that ample cause of contest be set forth in the statement filed by a contestant ; their truth must be established by clear proof, before an election can be annulled. Ib.

52. Under the twenty-first section of article four of the constitution of this State, a person holding the federal office described in that section is incapable of being elected to a State office ; he cannot receive votes cast so as to give him a right to take the State office upon or after resigning the federal office. The word "eligible" in this section means capable of being chosen, the subject of selection or choice. The term "compensation," in sec. 21, art. 4 of the constitution of this State, means the income of the office, not the profits over and above the necessary expenses of the office. Ib. 121.

53. In suit under our statute by an elector, to contest an election, he becomes a party, and is responsible for costs if he fail. The court has no discretion to dismiss or entertain the case, as it deems the public interest requires. Nor has the State's attorney such discretion. The case is prosecuted like any other action instituted by a private citizen, subject only to the provisions of the statute. Ib. 122.

54. An ordinance was passed by the board of supervisors of the city and county of Sacramento, June, 1858, relative to the cemetery, in which it was provided that the board should appoint a person to superintend the cemetery, "annually, in October, who shall hold office for the term of one year ;" and further, that the board, at their first meeting after the passing of the ordinance, should appoint a superintendent to hold office "until October next, and until his successor is appointed and qualified." Defendant was so appointed July 6th, 1858, and held the office until December, 1859, the Board having failed to appoint his successor before that time, when relator was appointed : held, that relator is entitled to the office ; that the failure to appoint in October, 1858 and 1859, did not exhaust the power of the electoral body—the time named being directory, and not of the essence of the power. People v. Murray, 15 Cal. 222.

ELECTION, DOCTRINE OF.

1. When parties discover fraud, they should make their election and rely upon one remedy only, assumpsit or replevin. It often happens that a party has his election to pursue one of two or more remedies, but he should not pursue several at one and the same time. Seligman v. Kalkman, 8 Cal. 217.

2. In equity, a party is not bound to make an election until all the circumstances are known, and the state and condition and value of the funds are clearly ascertained ; for, until then, it is impossible for him to make a discriminating and deliberate choice, such as ought to bind him to reason and justice. Wells v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 142.

3. Where, in a bill of sale of all the cattle of a certain estate, estimated at 7,000 head, a total price being fixed, it was stipulated that the vendee, on arriving in Texas where the cattle were, might choose to take all the cattle of the estate without counting them, in which event he was to notify the agents of the vendors of his choice, and pay an additional $4,000 ; but if count was had, and the cattle exceeded or fell short of the estimated number, the excess or deficiency should be paid for at the rate of eight dollars per head ; and no count was ever made, and no notification ever given by the vendee, that he took the cattle without a count ; held, that the vendor, on the facts, cannot recover the $4,000 ; that the only obligation of the vendee, in the first instance, was to receive the cattle and pay for any excess over the estimated number, if counted ; that his liability for the $4,000 depended entirely on his choice to take the cattle without a count, and that this choice was a mere privilege, to be exercised or not, at his option, and that the doctrine of election has no application here. Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 258.

Doctrine of Election.—Elizor.—Eminent Domain.

4. This doctrine only applies to cases where the party upon whom rests the performance stands in the same position to both alternatives presented, and is bound to indicate his choice between them. Here the vendee was bound to choose only in the event he desired to take the cattle without a count. If he did not so desire, he was not required to give notice to that effect. His obligation to pay for any excess was absolute, without any expression of choice; but his obligation to pay the $4,000 was conditional, dependent solely upon the indication of his desire to dispense with the count. Ib.

5. Where the doctrine of election is applicable, the right of election upon failure of the party upon whom the performance rests to indicate his choice passes to the other side; as in this way only can the obligation become absolute and determinate. Ib.

6. A party having secured a mechanic's lien under the statute, does not forfeit or waive it by causing an attachment to be issued and levied upon the property of the debtor to secure the same demand. The two remedies are cumulative, and both may be pursued at the same time. If the party attempted to pursue them in separate actions, he might be put to his election; but it is no defense to an action to enforce a mechanic's lien that in a previous suit for the same debt an attachment was issued and levied upon the property of the debtor, particularly when such suit had been dismissed, and nothing was realized by the attachment. Brennan v. Swazey, 16 Cal. 142.

ELIZOR.

1. Where a substitute sheriff (elizor) was appointed, and the pleadings did not show that there was no sheriff and coroner, or that these officers were disqualified: held, that the appointment being made by a judge having competent jurisdiction, the presumption of law is that he faithfully performed his duty. Turner v. Billagram, 2 Cal. 522.

2. In the event of the disqualification of sheriff and coroner, a district court has the right to appoint an elizor. And even if such authority was not conferred by statute, the court, by virtue of its original jurisdiction, has the power to appoint a special officer to execute its process. Wilson v. Roach, 4 Cal. 367.

3. In trespass against a sheriff, the court below, on plaintiff's motion, may order a special jury to try the case, instead of the regular panel. The sheriff being interested ought not to summon a jury; and there being no coroner, an elizor may be appointed to summon a jury. Pacheco v. Hunsacker, 14 Cal. 124.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

1. The sovereign power may, in disposing of lands, annex such conditions to a grant as it sees fit; and in such a case a restriction against alienation, inserted in a grant and authorized by law, will not be held void on the ground that it is against the policy of the law. Sumol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 274.

2. If there was a vested title of the national domain in the pueblos of California, the alcalde, an alien enemy of Mexico, and without any authority from the American government, had no power or right to interfere with that vested estate and grant it to others. Woodworth v. Fulton, 1 Cal. 306; Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 414; Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 325; overruled in Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 450; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 199, and Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 616.

3. Lands lying within the corporate limits of San Francisco, which had not been granted by the Mexican government or its officers previous to the conquest of the country by the American forces, constitute a part of the public domain of the United States, and cannot be granted away, except under the authority of congress. Woodworth v. Fulton, 1 Cal. 307; Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 414; Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 325; overruled in Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 450; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 199, and Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 616.

4. The destruction of a building to stop the spread of a conflagration cannot, it seems, be deemed a taking of private property for public use, but it is the right of eminent domain. Dunbar v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 357; Correas v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 452; Surrocco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 73.

5. The State has an absolute right to control, regulate and improve the navigable waters within its jurisdiction as an attribute of sovereignty. Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 467.

6. Laws of a ceded country remain in force until changed by the conquering or acquiring power; but this rule presupposes that the acquired country contains a population governed by well settled laws of their own. It would be unjust, therefore, to apply the Mexican law governing the few inhabitants of California to contracts made by the hordes of Americans who rushed hither just previous to the adoption of our laws. Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 48.

7. The constitutional provision that requires payment for private property taken for public use does not apply in the case of destruction of private property to stop conflagration. This right belongs to a State, by virtue of its right of eminent domain. Surrocco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 73.

8. The mines of gold and silver in the public lands are as much the property of the State, by virtue of the sovereignty, as are similar mines in the hands of a private proprietor. Hicks v. Bell, 3 Cal. 227.

9. The State, therefore, has the sole right to authorize them to be worked, to pass laws for their regulation, to license miners, and affix such terms and conditions as she may deem proper to the freedom of their use. Ib.

10. The United States, as owner of land within the limits of the State, only occupies the position of any private proprietor, with the exception of exemption from State taxation. Ib.

11. Each State is supreme within its own sphere as an independent sovereignty. People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 49.

12. By well settled rules of construction, the right of the State to regulate commerce is concurrent with that of congress, with the understanding always that all State regulations inconsistent with those of the federal government on this subject give way. Ib. 58.

13. The right of the State to lands under water, where the tide ebbs and flows, is founded upon her sovereign control over the easement, or right of navigation; where, therefore, the easement is destroyed, the right of the State ceases, except to prosecute for prepresture, and have the easement restored. Guy v. Hermance, 5 Cal. 74.

14. The federal government has not only the right of eminent domain, but the fee and the prime and uncontrolled right of disposition of the territory, all of which are attributes of sovereignty. "People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 377.

15. Sovereignty can never be in abeyance, and until there was some local government organized, either by the people of the territory, or some other competent authority, the United States, upon the doctrine of necessity, succeeded to and represented the government of Mexico, as far as the same could be exercised, within the purview of the constitution. Ib. 378.

16. The government of the United States, in the face of the notorious occupation of the public lands in this State by her citizens—that upon the lands they have mined for gold, constructed canals, built saw mills, cultivated farms, and practiced every mode of industry—has asserted no right of ownership to any of the mineral lands in this State. Conger v. Weaver, 6 Cal. 557.

17. Money is not the species of property which the sovereign authority can authorize to be taken in the exercise of its right of eminent domain. Burnett v. City of Sacramento, 12 Cal. 83.

ENCROACHMENT.

1. What is termed the "swinging of lots," a measure adopted in pursuance of a resolution of a public meeting in San Francisco, cannot change the location of premises actually granted, or impair the right of the grantee therein. The taking of a part of a lot from an individual for the purposes of a public street, though it may perhaps give him a claim on the public for compensation, does not confer upon him the right to encroach to the same extent on the land of his neighbor. Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 329.

Of a Bill of Lading.—Of a Certificate of Stock.—Of Bills and Notes.

ENDORSEMENT.

- I. Of a Bill of Lading.
- II. Of a Certificate.
- III. Of Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes.

I. OF A BILL OF LADING.

1. The endorsement of a bill of lading, prima facie, vests the property in the goods maintained therein in the endorsee, who has no property, either general or special, in the goods, and no lien therein for advances or otherwise, to sue the master of a ship, in his own name, for the non-delivery of the goods, when it appears on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff, the endorsee, is a mere naked agent of the shippers. Lineker v. Ayesford, 1 Cal. 81.

II. OF A CERTIFICATE OF STOCK.

2. Where a femme sole becomes the owner of shares of stock in a company, and afterwards marries, and after marriage the husband and wife execute an endorsement on the certificate of stock, purporting to sell the same to A, without any privy examination of the wife, and there being at the time no inventory of the separate property of the wife on record: held, that such sale was void as against a subsequent purchaser under an instrument duly signed and acknowledged. Selover v. American Russian Com. Co., 7 Cal. 270.

III. OF BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

3. In an action on a promissory note by a special endorsee against the maker, the plaintiff must prove at the trial the genuineness of the endorsements, although the defendant has not denied the genuineness under oath. Grogan v. Ruckle, 1 Cal. 159, 196; Youngs v. Bell, 4 Cal. 202.

4. Notes given for a gaming consideration are valid in the hands of a bona fide endorsee. Haight v. Joyce, 2 Cal. 66.

5. An endorsee after maturity takes the same interest that the endorser had, and his claim is subject to the same legal and equitable defense. Folsom v. Bartlett, 2 Cal. 164.

6. One who puts his name upon a promissory note out of the usual course of regular negotiability, is not an endorser—he is a guarantor. Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 487; Pierce v. Kennedy, 5 Cal. 139.

7. A name written on the back of a note gives to the writer his title of endorser, and fixes the character of his liability. Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 487.

8. The liability of a guarantor on a promissory note is strictly that of an endorser, and he is entitled to notice of protest. Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 487; Pierce v. Kennedy, 5 Cal. 139; Brady v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 32; Geiger v. Clark, 13 Cal. 580.

9. The contract of an endorser is simply a guarantee or declaration that he will pay if the maker does not pay upon presentation, after he receives due notice. Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 488.

10. A promissory note was endorsed to a third person before delivery by the payee, which indorsement is prima facie an accommodation to the payee; but proof that his design was to become a guarantor would make him liable to the payee, and his default, with proper averments, dispenses with this proof. Clark v. Smith, 2 Cal. 606.

11. Whether a note is or is not payable at a bank, notice of its nonpayment may be given to an indorser on the evening of the day on which it is payable—in the first case after the close of banking hours, in the second after the close of the usual hours of commercial business. McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 631; overruling Toothaker v. Cornwall, 4 Cal. 30.

12. Plaintiff sued upon notes regularly endorsed to him. Defendant admitted the genuineness of the notes, but denied the endorsement: held, that he should have objected to the introduction of the notes in evidence until the endorsement was proven, and not move for a nonsuit when they were already in, without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of proving it. Pinkham v. McFarland, 5 Cal. 137.

13. Where payment by the maker to the endorser is relied upon as an excuse for want of demand and notice, it must be payment directly and specifically for the note, and not as security for all transactions in the aggregate. Van Norden v. Buckley, 5 Cal. 284.

14. Where the maker did not specify that the payment to the endorser was to meet the indorsed note, the endorser had a right to apply it to any indebtedness he held against the maker, and to stand upon his strict legal rights as to demand and notice in regard to the indorsed note. Ib.

15. A release which only applies to the indorsement of a note could by no rule of construction release the maker of the note. Tomlinson v. Spencer, 5 Cal. 293.

16. In an action by an endorsee against a maker of a note, the endorser, not being a party, is a competent witness for the plaintiff, where it does not appear that the suit is prosecuted for his immediate benefit. Ib.

17. Where a holder of a note accepts a draft or check in payment, he is not bound to give up the note before payment of the draft or check, or it will be a substitution of new security to discharge the endorser. Smith v. Harper, 5 Cal. 330.

18. Where a note was delivered to the maker long before it became due, upon his giving an order on the endorsers, which was dishonored, and thereupon it was returned to the holder, it did operate as a payment. Ib.

19. If the language of the notice conveys to the endorser, not the advice of his liability being fixed, but positive information which assures him necessarily of his release from liability, the object of notice would be defeated if it was insisted that he was still liable. The notice, in such case, instead of arousing him to immediate effort for his security, lulls him into false security. Tevis v. Wood, 5 Cal. 394.

20. A demand upon the makers of a note was made at maturity, but the notice to the endorsers stated the demand to have been made on a day subsequent to maturity: held, that the notice was insufficient to bind the endorsers. Ib.

21. The object of notice to the endorser of a note or bill is to advise him of his liability, so that he may take the earliest steps for his own security. Endorsers are a favored class of litigants, and the courts have always maintained their rights with great strictness. Ib.

22. The holder of negotiable paper endorsed before maturity is supposed to be the bona fide owner of the same, and all intendments are in favor of his right. Palmer v. Goodwin, 5 Cal. 459.

23. A declaration by an endorser made to a third party not interested in the subject matter, "that the fact of notice not having been given at the proper time would make no difference with him—that he would do what was right," is not a sufficient waiver of presentment and notice to fix the liability of the endorser. Olen-dorf v. Swartz, 5 Cal. 482.

24. The defendant endorsed to the plaintiff the notes sued on, and assigned the mortgages given to secure the same: held, that the mortgages were not intended to indemnify the defendant against his liability as endorser, and would not excuse a presentment and notice to him as such endorser. Ib.

25. In an action against the endorser of note, where demand and notice are not averred, but where it is averred that the maker paid the endorser the value of the note and the endorser agreed to pay it, the maker of the note is not a competent witness to prove those facts. Palmer v. Tripp, 6 Cal. 83.

26. It is not material on what part of a note a secondary promisor places his name; if the character of his liability is made to appear, his rights are the same as those of an endorser. Bryan v. Berry, 6 Cal. 398.

27. Notice of demand or nonpayment of a note should be personally served on an endorser residing in the same city where the note is held, and service through the post-office is not effectual to charge them. Vance v. Collins, 6 Cal. 439.

28. An endorser of a note is incompetent as a witness to establish the lien of a holder of the note upon the property of the maker, being directly interested to have the lien established. Soule v. Dawes, 6 Cal. 475.

29. When F. sued on a note which had two endorsements signed by the payer, the first a receipt from F. for the amount due, the second in the words "without recourse to me:" held, that there was no presumption that the endorsements were made at different times, or that the payment was a voluntary unconditional payment. Frank v. Brady, 8 Cal. 49.

30. Where a party, in consideration of a conveyance of land to him, agrees to pay an outstanding note of his vendor, and writes his name on the back of the note as a memorandum of said agreement, at the same time acknowledging his liability : held, that the liability thus assumed is not the conditional liability of an endorser, but a primary and unconditional obligation to pay the note, for which he had received a full consideration. Palmer v. Tripps, 8 Cal. 97.

31. Notice may be given to the endorser or other parties entitled to notice, immediately after presentment to the maker or acceptor, and refusal to him to pay, although it is not necessary that notice should be given until the following day. McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 636.

32. An endorsement or a guarantee of a note is wholly different from guaranteeing another's contract ; it is making a contract of his own. Aud v. Mugruder, 10 Cal. 289.

33. An endorsement or a guarantee of a note is wholly different. It is an agreement of itself, a new contract undertaken for another, that the latter will perform his contract. Ib. 290.

34. The difference between a maker and an endorser or guarantor, is that the contract of the first imports an unconditional obligation to pay money ; that of the last, by its terms, imports a conditional obligation. Ib.

35. Mere extension of time to the maker of a promissory note is not sufficient to discharge a surety or endorser. To operate as such discharge, the agreement with the maker must be founded upon a valuable consideration, and be such as will suspend the right of action against the maker. Williams v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 425.

36. The endorser of a promissory note after maturity is entitled to demand and notice of nonpayment within a reasonable time, before he is liable to pay. Beebe v. Brooks, 12 Cal. 311.

37. Where a promissory note was made payable to S., and previously to its delivery to the payee, was endorsed for the accommodation of the maker by H. and brother and defendant, upon an agreement of the endorsers with each other that each would become surety if the other would : held, that the endorsers were guarantors, and jointly but not severally liable in a suit by the payee or a third person taking the note after maturity. Brady v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 32.

38. The decision of the supreme court, in Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 485, only goes to the extent of holding that a notice of protest is as essential to charge a guarantor as an endorser. Brady v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 32 ; Geiger v. Clark, 13 Cal. 580.

39. In a suit against the maker of a note, or the acceptor of a bill, the endorser is a competent witness for either party. Bryant v. Watriss, 13 Cal. 87.

40. An outstanding liability as surety or endorser for another, together with an express promise to pay the debt as his own by the surety or endorser, is a sufficient consideration for an express promise to pay an equal amount on demand. Gladwin v. Gladwin, 13 Cal. 335.

41. At common law, a note payable to the wife would prima facie be the property of the husband, who could endorse it in his own name. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 493.

42. A notice to the endorser of a note of nonpayment by the maker is sufficient, if it appear that the endorser, at the time of receiving the notice, knew what particular piece of paper was referred to, and could not have been prejudiced by the failure to describe it. And this, though the notice was verbal, and the note neither produced or described. Thompson v. Williams, 14 Cal. 162.

43. If much time intervenes between demand and notice in the transfer of notes after maturity, the question may arise whether the delay has not released the endorser. Ib. 163.

44. Where a note, due January, 1857, was endorsed by the payee to the present holder, November 26th, 1858, and he, November 29th, 1858, demanded payment of the maker, and verbally notified the endorser of such demand, and that he would be held on his endorsement, it is no objection to the notice that it did not state the time of demand. The demand was good if made within a reasonable time, and before the notice ; otherwise as to notes endorsed before maturity. In such case, the notice must state the time of demand. Ib.

45. A notice by the holder that he "had demanded payment of that note," implies that payment was demanded of the person liable to pay, to wit: the maker; and the declaration that he intended to look for payment to defendant, the endorser, implies the fact of nonpayment. Ib. 164.

46. A notarial certificate of protest of a note is of itself presumptive evidence that the notary had authority from the proper parties to make the protest. Gillespie v. Neville, 14 Cal. 409.

47. It is no objection to recovery on a bill that, by special endorsement on it, title is shown out of the payee without any retransfer from the last endorsee to him, if there be proof that the endorsements were made simply for collecting the bill, and that the endorsee had no interest in it. Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 454.

48. An endorser of a note payable on demand, no demand being made until thirteen months after the endorsement to plaintiff, is prima facie not liable. The delay is unreasonable; and the facts to excuse the delay are an essential part of the complaint, and if not averred therein it is insufficient. Jerome v. Stebbins, 14 Cal. 458.

49. A certificate of deposit for $1,800, payable to the order of V., was endorsed, sold and delivered by V. to L. for four hundred dollars. Payment was then at once demanded of the maker, and notice of protest served on V. Subsequently L. transferred the certificate to plaintiff: held, that plaintiff can recover of V. only the four hundred dollars received by him, the certificate being subject, in the hands of plaintiff, to all the equities between the endorser and endorsee. Coye v. Palmer, 16 Cal. 159.

50. Where the consideration passing between the endorsee and his endorser is not equal to the amount of the paper, the endorsee, in an action against the endorser, can recover only the consideration he has actually paid. Ib. 160.

51. Notice left by a notary at the residence of an endorser of a note—he being absent at the time—describing the note, stating that it was protested by him for nonpayment, and that the holder looked to the endorser for payment, but not signed by any one, nor indicating in any way from whom it proceeded, is insufficient to charge the endorser. Klockenbaum v. Pierson, 16 Cal. 376.

52. Such notice having been left on Saturday, the day the note matured, the record shows that on Monday, in a conversation between the endorser and the notary, "something was said about the note," and that the notary informed the endorser that plaintiff was "its owner and holder:" held, that as a verbal notice, this conversation was insufficient; that a notice must inform the endorser, either expressly or by necessary implication, that the note has been duly presented at its maturity and discharged. Ib. 377.

EQUALIZATION.

1. The fact that the assessment for State and county taxes for 1855-6, in San Francisco county, was not based on the valuation of the city assessor, as required by the act creating the board of supervisors, passed in 1851, is not a sufficient ground for an injunction upon the collection of the taxes, as the party could have appealed to the board of equalization, if aggrieved. Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 42.

2. The listing and valuation of real estate for the purpose of taxation is an essential prerequisite to the validity of all subsequent proceedings. It is from the list made by the assessor, when duly corrected by equalization, that the auditor prepares the duplicate, which gives to the officer his authority to demand the tax, and to levy and sell the property of the delinquent. Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 633.

3. The board of equalization of assessments have no power to raise the valuation of land, as fixed by the assessor, without notice to the owner. The general notice of the sitting of the board by publication does not amount to the notice required. Patten v. Green, 13 Cal. 329.

1. IN GENERAL.

1. By our system of procedure, all distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity, and between the forms of such actions and suits, are abolished. Rowe v. Chandler, 1 Cal. 173; Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 7.

2. To entitle the plaintiff to the equitable interposition of the court, he must show a proper case for the interference of the court of equity, and one in which he has no adequate or complete relief at law. De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 409.

3. If a tax has been illegally imposed, or a valid objection appears on the face of the proceedings, the plaintiffs have a perfect remedy at law, and a court of equity has no power to interfere.* De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 469; Robinson v. Gaar, 6 Cal. 275.

4. Where the allegations of a bill are general in their nature, and the equities are fully denied by the answer, such a case is not presented as will justify the appointment of a receiver, or interference with the affairs of the concern. Williamson v. Monroe, 3 Cal. 385.

5. The allegations of ignorance in making the necessary averment, or of insufficient conduct in the prosecution of a former suit, do not constitute ground of relief in chancery. Barnett v. Kilbourne, 3 Cal. 327.

6. To entitle a plaintiff in equity to subject the assets of an absent debtor to the payment of his claim, he must show that he is without a remedy in law, and if the bill discloses such a remedy, it will be dismissed on demurrer. Lupton v. Lupton, 3 Cal. 121.

7. Equity will not lend its aid to do an injustice, and assist a party in escaping from a joint liability which he has contracted. Dillon v. Byrne, 5 Cal. 457.

8. Where a power of attorney is coupled with an interest upon proper allegations, sustained by unequivocal proof, a court of equity will restrain its revocation, and enable the attorney to execute the trust. Posten v. Rasette, 5 Cal. 469.

9. Courts of equity unquestionably have the power to appoint receivers, and to order them to take possession of the property in controversy, whether in the immediate possession of defendant or his agent, and in proper cases, they can also order the defendant's agents or employers, although not parties to the record, to deliver specific property to the receiver. Ex parte Cohen, 5 Cal. 496.

10. The plaintiff, on a breach of a bond for title, can either resort to a court of equity to enforce its performance, or maintain an action at law. Bagley v. Eaton, 5 Cal. 501.

11. A party who has his remedy provided by law, but does not avail himself thereof, and fails to show wherein he is injured, is not entitled to relief in equity. Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 42.

12. Although a party may set up an equitable defense to an action at law, he is not confined to that proceeding. He may let the judgment go at law, and file his bill in equity for relief. Lorraine v. Long, 6 Cal. 453.

13. Where a simple contract creditor filed a bill against the assignee of his debtor, not attacking the assignment, and merely praying for a distribution, and the plaintiff subsequently filed a supplemental bill, setting forth that, in the meantime, he had become a judgment creditor, and attacking the assignment for fraud, since discovered, and praying that it be set aside, and that the moneys in the hands of *These decisions have become abrogated by the Act of 1897, p. 334, making tax deeds prima facie evidence of title. See Palmer v. Boling, 8 Cal. 388.

In general.

the assignee be appropriated to plaintiff's judgment: held, that it is no objection to the supplemental bill, that it prays for a different relief, and fails to bring in all the other creditors, who are alleged by the defense to be entitled to a ratable distribution. Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 486.

14. Where the complaint in an action of trespass, asks also for the equitable interposition of the court, if the law and equity are inseparably mixed together, it would be demurrable. Gates v. Kieff, 7 Cal. 125.

15. Defective deeds and acknowledgments cannot be reformed in chancery. Selover v. American Russian Com. Co., 7 Cal. 275; Barrett v. Tewksbury, 9 Cal. 15.

16. Courts of equity generally follow the analogy of the law in cases where statutes of limitations are invoked; one of the defenses peculiar to equity being the lapse of time or staleness of the demand. Dominguez v. Dominguez, 7 Cal. 427.

17. Where the plaintiff filed a bill in equity in 1852, to set aside a sale of land made in 1835, on the ground of fraud: held, that his right to recover would be barred by ten years' prescription, under the Mexican law, and that the full period having run, he could not recover. Dominguez v. Dominguez, 7 Cal. 427.

18. A mere existence of cross demands will not justify a set-off in a court of chancery; there must be some peculiar circumstances based upon equitable grounds to warrant the court in interfering. Naglee v. Palmer, 7 Cal. 547.

19. Plaintiffs must come into a court of chancery with clean hands, otherwise they are not entitled to relief. Gunter v. Laffan, 7 Cal. 594.

20. Where a vendor of land has taken the notes of the purchaser in payment, and brings his action thereon at law, he should in that action, if at all, unite his equitable claim for a foreclosure of his lien; the same tribunal administering both law and equity. Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 403.

21. The objection that proceedings may become too complex, by permitting different questions of law and equity to be settled in one suit, is not sufficiently strong to overcome the plain provisions of the statute and the substantial dictates of justice. Ib. 405.

22. A purchaser of the legal title has notice of another in possession. Bryan v. Ramirez, 8 Cal. 468.

23. It is a favorite rule of equity, that when a court of chancery gains jurisdiction of a case for one purpose it will retain it for others, and not do justice by halves, and thus foster a multiplicity of suits. Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 129.

24. When a party has given a promissory note, and the payee assigns the note without recourse after maturity, and suit is brought upon the note by the assignee, the maker then files the bill against the assignor and assignee, alleging fraud in obtaining the note, and praying for an injunction and that the note be canceled: held, that the case was a proper one for equitable relief, and the maker had a right to have the note canceled so as to prevent future litigation. Domingo v. Getman, 9 Cal. 102.

25. If a surety desires to protect himself, he must pay the debt and proceed against the principal, or apply to a court of equity to compel the holder to proceed against the principal. Hartman v. Burlingame, 9 Cal. 561.

26. Courts of equity lean in favor of the right of redemption, and construe instruments as constituting a mortgage rather than a conditional sale. Hickox v. Lowe, 10 Cal. 207.

27. Equity will not give relief against the lapse of time, when there has been a very material change in the value of the property, making a great change in the condition of the parties. Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 329.

28. The foreclosure of an equitable title takes the property subject to all existent equities. He is not within the rule which protects a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice of the real or apparent legal title. Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 368.

29. Where the clerk of the district court improperly refuses to issue execution on a judgment rendered in a court of which he is clerk, on the ground that the judgment has been attached at the suit of another party, a bill in equity cannot be sustained to release the attachment and compel the clerk to issue the execution, as the party injured has his remedy on the officer's bond. Miller v. Sanderson, 10 Cal. 490.

30. Where the proof of the execution of the deed, and of its accidental destruction, is full and satisfactory, the jurisdiction of a court of equity to decree a reëxecution of the deed is unquestionable. Cummings v. Coe, 10 Cal. 530.

31. A court of equity will not exercise jurisdiction to compel the surrender and cancellation of a promissory note, where the party has a clear remedy at law. Lewis v. Tobias, 10 Cal. 575; Smith v. Sparrow, 13 Cal. 597.

32. A court of equity, upon bill filed, will compel an equitable set-off, when the parties have mutual demands against each other which are so situated that it is impossible for the party claiming a set-off to obtain satisfaction of his claim by an ordinary suit at law or in equity. Russell v. Conway, 11 Cal. 102.

33. The insolvency of the party against whom the set-off is claimed is sufficient ground for the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court of equity. Ib.

34. In equity, all persons materially interested in the subject matter of the suit ought to be made parties, in order that complete justice may be done and a multiplicity of suits avoided, and this requires subsequent incumbrancers, existing at the filing of the bill, to be made parties in a suit for a foreclosure of a mortgage. Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 314.

35. An action can be maintained at law upon a decree in equity for a specified sum of money. Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 20.

36. A bill to restrain vexatious litigation, upon the ground that the right to real property has been determined in former suits, must show that the title to the property was determined in a suit or suits in which all the claimants to the title were parties. Knowles v. Inches, 12 Cal. 214.

37. There is no equity in the claim asserted by a tenant in common to share in profits arising from the labor and money of his cotenant when he has expended neither and has never claimed possession, and never been liable for contribution in case of loss. There would be no equity in giving to a tenant, who would neither work himself nor subject himself to any expenditures or risks, a share in the fruits of another's labor, investments and risks. Pico v. Columbet, 12 Cal. 422.

38. District courts as courts of chancery have assumed jurisdiction over probate matters, and as probably rights have vested under their decrees, and the principle asserted is more convenient in practice, it is not permissible now to enjoin the jurisdiction. Deck's Estate v. Gerke, 12 Cal. 436.

39. By the common law, the equitable title to realty may be conveyed by instrument not under seal, if otherwise sufficient; but this equitable title, accompanied by possession, is sufficient under our system to give the right of possession. Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 36.

40. In a proceeding in equity, an equitable title is as good as a legal title, either for defense or recovery. Ib. 37.

41. To maintain a suit to quiet title by a party in possession, it is enough that he claims under a deed which creates an equitable estate, or even a right of possession. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 114.

42. A decree fairly entered by consent of an attorney is as binding upon his client as a decree entered after resistance. Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 200.

43. Where a decree is made by consent of the attorney, it is no ground of error that the decree embraces land not in the complaint; and even if error, the remedy is by appeal. Ib. 203.

44. An appeal lies from an order setting aside a final decree in equity and granting a rehearing. Riddle v. Baker, 13 Cal. 301.

45. A party to obtain the aid of chancery must show that he has exhausted all proper diligence to defeat at law, or to defend in chancery if the first suit was in that form. Ib. 304.

46. A perfect equity united with possession is, under our system, equivalent, for all purposes of defense, to a legal title. Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 497.

47. In equity, when the plaintiff's case, as made by his bill, shows that he is not entitled to relief, it is an incurable infirmity which follows the case everywhere; and no decree can be affirmed which is shown by the bill to be erroneous in substance. White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 525.

48. If a chancellor takes general jurisdiction of the general subject of the litigation, he has power aside from the statute to order such undertaking, or to make any other order in the progress of the case for the furtherance of the objects of the litigation and the protection of its subject matter. Prader v. Purkett, 13 Cal. 590.

49. Where a party in equity on a foreclosure suit is made a defendant, as claiming some interest in the land, sets up as a full defense a tax title, he cannot object afterwards that equity has no jurisdiction over tax titles. Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 616.

50. A decree in an equity case is not vitiated because based on the verdict of a jury, even though it might have been made without a jury. Pfeiffer v. Rhein, 13 Cal. 649.

51. The improper issuance of a second execution is no ground for equitable interference. Such irregularities must be corrected by the court issuing the writ. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 142.

52. Relief from a judgment against an insolvent may be by motion to discharge it, unless there be suspicion of fraud in the release of the insolvent. The remedy at law being ample, equity will not aid. Imlay v. Carpentier, 14 Cal. 178.

53. He who asks equity must do equity. Mitchell v. Hackett, 14 Cal. 667.

54. Where a party to a judgment has obtained any advantage through the judgment, he must restore that advantage to the other party if the judgment be afterward reversed. Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 679.

55. If, on an executory contract for the purchase of land made by plaintiff with the agent during the life of the principal, money due the principal was paid, after his death, to the agent, who settled the amount with the estate, so that the estate received the benefit of the payment, plaintiff would be entitled, in equity, to call for the legal title, and could defend in ejectment by the representatives of the principal. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 20.

56. A county is a corporation, and is the proper party plaintiff to object to a contract made by the board of supervisors for building a jail. If any objection is taken or can be taken to this contract, it must be by the county, which is a corporation; or, if the officers of the county exceed their powers, or are acting, or about to act with gross injustice and bad faith to the tax payers, and thereby subject them to unjust and unauthorized burdens, perhaps one or more of the tax payers thus burthened or threatened might, under peculiar circumstances, invoke the remedial powers of a court of equity, to prevent irreparable injury. People v. Myers, 15 Cal. 34.

57. Generally, a receiver can pay out nothing except on order of Court, but there are exceptions to the rule; nor will he be denied reimbursement in every case in which he neglects to obtain the order, especially in a court of equity. Adams v. Woods, 15 Cal. 207.

58. Warrants drawn by the controller of State, delivered to the payees thereof, and by them endorsed in blank, were presented by the holders to the State treasurer, and on payment were delivered to him. They were afterwards stolen from the office of the Treasurer. The warrants, on their face indicating a just and legal claim against the State, came into the hands of defendants, ignorant that they had been stolen. Defendants present them to the treasurer, and in lieu thereof receive State bonds payable to bearer, under the funding act of 1857, and part with them. The State sues for the bonds or their value: held, that the bonds, in this case, constituted a payment of the warrants; and if the rule that voluntary payments are not recoverable be not applicable, still the equity of the defendants is equal to that of plaintiff, and courts will not interfere. State of California v. Wells, 15 Cal. 344.

59. There may be some cases of equitable relief, where the general ground of appeal will be that the decree is not warranted by the evidence. Still, in the majority of cases, this general ground will be subject to more particular specification. Barrett v. Tewksbury, 15 Cal. 358.

II. EQUITY TRIALS.

1. Miscellaneous.

60. Where a party brought his separate actions, first at law upon mortgage notes, and then in equity for a foreclosure before the adoption of the rule to blend the actions in one: held, that he be allowed both his legal and equitable remedies, on payment of the costs of the latter suit. Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 404.

61. A rule of the district court requiring a party, on motion for a new trial or judgment on a special verdict, to prepare and submit a statement of the evidence at the trial, does not apply to issues submitted to a jury in a chancery case. Purcell v. McKune, 14 Cal. 232.

62. Section two hundred and fifty-four of the practice act enlarges the classes of cases in which equitable relief could formerly be sought in quieting title. It authorizes the interposition of equity in cases where previously bills of peace would not lie. Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 262.

63. Under this section, a party in possession of real property may bring a bill in equity to quiet title against a party out of possession, who claims an estate or interest adverse to him, without waiting until he has been disturbed in his possession by legal proceedings against him, in which his title has been successfully maintained. Ib. 263.

64. In such suit, the court sitting in equity may direct, when proper, an issue to be framed upon the pleadings and submitted to a jury, if questions of a purely legal character in relation to the title arise. Ib. 263.

65. The practice act applies as well to legal as equitable actions, so far as its provisions are consistent with the rights and remedies administered in courts of equity. And the only way in which the verdict of a jury on issues submitted can be reviewed, is by motion for new trial—except, probably, that the court, whether sitting in equity or on the trial of a common law action, may, of its own motion, set aside the verdict of a jury when clearly and palpably against the evidence. Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 380.

66. Where a party gets into possession of property, as a water ditch, under a sheriff's suit on foreclosure of a mortgage, and the judgment on which such sale was made is afterwards reversed by the supreme court, and restitution of the property ordered, the court below may, on motion, order such party in possession to account before a referee for the rents and profits received by him—that is, for the sales of water, etc. It is, in its nature, an equity proceeding, at least to be disposed of according to equity practice, and it would be impracticable for a jury to settle the account, at least, without delay and embarrassment. Raun v. Reynolds, 15 Cal. 470.

2. On Issue Joined.

67. In chancery, when a cause is heard in bill and answer, all the material allegations of the answer, whether upon knowledge or information and belief, are to be assumed as true, provided the facts and circumstances disclosed by the answer are not wholly inconsistent with the general affirmation or denial contained therein. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 69; Belt v. Davis, 1 Cal. 142.

68. When, in equity, the court directed that special issues of material facts in the case should be framed or settled, and stated in writing, before proceeding to trial, held not to be in error. Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 7; Still v. Saunders, 8 Cal. 286.

69. The court can order a reference without the consent of parties, in an equity suit, as the parties are not entitled to a jury trial. Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 7.

70. In chancery cases, the judge is not required to find the facts separate from the law, nor are the parties entitled to a trial by jury. Walker v. Sedgwick, 5 Cal. 192.

71. In chancery cases, the parties have no right to demand a trial by jury; but in all cases at law it is a right which can be insisted on and enforced. Cahoon v. Levy, 5 Cal. 294.

72. It is the duty of a court of equity, when all the parties to a controversy are before it, to adjust the rights of all, and leave nothing open for future litigation if it can be helped. Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. 516.

73. In a chancery case, a party has a right to insist that the legal conclusions to be deduced from the pleadings, whatever may be the proofs, shall be applied. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 494.

74. In a chancery case, where all the proofs are in, and the case fully before the lower and the appellate court, the judgment of the latter is conclusive, where it passes upon the merits of the controversy, and on the reversal of the decree below that court can take no further proceedings, unless authorized by the appellate court, except such as are necessary to give effect to its judgment; the whole matter is res adjudicata. Soule v. Dawes, 14 Cal. 249.

75. In equity the general denials made by traversing literally and conjunctively the statements of a sworn bill, are not legitimate for the purpose of putting in issue specific allegations; for, in this way, a party may deny the entire charges in form as stated against him, in consistency with admitting the truth of the specific charge or even the substantial fact. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 645.

Jurisdiction.—Jury Trials.—New Trials.

3. Jurisdiction.

76. The district courts of this State have jurisdiction over the persons of minors, as well as their estates, by reason of equity. Wilson v. Roach, 4 Cal. 366.

77. It is perfectly competent for a judge sitting in the cause where exceptions had been filed to the report of the referee upon the facts, to take up the testimony reported by the referee, find the facts and render a decree in the cause. McHenry v. Moore, 5 Cal. 92.

78. A court of equity will not permit litigation by piece-meal. The whole subject matter, and all the parties should be before it, and their respective claims determined once and forever. Wilson v. Lassen, 5 Cal. 116.

See JURISDICTION.

4. Jury Trials.

79. In chancery, where a jury are summoned to find certain issues of fact, which, when found, are not obligatory, but simply obtained for the purpose of informing the conscience of the chancellor, there is no error in refusing to instruct the jury as to what would be law on a given state of facts. Dominguez v. Dominguez, 7 Cal. 426; Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 360.

80. Special issues framed by the court according to the established rules of chancery practice, may be tried by a jury in equity cases. Brewster v. Bours, 8 Cal. 505.

81. In equity the court trying the case may disregard the verdict of a jury. Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 85.

82. A jury being waived, it is immaterial whether an action against an adverse claimant of land is an equitable or a legal proceeding. Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 113.

83. The findings of the jury on issues submitted to them in an equity case, if not objected to by motion for new trial, or if not set aside by the court on its own motion, become established facts in the case, and cannot be questioned in the supreme court for the first time. Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 380.

84. The provision of the constitution, that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever," applies only to civil and criminal cases in which an issue of fact is joined. The language was used with reference to the right as it exists at common law. This right of trial by jury cannot be claimed in equity cases, unless an issue of fact be framed for the jury, under the direction of the court. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 254.

See JUROR, JURY.

5. New Trials.

85. Where in a chancery case certain issues of fact are submitted to, and determined by a jury, the granting of a new trial is entirely discretionary with the chancellor, and his action is not revisable. Gray v. Eaton, 5 Cal. 448.

86. In equity cases, although no motion for a new trial is made, this court will not hold the findings of fact by the court below conclusive. Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 148.

87. The court below may refuse a new trial, even though both parties consent to it. Where a case has been once fully tried, parties have not an arbitrary discretion to renew the litigation. Such refusal is no ground of error, particularly in an equity case, where there may have been no necessity for new trial, as upon application to the court, upon the pleadings and facts before it, the proper decree might have been rendered, notwithstanding the verdict; or, if refused, the error corrected by appeal. Phelan v. Ruiz, 15 Cal. 90.

See NEW TRIALS.

6. On Appeal.

88. The supreme court is authorized by statute to render such judgment as substantial justice shall require; but by this is intended substantial legal justice, ascertained and determined by fixed rules and positive statutes, and not the abstract and varying notions of equity entertained by each individual. Stevens v. Ross, 1 Cal. 97.

89. In equity, the supreme court on an appeal has full power and jurisdiction for the purposes of equity to correct the errors of the court below, in whatever shape, or by whatever party the appeal is taken up. Grayson v. Guild, 4 Cal. 125.

90. The supreme court, in chancery cases, has to examine the facts, and is not concluded by the findings of the chancellor. Walker v. Sedgwick, 5 Cal. 192.

91. Chancery cases come before the supreme court upon the pleadings, testimony and decree, and we must look to the whole record, and see if there is any error in the final decree. Still v. Saunders, 8 Cal. 287.

92. In equity cases, the appellate court will not notice minor errors, if, on the whole record, the decree be right. Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 85.

93. In equity cases submitted by the court to a jury, the supreme court will not review the testimony if any proof sustains the verdict and judgment. Pfeiffer v. Riehn, 13 Cal. 648.

94. There is no distinction as to the manner in which a statement on appeal is to be prepared between a case at law and a case in equity. The grounds of appeal must in both cases be stated; and in both cases much, if not the greater portion of the evidence will be immaterial for the determination of these grounds in the supreme court. Barrett v. Tewksbury, 15 Cal. 357.

See APPEAL, SUPREME COURT.

7. Parties in Equity.

95. In equity cases, courts may add to and strike out parties, and render a decree against some defendants and in favor of others. Rowe v. Chandler, 1 Cal. 172.

96. An appeal does not lie from an order of the chancellor making a new party defendant. Beck v. City of San Francisco, 4 Cal. 375.

97. A failure to join the proper parties must be taken advantage of by answer or demurrer in equity. Whitney v. Stark, 8 Cal. 516.

98. The thirteenth section of the code, which provides that any person may be made defendant who has or claims an interest adverse to the plaintiff in the controversy, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination of the questions involved, refers to cases in equity only. Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 270.

See DEFENDANT, PARTIES, PLAINTIFF.

III. RELIEF IN EQUITY.

1. As to Mortgages.

99. The usual and best method of proceeding in cases of foreclosure is to appoint a master to find and report the amount due, and then exceptions may be filed to the report upon which the judgment of the chancellor is given, and this may be afterwards assigned as error. Guy v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 417.

100. It is no error for the chancellor to make the calculations himself; but when he has done so, a mistake in the calculation must be brought to his notice in some form analogous to that of an exception to a master's report. Ib.

101. R., an unmarried man, executed two mortgages upon a lot of land. Subsequently he marries, and then executes a new mortgage to persons who pay off the first mortgages upon their being released. The release of the old and the execution of the new mortgages were on the same day. The wife did not sign the new mortgage: held, that in equity the transaction is an assignment of the first mortgages in consideration of the money advanced by the second mortgagees—not the creation of a new incumbrance, but changing the form of the old. Dillon v. Byrne, 5 Cal. 456; Birrell v. Schie, 9 Cal. 107; Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 385; Swift v. Kraemer, 13 Cal. 530.

102. A purchaser of a second note secured by mortgage, taking therewith an assignment of the mortgage, takes with notice of the equity of the holder of the first note, when informed of its existence by the mortgage itself. Phelan v. Olney, 6 Cal. 483.

103. Where the plaintiff filed his bill to foreclose a mortgage executed by defendants, who admit the demand, but ask that a certain sum be retained in the hands of the court to answer a judgment against defendants, to the satisfaction of which they claim that the plaintiff is proportionately liable as a former partner of defendants, although he was not served with process in the case: held, that it was error to retain such sum in the hands of the court. Bell v. Walsh, 7 Cal. 87.

104. Where the plaintiff, being the owner of an undivided one-half of a tract of land, mortgaged his interest therein to A, and subsequently, with his cotenant, conveyed the land to B and C—two-thirds to one and one-third to the other—by two separate deeds, in each of which is set forth the agreement of the grantees to assume the payment of the mortgage; and after the mortgage fell due, the plaintiff filed his bill against B and C to compel a foreclosure and payment: held, that the case was one of chancery jurisdiction, and that it was not necessary for plaintiff first to pay off the mortgage before bringing his action. Abell v. Coons, 7 Cal. 109.

105. An action to foreclose a mortgage is peculiarly an equity proceeding; and when the district court gains jurisdiction of the case for the purpose of foreclosure, it has the right to give full relief. Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 129.

106. Where a mortgagee released a mortgage made by two parties, and took a new mortgage made by one, to whom the other had meanwhile sold, the new mortgage being for a less sum by five hundred dollars, paid at the time, and bearing a different rate of interest, it will require clear evidence of fraud to induce a court of equity to interfere, and give the mortgagee priority over intervening liens. Dingham v. Randall, 13 Cal. 513.

107. S. & B., in 1854, execute a mortgage on their property to H. Subsequently they execute another mortgage on the same property to plaintiff. Later, in 1855, S. conveys his interest to V., the deed declaring the interest to be sold subject to the two mortgages. Later, V. sells to defendant W., the deed containing the same recital as the last. In February, 1856, a decree of foreclosure of the first mortgage to H., sale of the property thereunder, defendant W. the purchaser, and in due time a sheriff's deed to him and possession. In June, 1856, foreclosure of the second mortgage to plaintiff, sale thereunder, plaintiff the purchaser, and in March, 1857, sheriff's deed to him: held, that plaintiff cannot maintain ejectment against defendant W. on his sheriff's deed; that defendant claiming title through foreclosure of the first mortgage, and being in possession, cannot be dispossessed by B. If plaintiff has any remedy against defendant, because of the recital in deeds named, it is in equity. Brown v. Winter, 14 Cal. 34.

108. A mere stranger who voluntarily pays money due on a mortgage and fails to take an assignment thereof, but allows it to be canceled and discharged, cannot afterwards come into equity and in the absence of fraud, accident or mistake of fact, have the mortgage reinstated and himself substituted in the place of the mortgagee. Guy v. Du Uprey, 16 Cal. 198.

109. A tenant of the mortgagor is not interested either in the claim secured or in the estate mortgaged—that is, in the title pledged as security. He has not succeeded to such estate, or to any portion of it. He does not stand in the position of a purchaser. The estate remains in his lessor; he has only a contingent right to enjoy the premises. The right of the lessor to the possession ends with the deed by which the sale of the premises is consummated; and the tenant's right to possession depends upon that of the lessor and goes with it; and the tenant having notice, actual or constructive, of the mortgage, need not be made a party to the foreclosure. Possibly, a court of equity would, under some circumstances, allow a tenant for years to redeem the premises sold on foreclosure, if he applied within a reasonable period after becoming acquainted with the proceedings. McDermott v. Burke, 16 Cal. 590.

See MORTGAGE.

2. As to Decrees.

110. Courts of equity are ever ready to grant relief from sales made upon their decrees, where there has been irregularity in the proceedings rendering the title defective, as well when the purchaser or parties interested have been misled by a mistake of law as to the operation of the decree, as when they have been misled by a mistake of fact as to the condition of the property or the estate sold; provided, application be made to them in the suits in which such decrees are entered within a reasonable time, and the relief sought will not operate to the prejudice of the just rights of others. Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 470; Boggs v. Hargrave, 16 Cal. 566.

111. As a general rule, the purchaser will be released and a resale ordered, or such new or additional proceedings directed as may obviate the objections arising from those originally taken, when the consequences of the mistake are such that it would be inequitable, either to the purchaser or to the parties, to allow the sale to stand. But when relief is sought in one action from a purchase made upon a mistake of law as to the effect of a decree rendered in another action, it seems that the ordinary rules as to mistakes of law should apply—and from such courts of equity seldom relieve. Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 470; Boggs v. Hargrave, 16 Cal. 565.

112. In this case relief cannot be granted, as no special circumstances are shown, and no excuse offered for neglecting to apply for relief in the original foreclosure suit. And further, this action is not brought directly for relief from the sale, but for a sale of the property, an account as incident to a partition, and distribution of the proceeds among the owners, tenants in common thereof; and D., the mortgagor, is not made a party. Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 470; Boggs v. Hargrave, 16 Cal. 565.

See JUDGMENTS.

3. As to Judgments.

113. A judgment will be set aside in equity which was improperly obtained; there being no cause of action, and no notice to the parties. People v. Lafarge, 3 Cal. 133.

114. A party may in any event resort to a court of equity for relief against a judgment obtained by fraud or surprise. Carpentier v. Hart, 5 Cal. 407.

115. A creditor must resort to a court of chancery to set aside a confession of judgment alleged to be fraudulent. Arrington v. Sherry, 5 Cal. 514.

116. In cases of fraud in obtaining the judgment, the party aggrieved must proceed by a bill to impeach the original decree for fraud. Robb v. Robb, 6 Cal. 22.

117. Courts of equity will not interfere to enjoin a judgment not manifestly wrong, simply because of a defect in the evidence. Pico v. Sunol, 6 Cal. 295; Domingo v. Getman, 9 Cal. 103.

118. Courts of equity will only interfere to enjoin a judgment at law rendered against him by reason of fraud or accident, unmixed with any fault or negligence in himself or his agents. Phelps v. Peabody, 7 Cal. 52.

119. Equity will not entertain jurisdiction of an action to set aside a judgment by default, on the ground that the demand may be unconscientious, and that injustice may have been done; provided, it was competent for the party to have placed the matter before the court in the original action, either upon issue joined, or upon motion, or upon motion to set aside the verdict of judgment. Borland v. Thornton, 12 Cal. 445.

120. Equity has jurisdiction to vacate a judgment fraudulently altered so as to include a defendant who was not served with process, and not originally included in the judgment. Chester v. Miller, 13 Cal. 560.

121. A defendant having no defense to an action cannot go into equity and enjoin a judgment by default on the ground that the sheriff's return of service on him is false, and that in fact he had no notice of the proceeding. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 141; Gibbons v. Scott, 15 Cal. 286; Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 202.

122. Equity interferes with judgments and proceedings at law only in peculiar cases, not to correct errors and irregularities. It seldom or never interferes to enforce a mere technical right. There must be substantial merit. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 141.

123. If a judgment by default be void, because entered by the clerk without authority, that fact constitutes no ground for equity to interfere. Chipman v. Bowman, 14 Cal. 158.

124. Where a party moves for a new trial and fails, he cannot, on the same facts, go into equity to enjoin the judgment rendered. Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 226.

125. In suit in equity, to set aside a judgment by default, on a return by the sheriff of personal service, on the ground that defendant, in fact, was not so served, and never had any notice of the proceedings, and that he had a valid defense to the action, the allegations relative to this defense showed that it was based upon an executory agreement, by the terms of which certain things were to be done by plaintiff, and in consideration thereof, he was to be released from the debt for which the action was brought: held, that the allegations are insufficient in this, that they do not state that any of these things were performed by him, or that he ever offered, or was, or has been, at any time, ready or willing to perform the same. Gibbons v. Scott, 15 Cal. 286.

4. As to Corporations.

126. In suit by a stockholder against a corporation and its officers, praying for their removal, and for an account and settlement of the affairs of the corporation, the decree, after a full hearing on the merits, was in accordance with the prayer, and also appointed a receiver to take charge of the property of the corporation until the further order of the court; collect money due or to become due on it; sell certain stock and pay the proceeds in accordance with the decree, etc.: held, that this provision in the decree does not destroy its effect as a final decree, and that an appeal lies therefrom. Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 148.

127. A court of equity has no jurisdiction over corporations, for the purpose of restraining their operations or winding up their concerns. Such court may compel the officers of the corporation to account for any breach of trust, but the jurisdiction for this purpose is over the officers, personally, and not over the corporation. Ib. 150.

128. Where four of the trustees of a private corporation, owning sufficient stock to control its business, conduct the business in a grossly negligent manner, systematically disregarding the by-laws, keeping no account of receipts and expenditures, failing to pay their own assessments, without any excuse: held, that a stockholder may sue in equity for an account, making the corporation and said trustees alone parties—no objection being taken that all of the stockholders were not parties—and the trustees will be compelled to make good any loss occasioned by their negligence or improper conduct. Ib. 151.

See ACCOUNT, II; CORPORATIONS.

5. As to Partnerships.

129. Where a bill was filed for the purpose of securing the assets of a partnership, and having them distributed among the creditors, the court of chancery will carry out this decree without regard to any attempt on the part of the partners to evade or defeat it. Adams v. Haskell, 6 Cal. 116.

130. One of the rules of equity jurisprudence is, that the individual property must go to the individual creditors, in priority to the firm creditors, and firm assets must go to the firm creditors, in priority to the individual creditors of a partner. Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 287.

131. In an action of conflict between the individual and firm creditors, and their liens upon partnership property, equity has jurisdiction. Conroy v. Woods, 13 Cal. 634.

132. Voluntary associations for mutual relief in sickness or distress, by funds raised by initiation fees, fines, dues, etc., are partnerships, and may be dissolved by a court of equity, if they improperly exclude a member. Gorman v. Russell, 14 Cal. 539.

See ACCOUNT, II; PARTNERSHIP.

Cancellation of a Deed.—For Fraud or Mistake.

6. Cancellation of a Deed.

133. Where one has an outstanding deed which improperly clouds the title of the true owner, on the application of the latter, equity will amend and cancel the deed, and will, on like application, interfere and prevent a sale, and the consequent execution of an improper deed. Shattuck v. Carson, 2 Cal. 589.

134. An equitable action to set aside a fraudulent deed to real estate, when the effect would be to restore the possession to the defendant party, is an action for the recovery of real estate, and governed by the statute of limitations. City of Oakland v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 535.

See DEED.

7. For Fraud or Mistake.

135. Equity will, as against a mortgagor, correct a mistake in the description of the mortgaged premises, as a matter of course, and a person claiming under the mortgagor, and having notice of a prior lien upon the premises, is in no better condition than the mortgagor himself. Woodworth v. Guzman, 1 Cal. 205.

136. Courts of equity, in the absence of statutes, will set aside awards for fraud, mistake or accident, either in fact or in law. Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 77.

137. Where parties stipulate not to appeal, a court of equity will, nevertheless, interfere to correct fraud or mistake appearing on the face of the record. Ib. 78.

138. Where in the settlement of a partnership a mistake occurs, and both parties were ignorant, or had equal knowledge of, or equal opportunities of knowing the mistake, and there had been no fraud or concealment, equity will not correct the mistake. Belt v. Mehen, 2 Cal. 159.

139. A bill filed by a creditor asking relief against fraudulent transfers and concealment of his property by the debtor, is a substantial ground of equity jurisdiction. Swift v. Arents, 4 Cal. 391.

140. The district judge, while sitting in an equity case, is possessed of all the powers of a court of chancery, and can, where fraud and collusion are charged against a judge, in entering an order or decree, review the same and annul it, if the facts justify such a conclusion. Sanford v. Head, 5 Cal. 298.

141. To maintain a creditor's bill in chancery, in order to reach equitable assets which are alleged to be fraudulently conveyed, it is not sufficient simply to aver that the conveyance was fraudulent; but facts and circumstances must be set out and shown which will reasonably sustain the bill. Kinder v. Macy, 7 Cal. 207.

142. The jurisdiction of courts of equity, originally embracing all cases involving all questions of fraud, accident or confidence, is not altered or impaired, because the courts of law now exercise similar jurisdiction in many similar cases; such jurisdiction is concurrent. People v. Houghaling, 7 Cal. 351.

143. Where husband and wife execute a conveyance of their homestead, which the husband delivers to the purchaser before the purchase money therefor is paid, which is afterwards fraudulently attached, in a suit brought by the real, though not the ostensible purchaser, against the husband alone: held, that equity will compel a cancellation of the deed so obtained. Still v. Saunders, 8 Cal. 286.

144. It would be a fraud, which no court of equity could tolerate, to hold that the vendor of land, on a contract to convey, receiving a portion of the purchase money, and seeing the vendee expend large amounts of money in improving the property, and not making any demand of the purchase money, should insist, because the vendee had not literally complied with the provisions of his contract on his part, on holding the whole contract forfeited, claim the land and the money paid, and all the improvements, and deny all obligations on his part to comply with his engagements. Farley v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 237.

145. A court of equity will relieve against mistakes, as well as fraud, in a deed or contract in writing, and parol evidence is admissible to show it, if it be denied in the answer. Wagenblast v. Washburn, 12 Cal. 212.

146. Fraud in the use of instruments is as much a ground for the interposition of equity as fraud in the creation of them. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 127.

147. Fraud, accident and mistake are special grounds of equity jurisdiction, and may be shown by satisfactory evidence, written or verbal, with reference not only to mortgages but to all written instruments. Ib.

For Fraud or Mistake.—Enforcement of a Contract.

148. Where goods were fraudulently purchased by an insolvent, the creditor may attach before the maturity of the debt, and other creditors subsequently attaching cannot complain that the suit was prematurely brought. The debt is equitably due, and there being no actual fraud against subsequent creditors, they cannot be preferred in equity, even if the action could have been defeated by the debtor. Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 442.

149. If a party, by conspiracy with others, procured them and himself to be elected to the board of trustees of a town, for the purpose of defrauding the town of its property and franchises for his benefit, the whole transaction is illegal and equity will grant relief. City of Oakland v. Carpenter, 13 Cal. 551.

150. If a defendant, as a member elect of a board of trustees, neither resigning nor qualifying, took advantage of his position to advance his personal interests at the expense of those of the corporation, it was a fraud, for which equity will hold him responsible. Ib.

151. A stranger to the title of real property, though in possession, cannot go into equity and enjoin the purchasers and owners thereof from setting up and enforcing their title, on the ground that it was fraudulently and illegally acquired by them of a third person who does not complain. Having no title himself, it is immaterial to him whether he be evicted by such purchasers or their vendor. Treadwell v. Payne, 15 Cal. 499.

152. R. & Co., defendants, had two mechanics' liens upon certain property; one filed October 30th, 1854, the other filed December 8th, 1854, against defendant V. In 1855, R. & Co. sign an entry on the record of liens, stating that the liens did not fall due till January 15th, 1856. This was done on the supposition that the act of 1855 permitted such extension of credit with safety. Discovering that such act in this respect did not apply to existing liens, R. & Co., November 16th, 1855, brought suit on the liens, obtained judgment, sold the property, bought it in and received a sheriff's deed. Plaintiff, as mortgagee of the property subsequent to the liens, obtained judgment, sold the property, bought it in, received a sheriff's deed, and now files his bill to set aside R. & Co.'s judgment and sale, on the ground of fraud: held, that R. & Co. and V. had a right to rescind the arrangement made to extend the lien, such extension having been made under misapprehension, the debt being legal and just, the plaintiff having acquired no right which it would be inequitable to disturb; that such rescission is no evidence of fraud, and the only ground for the interposition of equity being fraud, and this being ignored by the findings, the bill is dismissed: but the decree will be confined to the disposition of the fraud alone, leaving plaintiff at liberty to pursue his remedy in ejectment, if he have any, without prejudice from this decree. Gamble v. Voll, 15 Cal. 510.

153. Mrs. L., a defendant, when a femme sole, contracted a debt, upon which judgment by default was recovered against her, and an appeal taken in her name to the supreme court, where the judgment was affirmed. Subsequently, judgment was obtained against plaintiff here, as surety on her appeal bond. This judgment he paid by giving his note in full satisfaction. He now sues Mrs. L. for the sum so paid: held, that she cannot defend on the ground that the paper on which the first suit against her was brought expressed no consideration, and that the complaint therein averred none, and that hence no demand is shown against her, the judgment of the supreme court being conclusive so long as it stands, cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that the parties to it did not prosecute the appeal, but must be set aside, if at all, by a direct proceeding, impeaching for fraud. Bastic v. Love, 16 Cal. 72.

See FRAUD, MISTAKE.

8. Enforcement of a Contract.

154. Where there has been such a part performance of a verbal contract of sale by the plaintiff as to put him into a situation which would operate as a fraud upon him unless the verbal agreement should be enforced, equity will decree a specific performance of the contract. Tohler v. Folsom, 1 Cal. 212.

Enforcement of a Contract.—Specific performance of a Contract

155. A party cannot ask a court of equity to rescind a contract against the wishes of the respondents, when the only obstacle to its completion and fulfillment was caused by his own default, and the other party entirely without blame. Salmon v. Hoffman, 2 Cal. 143.

156. An unwritten contract for the sale of land is void by the statute, and courts of equity have no power to enforce a specific performance. Abell v. Calderwood, 4 Cal. 91.

157. To entitle a party to a fair decree in a court of equity, it must appear that the contract was fair, just and reasonable, and founded upon an adequate consideration. Dunlap v. Kelsey, 5 Cal. 181.

158. When courts are called upon to set aside contracts, there must be some substantial reasons shown; and a court of chancery, particularly, will not act when it is kept in the dark as to the reasons or purposes of a transaction, in reference to which relief is sought. Scanlan v. Gilman, 5 Cal. 183.

159. Equity can relieve a party by granting a rescission of the contract upon the allegation of the insolvency of the grantor and his inability to respond in damages to an action upon the covenant, a paramount outstanding title in another, and an offer to redeliver possession and account for the rents and profit. Norton v. Jackson, 5 Cal. 265.

160. Where a verbal contract had been so far performed by one of the parties, relying upon the good faith of the other that he could have no adequate remedy except by complete performance, courts of equity decreed its execution, upon the ground that the refusal to execute the same under such circumstances was a fraud, and that a statute having for its object the prevention of a fraud could not be used as an instrument for its perpetration. Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 158.

161. Any contract executed which passes the equitable right to a ditch and use of the water appurtenant to or connected with the ditch as the property of the grantee, is enough to insure him the right for which he stipulated as against an adverse claimant. Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 36.

162. The general principle that a party asking to rescind a contract must restore the other party to the condition to which he was before the contract was made, is unquestionably correct, but equity will not require him to pay money to a party who owes him in order to enable him to urge his rights against his debtor. Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 323.

See CONTRACT.

9. Specific performance of a Contract.

163. A court of equity is always chary of its power to decree specific performance, and will withhold the exercise of its jurisdiction in that respect, unless there is such a degree of certainty in the terms of the contract as will enable it at one view to do complete equity. Morrison v. Rossignol, 5 Cal. 66.

164. Lands held by no other tenure than possession may be the legitimate subjects of control; and sometimes, in equity, chattel interests or personal property are made the subject of specific performance. Johnson v. Rickett, 5 Cal. 219.

165. In an action for specific performance against a vendor who refused to make a title, it is not necessary that a deed should be tendered him for his execution, but tender of the unpaid purchase money must be proven. Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 341.

166. A court of equity will not enforce a specific performance of an agreement to convey lands, when the plaintiff shows no compliance, or offer of compliance on his part with the agreement, nor any excuse therefor, for any length of time from which he bound himself to perform. Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 571; Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 324.

167. A bill quia timet and to enforce the specific execution of an agreement lies only where there is no adequate remedy at law. White v. Fratt, 13 Cal. 523.

168. Where damages resulting from the breach of an agreement to enforce specific execution are susceptible of precise admeasurement, equity will not take jurisdiction, unless there are some peculiar equitable circumstances. Ib.

169. Whether equity will enforce the specific performance of a contract depends, not upon the character of the property involved, as whether it be real or personal, but upon the inadequate remedy afforded by a recovery of damages in an action at law. Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 381.

Equitable Assignments.—Equitable Liens.

---

See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

IV. EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENTS.

170. An order drawn upon a defendant for an amount due from the defendant is a prima facie assignment of the debt due. Even if it was only for part of the debt, no one could make the obligation but the defendants. McEwen v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 260; Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 97; Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 408.

171. A party on whom an order is drawn for a certain fund is not unlike that of a party summoned as garnishee after receiving notice of an assignment by his creditor of the demand. Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 98; Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 408.

172. Between the parties, the assignee of equities stands in the place of his assignor, with no better rights; but as to the claim of third persons, the purchaser of an equity stands unaffected by fraud of which he is ignorant, expressly or constructively. Wright v. Levy, 12 Cal. 263.

173. An agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee that the land and its proceeds were to be held, not only as security for the debt due the latter, but for debts due third persons—as laborers on the land—operates as an equitable assignment of the surplus as soon as any exists which does not pass to the administrator of the mortgagee as general assets for the benefit of creditors at large, but is subject in his hands to the same trust which attached to it before the decease of the intestate. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 121.

174. Equity upholds assignments, not only of choses in action, but of contingent interests and expectations, and of things which have no present actual existence, but rest in probabilities, provided they are fairly made, and not against public policy; and an agreement for such interests will take effect, as such assignments, when the subjects to which they refer have ceased to vest in possibility, and have ripened into reality. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 123; Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 407.

175. An order in the following words: "Messrs. F. Huth & Co.: Please hold to the order of William Pope & Sons, of Boston, five hundred pounds sterling of insurance, effected on cargo of bark Elvira, and oblige," etc., is an equitable assignment of the funds in the hands, or to come into the hands of the drawees, to the payees. Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 407.

176. And the drawees, having notice of such assignment, are liable to the payees for the amount, without an express promise to pay it. Ib.

See ASSIGNMENT.

V. EQUITABLE LIENS.

177. Where a party to enforce a claim for the balance of the purchase money unpaid, instead of resorting to his lien in equity, commenced an action at law for the recovery of money, and sold the land on execution subject to a mortgage, the purchaser, to enforce the subrogation to any equitable lien, must file his bill to that effect; but cannot set up his right in an action to enjoin the mortgagee from foreclosing his mortgage thereupon. Allen v. Phelps, 4 Cal. 259.

178. Equity raises no lien in respect to real estate, except that of a vendor for the purchase money. Ellison v. Jackson Water Co., 12 Cal. 554.

179. The lien of mechanics for labor performed and materials furnished toward the erection or repair of a building attaches, even though the employer has but an equitable interest in the land and building. Crowell v. Gilmore, 13 Cal. 56.

180. The lien which the vendor of real property retains, after an absolute conveyance, for the unpaid purchase money, is not a specific and absolute charge upon the property, but a mere equitable right to resort to it upon failure of payment by vendee. This equitable right may be enforced in the first instance, and before the vendor has exhausted his legal remedy against the personal estate of the vendee. The court, after determining the amount of the lien, can, by its decree, either direct a sale of its property for its satisfaction, and execution for its deficiency, or award an execution in the first place, and a sale only in the event of its return unsatisfied, as the justice of the case may require. Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 193.

VI. BILL OF DISCOVERY.

181. A bill in the nature of a bill of peace, and praying for a discovery against joint and several trespassers on real estate, will not lie in favor of a plaintiff out of possession claiming title to the land, nor where the party has a plain, speedy and adequate remedy at law. Ritchie v. Dorland, 6 Cal. 37, 40.

See DISCOVERY.

VII. BILL FOR AN ACCOUNT.

182. A bill for an account is the proper remedy for the settlement of the proceeds of a joint adventure where, in consideration of outfit and advances made by plaintiff, the defendant agreed to account for and pay over a proportion of the proceeds of his labor, although the parties may not have been technically partners. Garr v. Redman, 6 Cal. 576.

183. Where a judgment debtor remains in possession of a water ditch after sheriff's sale, and collects the rents and profits during the six months following, he is a trustee of the fund for the purchaser at the sale, and if the fund be in danger of loss, a bill in equity to account will lie. Harris v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 518.

184. M. and B., the plaintiffs, were partners in a ranch and hotel. The ranch was public land, taken up under the State law in the name of M. M. sells one-half to B., taking a mortgage back; B. agreeing to pay certain firm debts. The sale and agreement were afterwards canceled, and B. sold M. one-half of the ranch. Defendant, Myers, agrees to buy of B. his half of the ranch; goes into possession, but afterwards refuses to buy, and buys the half from O., who bought the whole of M. At the time of this last purchase O. and M. knew of B's title: held, that a bill in equity by B. against M., O. and Myers for an account of the partnership between M. & B., and for a decree establishing plaintiff's right to the half of the ranch, does not lie; that his remedy at law for his half of the ranch, against M. or any one claiming under him with notice of his title, is clear, and that M. would be estopped from disputing the title, and as

M. makes no defense to the bill, it is good against him for an account. Brush v. Maydwell, 14 Cal. 209.

185. Equity will not set off the claim of an individual creditor of one joint owner of a judgment against the judgment. And if the judgment be partnership assets, the individual creditor has no claim to any part of it until adjustment of the firm accounts. Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 230.

186. Where stock is transferred to secure a debt and is still in the hands of the transferee, and the plaintiff avers that the stock is worth more than the debt, and that defendant has received from dividends more than enough to pay it, equity has jurisdiction to compel an account, prevent a transfer and direct a retransfer and delivery of the stock. Smith v. '49 & '56 Quartz Mining Co., 14 Cal. 247.

See ACCOUNT, II; COMPLAINT.

VIII. THE EQUITIES OF A TRUST.

187. Equity will enforce the stipulation of a deed of separation whenever it affects the rights to property or income, and sometimes where the jurisdiction has attached on account of questions relating to property it will even lend its aid collaterally to enforce the stipulation for a separation. Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 164.

188. Where a bill alleges a parol trust it seems that it must be denied, and a general demurrer will not lie. Peralta v. Castro, 6 Cal. 358.

189. A party seeking to enforce a trust against an administrator of a trustee, is compelled from the complex nature of the cause to ask relief in a court of equity. Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 658.

190. A trustee should never be permitted to defeat the rights of the cestui que trust so long as it is in the power of the court of equity to enforce them. Ib. 660.

191. Trustees, when they act with good faith and without any selfish motive, are entitled to be treated by a court of equity with liberality and indulgence, and especially when they act under the advice of counsel. Ellig v. Naglee, 9 Cal. 695.

192. In mortgages, the form of the contract is one of conveyance; while in truth the contract is only one of security, and equity gives effect to the intention of the parties. Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 263.

193. Relief in equity would be limited to the contract and a sale could only be made by enforcing the trust. Ib.

194. In a deed of trust given to a third party not a creditor, to secure a note, authorizing the trustee to sell the land at public auction and execute to the purchaser a good and sufficient deed of the same upon default in paying the note or interest as it falls due, and out of the proceeds to satisfy the trust generally, and to render the surplus to the grantor, etc., is not a mortgage, and there can be no forfeiture of the estate and hence no equity as against such forfeiture to foreclose as in England. Ib.

See TRUST.

IX. EVIDENCE IN EQUITY.

195. Equity will not relieve against a judgment at law, for newly discovered evidence, unless the evidence alleged in the bill appear incontrovertible and conclusive. Buckelew v. Chipman, 5 Cal. 400.

196. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that a bill of sale included property not described therein. Where a bill of sale is defective in such particulars, it can only be altered by a direct proceeding in chancery for the purpose of reforming it. Osborn v. Hendrickson, 8 Cal. 32.

197. Parol evidence is admissible in equity to show that a deed, absolute on its face, was intended as a mortgage. Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 126, overruling Lee v. Evans, 8 Cal. 424; Low v. Henry, 9 Cal. 548; Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 640.

198. In an action of foreclosure brought by an administrator upon a note and mortgage given to the intestate in his lifetime, a witness, whose wife is a sister and heir of the deceased, is incompetent upon the ground of interest. Lisman v. Early, 12 Cal. 283.

199. In equity cases where the evidence is conflicting, the findings will not usually be disturbed. Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 40.

200. An answer responsive to and denying the charges in a bill of equity is not evidence for the defendant, though the bill be sustained by one witness only. Goodwin v. Hammond, 13 Cal. 169.

201. The practice act, as to evidence at least, governs all cases legal or equitable by the same rules. Ib.

See EVIDENCE.

IX. INJUNCTION.

202. Where an assessment was made for the purpose of improving a street, thereby benefiting the property of the plaintiff in common with the property of other persons owning lots on the same street, and the improvement was completed without the plaintiff's interposing in the outset to prevent it, and he then files an injunction bill to stay the sale of his land by virtue of an ordinance of the city, for the purpose of avoiding the payment of his portion of the assessment: held, that the injunction ought to be dissolved, on the ground that he who asks equity must do equity; that the city should be permitted to proceed and sell the plaintiff's land for the purpose of satisfying the assessment, leaving him after the sale to the technical right which he set up by reason, as he claimed, of some irregularities in the mode of taking the assessment. Webber v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 456.

203. It is incumbent on him who asks the interposition of a court of equity to restrain an erection, that not only his possession, but all his conduct in relation to the purchase is in good faith. Conrad v. Lindley, 2 Cal. 175.

204. In all cases involving simply the question of taxation, the issue is strictly one at common law and equity can take no cognizance of it; in such case to grant an injunction is error. Minturn v. Hays, 2 Cal. 591.

205. A court of equity will take jurisdiction of a bill for an injunction filed by attaching creditors of an insolvent, to restrain proceedings on execution against the property attached under a judgment against a debtor, in favor of another, alleged to have been obtained by fraud, where all the material allegations of the bill, except fraud, are admitted. Heyne-man v. Dannenberg, 6 Cal. 380; Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 403.

206. A party aggrieved by another interfering with his bridge or ferry franchise is entitled to relief in chancery and may be protected by injunction. Norris v. Farmers' and Teamsters' Co., 6 Cal. 594; Severance v. Ward, 7 Cal. 129.

207. The entire equity of the bill in this case being denied in the answer, and there being no support of the bill, the injunction was dissolved. Burnett v. Whitesides, 13 Cal. 159.

208. Where in such suit an injunction was granted on the complaint, restraining defendants from surveying or selling the premises pending suit, it was dissolved, on filing an answer setting up paramount title in defendants: held, that the injunction was properly dissolved, because the validity of defendants' title should be judicially determined before its assertion be enjoined. Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 263.

209. Upon the verdict, if a new trial be not granted, the court can act by dismissing the bill, or by adjudging the adverse estate or interest claimed to be invalid, and awarding a perpetual injunction against its assertion to the property in question. Ib.

See INJUNCTION.

ERASURE.

1. No alteration or erasure will defeat the recovery upon a bond, unless it materially affects the rights or condition of the obligor, or is the result of a fraudulent interest to effect the same object. Turner v. Billagran, 2 Cal. 522.

2. A bond was made to the sheriff instead of to the party to be protected by it, by mistake; after the mistake was discovered, the name of the sheriff was erased and that of the party inserted; held, that this did not invalidate the bond. Ib.

3. Where the judgment of the court recites that summons was served on defendant, the fact that years afterwards there appears some erasure or interlineation on the sheriff's return is not sufficient to nullify the return, in the absence of a direct attack upon it for fraud, or forgery, or alteration. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 144.

See ALTERATION, MISTAKE.

ERROR, WRIT OF.

1. Neither a writ of error nor appeal lies to take a case from a State court to the supreme court of the United States. Johnson v. Gordon, 4 Cal. 374.

2. A writ of error will only lie in cases where no appeal is given by statute. Haight v. Gay, 8 Cal. 300.

3. On application for a citation on production of a writ of error from the clerk of the United States court, and for a stay of proceedings in the supreme court of this State, the duty and power of issuing the citation devolves on the chief justice, as a chamber proceeding, and he must see when he is required to act, or is authorized to proceed under the federal law, that he is within that law. Ferris v. Coover, 11 Cal. 179.

4. An action of ejectment, raising the question whether a grant made by the Mexican government proved title to the tract within the limits of the grant, is not a case in which a writ of error lies under the judiciary act. Ib. 181.

5. No provision of our constitution delegates to the legislature the power to enlarge the jurisdiction of the federal courts, and the act of 1855 authorizing writs of error from the State courts to the federal courts is void. Ib. 185.

See APPEAL.

ERRORS.

1. A judgment will not be reversed by an error by which the rights of the parties are not prejudiced. Kilburn v. Ritchie, 2 Cal. 148.

2. Where some errors have been committed by the court below, that do not materially affect the merits of the case, and where from the whole case it appears that justice has been done, the court will not disturb the judgment. Clayton v. West, 2 Cal. 382. Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 492; Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 116.

3. Error which is relied on, must be shown clearly and affirmatively. Rabe v. Wells, 3 Cal. 151.

Errors.—Escheat.—Escribano.—Escrow.

4. The naked direction of the court, unaccompanied with any statement of facts, cannot support allegations of error; they may be in reference to the facts merely abstract or inapt to mislead the jury. White v. Abernethy, 3 Cal. 426.

5. To disturb a judgment of a court of original jurisdiction, it is not sufficient that error may have intervened; but it must be affirmatively shown by the record. White v. Abernethy, 3 Cal. 426; Brooks v. Townsend, 4 Cal. 286.

6. The mere fact that the plaintiff's counsel read, in his address to the jury, a portion of an answer which had been stricken out, is not error of itself. Morgan v. Hugg, 5 Cal. 409.

7. The admission of one of the witnesses to explain his evidence after he had once testified, under the circumstances, can hardly be called an irregularity, much less a serious ground of error. People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 217.

8. In chancery cases the appellate court will not notice minor errors, if on the whole record the decree be right. Goode v. Smith, 13 Cal. 84.

9. Where a decree is made by the consent of an attorney, it is no ground of error that the decree embraces land not in the complaint; and even if error, the remedy is by appeal. Holmes v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 203.

10. If no motion be made in the court below to correct a clerical error disclosed by the proceedings, the error will be corrected in the supreme court at appellant's cost. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 491.

11. Errors in the computation of interest should be corrected by motion, in the court below. Whitney v. Buckman, 13 Cal. 539.

12. Every error in the court below, in the rejection of evidence, is prima facie an injury, and it rests with the other party clearly to show that no hurt would have been, or was done by the error. Jackson v. Feather River Water Co., 14 Cal. 25.

13. An appellant cannot complain of error, when the record shows it was not to his prejudice. Thompson v. Lyon, 14 Cal. 42.

14. Where the error of a decree is apparent by reference to the bill and decree, the party aggrieved may assign error, though no demurrer be interposed. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 143.

15. Where judgment is entered against "the defendants," some of whom were not sued, though their names appeared as defendants by a mistake of the clerk in entitling the cause, the error may be corrected in the supreme court or the court below, on motion. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11.

See APPEAL, IV, V; MISTAKE.

ESCHEAT.

SEE FORFEITURE.

ESCRIBANO.

1. By the civil law an escribano may act in the double capacity of escribano and witness in the execution of a will. Pan-aud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 505.

2. By the civil law every conveyance of land was required to be made before an escribano, or if there was none, then before the judge of the first instance. Hayes v. Bona, 7 Cal. 159.

ESCROW.

1. Where W., in consideration of $1,500, made a deed to B. of an undivided interest in certain mining claims, upon certain conditions of payment of dividends and proceeds of wages due for his labor above his board expenses, until the sum paid shall equal $1,500 with interest; then this bill of sale to be given unto the said B. by him who may have it in his possession, thereby giving unto the said B. full possession and control of said claims: held, that B. was to contribute his labor as agreed upon, and that the deed was but an escrow in the hands of the third party and B. was only entitled to a delivery of it upon strict compliance with the stipulations therein contained. Beem v. McKusick, 10 Cal. 540.

ESTATES OF DECEASED PERSONS.

1. Treaties made by the United States removing the disability of aliens to inherit, are valid and constitutional. People v. Gerke, 3 Cal. 382.

2. Upon a death, the law casts a descent and makes distribution of all property, or interests in, or right of enjoyment of property on some one, and the right of enjoyment of possession to public lands may descend among the effects of a deceased person to the executor or administrator, and the right of deceased may be conveyed by a sale to another. Grover v. Hawley, 5 Cal. 486.

3. The probate court has no power to direct that a portion of an estate of an intestate originally allotted to one of the heirs at law, a nonresident, shall be distributed among the other heirs, if the nonresident heir shall fail to appear and claim it within a year. Pyatt v. Brockman, 6 Cal. 419.

4. In this State all the property, both real and personal, belonging to the estate of a deceased person, goes into the possession of an administrator, who is therefore a necessary party to all suits affecting it. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215; Harwood v. Marye, 8 Cal. 580; Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 127; Haynes v. Meeks, 10 Cal. 120; Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 385; Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 264.

5. In the act to regulate estates the words claimant and claim are used as synonymous with the words creditor and legal demand. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 636.

6. Where D. had a running account with L. from 1838 to 1849, when L. died intestate, and no administration was had on his estate until 1857; and D., within one year after the granting of letters of administration, commenced his action on said account against said estate: held, that the action was commenced in time. Danglada v. De la Guerra, 10 Cal. 387.

7. A legatee who has been represented by counsel at the allowance of accounts against an estate will not be permitted, after a lapse of time, to come in and have the allowance set aside on a mere general averment of newly discovered evidence. Williams v. Price, 11 Cal. 213.

8. The district court may take jurisdiction of the settlement of an estate when there are peculiar circumstances of embarrassment to its administration, and when the assuming jurisdiction would prevent waste, delay and expense, and thus conclude by one action and decree a protracted and vexatious litigation. Deck's Estate v. Gherke, 12 Cal. 437.

9. It seems that the affidavit to a claim against an estate must be made by the claimant in person and not by his attorney in fact. Macoleta v. Packard, 14 Cal. 180.

10. If, on an executory contract for the purchase of land, made by plaintiff with the agent during the life of the principal, money due the principal was paid after his death to the agent, who settled the amount with the estate so that the estate received the benefit of the payment, plaintiff would be entitled, in equity, to call for the legal title, and could defend in ejectment by the representatives of the principal. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 20.

11. The proceedings for the settlement of an estate, and matters connected therewith, are not civil actions within the meaning of sections eighteen to twenty-one of the practice act. Estate of Scott, 15 Cal. 221.

12. S. dies out of the State, leaving property in Santa Clara county, and the probate court thereof takes jurisdiction of the estate and grants letters of administration to K. The widow subsequently files a petition to revoke the letters, on the ground that the probate court of San Francisco ought to have issued them, whereupon the administrator asks the court to transfer the cause to that court, representing that the widow and a majority of the witnesses resided there, and that the interest of several persons interested in the estate would be advanced by the transfer, to which both parties agreed. The court made an order of transfer. The probate court of San Francisco, on the papers being filed therein, refused to take jurisdiction of the cause and ordered the papers back: held, that on these facts, the probate court of Santa Clara could not divest itself of jurisdiction and vest it in the probate court of San Francisco, and that mandamus will not issue to compel the latter court to take jurisdiction. Ib.
